by the Hypoſtatical Union in his Humanity; Holy by the reſidence of the Spirit; a greater Holineſs than Man in innocencie, or Angels in Heaven have; The giving the Spirit not by meaſure to him, implies a greater Holineſs, as well as other Abilities in the Humane Nature, than all the Angels in Heaven ever had, who have the Spirit by meaſure. The Holineſs therefore of Chriſts perſon incomparably exceeds all the Holineſs of the Angelical Nature, which hath a limited communication of the Spirit. As the Apoſtle argues for his Deity, Heb. 1. 5. Unto which of the Angels ſaid he at any time, thou art my Son? So to which of the Angels did he at any time give the Spirit not by meaſure? Though he took upon him the form of a ſervant, yet he was a righteous ſervant. There was no original ſin in his conception, nor actual ſin in his converſation; he was ſeparate from ſinners in the manner of his birth, and in the actions of his life; he had a purity of Nature, and a purity of Life commenſurate to the Law, that he might be our Paſchal Lamb without blemiſh; he was Holy in the account of Angels, Luk. 1. 35. Holy in the account of Devils, Mark 1. 24. the Holy one of God; Holy in the account of his Father, Joh. 8. 29. He alwaies did thoſe things which pleaſed him.

(1.) This was neceſſary for his Office. It became him and us as our High Prieſt, to be undefiled. Heb. 7. 26. As it was neceſſary he ſhould ſuffer for the ſatisfaction of Gods juſtice; ſo it was neceſſary he ſhould by a purity be fit for ſo great a task; as reaſonable Creatures we owe a perfect obedience, as rebellious Creatures, an Eternal puniſhment; there muſt therefore be an Holineſs commenſurate to the precepts of the Law, as well as a paſſion commenſurate to the curſes of the Law. Upon this holineſs of his is our Reconciliation grounded. 2 Cor. 5. 21. For he hath made him to be ſin for us who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. Had he known experimentally the leaſt ſpot, he could not by his ſacrifice have been made the righteouſneſs of God to us; for not only as his ſervant, but as his righteous ſervant he was to juſtifie many, Iſa. 53. 11. hereby he was able to appear to take away our ſins, and did do it, becauſe in him there was no ſin, 1 Joh. 3. 5. The Apoſtle rendring the latter as the reaſon of the former: Had he had the leaſt ſpeck, he could not have been a Mediator, becauſe he had then been a party in being a ſinner; his Office could not have been performed, which was to make up the breach, not to make a new one: he had rather polluted than purged us, and faſtned our ſins, rather than took them away. What could he have offer'd, if he had not had fleſh and blood? How could he have offer'd acceptably, if there had been any ſpot upon him in his appearance before the Holy Juſtice of his Father? Heb. 9. 14. He had then been a Rebel, a Priſoner, and had forfeited all that might have been a ranſome for us. How could he have made peace with God for us, when by reaſon of a blemiſh, he could not make peace in his own conſcience? An inevitable deſtruction had been brought upon mankind, which could not have been repaired. His interceſſion kept up the World from ſinking, when Adam fell; but whoſe mediation ſhould have preſerv'd the World, had this Mediator failed, ſince God had no other Son to imploy in ſo great an affair?

(2.) It was neceſſary in regard of his dignity. The Deity, becauſe of infinite Holineſs, could not have dwelt in a tainted humanity. * Though this habitual Grace be given by God, yet it is a con-natural property of Chriſt, God-Man; becauſe by the dignity of his perſon it was due to him. It had been a prodigious and preternatural thing, to unite the Humane Nature without the Ornaments of Grace to the Divine, as it had been, if the Body of Chriſt had not by reaſon of the Hypoſtatical Union been made immortal and glorious; though thoſe properties of the Body do not flow from the Union by any Phyſical reſultance; for to the humanity, by this Union, there is only communicated eſſe perſonale, not eſſentiale divinæ naturæ, the perſonal, not the eſſential Being of the Divine Nature; and therefore Divine Operations of Grace do not phyſically follow this Union, but as they are due to that Nature ſo united. Had they followed phyſically this Union, the Body of Chriſt could not have been weary, hungry, and ſubject to the infirmities of our fleſh. In regard of the dignity of his perſon, this Holineſs was due to him; without it, it had been the greateſt diſparagement to God to ſend him, and the greateſt prejudice to us; for had there been any ſpot, the perſon of Chriſt had been ſaid to ſin, ſin, as well as the Perſon of Chriſt is ſaid to ſuffer. Since the Father had placed his delight in him, and had promis'd to uphold him, it could not be that that ſhould enter upon him, which was ſo contrary to the perpetual delight God had promis'd to fix in him.

* Suarez in Part. 3. Aquin. Tom. 1. Diſp. 18. §3. p. 367.

This was the Act of the Father, and aſcrib'd to him, Joh. 10. 36. Say ye of him whom the Father hath ſanctified and ſent into the World? Some underſtand it of the Sanctification of Chriſt by Eternal Generation, receiving by that Holineſs, per eſſentiam, by Eſſence; others by Sanctification underſtand only a ſeparation of him to his office. But it rather ſeems to be meant of the preparations for the exerciſe of his Office, Sanctification and Miſſion being join'd together; the Father ſeparated him, and anointed him with the Spirit, who as the Spirit of the fear of the Lord reſting upon him, Iſa. 11. 2. was the immediate inſpirer of him with this internal Holineſs.

2. With Wiſdom and Knowledge. As God, he had an increated Knowledge; but this could not be communicated to his humanity, becauſe a Creature is not capable of any thing infinite: and though he was filled with all Gifts from his Conception, ὑποστατικῶς, perſonally, yet it doth not follow from thence, that the Soul of Chriſt ſhould know every thing, becauſe this did not belong to the property of that nature. And though he was the head of Angels, it will not follow that he ſhould know, as Man, what the Angels knew; For then he had not ſtood in need of an Angel to ſtrengthen him. And if he were made lower than the Angels, it was no diſparagement to him, as being in the form of a ſervant, to be ignorant in ſome things which the Angels knew, which he implies he was, in that ſpeech concerning his ignorance of the day of Judgment; Mat. 24. 36. Of that day and hour knows no man, nō not the Angels of Heaven. But there was no privative ignorance in Chriſt but a negative, which is not ſinful, and this kind of Ignorance was no more diſparagement to Chriſt, than it was, that his ſoul which was the ſoul of God, as well as his bloud, the bloud of God, ſhould be ſad to Death. But the Wiſdom he was filled with, was the Wiſdom pertaining to his Office of Mediator; As he was to reprove, and convince, and ſmite the Earth with the rod of his Mouth, Iſa. 11. 2, 3, 4. The Spirit of the Lord ſhall reſt upon him, the ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, the ſpirit of counſel and might, the ſpirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord, he had Wiſdom, i. e. a right judgment of things pertaining to his office, judging of things according to the Divine Will: Counſel and Prudence, in the direction of his Actions: Knowledge of all Accidents and Circumſtances which might occur to hinder him from the accompliſhment of his Work: and Might to effect all; which Gifts were beſtowed upon him by the Spirit. All which Gifts did end in this of the Fear of the Lord; a Reverence and Obſervance of his Father, as Superior to him in this work of Mediation. And therefore it is repeated again, ver. 3. ſhall make him of quick underſtanding in the fear of the Lord: An obſervance of the will of God in that work committed to him. All the Gifts he had, were to run into this Ocean of Faithfulneſs to God. The Fear of the Lord in Chriſt was a Reverence of the Divine Majeſty, and the Divine Command; Not a fear of ſeparation from the Father by any ſin, or a fear of puniſhment by him for any ſin, becauſe he could not ſin. Without a Reverence of God, he had not been Faithful; without Wiſdom and Knowledge, hē had not been able. Ignorance could never have managed his work, Unfaithfulneſs could never have accompliſht it; the one had made him uncapable to attempt it, the other to perfect it; the one had ſtript him of all capacity for it, the other of all ſucceſsfulneſs in it. The Knowledge of the Will of God was that whereby he was mighty to help *. He had Counſel to direct, as well as power to effect: he had the Gift of Wiſdom to manage his power, to the defeating of his Enemies. This was neceſſary; the humane nature had been defective in that which it was deſign'd for, unleſs it had underſtood what was fit to be done in order to it. It had not conſiſted with the Wiſdom of God, to ſend one about ſo great a work, who did not underſtand the nature of it, who was not fully inſtructed how to manage it. This was neceſſary as well as Holineſs; without knowledge he could not have been a reaſonable and voluntary Sacrifice; all voluntary Acts being to be founded in Reaſon; and without holineſs concurring with it, he could not have been been an acceptable Sacrifice. This Wiſdom did fit him to ſprinkle many Nations, Iſa. 52. 13, 15. My ſervant ſhall deal prudently, he ſhall be extoll'd, and be very high, ſo ſhall he ſprinkle many nations. יַשְׂכִּיל, ſome tranſlate proſper, it ſignifies both; when any one proſpers, it is commonly aſcrib'd to his own Prudence and wiſe management of things. He ſhall underſtand what is due to God for the reparation of his Honour, what is neceſſary for men for the relieving their neceſſities, and ſo purge many by the bloud of his Sacrifice. Now this Wiſdom, and the encreaſe of it, was from the ſtrength of the Spirit in him, and the Grace of God upon him; Luk. 2. 40. There were conſtant Revelations to him, of what was fit to be done by him in the Exerciſe of his office, according as the Father pleaſed by his Spirit to communicate himſelf to his Humanity.

3. The ſpirit was given him to fit him with a tenderneſs to man, and to lead him out to thoſe exerciſes, whereby he might be ſenſible of the indigences of man. He had not onely the law of Redeeming Love in his head, whereby he had a knowledge of his Office; but in his Bowels, whereby he was fitted for a tender Execution of that Office, Pſal. 40. 8. Thy law is within my heart, מְעַי Bowels. The Spirit therefore deſcended upon him in the likeneſs of a Dove, an Emblem of Meekneſs and Tenderneſs. And the Apoſtle Peter, Act. 10. 3. intimates, that the intendment of this Unction of him was to fit him for a compaſſionate Converſe with man; God anointed Jeſus with the Holy Ghoſt, who went about doing good and healing all that were oppreſſed of the Devil, He had a tenderneſs as God, and his humanity is fitted with a tenderneſs to keep pace with that of the Deity as much as was poſſible, that the Tenderneſs of both natures might be joyn'd together in one Perſon. And when this Spirit viſibly ſetled on him after his Baptiſm, he led him preſently to an exerciſe whereby he might feel the Miſeries of Man, and from an experience of them be affected with more Tenderneſs towards him, Mat. 4. 1. Then was Jeſus led up of the Spirit in the Wilderneſs, to be tempted of the Devil. Then: When? as ſoon as ever he had the Spirit, as a Dove lighting upon him; and had heard thoſe encouraging words, Mat. 3. 16, 17. This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed. He was led by this Spirit to be tempted by the Evil one, that he might in his humanity be acquainted with the craft and ſubtlety of that Adverſary which had overturn'd the World, brought all the diſhonour upon his Father, and ſunk Mankind into their preſent Miſery: that he might know the enemy which was threatned in the promiſe of his Incarnation, and Experience the ſubtleties of that Serpent which had wrought all thoſe miſchiefs he came to redreſs; and ſo, as he was to be acquainted with grief, Iſa. 53. 3. he might underſtand the firſt Author of that which occaſion'd this greif to him. It was by this Grace of Meekneſs and Humility, he was eſpecially fitted to be a ſecond Adam to Redeem us, becauſe Pride was the Sin of the firſt Adam to deſtroy us: Who becauſe he would become as high as God who Created him, the Redeemer would become lower than Man that was Created by him; yea, a worm and no man, Pſal. 22. 6. So excellently did the Spirit fit him with an humility proportionable to his undertaking.

4. The Spirit was given to him by his Father, to enable him with a mighty power to go through this undertaking. He had a Spirit of might, executive of his Wiſdom and Counſel, Iſa. 11. 2. a Courage to attempt the moſt daring difficulties, and endure the fierceſt Calamities. A power to ſuffer for the ſatisfaction of Juſtice, a power to relieve the preſſures of our wants, a power to conquer his and our Enemies. When he was anointed by God with the holy Ghoſt, he was anointed with power *, for the exerciſe of his office, and the doing good. The deſign of putting the Spirit upon him, was that he might bring forth judgment to the Gentiles; for that immediately follows the promiſe of the Spirit to him, Iſa. 42. 1. This was his encouragement actually to engage in the exerciſe of every part of his Office, Iſa. 60. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me to preach glad tidings to the meek, &c. The Spirit was upon him in all the acts of his Mediation, the Spirit therefore did continually aſſiſt him in every exerciſe; he was not left alone, but he that ſent him was with him, Joh. 8. 29. The Father was with him by his Spirit; the Father had promis'd his aſſiſtance; Now aſſiſting Grace is the work of the Holy Ghoſt. His Grace was fed and actuated by the Spirit, and brought forth into Exerciſe.

ercise. The Spirit led him into Temptation; what? only to lead him to the Conflict, and desert him in it? No surely, but to actuate those Graces, wherewith he had filled him, against the Tempter; God was with him, Act. 10. 38. Assisting, Exciting, Actuating him. And the spirit did assist him, and excite the Graces in him to the very last gasp; for through the Spirit he offered up himself, Heb. 9. 14. Through the Virtue of this spirit, sanctifying his Humane nature, gifting him with strength and Wisdom; exciting those eminent Graces upon the Cross, wherewith he had filled him at his Conception; and supporting him with his Power, while the Father was bruising him: As he lived in this Holiness of the spirit, so he dyed and offer'd up himself through the strength of it, without spot to God. Through the Spirit, signifies the strength and power of the spirit, as when we are said to mortifie the deeds of the body through the Spirit, Rom. 8. 13. i. e. through the powerful operation of the spirit. For as the highest Graces of Christ, Faith, Love, and Obedience, were to be exercis'd upon the Cross, so the assistance of the spirit was necessary, to the exciting and actuating those Graces: For acts of Grace being supernatural, a suitable concourse is necessary for the exerting those Acts; and this concourse is truly the exciting and assisting Grace of the Spirit. The natural powers of the humanity cannot otherwise be help'd by the word, but as the λόγος or word, doth flow in upon it to actuate those powers of the Soul. But this influx and motion is common to the Trinity, and therefore is not from the Divine Nature, as Hypostatically united, but from God as the first Cause, and from the Spirit as the person whose Office it is to excite Grace, and assist it in the Exercise. Not that the spirit did so possess Christ, as that he did not exercise his own faculties in his whole Office; But as the spirit is said to pray in us, Rom. 8. 26. and we said to pray in him, Jude 20. The Spirit quickens our faculties, and by his Inspiration excites and assists the Act. The Spirit did all along enable Christ with a mighty power: It did first unite his soul to his body, his Divine nature to the Humane, strengthened him in his Temptation, stood by him in his Passion, and at last united his body to his soul at his Resurrection, 1 Pet. 3. 18. Quickned by the Spirit. Rom. 1. 14. Declar'd to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness by his Resurrection from the dead; showing himself here in the whole Administration, a spirit of holiness, in his Conception, Conversation, Oblation, Justification and Resurrection. Upon which account he is said to be justified in the spirit, in the Administration and ordering of the Church. For it was through the holy Ghost he gave commandments to the Apostles whom he had chosen, Act. 1. 2. not leaving his Humane nature till it was made immortal and glorious in Heaven; that thereby the Redemption and Reconciliation might be every way compleat. It was to those ends and purposes God gave the Spirit not by measure to him.

5. The Spirit was given to him by his Father, not only to fit him for his Mediatory undertaking, but thereby to accomplish all the fruits of Reconciliation in his seed, As God prepared him a Body to lay down as a Ransom for us, Mat. 20. 28. so he gave him the Spirit, to bestow as a largess on us: He was given to him, to be deriv'd from him, as from the fountain, to all Believers; whence they are said to be his Fellows, Heb. 1. 9. As he made himself their fellow, by descending to the fellowship of their Nature; so they were to be his fellows, by the communications of his Spirit. All men are his fellows in regard of his partaking of Humane nature, but Believers only are his fellows in regard of Conformity to the Image of God. There is a fulness of Merit in him Resident in Heaven, as a sweet smelling savour before God; and a fulness of Grace to distill upon his seed to make them acceptable to God: Merit to keep up the Amity on his Fathers part, and Grace to keep up the Amity on the Believers part. The Graces of the Spirit were given to him, not only as Mediator, without which the Humane nature had not been capable for the work; but as a head, which redound from him upon his Members, Col. 2. 19. and convey nourishment to every part. As God assembled Light in the Sun, to fit it for a full fountain of Light, to transmit from Heaven to the Creatures on Earth motion, warmth and influences, whereby the qualities in all bodies are preserv'd and excited; so hath God given the Spirit to Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, and stor'd him with Grace and Holiness, as a common fountain of Gardens, a publick Head, for the Quickening, Beautifying, and Enriching Believers. Without this fulneſs of Light, the Sun could not be Beneficial to the World, nor anſwer the end of its Creation; ſo without this fulneſs of Spirit in Chriſt, he could not accompliſh the Fruits and Ends of the Reconciliation he hath made. And therefore though the ſpirit ſanctified Adam in innocence, as the third Perſon in the Trinity, and ſo he breathed an holineſs upon Chriſt, yet he ſanctifies Believers now in a new habitude, not only as the third Perſon in the Trinity, but as the ſpirit of Chriſt the Mediator, ſent in his Name by the Father *, as purchas'd by Chriſt; upon which account he is called the Spirit of Chriſt, and Chriſt is ſaid to ſend him, Joh. 16. 7. becauſe as Mediator, he acquir'd a Right by the Merit of his Sufferings to diſpenſe this fulneſs of the Spirit, who now Acts as a Fruit of Chriſts Interceſſion, upon Believers. Joh. 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter.

* Joh. 14. 26.

Uſe of this Part.

Firſt, How groſs a ſin is Unbelief, which practically denies the Ability of that Saviour, which the Father ſo richly fitted by his Spirit to the work of Reconciliation? 'Tis a Charge and Imputation upon God, as though he did not furniſh him with ſufficient Abilities. 'Tis a denying his Divinity or Humanity, or both. 'Tis all the Hereſies that ever were ſtarted againſt the Perſon of the Son of God in the Maſs; they are all practically bundled up in this one ſingle ſin. Gods Anger will moſt flame, when that which coſt him the greateſt Treaſures is deſpis'd. 'Tis the deſpiſing all that is great in God; his Riches, his Power, his Honour. His Riches in furniſhing him, his Power in ſupporting him, his Honour deſign'd by him in both. 'Tis a more ſenſible contradiction to the Trinity, than any ſin againſt the Light of Nature, becauſe there is a more evident diſcovery of the Trinity in his Mediation, the Father Appointing, Calling, Counſelling, Ordering; The Spirit Furniſhing, Fitting, Exciting, Supporting; the Son, acting as the ſubject of all this. It doth affront, not a Man, nor an Angel, no nor only the Son of God himſelf, but the Magnificence of the Father towards him, and the pains of the Spirit on him.

2. How ſhould we be encouraged to Faith in this able Saviour? Since he hath all the fitneſs that could delight God, and all the fulneſs whereby he can pleaſure Man; he is every way able to ſatisfie God and ſave the Believer. His Ability being ſo much and ſo great upon the Earth, is not diminiſht in Heaven, no more than his Compaſſions are abated. As he learn'd a new Mode of Compaſſionating men, before his departure out of the World; ſo ſince his Aſcenſion to Heaven, he hath received a greater power of aſſiſting men. Before he had the Spirit to Gift himſelf, now he hath the Spirit to ſend upon his People. He hath a fulneſs of Grace, a fitneſs of Gifts, that he may be every way able to help. He had a Body to bear our ſins, and a Divine Nature whereby to expiate them; his Merit was as infinite as his Perſon. He is an holy high Prieſt, not tainted with any of thoſe Evils which he was to expiate in others. He is not only Man; then he might have fallen as the firſt Adam did, and left us in the ſame, or a worſe Condition than before. He is not only God; then he could have perform'd no Obedience to the Law, as being not concern'd in it as a Subject, but as the Law-giver: Nor could he have offer'd any Satisfaction to God, as being uncapable of Suffering in the Deity. But God and Man, fit to repair the honour of God, and the fallen ſtate of the Creature. He had an enlarg'd Underſtanding to know his Work, unconceivable Power to perform it, and incomparable Goodneſs to be faithful in it. Such Wiſdom as he was furniſht with could not be ignorant of his Office, nor is to this day; ſuch Power could not be weak, nor will ever Languiſh; ſuch Integrity could not be falſe, nor will ever deceive the Comers to him.

3. Admire theſe infinite Compaſſions of God. Oh marvelous Grace! That Chriſt ſhould be endu'd with the richeſt Grace by his Father, to relieve our Poverty; with the higheſt Might, to help our Weakneſs; with a powerful aſſiſtance to conquer our Enemies, with an overflowing Fulneſs, to fill up our Emptineſs; and abundant Grace pour'd into his Lips, to Comfort our Dejectedneſs. God cannot ſhow greater Love, than to ſend his Son to make the Peace; and unlock his Cabinet, wherewith to furniſh him. An old frame of Thankfulneſs will not fit an Evangelical diſcovery of Love *, When God tells them of his Servant in whom his ſoul delights, and upon whom he had put his Spirit for the Redemption of Man, then he makes this uſe of Exhortation of it, Sing unto the Lord a new Song: New Love, calls for new Praiſe. God might have deſtroy'd us with leſs Coſt, than he hath Reconcil'd us; for our deſtruction there was no need of his Counſel, nor of fitting out his Son, nor opening his Treaſures; a word would have done it, whereas our Reconciliation ſtood him in much charge. It was perform'd at the expence of his Grace and Spirit, to furniſh his Eternal Son to be a Sacrifice for our Atonement. An unexpreſſible wonder that the Father ſhould prepare his Son a Mortal Body, that our Souls might be prepared for an incorruptible Glory.

5. God Commiſſioned Chriſt to this work of Reconciliation. He gave him a fullneſs of Authority, as well as a fulneſs of Ability. He is therefore ſaid to be Sealed, as having his Commiſſion under the great Seal of Heaven *. Sealing notes a ſpecial deſignment of the thing ſealed to ſome ſpecial purpoſe: So the ſealing of Chriſt ſignifies his ſeparation and Authority to exerciſe his Offices; and in particular, of giving meat to the World, which ſhould endure to Everlaſting Life. By virtue of this Commiſſion, whatſoever Chriſt doth, is valid; for he doth it as Gods Attourney, to whom he hath transferr'd a power to carry on the work of Redemption: In which reſpect he is called Gods Servant, not by Nature, but a Servant by Office. In this reſpect he is ſaid to be anointed, Iſa. 61. 1. Anointing was not ſo much the fitting a perſon, as a declaration of his fitneſs, and an Authorizing him to an exerciſe of his Offices. Anointing under the Law, ſignified an Authority conferr'd upon a perſon for Government, Prieſthood, or Prophecy. In that place Chriſt doth diſtinguiſh his Commiſſion from his fitneſs, and declares himſelf fit, becauſe he was commiſſioned, the Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, there is his fitneſs, becauſe יען therefore the Lord hath anointed me. It was not agreeable to the Divine Wiſdom, to commiſſion any for an Office, but whom he had furniſht with an ability for that Office. What was he Commiſſioned for? not to thunder the Law, but to declare the Goſpel, the Goſpel of peace to the broken-hearted, to reveal the Thoughts of amity which his Father had. Upon this account Chriſt tells us, he did not come of himſelf, Joh. 7. 28. and in regard of this Commiſſion he is called Gods Angel, Mal. 3. 1. Meſſenger, the word ſignifies an Angel, the Apoſtle of our profeſſion, Heb. 3. 1. becauſe as he authoriz'd and ſent the Apoſtles, ſo the Father authoriz'd and ſent him. A Meſſenger, and an Interpreter; Job 33. 23. Though this Commiſſion was given him at his Birth, yet God renewed the declaration of it ſeveral times. At his Baptiſm. Mat. 3. 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleaſed. At his transfiguration, Mat. 17. 5. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleaſed, hear you him. Chriſt pleads this Commiſſion, as well as the Covenant between them. Joh. 17. 4. I have finiſhed the work thou gaveſt me to do, when he calls it a work given him to do; what work I have done, was appointed me, and I have done it by thy Authority; and therefore our Redemption and ſecurity in it, depends primarily upon the Covenant or fœderal tranſaction between the Father and the Son; and next, upon the Commiſſion given to Chriſt, which was indeed but the performance of the firſt Articles on the Fathers part. Chriſts Commiſſion was declared ſeveral wayes; by the Miracles he wrought by his own hand, as well as by the Apoſtles; by the Holineſs of his Life; by the accompliſhment of all the predictions of the Prophets in his perſon; by his Reſurrection from the Dead, and by the Converſion of the World executed in the moſt aſtoniſhing and Divine manner. This Commiſſion he had at once as well as his fitneſs; but he did ſucceſſively enter into the exerciſe of his Offices; at firſt he performed his Prophetical, then exerciſed his Prieſtly, a little before his Death, at his Authoritative Prayer, John 17. where he begins his Interceſſion the greateſt, choiceſt, and moſt durable part of his Prieſthood. His Kingly, he exerciſed more eſpecially after his Reſurrection, in the Orders he ſettled for the Church; all power was then more manifeſtly declared to be given him.

He had then in the whole, the ſtamp of all Gods Authority upon him.

1. His whole work was preſcrib'd him; which is expreſt by the notion of a precept as he was Gods Servant. The Command of a Superiour is a ſufficient Commiſſion to a Servant, to do a work he is order'd to perform; and Chriſt, in regard of his Mediatory Office was inferiour to his Father; John 14. 28. In which reſpect the Father is ſaid to be greater than he: The Command was his Commiſſion from God, but Miracles were the manifeſtation of that Commiſſion to Man. This Command implies not any unwillingneſs in Chriſt to undertake and perform this work; (as though God were neceſſitated to bend his Will thereunto, and to force him by

fulneſs of Light, the Sun could not be Beneficial to the World, nor anſwer the end of its Creation; ſo without this fulneſs of Spirit in Chriſt, he could not accompliſh the Fruits and Ends of the Reconciliation he hath made. And therefore though the ſpirit ſanctified Adam in innocence, as the third Perſon in the Trinity, and ſo he breathed an holineſs upon Chriſt, yet he ſanctifies Believers now in a new habitude, not only as the third Perſon in the Trinity, but as the ſpirit of Chriſt the Mediator, ſent in his Name by the Father *, as purchas'd by Chriſt; upon which account he is called the Spirit of Chriſt, and Chriſt is ſaid to ſend him, Joh. 16. 7. becauſe as Mediator, he acquir'd a Right by the Merit of his Sufferings to diſpenſe this fulneſs of the Spirit, who now Acts as a Fruit of Chriſts Interceſſion, upon Believers. Joh. 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter.

Gods Anger will moſt flame, when that which coſt him the greateſt Treaſures is deſpis'd. 'Tis the deſpiſing all that is great in God; his Riches, his Power, his Honour. His Riches in furniſhing him, his Power in ſupporting him, his Honour deſign'd by him in both. 'Tis a more ſenſible contradiction to the Trinity, than any ſin againſt the Light of Nature, becauſe there is a more evident diſcovery of the Trinity in his Mediation, the Father Appointing, Calling, Counſelling, Ordering; The Spirit Furniſhing, Fitting, Exciting, Supporting; the Son, acting as the ſubject of all this. It doth affront, not a Man, nor an Angel, no nor only the Son of God himſelf, but the Magnificence of the Father towards him, and the pains of the Spirit on him.

2. How ſhould we be encouraged to Faith in this able Saviour? Since he hath all the fitneſs that could delight God, and all the fulneſs whereby he can pleaſure Man; he is every way able to ſatisfie God and ſave the Believer. His Ability being ſo much and ſo great upon the Earth, is not diminiſht in Heaven, no more than his Compaſſions are abated. As he learn'd a new Mode of Compaſſionating men, before his departure out of the World; ſo ſince his Aſcenſion to Heaven, he hath received a greater power of aſſiſting men. Before he had the Spirit to Gift himſelf, now he hath the Spirit to ſend upon his People. He hath a fulneſs of Grace, a fitneſs of Gifts, that he may be every way able to help. He had a Body to bear our ſins, and a Divine Nature whereby to expiate them; his Merit was as infinite as his Perſon. He is an holy high Prieſt, not tainted with any of thoſe Evils which he was to expiate in others. He is not only Man; then he might have fallen as the firſt Adam did, and left us in the ſame, or a worſe Condition than before. He is not only God; then he could have perform'd no Obedience to the Law, as being not concern'd in it as a Subject, but as the Law-giver: Nor could he have offer'd any Satisfaction to God, as being uncapable of Suffering in the Deity. But God and Man, fit to repair the honour of God, and the fallen ſtate of the Creature. He had an enlarg'd Underſtanding to know his Work, unconceivable Power to perform it, and incomparable Goodneſs to be faithful in it. Such Wiſdom as he was furniſht with could not be ignorant of his Office, nor is to this day; ſuch Power could not be weak, nor will ever Languiſh; ſuch Integrity could not be falſe, nor will ever deceive the Comers to him.

3. Admire theſe infinite Compaſſions of God. Oh marvelous Grace! That Chriſt ſhould be endu'd with the richeſt Grace by his Father, to relieve our Poverty; with the higheſt Might, to help our Weakneſs; with a powerful aſſiſtance to conquer our Enemies, with an overflowing Fulneſs, to fill up our Emptineſs; and abundant Grace pour'd into his Lips, to Comfort our Dejectedneſs. God cannot ſhow greater Love, than to ſend his Son to make the Peace; and unlock his Cabinet, wherewith to furniſh him. An old frame of Thankfulneſs will not fit an Evangelical diſcovery of Love *, When God tells them of his Servant in whom his ſoul delights, and upon whom he had put his Spirit for the Redemption of Man, then he makes this uſe of Exhortation of it, Sing unto the Lord a new Song: New Love, calls for new Praiſe. God might have deſtroy'd us with leſs Coſt, than he hath Reconcil'd us; for our deſtruction there was no need of his Counsel, nor of fitting out his Son, nor opening his Treasures; a word would have done it, whereas our Reconciliation stood him in much charge. It was perform'd at the expence of his Grace and Spirit, to furnish his Eternal Son to be a Sacrifice for our Atonement. An unexpressible wonder that the Father should prepare his Son a Mortal Body, that our Souls might be prepared for an incorruptible Glory.

5. God Commissioned Christ to this work of Reconciliation. He gave him a fullness of Authority, as well as a fulness of Ability. He is therefore said to be Sealed, as having his Commission under the great Seal of Heaven *. Sealing notes a special designment of the thing sealed to some special purpose: So the sealing of Christ signifies his separation and Authority to exercise his Offices; and in particular, of giving meat to the World, which should endure to Everlasting Life. By virtue of this Commission, whatsoever Christ doth, is valid; for he doth it as Gods Attourney, to whom he hath transferr'd a power to carry on the work of Redemption: In which respect he is called Gods Servant, not by Nature, but a Servant by Office. In this respect he is said to be anointed, Isa. 61. 1. Anointing was not so much the fitting a person, as a declaration of his fitness, and an Authorizing him to an exercise of his Offices. Anointing under the Law, signified an Authority conferr'd upon a person for Government, Priesthood, or Prophecy. In that place Christ doth distinguish his Commission from his fitness, and declares himself fit, because he was commissioned, the Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, there is his fitness, because יען therefore the Lord hath anointed me. It was not agreeable to the Divine Wisdom, to commission any for an Office, but whom he had furnisht with an ability for that Office. What was he Commissioned for? not to thunder the Law, but to declare the Gospel, the Gospel of peace to the broken-hearted, to reveal the Thoughts of amity which his Father had. Upon this account Christ tells us, he did not come of himself, Joh. 7. 28. and in regard of this Commission he is called Gods Angel, Mal. 3. 1. Messenger, the word signifies an Angel, the Apostle of our profession, Heb. 3. 1. because as he authoriz'd and sent the Apostles, so the Father authoriz'd and sent him. A Messenger, and an Interpreter; Job 33. 23. Though this Commission was given him at his Birth, yet God renewed the declaration of it several times. At his Baptism. Mat. 3. 17. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased. At his transfiguration, Mat. 17. 5. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well-pleased, hear you him. Christ pleads this Commission, as well as the Covenant between them. Joh. 17. 4. I have finished the work thou gavest me to do, when he calls it a work given him to do; what work I have done, was appointed me, and I have done it by thy Authority; and therefore our Redemption and security in it, depends primarily upon the Covenant or fœderal transaction between the Father and the Son; and next, upon the Commission given to Christ, which was indeed but the performance of the first Articles on the Fathers part. Christs Commission was declared several wayes; by the Miracles he wrought by his own hand, as well as by the Apostles; by the Holiness of his Life; by the accomplishment of all the predictions of the Prophets in his person; by his Resurrection from the Dead, and by the Conversion of the World executed in the most astonishing and Divine manner. This Commission he had at once as well as his fitness; but he did successively enter into the exercise of his Offices; at first he performed his Prophetical, then exercised his Priestly, a little before his Death, at his Authoritative Prayer, John 17. where he begins his Intercession the greatest, choicest, and most durable part of his Priesthood. His Kingly, he exercised more especially after his Resurrection, in the Orders he settled for the Church; all power was then more manifestly declared to be given him.

He had then in the whole, the stamp of all Gods Authority upon him.

1. His whole work was prescrib'd him; which is expresst by the notion of a precept as he was Gods Servant. The Command of a Superiour is a sufficient Commission to a Servant, to do a work he order'd to perform; and Christ, in regard of his Mediatory Office was inferiour to his Father; John 14. 28. In which respect the Father is said to be greater than he: The Command was his Commission from God, but Miracles were the manifestation of that Commission to Man. This Command implies not any unwillingness in Christ to undertake and perform this work; (as though God were necessitated to bend his Will thereunto, and to force him by virtue of his Obedience to it;) but it is rather a Law or Rule of his acting voluntarily, agreed upon between the Father and the Son; and as heartily embraced by Chriſt, as it was kindly enacted by God for the good of Man. In regard of this particular Order, his whole mediatory management in the World is called Obedience, Phil. 2. 8. He became obedient unto death, even the death of the Croſs. Obedient to Death, even to the utmoſt and ſharpeſt point, which infers an extenſion of the Command on Gods part, and Obedience on Chriſt's part in all things præceding the Croſs, and all the Circumſtances of his reconciling Death; doing nothing in his whole ſtate of Humiliation, but in obedience to his Fathers injunctions: which injunctions were ſo particular, that there is no material thing in the whole Life, and Death of Chriſt upon record in the New Teſtament, but is expreſt in the Myſteries of the Law, or the Oracles of the Prophets in the old. He did nothing either as Man, or as Mediator, but according to Gods Order: As he was Man, he was Obſervant of the Moral Law, as being that Covenant of works he was to make up the breach of, which he performed in the higheſt manner upon the Croſs, manifeſting his love to God in laying down his Life according to his Order, and love to Man in giving his Life for a Ranſom for him: and by an act of Charity incumbent upon him by the Moral Law, praying for his Perſecutors. As he was born under the Jewiſh Adminiſtration, he obſerved Gods Orders in that; In Circumciſion, as a fœderal rite, which he ſuffered in his Fleſh; and the Paſſeover, a commemoration of a National deliverance, which he celebrated with his Diſciples; but not in Purifications, and Sacrifices which were appointed for Atonement, and implyed ſin in the offerer, which it was not congruous for him to be ſubject to, by reaſon of the exact purity of his Perſon: But above all, he was an exact Obſerver of the Mediatory Law; which was a Law added over and above to him in that Oeconomy, and incumbent upon none elſe, neither Angels, nor Men. In this he did nothing, but by order; he did nothing of himſelf, but what he ſaw the Father do. Joh. 5. 19. i. e. what he had directions from his Father to perform; for if you underſtand it of Chriſt as Mediator, he did many things which the Father did not do, but nothing but what the Father did order him to do. And therefore whatſoever Chriſt did, was manifeſted to him by the Father, ver. 20. For the Father loves the Son, and ſhows him all things that himſelf doth, &c. and he had no reſpect to his own will, did nothing of his own head, but obſerved exactly the pattern ſet him by the will of his Father. ver 30. I can of my own ſelf do nothing, I ſeek not my own will, but the will of the father which hath ſent me. As he was ſent by his Fathers Order, ſo he was altogether guided by his Fathers will, wherewith his own will exactly concurr'd. Therefore thoſe good works he had done, were ſhowed them from his Father, John 10. 32. thoſe καλὰ ἔργα thoſe comely works; all that tenderneſs he had ſhowed either to Soul or Body, were wrought by his Fathers Commiſſion, and his Fathers Power. In this reſpect, as he was poliſht in regard of fitneſs, ſo he was a ſhaft in regard of Motion. Iſa. 49. 2. flying ſwiftly to the mark whereto the Archer deſign'd him. And becauſe he had ſo exactly obſerved his Commiſſion, he did abide in his Fathers love, which he uſes as an incentive to his Diſciples Obedience, both from his own Example, and the Iſſue of it. Joh. 15. 10.

2. God gave him inſtructions how to manage this work. When any Wiſe man intends an end, and fixes upon the beſt means for it; he orders every circumſtance time, place, manner, as far as he is able. God intending the mediation and incarnation of Chriſt, comprehended under that decree, the place, manner, and all the circumſtances of it in every punctilio. 'Tis ſo evident that Chriſt had his inſtructions from God, that the Socinians fancy an aſcenſion of Chriſt into Heaven after his Birth, and before his preaching in the World, to be inſtructed by God what he ſhould preach; for Paul, ſay they, aſcended into Heaven before he was ſent to the Gentiles; and if the Servant did, why not the Maſter? But this is to argue againſt the Deity of Chriſt. 'Tis ſtrange, that the Scripture which ſpeaks ſo particuly of the Actions of Chriſt, of what was done before his preaching, viz. his Birth and Baptiſm, ſhould be ſilent in ſo remarkable an occurrence, and every Evangeliſt be forgetful of it: 'Tis not credible, that if they had known it, they ſhould be ſilent in it; but the Scripture plainly denyes this pretended Aſcenſion, Heb. 9. 12, 24.

12. 24. He entred once into the holy place. In regard of this inſtruction, God is ſaid to call Chriſt to his foot, Iſa. 41. 2. i. e. taught him: As ſcholars uſed to ſit at their Maſters feet: Who raiſed up the righteous man from the East, צֶדֶק Righteouſneſs. Some underſtand it of Abraham, ſome of Cyrus, both which were raiſed from the Eaſt; but the following expreſſions are too high to ſute either of them. God brought him as the Sun from the Eaſt, to ſhine upon a dark and blind World. His work is in this reſpect ſaid to be before him, Iſa. 62. 11. as having his inſtructions copyed out to him; as Embaſſadors receive inſtructions from the Prince. His Doctrine is therefore ſaid not to be ſo much his, as his Fathers; John 17. 16. 'tis a tranſcript of his Fathers Mind and Will: whence Pſal. 40. 9, 10. I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart, I have declared thy faithfulneſs, and thy ſalvation, I have not conceal'd thy loving kindneſs and thy truth; wherein Chriſt is repreſented ſpeaking to his Father, and giving an account how he had obſerved his Rule, and how faithful he had been in the declarations of his Will; how emphatically is he referring all to God, thy righteouſneſs, thy faithfulneſs, thy ſalvation, thy loving kindneſs, thy truth. Whatſoever Chriſt ſpake, he heard from the Father; not only as a Son by Eternal Generation, but as a Mediator by an Authoritative Inſtruction, he ſpake to the World thoſe things which he had heard of the Father, John 8. 26. and every tittle of his inſtructions was obſerved; John 15. 15. he had communicated all things which he had heard of his Father, and whatſoever he did communicate, was reveal'd to him by his Father. This declaration, which was the chief part of his inſtructions, was of the Name of God, which he pleads he had declar'd; John 17. 6. 26. the Name of Grace and Love which is expreſt Exod. 34. his reconciling Name: The Name of God is ſaid to be in him; Exod. 23. 21. My Name, i. e. My Law and Doctrine, as in ſome places the Law of Chriſt is expounded, his Law, Iſa. 42. 4. which is rendred his Name, Mat. 12. 21. This was promiſed Deut. 18. 18, 19. I will raiſe them up a Prophet, and will put my words in his mouth, and he ſhall ſpeak unto them all that I ſhall command him. They were Gods words in his mouth; Gods words which he ſhould ſpeak in Gods Name. God gave him Authority to reveal his Will, and commanded Men to hear him, if they had any mind to Eternal Happineſs. You have the full inſtructions of the work he was to do, and the words he was to ſpeak Iſa. 49. 8, 9. after the Covenant made with him, he was to eſtabliſh the tottering Earth which was ſhaken and diſordered by ſin; he was to be an Herald to proclaim pardon and Liberty in favour to the Priſoners bound in chains of guilt. God inſtructs him what he ſhould ſay, that thou mayeſt ſay to the Priſoners, Go forth to them that are in darkneſs, ſhew your ſelves; come out of your Dungeon, you that are ſold under the power of ſin, ſhew your ſelves, appear before God as a reconciled Father, for I am the Covenant of the people, and God's Salvation to the ends of the Earth.

3. Miracles performed by him, were a confirmation of the authentickneſs of his Commiſſion. They were miracles of that Nature that had not been performed by any Prophet before him. The opening the eyes of one that was born blind, was an act unheard of in the World; and the raiſing one that had lain ſome dayes putrifying in his Grave, was not to be parallel'd by any of the Ancient Prophets. And thoſe miracles done by him, which were of the ſame kind with thoſe done by the Prophets of old, were done with more eaſe, and in a way of abſolute Authority. Theſe were ſuch credentials, that not only Nicodemus acknowledg'd him upon that account, to be a Teacher ſent from God; John 3. 2. but the Devils knew him to be the Meſſiah, the Son of God. Luk. 4. 41. The caſting out Devils was an unanſwerable argument of his Authority; ſince thoſe malicious Spirits were too ſtrong to be ſubject to a created power, or obey his Command without a touch of omnipotence to compell them to it; theſe he diſpoſſeſſes with Authority as one that had power over them; whence the people began to admire the excellency of his Doctrine, becauſe accompanyed with ſuch triumphant ſeals, Mark 1. 27. Without a Divine Commiſſion to fortifie his Command, his Word had been as ridiculous to them, as they were malicious againſt him: the end of all thoſe miracles wrought by him, was to teſtifie Gods approbation, and miſſion of him. Act. 2. 22. Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, wonders, and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of you. ἀποδεδειγμένον. They were demonſtrations of his commiſſion, and are called ſigns which God did by him, as they are called alſo the works of his Father, Joh. 5. 36. which did bear witneſs of him that the Father had ſent him, and challenge from the Jews a belief of him; and he intimates that their unbelief had been excuſable, if he had not done ſuch works, Joh. 10. 37. Theſe miracles were an evident Teſtimony that the Father was in him, becauſe exceeding the ſphear of Natural cauſes, they were products of the creative power, which is aſcrib'd in Scripture principally to the Father; and therefore more unanſwerable than an audible voice from Heaven, which had been more lyable to Evaſions and Objections, than ocular demonſtrations allowed by the common ſence of all ſpectators, and felt by the ſubject who received the benefit of them. Theſe being acts of Omnipotence, could not be affixt to a falſity. For it would follow, that either God were deceived himſelf, which he cannot be, becauſe of his Omniſcience, or that he would deceive others, which is impoſſible, becauſe of his Truth. And eſpecially when he was ſolemnly deſired to aſſiſt him with his omnipotence in the raiſing Lazarus to this end, that they might believe that he had ſent him. Joh. 11. 42. which he durſt never have deſired, nor would God ever have granted, had he only pretended an Authority; for then he had ſetled the faith of Man upon a falſe foundation, in overpowring their reaſon by a ſupernatural work, to aſſent to thoſe things which they could not have been induced unto by lower arguments. Theſe were the Seals of his Patent from Heaven; whence when John ſent his Diſciples to know of him, whether he were the Meſſiah, he gives no other demonſtration, than that of the ſupernatural works he had wrought.

4. The end of this Commiſſion was the Reconciliation, and Redemption of Man.

(1.) Satisfaction for our ſins, Gal. 1. 4. Who gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, according to the Will of God, and our Father. It was the Will of God, and our Father, that he ſhould give himſelf for our ſins, wherein God acted not only as a juſt Judge to have the Honour of his Law maintained, nor only as a Soveraign Lord to reduce the Creature to obedience; but as a tender Father out of a paternal affection to reſtore the Creature to Happineſs; according to the Will of God, and our Father. The Apoſtle lays therefore our atonement upon the Will of God, whereby Chriſt was authorized to this work; by which Will we are ſanctified. Heb. 10. 10. By this Will of God given in charge, and inſtructions to Chriſt, we are aton'd and brought into a ſtate of Reconciliation, through the offering of the Body of Chriſt once for all. Hence ἱλάσκεσθαι, a making Reconciliation for the ſins of the people, is ſaid to be a thing pertaining to God, wherein Chriſt expreſt his faithfulneſs to the inſtructions God gave him as a High Prieſt, Heb. 2. 7.

(2.) Teſtification of the love of God. Iſa. 43. 10, 11. Ye are my witneſſes, and my ſervant whom I have choſen, that you may know and believe me, and underſtand that I am he, I, even I am the Lord, and beſides me there is no Saviour. To witneſs the Nature and Love of God in the Salvation he hath provided, to evidence that he was the only true God, becauſe the only Fountain of Salvation to the loſt World: He had therefore an account of all from his Father, upon whoſe hearts an impreſſion of this love was to be made, ſo that he knew them all by name, Joh. 10. 3. It was to give us an underſtanding of God, both of his Truth, and of his Love, 1 John 5. 20.

(3.) Final and perfect Salvation. It was the Will of God not, only that he ſhould give himſelf for our ſins, but that he ſhould deliver us from this evil world; i. e. conduct us to Heaven, that we might be for ever there without ſpot, or any ſtain of the evil of the World upon us. Gal. 1. 4. Upon this account he had Authority, ἐξουσίαν, to give Eternal Life to as many as God had given him; and it was in his inſtructions not to caſt off any that came to him, Joh. 6. 38. Whence the converſion of the Samaritan woman is ſaid to be the Will of his Father, Joh. 4. 34. and there is no work of Grace upon any Soul by the merit of his Paſſion, and power of the Spirit, but is by an Order of his Father to him for it; and therefore when God ſhall call for all thoſe, that as a right are depoſited in his hands, he expects the full performance of his charge, and a reſignation of them all to him without the loſs of one, Joh. 6.39. For his Commiſſion and Inſtructions extended, not only to take away the enmity on Gods part by the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice, but to preſent them unblamable, and unreproveable in the ſight of God, that there might be no ground for the breaking out of this enmity again on either ſide. Coloſ. 1. 20, 22. Thus was our Saviour made by the Authority of God, a ſurety of a better teſtament; Heb. 7. 22. a ſurety on mans part to ſatisfie the Debts which were owing to the Juſtice of God, which he performed as a Prieſt by his Death; and a ſurety on Gods part to ſecure pardon and peace to Believers, that they ſhould be no more under arreſt for their Debts, which was enſur'd when all Authority and Power was given into his hands; ſo that the Commiſſion and Inſtructions were every way extenſive for the aſſerting the Honour of God, and enſuring the Happineſs of the Creature.

6. The Father actually ſends him. Nothing more frequent in the Goſpel, eſpecially of John, than Chriſts affirming he was ſent by the Father. John 8. 42. I proceeded forth, and came from God, neither came I of my ſelf, but he ſent me. As he intruded not himſelf, nor appointed himſelf, ſo he did not take his journey, and preſent himſelf to the World, till he had his diſpatch from God; as he had his Divine Being by Communication from the Father, ſo he had his Temporary Miſſion from his Father. His Generation is the proper ground of his Miſſion. John 7. 29. But I know him, for I am from him, and he hath ſent me; Though his Miſſion is not the neceſſary conſequent of his Eternal Generation: his Eternal Generation did not neceſſitate his Temporal Incarnation, no more than the Eternal proceſſion of the Spirit from the Father and the Son, can neceſſitate the Incarnation of the Spirit. There was in the Father a right of ſending propter relationem originis: And becauſe of Chriſts voluntary putting himſelf into the relation of a Mediator. In reſpect of his being the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, he is ſaid to be begotten; as Mediator and Reconciler, he is ſaid to be ſent; Generation was an Eternal Act, Miſſion a Temporal; that was Natural, this voluntary; the Decree of Miſſion was Eternal, the Act of Miſſion Temporal. His being ſent, doth not impair his Deity; though ſent, he is Jehovah, Zach. 2. 8, 9. Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, after the glory he hath ſent me, and you ſhall know that the Lord of Hoſts hath ſent me. The perſon that ſaith he is ſent, is Jehovah, and he is ſent by Jehovah; and the end of his ſending is there expreſt, ver. 11. For the conjunction of many Nations to the Lord, in that day, of his ſending and dwelling in the midſt of Zion. And when he affirms that he is ſent by the Lord Iſa. 48. 16. And now the Lord God and his Spirit hath ſent me, he affirms himſelf to be the firſt and the laſt, v. 12, 13. Whoſe hand laid the Foundation of the Earth, and his right hand ſpanned the Heavens, when he called unto them to ſtand up together: His ancient Name was ſent, which ſome think is the ſignification of the word Shiloh, Gen. 49. 10. which they derive from a word which ſignifies ſending; and Moſes ſpeaks of him to God by this title. Exod. 4. 13. Oh my God, ſend I pray thee by the hand thou wilt ſend; which anciently was underſtood of the Meſſiah, becauſe the Patriarchs did in difficult things expreſs their deſire of the coming of the Meſſiah, who was to reſtore and ſettle all things in a happy ſtate. Moſes knew that God would ſend him to be a Redeemer, and he deſires God would ſend by him. And it is a Title appropriate to Chriſt by John Baptiſt, Joh. 3. 34. He whom God hath ſent.

(1) There is the higheſt reaſon to acknowledge him ſent of God. That there was ſuch a perſon in the World, is acknowledged by the very Enemies to his perſon, and own'd in Humane ſtories, as well as Divine writ. * Since he profeſt himſelf to be ſent by God, if he were not ſent by him, he had been guilty of the greateſt falſity, and greateſt folly in affirming ſo. Had he been a meer man, and come without any Authority, How comes it to paſs, that after his Death he prevailed againſt the Laws of the Nation, the Grandeur and Valour of the World, the Wiſdom and Eloquence of Men, and againſt the whole World that reſiſted his Doctrine? That he put to flight the powers of Hell, ſilenced their Oracles? How ſhould one crucified as a Malefactor, be ſo powerful after his Death, to make ſuch impreſſions upon the minds of Men, to change the whole ſcene of the World; to aſſiſt aſſiſt his followers for many years after in the working of Miracles? If God would for a time have left ſuch a wickedneſs (had it been a falſe aſſertion) unreveng'd; yet would he ever have ſeconded it by his own power, and nonpluſt men into a belief of it? Would he have aſſiſted the Heralds of this news even againſt Himſelf, and his own Truth and Righteouſneſs? Had this been done by Humane means, it might have been ſuſpected; but a Divine Wiſdom and Art appeared in all. It was not by Riches, Honours, or the promiſes of worldly greatneſs, that this Doctrine ſpread it ſelf over the World, and found ſuch harbour in the minds of Men; But by promiſes of an inviſible and future happineſs, and aſſurance of preſent miſery, reproach, poverty, priſons, torments, and Death; and by theſe means his followers encreaſed to be a formidable number, againſt the Oppoſition of Princes and Learning of the World, and they were more willing and fond to lay down their Lives to ſeal the Truth of the Doctrine, That Chriſt was ſent of God, Than to ſtrike one ſtroke for the propagation of it, though they wanted not courage for Acting, as well as for Suffering, had any ſuch Commiſſion been granted them. * Now if God doth rule the World juſtly and righteouſly, we muſt believe that Chriſt was ſent by God for thoſe ends he declar'd in the time of his Life, or we muſt deny the righteous providence of God, and acknowledge all things to be order'd by chance, or ſome worſe power; we muſt accuſe God of the higheſt unrighteouſneſs, in bearing witneſs by a Divine power to ſo great an impoſture, whereby Millions of Souls would be undone, had he not according to his own declaration been ſent by God.

* Ibid. cap. 16. p. 173.

(2.) God ſent him for this end of Reconciliation and Redemption. He was ſent as the Meſſenger of the Covenant, Mal. 3. 1. to declare the peace, as well as to be the peace. Eph. 2. 14, 17. The thing it ſelf was ſo incredible, that an injur'd God ſhould be deſirous of Reconciliation, and upon ſuch terms as the Death of his Son, that it was as needful to be declared by God, as contrived and acted by God. The objections that might have been made againſt it, had ſuch ſtrength, that he only who lay in the boſom of the Father, and knew all his Eternal Councels, and was the Actor of it in his own perſon, could reveal the thoughts, purpoſes, and reſolves of his Father concerning it from all Eternity. Joh. 1. 18.

Uſe.

I. We ſee again here the ſad charge againſt unbelief, and diſobedience. 'Tis a deſpiſing the ſtamp of all Gods Authority upon Chriſt, and tearing his Commiſſion: a refuſal of one particularly ſent, a rejection of the Meſſenger of the Covenant, and all the Covenant treaties of love and peace. This was the aggravation of the Jews ſin, and is likewiſe of all the Inheriters of that unbelief, to the end of the World; That Chriſt hath an Authoritative Commiſſion from his Father, and is not received by the Rebels: that he ſpeaks in his Fathers Name, and is not believed by the offender, Joh. 5. 43. God was in Chriſt reconciling the World, as a Prince in an Embaſſador; therefore God and his reconciling offer are deſpis'd in the refuſal of his Commiſſion: 'Tis to God the affront is offer'd, Chriſt being the repreſentative of God in the higheſt and moſt gracious charge, in the tendereſt and moſt indulgent offers, any ſlight thoughts of his perſon, any contempt of his precepts, any diſregard of his promiſes redounds upon the perſon authorizing him to thoſe ends. He was ſent to be heard and obeyed, Mat. 17. 5. not to be ſlighted and deſpiſed.

II. Study Chriſts Commiſſion in the extent of it. Whatſoever Chriſt doth, he doth it by Command, and Commiſſion from his Father. This will ſupport faith againſt fears, and hope againſt deſpondencies. It will afford us arguments in Prayer, when we can open before God the Commiſſion he gave to his Son, and back every petition with ſome clauſe in it; when we can go to Chriſt as an Officer Authorized and Inſtructed, and ſhow him what Inſtructions he had, Iſa. 61, 1, 2, 3. To bind up the broken hearted, proclaim liberty to the Captives, and the opening of the Priſon to them that are bound, to give beauty for aſhes, the oyl of joy for mourning, the garment of praiſe for the ſpirit of heavineſs, that they may be trees of Righteouſneſs. To bind up the broken-hearted, deliver the Captives, open the Priſons, change deformity into beauty, and ſorrow into joy, a ſpirit of heavineſs into a ſpirit of praiſe, a languiſhing ſhing frame into a fruitful growth. All which parts of his Commiſſion were own'd by him, Luk. 4. 18. and obſerv'd in his actings in the World. The poor woman pleaded with him for Mercy, as he was the Son of David, Mat. 15. 22. We upon a higher Title, as he is the Commiſſioner of God, the Apoſtle of our Profeſſion, the Meſſenger of the Covenant.

3. Act Faith much upon it. There is little Comfort in all that Chriſt did and ſuffer'd, unleſs we reſpect him as one ſent. Had he come of his own head, we could not with any confidence plead his Merit before God. He is ſent as his Fathers ſervant, to do ſervice for his Father and his People. Chriſt muſt be reſpected not only as Dying, but as one ſent by the Father to ſuch an end. This is the Character he gives his Diſciples Faith in his Relation to the Father, Joh. 17. 8. They have believed that thou didſt ſend me. 'Tis this Commiſſion Chriſt pleads in his Interceſſion: Let not them that wait upon thee, O Lord God of hoſts, be aſham'd for my ſake; Let not thoſe that ſeek thee be confounded for my ſake, O God of Iſrael, becauſe for thy ſake I have born reproach, Pſal. 60. 6, 7. 'Tis Chriſts paſſion prayer. The 9, 21, 22. verſes, are applyed to Chriſt in the New Teſtament. It was by thy Order, and for thy Honour, I bore this reproach; let not therefore any Believer be aſham'd and confounded. What he deſir'd on Earth, he intercedes for in Heaven, and upon the ſame ground; He will not therefore refuſe thoſe that come unto God by him, he hath an Office in Heaven for their reception. You come to one who hath an Obligation and Order from his Father to receive you, and hath too faithful a diſpoſition, and too Compaſſionate a Nature of his own, ever to reject you. It was from the ſtrict obſervance of his Fathers Orders, that he did nothing but what was pleaſing to God, Joh. 8. 29. I do alwayes thoſe things that pleaſe him, ἀρεστὰ Λέγειν, ſignifies, ſome ſay, an Order of a Court. Not a Work done, not a Word ſpoken, but was agreeable to the Tenour of his Commiſſion, to the Copy of his Inſtructions. Joh. 12. 49, 50. Whatſoever I ſpeak therefore, even as the Father ſaid unto me, ſo I ſpeak. We cannot but pleaſe God, by believing one that is ſo exact, by preſenting to him what he is ſo highly pleaſed with. The Command given him by his Father, was the publiſhing Everlaſting Life. We ſhould then believingly put in plea Gods Order. This is a ſtronger ground of ſupport than the principles of Sciences, and fallibility of Senſe, and the Totterings of Reaſon.

4. Bleſs God for his love, and for any work in your Hearts. The authorizing Chriſt is a piece of Love, that could never enter into the heart of any man, unleſs God had revealed it: 'Tis therefore called a Myſtery, Eph. 3. 3. The Apoſtle could not conſider the Will of God and our Father in this work, without interrupting his Diſcourſe with a Doxology, Gal. 1. 4, 5. To whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen. Bleſs him for any Gracious work in any of your Hearts. It was by the Order of his Father, any work was done by him in the World. 'Tis by the ſame Order any Work is done by him in your Souls. 'Tis Chriſts meat and drink to do his Fathers will in both. Not a perſon that finds the qualifications of Grace in his heart, but may read his name in the Commiſſion of the Father to Chriſt. As the Angels rejoyc'd in the Manifeſtation of the Wiſdom and Power of God, when the New Creation was laid in the Incarnation of Chriſt, ſo ſhould we in the Miſſion of the Son of God, Glory to God, and peace on Earth, are in conjunction in themſelves, and ſhould be in our Meditations on it.

7. The Father actually bruiſeth him In this Act is the Corner-ſtone of our Reconciliation laid. He bore from his Father our puniſhment; the puniſhment of ſenſe in his Agonies in the Garden, the puniſhment of loſs in the Eclipſe upon the Croſs. In the one, he taſted the Terrors of Hell; in the other, he felt the bitterneſs of a Temporary Clouding of Heaven. He was ſmitten of God and afflicted. Iſa. 53. 4. percuſſum Dei, מֻכֶּה אֱלֹהִים. Men that were extreamly afflicted, they regarded as ſmitten by the immediate hand of God. God indeed both loved and puniſhed him in that Act, Joh. 10. 17. he lov'd him as our Redeemer, and bruis'd him as the ſurety ingaging for our Debts. He lov'd him for the Glory he was to gain by him, and puniſh'd him for the ſins he did legally bear upon himſelf: he loved him as his Servant in whom he would be glorified by the puniſhment of our ſins, and the Redemption of our Souls. 'Tis granted on all hands, that God was the Supream

* Bilſon of Chriſts Sufferings.

Cauſe and Author of Chriſts ſufferings; but ſome ſay *, not the immediate Executioner with his own hands. For the phraſe in Scripture, that God did theſe or thoſe things, concludes not that he did them with his immediate hand; but that he was the Decreer, Diſpoſer and Director of them by his juſt judgment in a holy manner to correct the ſins of Men, or by his wiſdom to make Tryal of his Saints; God uſing for the Executioners Men or Angels, good or bad, or other inferiour Creatures, as ſeems beſt to his Wiſdom, Amos 3. 6. Shall there be evil in a City, and the Lord hath not done it? where he doth not aſcribe all Evil of puniſhment to the immediate hand of God, but to the Soveraign Judgment and Power of God, appointing and ordering what ſhould be done.

'Tis certain, That the Grace of God was the Cauſe of his taſting Death, Heb. 2. 9. But 'tis moſt likely, that the Father did immediately bruiſe him.

1. It ſeems neceſſary that the ſtroke ſhould come immediately from the Father.

1. In regard of what he was to ſuffer. It was more than a bodily death was due by the firſt ſentence againſt Adam in caſe of Failure on his part. Gen. 2. 17. In the day thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely dye, מוֹת תָּמוּת. All kinds of death, the Curſe of the Law reacht further than the caſe of the Body. If nothing more were due to the ſinner but the Temporal Death of the Body, it were a light and Tolerable Puniſhment; an Infinite wrath ſurely was due both to Soul and Body for Tranſgreſſing the Precepts of an Infinite Majeſty. The Soul being principal in ſin, muſt be the principal in Suffering. The Soul was the Agent, the Body but the Inſtrument; the whole Nature of Man had ſinned, and violated the Articles of the Covenant; the whole Nature of Man muſt therefore anſwer. The Soul in us then being the proper ſubject of ſin, the Soul of Chriſt muſt be the immediate ſubject of ſuffering, otherwiſe he ſuffer'd not the penalty due to ſin. Not one of thoſe Murderers, whoſe hands reek'd with the blood of his body, could reach his inviſible ſoul, and ſtain their hands immediately with the oppreſſion of his Spirit; that was beyond their touch, and was obnoxious only to the Fathers ſtroke. No Creature could drop an inward Wrath upon his ſoul. An Infinite Juſtice was wrong'd, an Infinite Puniſhment muſt be ſuffer'd; now none can execute infinite wrath, but an Infinite Perſon; what Creatures ſtrokes could be ſufficient to Revenge an Infinite Offence againſt an Infinite Majeſty? As every Faculty of our ſouls had been depraved by ſin, ſo muſt every faculty of the ſoul be afflicted with ſorrow. The whole world was guilty before God, Rom. 3. 19. ὑπόδικος τῷ θεῷ, under the judgment of God: his wrath abode upon us, Joh. 3. 36. We were by nature children of wrath, Eph. 2. 3. Chriſt muſt endure the Wrath due to us: it was more than a common death that he was to taſte, and did taſte, Heb. 2. 9, 14, 15. That Death which the Devil had the power of, who labours not only for the death of the body, but for that of the ſoul: That Death which men under a ſence of guilt fear'd, which was not a Temporal, but an Eternal one: Men fear'd not a death in ſin, but a death for ſin; not ſo much the death of the body, as that of the ſoul: Such a death which men fear'd, Chriſt endur'd; the penal death of Men, not the ſpiritual death of men; and that in regard of the nature of it, not of the continuance, nor the deſpairs and moral Evils which follow upon it: Such ſins as the damn'd are guilty of, are not eſſential to the nature of Puniſhment, but ariſe from the inherent unrighteouſneſs of the Perſon; neither is the Eternal Duration of the puniſhment Eſſential to its Nature, but ariſeth from the finite Nature of the ſuffering Creature, which renders a Commenſurate ſatisfaction from him impoſſible. The Infinite Holineſs of Chriſts Nature was a bar againſt the ſins which are committed by others under that Wrath, and the Infinite Grandeur and Dignity of his Perſon, was a bar againſt the Eternal duration of that Puniſhment. Now ſuch a death is immediately inflicted by the Wrath of God: I cannot ſee, how any Creature can inflict that which is Infinite.

2. In regard of the Attributes the Father intended to gloriſie in the death of Chriſt. He acted herein as Judge, for the manifeſtation of his Vindictive Juſtice, as ſupream Lawgiver for the vindication of his holineſs, as a Governour for the declaration of his Tenderneſs and Kindneſs towards man; all which Attributes were glorified in the higheſt ſtrain by his being an Actor in the death of his beloved Son.

1. His Juſtice. His Juſtice had not been ſo Eminent, if Chriſt had only ſuffer'd the

the death of the body, without impreſſions of Wrath on his ſoul; nor if God had left him to the ſtrokes of others without ſtriking him himſelf. This Attribute had been manifeſted upon the higheſt Creatures, Angels in Heaven, Man upon the Earth; and upon the account of the latter, had reach'd both the irrational and inanimate Creatures; there wanted nothing to expreſs it to the utmoſt, but this of bruiſing his Son. God deſign'd the utmoſt demonſtration of this in the death of his Son, Rom. 3. 26. Chriſt was ſet out as a propitiation, that God might be juſt; that God might be juſt, i. e. that he might be known, and declar'd in the higheſt manner to be a Righteous God; Implying, that all other expreſſions of it before, had been drawn in fainter Colours than what he intended here; as if he could not have been known to have an impartial Juſtice, without ſuch a way of diſcovery. He did therefore all in this Caſe, which an Exact Juſtice could require; for to neglect what it requires, is an injury to it, as well as to do what it prohibits. In the Creation he was a God of Power and Wiſdom; in the law a God of vengeance, which is mounted to the higheſt point in inflicting wrath upon Chriſt for mans violation of that Law. In extraordinary viſible judgments by the hand of God, there are clearer notices of his Juſtice, than when the hand of Inſtruments is more ſenſibly felt in them. The Heavens then declare his Righteouſneſs, when the Lord is Judge himſelf, Pſal. 50. 6. Abrahams Obedience was more eminent by the laying hands upon his own Son Iſaac himſelf, according to Gods Order; ſo was Gods Juſtice in laying his own hand upon Chriſt, than if it had been committed meerly to inſtruments. Had our Saviour ſuffer'd only a bodily death, with thoſe griefs in his ſoul which are incident to men barely for the death of the body, he had under all that load of ſin which was laid upon him, ſuffer'd leſs than many men have done? There was ſomething therefore of Wrath dropp'd into his Soul, which was the Act of his Fathers bruiſing of him, for the manifeſtation of his Juſtice, and giving it an unexceptionable ſatisfaction.

2. His Holineſs. God was now upon the higheſt diſcovery of his Holineſs and Hatred of ſin. Had this puniſhment been left onely to Inſtruments, he had indeed declar'd his Holineſs, but in a fainter Degree; his Hatred of ſin had not been ſo Conſpicuous, had he not with his own hands pour'd out a Wrath upon him. His End in ſending his Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, being to make him a ſacrifice to condemn ſin in the fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. his ſhooting his wrath upon him was a more ſenſible, high, and full Condemnation of ſin, than if all the Devils in Hell, and all their ſubjects and Votaries on Earth had been let looſe to buffet him: Herein he ſhow'd, that ſin was odious and abominable to him; that it ſhould not be ſpar'd, tho' it were only by imputation upon his Son: and hereby he lays a foundation of a greater aw and reverence of his ſanctity, and pure indignation upon the Hearts of Men. Here was the beauty of his Holineſs, as well as the exactneſs of his Juſtice; vindicating the Honour of his Law, diſplaying the purity of his Nature by ſheathing his Sword with Indignation in the Bowels of ſin, while he peirc'd the heart of his beloved Son. A Prince puniſhing his own Son, for ſome enormous Crime, by his own hand, would evidence a greater abhorrency of it, than if he only expos'd him to the hands of Executioners.

3. His Love. If Gods Love appear'd more in giving up Chriſt as a ſacrifice, than if he had ſav'd the World without the death of his Son, and without any ſatisfaction, as appears, Joh. 3. 17. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. which was a purer ſtrain of love than pardoning ſin without a Sacrifice. It may alſo follow, that ſince God reſolv'd to ſignalize his love to us, he would have it reach the higheſt note; and it could not be ſcrew'd up to an higher Peg, than the ſacrificing of his Son for us with his own hand. If there be ſuch an Emphaſis of love in ſending him, there is a ſtronger Emphaſis of love in bruiſing him. God ſo loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son; But God ſo loved the World, that he bruis'd his only begotten Son, declares a richer Magnificence of Love, and raiſes it to an height of Glory, in ſhowing what he would do for miſerable Creatures. He magnifies his kindneſs, demonſtrates how much he values and delights in his Elect, and gives an undeniable proof of the treaſures of love in his heart for them. His earneſtneſs in ſhooting his Arrows into him himſelf, rather than loſe his people, and engraving upon him the marks of his anger, is the higheſt point his Compaſſion to us could amount unto, and a ſtep beyond the bare offer and Miſſion of him. God would ſave us as a Judge, with the Evidence of his Righteouſneſs; as a Lawgiver, in the diſcovery of his Holineſs; as a King, in the diſplay of his Soveraignty, Iſa. 33. 22. The Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, and the Lord is our King, he will ſave us; and as a Father too with the cleareſt and deareſt Affection.

2. God did bruiſe him, Iſa. 53. 10. Yet it pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, he hath put him to grief: when thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his days, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hands. This Chapter is the Hiſtory of the Croſs, and the Epitome of the Goſpel: 'Tis Chriſts Crucifixion in Effigie, before he was Crucified in his Perſon; The double ſtate of Chriſt, of Humiliation and Exaltation, are here deſcrib'd; the verſe is a propheſie which hath ſomething Minatory, and ſomething Conſolatory. Minatory, It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him; he ſpeaks of what was future, as if it were paſt. Conſolatory, He ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his dayes; and yet, this word referrs to ſomething antecedent in ver. 9. he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth; though he had an unſpotted holineſs in his Nature, an unblamable purity in his life, yet it pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, as he ſtood in our ſtead, and repreſented our perſons.

חָפֵץ It pleaſed the Lord. The word ſignifies not only a bare will, but a will with delight. The word is uſed to ſignifie Gods pleaſure in his Church, Iſa. 62. 4. where the word is Hephzibah, my delight is in her; the ſame word; and it is uſed to expreſs Chriſts delight in his Saints, Pſal. 16. 3. in whom is all my delight. Not only his reſolve, but his pleaſure, his heart was as much in it as his hands; the word ſpeaks more than a bare permiſſion. He delighted not ſimply in the ſtrokes he gave, but in his own eſſential perfections manifeſted by thoſe ſtrokes; he delighted not ſimply in the Rod, but in that Balſom which was to drop from the end of the Rod upon Mankind; he was pleas'd with every wound, as it was a neceſſary Medium to Redemption; the Text intimates it, he was pleas'd to bruiſe him, but it was in order to another pleaſure that was to proſper in the hands of the bruiſed Perſon.

הֱדְכָּא To bruiſe him, he hath put him to grief. The word ſignifies to pound as in a Mortar, whereby the greatneſs of Chriſts Sufferings is expreſt. God came arm'd with his Vindictive Juſtice, the ſentence of the Law in his Mouth, and the penalty of the Law in his hand; he appear'd as a juſt Governour of the World, with a readineſs to exerciſe his Authority for the Vindication of his Law; he glitter'd in his Holineſs, to right the wronged Holineſs of his Law, and in his Juſtice to Revenge the inſolencies committed againſt it. His delight in this, might very well conſiſt with his love to his Son. As a Father he lov'd him, as a Judge he puniſhed him; as a Father he lov'd his Perſon, as a God he loved his own honour. A Son enters into ſuretiſhip with his Father for an inſolvent Debtor, the Father loves his Son as he is a Father, but demands the Debt of him as he is a Creditor, and hath the Law paſs'd againſt him as he is a Governour; he did affect him as he ſtood in relation to himſelf, and puniſh'd him, as he ſtood in relation to us; he lov'd him for his own Holineſs, and puniſh'd him for our ſins.

Again, 'Tis no wonder that it is expreſt, that the Lord was pleas'd or delighted to bruiſe him, ſince the bruiſing Chriſt was a part of the Acceptation of the Sacrifice: as fire deſcending from heaven to conſume any ſacrifice preſented to God, was a ſign of the acceptableneſs of it to God; this is ſuppos'd to be the Sign of the Acceptation of Abels ſacrifice. Fire from Heaven conſum'd Abels ſacrifice and not Cains. Theodoſian therefore renders accepted ἐπιδεκτον, and the Scripture gives us frequent Examples of this way of acceptation; ſo it was with Gideons offering, Judg. 6. 21. and ſo it was with Aarons, Levit. 9. 24. and with Elijahs, 1 King. 18. 38. and with Davids, 1 Chron. 21. 26. God had never kindled the ſacrifice, had he not been pleaſed with it.

When thou ſhalt make his Soul an offering for ſin. When God was to deal with him in a way of Vindictive Juſtice, as he was a ſacrifice for us, he would not ſpare him, nor nor abate one ſtroke due to him for our ſins; he would deal with him in the ſame manner, as he would deal with us, in whoſe place he ſtood as a ſacrifice; he did not bruiſe him as he was his Son, but as he was a ſacrifice, and ſo would not abate any thing of that weight of ſuffering, which was due by the law and by the demand of Juſtice for our iniquities.

The promiſſory part follows. He ſhall ſee his ſeed, there ſhall be a ſucceſſion of Generations for the Glory of Chriſt, according to that, Pſal. 72. 17. His name ſhall be continued as long as the Sun; he ſhall be childed, he ſhall have a Generation of Children to keep up his name.

In the verſe you ſee.

1. The greatneſs of Chriſts ſufferings, expreſs'd by Bruiſing.
2. The Inflicter of them, the Lord.
3. The Reaſon of them, as he was an offering, a ſacrifice for ſin.
4. The Subject, The Redeemer.
5. The Fruit of it, a ſpiritual ſeed, with duration.

Doctrine. The greateſt puniſhment inflicted upon Chriſt, when he ſtood as a ſacrifice for ſin, was not the Act of men, but the Act of God. There were ſufferings in the Body of Chriſt, as Buffetings, Spitting, Scourging, Crucifying; in theſe, men were the Inſtruments, but the determinate Counſel of God preceded. But there were ſufferings in his Soul which was beyond the reach of Men. God himſelf made the impreſſions on this, the fire that as it were ſcalded his Spirit, that made him ſweat Clods of Bloud in a cold ſeaſon, came down from Heaven, as the fire did upon the Legal Altar. He never expreſt ſo great a ſorrow under all the Calamities he felt in the Courſe of his Life, as in the Garden; he was ſore amaz'd and very heavy, Mark 44. 33, 34. He began to be ſore amaz'd, as if he had taſted nothing but joy in the time paſt of his life, and never underſtood the Invaſions of any ſorrow before: he then began to feel the firſt impreſſions of that wrath due to ſin, a ſudden conſternation ſeiz'd upon his faculties. Both words ἀδημονεῖν and ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι, ſignifie that his pangs were highly ſtrain'd: a meer bodily death could not amaze him thus. He had a Divine Nature to ſupport his Humane, againſt a meer ſeparation of his Soul from his Body, ſince the Divine Nature would be ſeparated from neither, and he knew a few dayes would reunite them for ever in a glorious ſtate. Chriſt did as well foreknow by the promiſe, the Glory that was to follow upon his Sufferings, as he did by the precept, the Paſſion he was to undergo. It was the Wrath of God, a greater bitterneſs than any other Gall in the Cup of Death, that the Humane Nature, tho ſupported by the Divine, ſtood looking upon with apprehenſions of Greif and Amazement; he knew the greatneſs of the puniſhment due to ſin, and the greatneſs of the paſſion he was to undergo for ſin. He is called the Lamb of God, a Lamb of his own appointing, a Lamb of his own ſacrificing, diſtinguiſht from the Paſchal Lamb by the Author and giver, called the Lamb of God, whereas thoſe were the Lambs of Men. In the Conſtitution of Chriſt in the Office of Mediator, which was Gods immediate Act, he acted the part of a wiſe Governour; in puniſhing ſin in the perſon of our Surety, thereby ſatisfying his juſtice, he acts the part of a juſt Judg. May not the puniſhment of Chriſt be immediate by Gods own Hand, as well as the Conſtitution of Chriſt was immediate by his own Mouth? Iſaac was to be the ſacrifice, and Abraham the ſacrificer; Iſaac a child of promiſe, in whom the ſeed ſhould be call'd, ordered to fall by the hand of Abraham the Father of many Nations. Chriſts ſuffering repreſented in the one, and Gods ſtriking prefigur'd in the other; God ſeeming to intimate, that as Abraham was willing to offer up his Son at his command with his own hand, ſo he would offer up his Son as a ſacrifice for him, in whom all the Nations of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed. 'Tis true, the Devils were let looſe upon him with all the powers of darkneſs, Luk. 22. 53. Joh. 15. 13. and upon the Croſs he combated with principalities and powers, becauſe there he ſpoil'd them, Coloſ. 2. 15. they bruis'd his heel by their Inſtruments, and his Father his Soul by his Wrath. The Church of old expected and deſir'd this, Pſal. 80. 17. Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the ſon of Man, &c. The Pſalmiſt complains of the miſerable deſolation of the Church, for which there was no remedy, but in Chriſt the

Man

Man of Gods right hand, the man of his love. By the hand being upon a man, is meant puniſhing many times in Scripture; as Pſal. 38. 3. Thy hand came upon me, i, e. thou didſt ſtrike me with a plague. Indeed his Father mixed the Cup, would not ſuffer it to depart from him, though he offer'd up ſupplications with ſtrong Cryes; and God, who as a righteous Judge, will not clear the Guilty, did ſentence him to the drinking the Dregs of it; and it is as righteous an act to inflict the puniſhment, as to pronounce the ſentence. He conſtituted him Mediator by an Act of Soveraign Mercy, he inflicted the puniſhment upon him by an Act of Soveraign Juſtice: He ſent him into the World, as the Father who had the power of Miſſion; and bruis'd him upon the Croſs, as a Judge who had the power of puniſhing.

1. The imputation of our iniquities to him was the act of God Iſa. 53. 6. The Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all; הִפְגִּיעַ accurrere fecit incurſu hoſtili. He gathered together the Debts of Men, put them into one ſum, and transferr'd them upon Chriſt, as to guilt and puniſhment. He bound our tranſgreſſion upon the back of his only Son, as Abraham did the wood upon the ſhoulders of his Iſaac. Our ſins were laid upon Chriſt, as the tranſgreſſions of the people were laid upon the head of the ſcape-goat, Levit. 16. 20, 21, 22. which was but a Type of this imputation to Chriſt; for their ſins were not truly laid upon the Goat, it had then been the Antitype, not the Type. Sins were confeſt, gathered together by confeſſion, laid upon the beaſt which is ſaid to bare them; he, and all that touched him, were accounted unclean. All our ſins were laid upon the head of Chriſt by God: He it was, made him ſin for us * who knew no ſin, that we might become the righteouſneſs of God in him: Not by inhæſion, but imputation. * Not only a Sacrifice for ſin, but ſin it ſelf; the double Antitheſis in the Text intimates, he was made that ſin he knew not; he knew the puniſhment by Suffering, but he knew not the guilt by Commiſſion and practiſe; he was made that ſin which is oppoſed to Righteouſneſs, and that was ſin it ſelf, which muſt be underſtood only as to the imputed guilt; for puniſhment could not have been inflicted on him, unleſs guilt had firſt been imputed to him: Had he not firſt born our ſins, he could not have been driven into the Wilderneſs of Deſertion and Death. Upon this is laid the difference of his firſt and ſecond appearance. Heb. 9. 28. So Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many, and unto them that look for him, ſhall he appear the ſecond time without ſin unto Salvation. At his firſt he bore our ſins; not perſonally inhærent; but legally, after the ſubſtitution of him in our ſtead; counted to him as his proper debt, upon which account he reſtor'd what he took not away. At the ſecond he ſhall appear without ſin. His Nature was free from ſin in his firſt coming, but not his Condition: he had ſin as our ſurety, though none in his perſon; it was impoſſible he could be our ſurety, without this imputation. Upon the account of this ſuretyſhip, God reckon'd him a Debtor, as made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law. Galat. 4. 4. That what God in juſtice might charge upon the bankrupt, he might after this conſtitution of him under the Law, by the ſame right charge upon the ſurety: for this guilt, by the Fathers act of imputation, upon his own voluntary ſubmiſſion to take our offending Nature, became his; and therefore what penalty was by the Law due from us, was to be paid by him. All puniſhment ſuppoſeth a guilt one way or other; but the Redeemer had no perſonal guilt, for he had done no violence, Iſa. 53. 10. yet it pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, when his ſoul made it ſelf an offering for ſin, imputed to him. This imputation was Gods immediate Act, and could not be the Act of any other, becauſe he was the ſole Creditor without any partner; and therefore it is no more reflection upon God immediately to puniſh him, than it was to transferr our ſins upon him, which was an Act of God, not poſſible to be done by any Creature. God imputed a World of ſins to him, becauſe he undertook for that World, God had created by him; therefore God alone inflicted upon his Soul that puniſhment, which was principally due for our ſins. Since he dyed for our ſins, he dyed under that hand, which was to ſtrike us for them; for God made him ſin for us, i. e. he handled him, as he would have done thoſe ſinners, in whoſe ſtead he ſuffered, had he not undertaken for them.

* 2 Cor. 5. 21.

* Polhill on the Decrees p. 225.

2. His

2. His greateſt ſufferings appear to be above the power of any Creature to inflict. Was it a conteſt with any Creature that made him deſirous to wave that Death, which was the main end of his coming?

(1.) How was his ſoul begirt with the wrath of God, before his agony in the Garden? What an exceſs of ſorrow do thoſe words ſignifie, Mat. 26. 37. Mar. 14. 33. ἐκθαμβεῖσθαι ἀδημονεῖν, ſore-amazed, ſorrowful, very heavy; an inward quaking, an unexpreſſible amazement. What a Deluge fell from Heaven upon our Ark, of which, that of Noah was a Type! How was his ſoul ground to powder in his Agony! How did his ſoul boyl under the fire of Wrath, and his blood leak through every pore of the Veſſel by the extremity of the flame! Muſt it not be more than a finite breath, that thus melted his ſoul in the Garden? Muſt it not be a ſtronger than a finite ſtroke, that wrung out thoſe bitter cryes? Was there any viſible perſon to afflict him? Yet his Agonies there are thought to have more of Hell-fire in them, than his ſufferings on the Croſs; clods of blood dropt from him when there was no viſible hand to ſtrike him: Unconceivable muſt be the afflictions of his ſoul, that could make ſuch diſmal commotions in his body, and put the whole Inſtrument out of Tune; that ſhould make a diſſolution of the parts; and make his heart like melted wax in the midſt of his bowels. Pſal. 22. 14. His ſpotleſs Conſcience could not flaſh ſuch lightnings, as to melt the Sword, when nothing touched the Scabbard; his Father was then charging him with our ſins, actuating his knowledge and ſence of them: he had all his life time a knowledge of the ingratitude and rebellion of ſin; he knew how it had offended and injur'd God; how it had deform'd and ruin'd the Creature; now was his knowledge actuated, and the charging upon him the puniſhment of them, made his knowledge ſenſible and experimental. This cup diſcovers more bitter ingredients than any Creature could wring out into it.

(2.) Could it be only the ſence of an approaching bodily death, that could ſo deeply afflict his innocent ſoul? If ſo, he had diſcovered a greater weakneſs than many of the Martyrs; nay, had been out-ſtript in courage by many Moral Heathens; his Nature ſure was as ſtrong as theirs to bear it, had not his ſufferings been attended with a more ſenſible ſting than theirs were: Martyrs have ſuffered as great outward torments with joy, laughing in the faces of their Perſecutors, and edging their fury to more ſharpneſs. But alas he ſuffered more Deaths than one. Iſa. 53. 9. He made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death. בְּמוֹתָיו The Death of the Soul in regard of the bitterneſs, though not in regard of duration. His Father inflicted what was evil, and withdrew that which was good: Were not the clouds of his Fathers countenance, and a ſubſtraction of good looks from him a bruiſing him? All the outward torments of the World could not have drawn one doleful cry from any man under the full and ſenſible beams of God's favour, much leſs from Chriſt. Could all the Inſtruments in Hell, Earth, or Heaven, draw a Vail between his Soul, and his Fathers Countenance? This muſt only be his Fathers Act, and was a ſignal ſtroke. 'Tis clear there was a Negative Act of God, denying that comfortable preſence which was due to him as a holy perſon by the Covenant of works; and could not be denyed his Humanity, as united to the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, had he not been in another capacity upon the Croſs, and not only preciſely as the Son of God. The inflicting of the evil of inward puniſhment, was ſure as much the Act of his Father, as the withdrawing from him an inward good, the light of his Countenance. Might there not be more than a bare cloud, might there not be ſome bitter frowns darted upon him, ſince he appeared at that time in the condition of the greateſt ſinner? If the Wrath and Juſtice of his Father did not immediately drop upon him, How could he ſatisfie it; what ſatisfaction could ariſe to it, if he were not at all touched by it? The fire upon the Typical Altar came down from Heaven, and ſo did this wrath which conſum'd our Sacrifice.

3. God had a choice delight in the bruiſing him. With what ardency doth he rouze up the ſleepy ſword, to ſheath it in the bowels of the Man that is his fellow. Zach. 13. 7. Awake O Sword againſt my Shepheard, and againſt the man that is my fellow, ſtrike the Shepheard, &c. the latter part of the verſe is applyed to Chriſt, Mat. 26. 31. He commands it to purſue his deſign with a ſtrength like a man newly refreſht and riſen riſen from ſleep, and make the deeper Gaſhes. Never was God ſo pleaſed in drawing his ſword againſt his Creatures, as in drawing it againſt the man his Fellow, againſt the Shepherd, one of Chriſts Titles in Scripture. It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, Iſa. 53. 10. God delighted in his bruiſing. The word חָפֵץ anſwers to εὐδοκία in the New Teſtament, when he ſaith that he is well pleaſed in Chriſt as his beloved Son. In the formal Condition of this Action, as it was Converſant about puniſhment, it was not delightful to God, for he doth not puniſh with his heart, Lam. 3. 33. He doth not afflict willingly, or grieve the children of men. He delights not in the death of a ſinner, much leſs in the death of his Son, Ezek. 18. 33. But as finally conſider'd, it is highly pleaſant to him in regard of his Glory and Mans Redemption. The reaſon why God bruis'd him, was not any delight ſimply in the death of Chriſt; but becauſe in that act he broke in pieces our ſins (which were the Cauſe of the Enmity) which were born by Chriſt in his Body upon the Tree; 1 Pet. 2. 14. Who his own ſelf bore our ſins in his own body upon the tree, that we being dead to ſin, ſhould live unto righteouſneſs, by whoſe ſtripes we were heal'd, which is a Comment on, Iſa. 53. 4, 5. He hath born our griefs, he was ſmitten of God, he was bruiſed for our iniquities, and with his ſtripes we are healed. Chriſt appear'd in that ſtate, as bearing the whole body of ſin, as well as the body of Fleſh. The Jews aim'd at killing his body, and God aim'd at killing our ſin. Every ſtroke he fetch'd was not ultimately to put his Son to death, but the Enmity to death, to deſtroy the Dominion and power which ſin by its guilt had derived from the law; for ſo being dead to ſin muſt be underſtood, which is clear by obſerving the like phraſe *Rom.*6.11,14. where by being dead to ſin, he means ſin not having dominion, or condemning power over him, which is evidenced by a ſuitable expreſſion of being dead to the Law, Rom. 7. 4. which is no more than the Laws not having dominion over us in regard of the Curſe, as appears, ver. 1. 2, 3. It was ſin which had made the breach, that God principally ſtruck at in the bruiſing his Son. He had a pleaſure to bruiſe him as our ſurety, a trouble to bruiſe him as his Son. He was afflicted in his Afflictions as his Son, and would have the Sun in the Heavens bear witneſs to it by hiding its head. But he was delighted with his ſufferings as our Redeemer, becauſe they were for the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice, the condemnation of ſin, and the Reſtauration of his Creature. In this reſpect, the Death of Chriſt was the ſweeteſt ſacrifice that ever was offer'd, and conſequently the ſmiting of him, the pleaſanteſt work that ever God engag'd in.

4 The Graces of Chriſt were moſt eminent in enduring the inward impreſſions of wrath from his Father. The Odors of his Graces brake out more ſtrongly by his Fathers bruiſing him.

(1.) His kindneſs and tenderneſs to man. Chriſt was now upon the higheſt manifeſtation of his Compaſſions to mankind. His death was the Emphaſis of his love; his love was ſtronger and purer than the love of any Creature, not only in regard of the Excellency of his Perſon, but the greatneſs of his ſufferings. Had he endured only a death of the Body, and not ſuch a death that could have been inflicted only by an infinite hand, his love had loſt much of its luſtre. His love is principally laid upon the ſcore of his death, Gal. 2. 20. Who loved me, and gave himſelf for me. If his Paſſion had been only in his body, without impreſſions from an higher hand upon his Soul, he had been in ſome meaſure parallel'd in this (except in the Dignity of his Perſon) by ſeveral, who have freely reſign'd their Lives to the Enemies ſwords, and ſome to unexpreſſible Torments, for the publick Good of their Country; As the Roman Regulus to the Carthaginians, becauſe his Country ſhould not agree to diſadvantagious Conditions of Peace. Beſides, by this inward conflict he was fitted for further tenderneſs, having hereby an experience of the worſt men were expoſed unto by ſin, that he might be more tender of their welfare, and with more melting Bowels ſolicite his Father for Relief; hence did ariſe his ſtrongeſt ſympathizing with the Condition of Men.

(2.) His Obedience to his Father. 'Tis a ſignal Teſtimony given him, that he was obedient even to the death of the Croſs, Phil. 2. 8. The ſharper then his Circumſtances were upon the Croſs, the more illuſtrious his Obedience was. The luſtre of Obedience is ſeen in engaging upon command with the moſt affrighting difficulties. It was a more full acknowledgment of his Fathers Soveraignty, and a ſtronger aſſerting his own Obedience in making his Soul an offering for ſin, Iſa. 53. 10. than if he had only made his body ſo by a temporal death, (though I confeſs by ſoul many times in Scripture, is only meant Life.) And alſo to have his eye fixed upon the Mediatory law, and his own duty ariſing from thence. When his Father ſeems to have forgotten all the promiſes he had bound himſelf in, and ſhot frowns into his heart, and denied him both the light of Sun and Stars, Comfort both from Heaven and Earth, He adds yet holy Inflammations to Obedience, which under thoſe Circumſtances was moſt raviſhing to the Father, and moſt Meritorious for us. It was then an Offering and a Sacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour unto God, Eph. 5. 2.

(3) His fiduciary truſt in God and the promiſes made to him, was more ſignal and noble. To truſt a God ſmiling, when he doth caſt about us nothing but Cords of Love, is not a caſe of difficulty; every man hath a ſtrong impulſe to this, when God drops ſweetneſs into him. But then is Faith at the higheſt Elevation, when a man can truſt God though he kills him; and wait upon him when he hides his face and drops Hell from his hand. Thus was our Saviours Faith put to the Trial by this proceeding; yet he went forth Conquering and to Conquer, and would not let go his hold, though his Fathers Beams were withdrawn, and his Bowels ſeem contracted, the Heaven overcaſt with darkneſs, and all the Curſes of the Law let fly at him, he would ſtill depend upon God for his help in his greateſt Paſſion, Iſa. 50. 7, 9. The Lord God will help me, ver. 10. Who is among you that fears the Lord, that obeys the voice of his ſervant, that walks in darkneſs and ſees no light? let him truſt in the name of the Lord, and ſtay himſelf upon his God. He would not let the ſtorm blow theſe concerns of the World out of his hands, which then were managed by him; which truſt of his, in this diſmal time, he ſeems to ſet as a pattern for our imitation, in the words immediately following; intimating we ſhould have his Faith under thoſe dreadful Circumſtances alwayes in our eyes to encourage ours.

Theſe Graces of Chriſt, Tenderneſs, Obedience, and Truſt had not been ſet forth in ſuch orient colours to us, had not his Soul drunk a Cup of Wrath of his Fathers tempering, as well as his body felt the ſtrokes of humane fury.

5, I muſt add a caution or two for the better underſtanding this, and preventing any miſtake.

(1.) Though Chriſt ſuffered from his Father an infinite wrath due to us, yet it was not neceſſary it ſhould be eternally endur'd by him, becauſe eternal wrath is due to us; for the Eternity of puniſhment ariſeth from the condition of the ſubject ſuffering, not from the Nature of the puniſhment it ſelf. A Creature being a limited Nature, cannot give an infinite ſatisfaction commenſurate to an infinite Juſtice, without ſuffering eternally. Therefore though infinite puniſhment be due, yet Eternal puniſhment is not in it ſelf due, but falls in, for want of the Creatures ability to ſatisfie the demands of Legal Juſtice; ſince it cannot ſatisfie the Law by one, or many acts of ſufferings, 'tis alwaies ſuffering, but never fully ſatisfieth: But the infinite dignity of the perſon of Chriſt tranſcending all Creatures, made the ſatisfaction he offered valuable without an Eternal duration of thoſe torments, which the inſufficiency of the Creature could never have made by ſuffering to Eternity. He ſatisfies the Debt that pays at once the Millions he owes; but he can never ſatisfie, but muſt remain in bondage, that pays a farthing in a year, when his Debt amounts to Millions; and beſides his running further into debt while he is paying. The Eternity of puniſhment proceeds not only from old Debts, but new ones contracted by blaſphemies, and hatred of God: for though ſome ſay that in termino the damn'd do not ſin, I cannot think, but loving and glorifying God is the Eſſential Duty of a Creature; and while he is a Creature, let him be in what ſtate he will, he is under the obligation of it. 'Tis impoſſible a Creature can by any conditions be freed from the Obligation of loving and adoring his Creator. Chriſt might ſuffer the pains of Hell, but not with all the accidental circumſtances, nor in the place of Hell: Time and Place are but accidental things, and not of the Eſſence of puniſhment: 'Tis not the place of Hell makes Hell, but the wrath of God in what place ſoever it is poured out. A Surety goes not to Priſon if he pays the Debt; the Priſon is not a place of payment, but a place to enforce the payment, where there is unwillingneſs to pay.

(2.) This act of his Father in bruiſing him by his wrath, was no approbation of the guilt of the inſtruments in the death of his body. The ſufferings in his Soul in the Garden, were before the Jews had laid hands on him to apprehend him. God dropped wrath upon his ſoul, yet had no hand in the crime of the Jews, in the covetouſneſs of Judas, envy of the Phariſees, cowardize of Pilate, and the fury of the people; theſe did ſpring from their Natural Corruption; they had one end, God an other: they aim'd at the ſatisfaction of thoſe luſts, God aim'd to content his Juſtice, declare his Wiſdom, manifeſt his Mercy, clear his Holineſs, remove the Enmity, and relieve our Souls. Though God approv'd of the Death of Chriſt, and deliver'd him up, *Act.*2.23. yet he did not approve of thoſe ends which managed them in that action. It was the higheſt guilt that ever was manifeſt upon the ſtage of the world in them, as it was the higheſt love that ever God ſhowed in the ordering things to the Redemption of Man. God determined Redemption by the Death of his Son, but did not poſitively determine the evil of the Inſtruments. God laid no inward reſtraints upon them, left them to act as voluntary agents, he knew what their fury would do, and reſolved to govern it for his own Glory, and the good of the world. God had given them a free power to act otherwiſe: He did not neceſſitate them to this rage: their own corruptions met together to commit this horrid crime. They were not impel'd by a command, threatning, or promiſe; his law was a rock againſt it, the deſtruction of their City, and the Diſſolution of their ſtate were aſſur'd them by our Saviour, if they went on in that way; they had no motives from God, but from their own luſts, which were not of Gods infuſion, but engendred by themſelves, and enflamed by the Devil. God only as a wiſe Governour, uſed them, and order'd them to his own glorious ends; as a man uſes the ravenous diſpoſition of his Hound to catch the Hare, which the Hound would of it ſelf do, and governs it to his own ends, different from that of the animal. In ſhort, they acted utterly againſt the Law in ſhedding innocent blood; God acted according to the Mediatory Law in bruiſing him, who had voluntarily ſubſtituted himſelf in our room; they aimed not at any one end which God aimed at in it; their intentions were wholly different; though God approv'd of the Death of Chriſt preciſely conſidered, becauſe he delivered him up, yet his Death, as manag'd by them, was the greateſt wickedneſs that ever the Sun ſaw: So that the Fathers bruiſing Chriſt, doth not in the leaſt excuſe the Jews; nor had they been excuſable, had their intentions concurr'd fully with Gods in the Act; unleſs they had received a Command from him to crucifie him, as Abraham had for the offering his Son.

The Father then hath been in Chriſt reconciling the World unto himſelf; In bruiſing him by his Wrath, glorifying his Attributes in that act, which were neceſſary to be manifeſted in our Redemption; laying all our ſins upon him, delighting in it as it was for his Glory, and our Happineſs, thereby winding up the Graces of Chriſt neceſſary for the exerciſe of his Office, and our Redemption and Imitation, to the greateſt height, and thereby relieving us from that curſe of the Law, which we muſt alwaies have born, and could never have ſatisfyed: So deep a hand had the Father in this work of Redemption! The Trinity were ſignal in it, the Father bruiſing, Chriſt receiving the ſtroke, and the Spirit ſupporting him under it.

Uſe.

I. How may our Meditations ſwim in this unlimited Ocean of Love? Oh the depth of the Riches of Grace! that we ſhould have the curſed pleaſure of ſinning, and Chriſt the bitterneſs of ſuffering; that the puniſhment due to us ſhould be charged upon the Son of God by the Father! Muſt the Father bruiſe the Son for us, who had deſerved as well as Devils, to be kept bound in chains of darkneſs, to the judgment of the great day? Might he not more eaſily have condemned us, than condemned his beloved Son for us to a bitter Death? But here he would have infinite Love, and infinite Juſtice kiſs each other. What could we do to deſerve it? If we could merit any good, could we merit ſo great a gift as this?

this? If we could have deserved, that he should open his arm to embrace us; could we merit that he should wound his Sons heart to redeem us? If we could deserve to be filled with his Grace, could all the World deserve that his Son should be emptyed of his Glory? Could they deserve that God should be wounded by God for their transgressions? God gave Christ to dye for us while we were yet sinners, Rom. 5. 8. when we wanted motives of Love, as well as merits of Grace, and had no incentive of his Grace, unless the want of Grace could pass for one. Were God as Man, his Thunder had crusht the World; the Disciples, the best of Men upon Earth at that time, would have been prodigal of Gods Thunderbolts, if they had had them in possession, when they desired fire from Heaven upon the poor Samaritans. And had Man a store-house of punishment, he would empty it upon persons that notoriously wrong him; but God poured out those Vials upon his own Son, which of right belonged to us. Consider, it was his Son whom he bruised, not a Servant, not an unspotted Angel; his only begotten Son, the brightness of his Glory, the express image of his person; not an adopted Son, having only a dark representation of the Divine Nature: A begotten Son of his Nature, not begotten of his Will; a beloved Son, not a disaffected Son; an only Son, not one pickt out of many Children: God had no more in all the World, and yet he bruis'd him; he bruised him not only by a Temporal Death of the Body, but by a weight of Wrath on his Soul; not to purchase some small favour, but an Everlasting Inheritance: How great is this love that valued our Salvation above the Life of an only Son, and shed a bloud more valuable than the whole Creation, to preserve ours, which could not be equivalent to the price of it; and put him into the posture of an Enemy to his Son, to make us his Friends! If the thunders of the Law had been shot upon us, what strength had we to bear them? What merit to remove them? How great is the Love of the Redeemer, to be willing not to be spared for a time, rather than millions of men and women should fail of being spared for ever? It was for our transgressions he was wounded, for our iniquities he was bruised, and the chastisement of our peace was upon him. Isa. 53. 5. In every wound God gave him, he minded the full punishment of our sin, in the person of our Saviour; that those whom he represented, might go free. He spared him not, abated not a mite of what Justice might demand, that so his people might have a full Redemption. Rom. 8. 32. He spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. He did not spare him in regard of the strength of Justice, wherewith he punished him. What could more enhaunce the Love of God, than the terrors inflicted on Christ? And what could more inhaunce the Love of Christ, than that he endured not only a Bodily Death, but a Wrathful Death in his Soul for us?

2. Let then this Love engage every man to come to God through Christ. How should it ravish us into an humble complyance with him, and subjection to him? If he hath bruised him for us, he will not bruise us, if we come to him. The blood shed by the Order of God, is able to expiate a World of sins. God hath spent his Wrath upon him, and hath none for those that accept of him. God hath discovered a propensity to be reconcil'd, though we lye open to the stroke of his Justice, and have no strength to withstand him; a higher evidence he cannot give.

3. Spare nothing for God. He spared not the best thing he had in possession, and shall we spare our Lust from being mortified by him? The sin of man grieved him more than the Death of his Son; shall we preserve that which grieves him, and slight that which was his greatest pleasure? How comes it to pass, we are so indulgent to our Lusts, and murmur to be parted from that which is the grief of God, and the ruine of our Souls? Are those destroyers of our souls so extreamly dear to us, that we are loath to bring them out of our bosoms, and deliver them to a Crucifixion; no, not in love to that God, who melted that Son in the fire of his Wrath, out of love to us, whom he had cherished by the warmth of his bosom from Eternity? Sure if our Souls were all flint, being smitten by such a love, they should yield some fire to consume our corruptions. How hateful should sin be to us, since it is evidenc'd to be so hateful to God, as that he would not spare his only begotten Son, when he lay under the imputation of our iniquities; and caused the Curses of the Law to meet on him with all their stings, upon whom our sins had met in all their guilt? Why ſhould we ſpare that, for which God did not ſpare his Son, who never offended him, but highly pleaſed him; and in this very act too, of bowing down under his ſtrokes, by reaſon of our tranſgreſſions? Why ſhould we indulge that in our hearts, which God hath diſcovered by this act to be ſo abominable, and odious to him, and ſo deſerving an Object of his juſt indignation. Let not that find reſt in our boſoms, under which, while our Saviour was in the form of a ſervant, he found no reſt from the Curſes of the Law, and the Wrath of his Father, till it had bruiſed him, and offered him up as a Sacrifice of Atonement for it.

8. The Father was in Chriſt reconciling the World, In accepting him, and his expiatory reconciling Sacrifice. The ſteam of his precious blood went directly up to Heaven. * As the ſmoak of the Sacrifices aſcended right up to Heaven (as they ſay) not blown aſide by any Wind. This gave God a reſt, of which ſin after the Creation had endeavoured to deſpoyl him: For if God had a complacency in the work of Creation, which is ſignifyed by the word refreſht, Exod. 31. 17. וַיִּנָּפַשׁ In ſix days the Lord made Heaven and Earth, and on the ſeventh day he reſted, and was refreſht; Much more muſt God be refreſht by the work of Redemption by Chriſt, it being a reſtoring Gods reſt to him by a new Creation, and a greater Glory to God than the work of Creation was, or ſimply conſider'd, could be. God did perform what was incumbent on his part, according to the Covenant of Redemption, in regard of acceptation, after Chriſt had trod the Wine-preſs alone; and his Grace was of the ſame tenor in the entertainment of Chriſt after his work, as it was in the firſt deſignation, and call of him to it; the Foundation, and the Top-ſtone being all the fruit of a condeſcending Grace. The Grace of God accepted it, and Juſtice could plead nothing againſt it: Grace and Juſtice took him by each Arm, and led him to the Throne of Glory. It was God that juſtified him *. His entrance into Heaven with the ſame Cloaths of Fleſh he wore upon the Earth, only changed in the faſhion, ſutable to that Glorious Country, to which he was returning, was an evidence of his full acceptance.

* Lightfoot. Temple chap. 34. p. 191.

* Iſa. 50. 8.

(1.) 'Tis evident that the Father did accept him.

[1.] The Types, and repreſentations of this reconciling Sacrifice, were grateful to God upon this account, That firſt Sacrifice after the Deluge, was a ſweet ſavour, or a ſavour of reſt, Gen. 8. 21. And the Lord ſmelt a ſweet ſavour, and the Lord ſaid in his Heart, I will not any more curſe the ground for mans ſake. הַנִּיחֹחַ He ſmelt in that Sacrifice a ſavour of that wherein he ſhould have a reſt, and which ſhould fully quiet his mind; and ſuch a reſt, that he ſaid in his heart, or ſwore, Iſa. 54. 9. The Oath there mentioned can refer to no other place but this: For the ſake of the Antitype, which was reſpected in that Offering, God ſwore that he would not any more curſe the ground for mans ſake. What influence could the ſteam of the blood of a Beaſt, and the ſtench of the burning fat have upon a ſpiritual Subſtance, an Angel, much leſs upon God? Could the Blood, and Burnt Carcaſes of a few ſilly Animals appeaſe God ſo much, as to engage him to make ſo magnificent a promiſe not to curſe the ground any more for mans ſake, when the doleful cryes, and vehement ſupplications of multitudes of dying men in the Deluge, could not perſwade him to ſtop his hand, and ſhut up the Floud-gates of Heaven? Could this make him order the conſtant courſe of Nature, and ſucceſſion of times, when in the very moment he promiſed it, he conſidered the perpetual Fountain of Evil in the Heart of man, that the imagination of his heart was evil from his youth. No, But God was pleaſed with a reſemblance of Chriſt, preſented to him in the Faith of the Offerer; as a man is with the picture of his friend whom he dearly eſteems, and loves the perſon that preſents ſuch a Medal to him, becauſe of the eſtimation he hath of his Friend. If the Picture be ſo acceptable, becauſe of the relation it hath to a delightful Object, how much more dear is the Object it ſelf? In the day of the general expiation of the Jews, the ſins of the people were aton'd by the Sacrifice of the Beaſt, and ſprinkling of the blood: What force had the blood of a brute to waſh off the ſins of a rational Creature? And thoſe of a Nation? But this typifyed the mighty acceptableneſs of the blood of Chriſt, ſatisfactory to the Juſtice, and pleaſing to the mercy of God, whence all Sacrifices received what efficacy efficacy they had; God's being pleased with this Sacrifice of Noah, and others of his own appointing, was but to testifie how highly pleasing the Death of his Son would be to him, as it was an atoning Sacrifice, and sweeter, than the Iniquities of men were loathsome; both being under his consideration at one and the same time.

[2.] The time of Christ's coming, and being in the World, is called by way of eminency, an acceptable time; much more was his suffering so, which was the complement of his Humiliation-work. It was an acceptable time, because it was a day of Salvation for man. Isai. 49. 8. In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in the day of Salvation have I helped thee. They are the words of the Father to Christ, wherein he assures him of the acceptance of his Sacrifice extensively for the Gentiles; I will give thee for a Covenant to the people: Which place the Apostle uses as an argument to press the Corinthians to the sincere embracing of the Gospel, 2 Cor. 6. 2. because it was an acceptable time, a time wherein Christ was accepted, and all Believers accepted upon his account; a time acceptable to God in the Prophet; a time which therefore ought to be acceptable to man, as the Apostle inferrs. 'Tis therefore called the acceptable year of the Lord: Isa. 61. 2. To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord. The clearest, and serenest time that ever God saw since the Creation of the World: why was it so acceptable? Because it was the day of vengeance of our God; a day of vengeance upon sin, a day of the taking away, and removal of that which had caused all the enmity. Upon the knowledge of Gods approbation of it, Christ prays for his assistance in the time of his suffering, Psal. 69. 13. A Psalm of Christ, as appears ver. 9, 21. applyed to him in the Gospel. As for me, my prayer is unto thee in an acceptable time, O God; in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy Salvation; When the whole World was set against him, and he was made the song of the Drunkards; the time wherein he put it up, and the circumstances he was in, were pleasing to God; as being for his greatest Service and Glory. Let the mercy which engaged me first in this attempt, and the promise thou hast made me of the salvation of man, move thee to hear me now, and to manifest the truth of thy salvation, which thou hast committed to me, and I am now upon the effecting of. When was this acceptable time? This עת רצון when he was in the mire and deep waters, ver. 14. when he was reproached, and full of heavineſs, ver. 20. When they gave him Gall for his meat, and in his thirst, Vinegar to drink: then was the time of this highest acceptation with God for the Redemption of Man.

(1.) The Mission of the Spirit. The great end why the Spirit was sent, was to manifest this acceptance; to evidence to the World that Christ was no Impostor, because he was gone to the Father, John 16. 7, 8, 10. and had a welcome in Heaven. The coming of the Spirit, and the working Miracles in the Name of Christ, kept up the credit of his Mission and Authority from the Father, in the World. He was sent by the Father, in the Name of Christ; John 14. 26. The Holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my Name. i. e. upon the account of his Mediation, as a fruit of it; his Name would have been of no Authority for so great a gift, had not his Death been of a grateful efficacy. And by the virtue of his Intercession, John 14. 16. I will pray the Father, and he will give you another comforter. God unlocks to him all his Treasures, as a Testimony of the pleasure he took in his Death, and the compleatness of it to appease his anger, and satisfie the most extensive demands of his Justice: so high a favour could not be dispensed, if Justice had not first been fully contented. This Spirit was also to abide for ever with his people. John 14. 16. That he may abide with you for ever: Which shows the Everlasting acceptance of this Sacrifice by God; for since the first coming of the Spirit was upon the first acceptance of his offering, the abiding of the Spirit evidenceth the perpetual prevalency of it with God; for he could not abide any longer than the ground of his Mission did endure, for they must both run parallel: Now, had he not gone away, the Comforter would not have come; John 16. 7. which refers not only to his Ascension, but to his Passion. And had he gone, and his Death been unapprov'd by God, the Spirit had staid in Heaven. His work also testifies this approbation bation. He was to bring things to remembrance, whatſoever Chriſt had ſaid to

* John 14.26. them *, which would never have been, had not Chriſt in every Tittle been faithful to his Fathers inſtructions. He was not to ſpeak of himſelf, John 16. 13. He was not to be the Author of a new Doctrine in the Church, but to impreſs upon Men what Chriſt had taught, and what he had wrought by his Paſſion: He is therefore called the Spirit of Truth, teaching, and clearing up to the minds of men that Truth which Chriſt had taught, and confirmed by his Blood; there was no errour or miſtake in any part of the management of this work on Chriſts part; for the Spirit is not ſent to rectifie any thing, but to raiſe the ſuperſtructure upon that ſound Foundation, Chriſt had already laid. He was to declare only what he heard: Joh. 16. 13, 14. To act the part of a Miniſter to Chriſt, as Chriſt had acted the part of a Miniſter to his Father; to glorifie Chriſt, to manifeſt the fulneſs of his merit, and the benefits of his purchaſe; for he was to receive of Chriſt, i. e. the things of Chriſt, his Truth, and his Grace, and manifeſt it to their ſouls, and imprint upon them the comfort of both; There had been no Foundation to glorify Chriſt, had not Chriſt in this work been glorious in the Eyes of God, and been acknowledged by the Father to have glorifyed him to the utmoſt. Now ſince all this is come to paſs, according as Chriſt did prædict it; 'tis an undenyable evidence, that the Father hath fully approv'd of Chriſts faithfulneſs in his Office, and reſts highly contented by his Death.

(2.) The anſwer of prayers in his Name. As his acceptance by the Father was the ground of all the Miracles, which were wrought in the Name of the Son, after his Aſcenſion; ſo it is the ground of all the anſwers of Prayer that any Believer receives from God; for our Saviour joyns them both together, John 14. 12, 13. He that believes in me, ſhall do greater works than thoſe, becauſe I go to the Father; and whatſoever you ſhall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorifyed in the Son. Whatſoever you ask in my name, i. e. ſaith Cajetan, for my Glory, not only in the intention of the Petitioner, but the direct tendency of the thing petitioned for, I will do. His power to do it, is an argument of the ſtrength of his oblation, and validity of the price. That the Father may be glorifyed in the Son, which is the end for which our Prayers are anſwered; and is the event of thoſe Mercies we receive as anſwers from the hands of Chriſt. The Father is glorifyed in the ſucceſs of Chriſts Mediation, and the finiſhing the work he gave him to do, Joh. 17. Every return of Prayer upon the account of the merit of Chriſt, is a teſtimony of this ſucceſs; and Glory redounds by it, to the Wiſdom of the Father, for contriving; to the kindneſs of the Father, for appointing ſo able a Saviour, who could fully ſatisfy all the concerns of God, and provide for the neceſſities of the Creature, and lay a foundation for the full communication of all Mercies, needful for him. His receiving from his Father the Keyes of all his ſtores, to diſpence to Believers, manifeſts how wellcome he was to the Father upon his return, after his conflict in the World; and how ſucceſsful he was in his execution of his Office; and how fully he contented the Juſtice of his Father; which could not by any right keep thoſe ſtores from him after his meritorious Paſſion; ſo that in every anſwer of Prayer, the Wiſdom, Love, Righteouſneſs of the Father are glorifyed in the Obedience, Merit, and Purchaſe of his Son; the Love of the Father is manifeſted, in ſending ſo ſufficient a Mediator; and the Juſtice and Grace of the Father is glorifyed in accepting him, and performing the conditions requiſite on his part by the Covenant of Redemption. There is a moſt intimate conjunction of the Glory of the Father, and the Glory of the Son in this Mediation of Chriſt, which is the Foundation of the acceptation of him, and his acceptation upon the ſame foundation will be perpetual; becauſe, as whatſoever he did here, was for the Glory of his Father; whatſoever he doth above alſo, in diſtributing his gifts, communicating his Grace, is for the ſame end; and therefore can never be unacceptable; for by this acceptation of him, the Father hath a currant, and ſtanding Revenue of Glory eſtabliſhed; his Exchequer is dayly filled with it, by virtue of this approbation. This acceptance is writ upon every return of our ſupplications, put up in his Name, and tending to his Glory; the wonderful Effects whereof have been known in all Ages, and in the private experience of every ſincere Chriſtian.

Christian. Would God ever listen to those pleas in his Name, were he not well-pleased with the Sacrifice of his person? Would God ever expend his gifts to man, to keep up the credit of a person he had disown'd? This is the ground of that near Communion Believers have with God, nearer than Adam was admitted to in Paradise, wherein God condescends to the familiar expressions of his Grace, and converses with men in, and through a Mediator, who before were alienated from him, and made the marks of his wrath; The Golden Altar with incense, Revel. 8. 3. is the pleasant perfume of his merits.

[4.] The content God hath in mens believing on Christ, manifests it. God hath made faith, the acceptance of him by Men, the only condition of enjoying the fruits of his purchase; and it is not all the amiable vertues in the World, nor the riches of the whole Creation can procure us any Right or Title to him without it. So much doth the Father stand upon the Honour of his Son, That he will not grant an Eternal Happiness to any, but those that joyn with him in a sincere and hearty acceptation and approbation of him, his meritorious Death, and the Righteousness evidenc'd thereby; without this, no beams of Glory can sparkle upon us, but an Eternal wrath will swallow us up. As the Father hath approv'd him, so as to give all power into his hands; so he wills us to approve him, so as to bring all our own Righteousness to the foot-stool of Christ, and embrace him only by a naked Faith, that nothing of the Glory of his work and merit may be clouded by any thing of our own. A true, willing, cordial, lively acceptance is required, a resting on him for salvation, as God rests in him upon his satisfaction; an estimation of him approaching as near as a Creature can to that of Gods: the knowledge and embracing of him is the best savour to God, next to that of his own oblation; and man only in a believing embracing, stands in his true posture of acceptation with God.

[5.] The naked declarations of Christ to the World, are acceptable to God. The very Discourses, and the Discoursers of it are a sweet savour to God, 2 Cor. 2.15. We are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish. Yea, though Men cast away the thoughts of him, and perish in their unbelief; yet the proposal of it to them for their acceptance, is very sweet to the thoughts of God. As he will express how high his acceptation of them was, in the gifts of Eternal happiness to them that entertain him, so the rejecters shall learn the same in the severity of the punishment inflicted on them. But whatever men do, the sound of it in the World is a sweet savour to him; and all men shall be at last convinced, that his Righteousness was acceptable to God, because he is gone to the Father.

(2.) God accepted him with a mighty pleasure. As soon as he was made perfect by his Sufferings, he was saluted an High Priest, Called an High Priest, Heb. 5. 10. προσαγορευθεὶς, saluted; προσαγορεύω, dono. Hesych. When by the accomplishment of his Passion, he became the Author of Eternal Salvation, God Congratulates him for his attainment of a new Honour by his Consecration, as men Congratulate one another upon new Acquisitions. It was a sweet smelling savour to God, Eph. 5. 2. there was εὐωδία in his Mission, and ὀσμὴ in his Passion. God smelt a greater fragrancy in his death, than stench from our sins; the sweetness of the one did drown the noysomness of the other: his death was more satisfying to God, than our sins were displeasing. As he was a Vine, he sent forth a delicious fruit of his Bloud to chear both the heart of God and Man; of God by the fragrancy of his satisfaction, of Man by the fulness of his merit. Gods soul delighted in him, Isa. 42. 1. He had an overflowing Joy. All the Attributes of God, which are the soul and perfections of the Deity, had an undisturb'd Acquiescence in him. There was an unblemisht exactness in his work, because there was a fulness of delight in his Father. The Delight he took in his designation, was rather heightned than diminisht by his Faithfulness in the Execution. He was after his death brought near before God, Dan. 7. 13. One like the Son of man, came with the Clouds of Heaven, and came to the ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him, two words to express the height of Pleasure, near and before him. As if God would express his pleasure in the strait and intimate Embraces of his Son, after his great Engagement and return from the Battle; and so welcome he was, that God presented him with the dominion of the whole World. For the order of the Vision expresseth ſeth firſt his Incarnation, and then his Exaltation; ſo that this being brought neare before the ancient of days, muſt be upon his Aſcenſion juſt after his Death, and before his full inveſtiture in the Dominion of the World.

(1) He pleaſed him more than all the ſacrifices under the Jewiſh Oeconomy. Far more than all the Devoted Creatures, than Oxen and Bullocks which have Horns and Hoofs; 'tis the expreſſion concerning Chriſt, Pſal. 69. 31. A mark of Eminency, a how much more, is put upon this offering, above the Virtue of the Bloud of Bulls and Goats, Heb. 9. 13, 14. Though they were inſtituted by God, yet they were not acceptable to God, for the removal of ſin, neither could make the offerer perfect before him, Heb. 10. 1. Nor could the heaps of ſacrificed Animals, the ſteams of Brutiſh Bloud, perſwade him to the juſtification of any one Offerer. In burnt offerings or ſacrifices he had no pleaſure or reſt, Heb. 10. 6. He had a pleaſure in them, not as they were the ſacrifices of Beaſts, but repreſentations of his Sons Paſſion, and appointed as remembrances before him, of what was to be ſuffer'd by the true Object of his Reſt in time. Chriſt is the Perſon, and his Death the Sacrifice wherein God only can find a Reſt, Iſa. 66. 1, 2. Thus ſaith the Lord, the heaven is my Throne, and the earth is my footſtool: where is the houſe that you build unto me? and where is the place of my reſt? For all thoſe things hath my hand made, and all theſe things have been, ſaith the Lord. But to this will I look, to the poor, and a contrite Spirit, and that trembles at my word. The Temple and Temple-worſhip was not the place of his Reſt; God ſpeaks with contempt of them, and ſeems to caſt in the whole created compages of Heaven and Earth, as no firm object of his pleaſure. But to this will I look, i. e. this poor and contrite ſpirit נְכֵה, ſtricken; of the ſame root as מַכֵּה, ſmitten of God and afflicted, Iſa. 53. 4. That trembled at my word; He ſpeaks as of one that trembled under the Curſes of the Law, and felt the weight and bitterneſs of them; to him will I look, or intently and fixedly look, as the word ſignifies. The word, Tremble, חָכַר, ſignifies to be careful or ſolicitous; As 2 King. 4. 13. It is ſo tranſlated, Thou haſt been careful for us with all this care, though it ſignifies alſo to tremble. Who was more ſtricken than Chriſt? who more careful of the honour of Gods Law than Chriſt? or who taſted more of the Gall of the Curſe than Chriſt? who can that ſignal mark [This] point to, but Chriſt? who can be ſet in the ballance with the whole frame of the Creation, Angels and Men, but Chriſt? All thoſe things hath my hand made; which ſeems to referr not only to the Temple, but to the Heavens, his Throne, and the Earth, his Footſtool; all thoſe have been, and yet no reſt found in them. Now after the coming and ſtriking of this Perſon, upon whom the Eye of God is intent, an end is put to all the Ceremonial ſacrifices, ver. 3. He that kills an Ox, is as if he ſlew a man; he that ſacrificeth a Lamb, as if he cut off a Dogs neck, &c. It was a diſgrace to him, for men to think he could be pleaſed with ſuch ſacrifices, when he had appointed and accepted another; If they then kept them up, they ſhould be an Abomination to him, as the bloud of Swine; and yet they kept them up after this poor ſtricken ſpirit, after the offering of his Son: he calls them their own ways, their abominations in which he delighted not. And ver. 4. He would bring their fears upon them; perhaps it may be meant of their fear of the Romans, which you know they pretended, for the putting Chriſt to death, thereby to prevent any occaſion of an Invaſion; and ver. 6. He propheſies of their Deſtruction, but before this Deſtruction ſhe ſhould be delivered of a Man-child, ver. 7. You know how he Arm'd the Romans againſt them, diſcharg'd his Wrath upon them, gave up the City and Temple, which they (and even their Enemies) ſtudied to preſerve, for the Death of his Son, as a prey to the fury and Avarice of the Enemies. I have been the longer upon it, to ſhew, there is ſome ground to underſtand this place principally of Chriſt, though not to exclude the common interpretation; perhaps we might have had more ground for the underſtanding it ſo from Stephens diſcourſe, Acts 7. where he ends his Citations with this place of Scripture, ver. 48, 49. and deſcending to the Application of what he had before cited and charging upon them the bloud of Chriſt, was interrupted by the fury of the Jews from any further light which his diſcourſe might have given us. To conſider it again; God demands where the place of his reſt was? they might anſwer anſwer the Heavens. No, All theſe things hath mine hand made, yet no reſt in them: But to this I will look. This is my reſt, as the Antitheſis carrys it. This ſtricken in Spirit, as if he had pointed to Chriſt on the Croſs, and in the Garden, trembling under a ſence of Wrath; an intent look, is a look of Expectation, or a look of Pleaſure.

(2) He ſhows his mighty pleaſure in the acceptance of him by a publick proclamation as it were, Heb. 1. 6. Again, when he brings his firſt begotten into the World, he ſaith, and let all the Angels of God worſhip him. Or as ſome read it, And when he brings his firſt begotten into the world again; underſtanding it of his Reſurrection, he then proclaims him to the Angels, as an Object of Worſhip: He is the Heir appointed, as well as the Heir Eternally begotten, proclaim'd to the Angels as their Head, and the root of their ſtanding. He was ſeen of Angels, manifeſted to them in ſuch a manner as their head, after he was juſtified by the Spirit, 1 Tim. 3. 16. Methinks being ſeen of Angels ſhould ſignifie ſomething more than the ſimple Viſion. He was juſtified by the Spirit, when he was quicken'd and raiſed by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18. his being preached among the Gentiles, believed on in the World, and receiv-ed up into Glory, were Evidences of this Acceptance of him by the Father. He brings him in after his Reſurrection, as he did Adam after his Creation, into the Poſſeſſion of the World, and gives him the dominion over the Creatures. He brings in his Son, and gives him an Empire over the Angels as he was Mediator, which he had before as he was God bleſſed for ever; and the Angels praiſe him, and acknowledge him worthy, as the Lamb ſlain, to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing, Rev. 5. 11, 12.

(3) He declares the pleaſure he had in his acceptation of him, by fixing his love for ever upon him. He was ſetled in his Fathers love, becauſe he had perform'd the Mediatory command, Joh. 15. 10. If you keep my commandments, you ſhall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Fathers commandments, and abide in his love. A Commandment was given him, and a commandment was kept by him, which obe-dience hath been hitherto the foundation of his Fathers love to him as Mediator; and, when he had fully finiſhed it, would make a fixation of his Fathers Love. If he had not perform'd the Mediatory Command, he had had no intereſt in his Fathers Affection; as poor Creatures if they obſerve the Commands of Chriſt, ſhall for ever be rooted in his love, never to be caſt out; ſo is Chriſt upon the obſervation of the Command his Father gave, for ever ſetled in his Affection and Acceptation, whereby he hath given us aſſurance, that he was in Chriſt reconciling the World.

(3.) As the Father accepted Chriſt, and accepted him with a mighty pleaſure, ſo this acceptation of him, and his death redounds to every believer. Grace and Glory de-pend upon this: Take away Gods Approbation, and the whole Chain of privi-ledges linkt together by it falls in pieces.

(1) Tis the ſtability of the Covenant. His approach to God as a ſurety, having engag'd his heart for us, is that which God ſpeaks of with a pleaſing Aſtoniſhment, and is ſo tranſcendently taken with it, that he ſettles the covenant of being their God, and making them his people upon it: That is the iſſue, *Jer.*30.21,22. And the ever-laſtingneſs of the Covenant is founded in his being a witneſs to the people, *Iſa.*55.3,4. I will make an everlaſting covenant with you, behold I have given him for a witneſs to the people. All the Promiſes of God are Yea and Amen, in him the faithful and true witneſs, Rev. 3. 14.

(2) Juſtification is founded upon this acceptance. God was in Chriſt Reconcil-ing the World, i. e. Not imputing their Treſpaſſes to them, but diſcharging them. For the pleaſure he took in Chriſts Sufferings upon Mount Calvary, he Graciouſly forgets our ſins, and of Rebels entitles us Heirs. There is a fundamental Juſtifica-tion of future Believers in the diſcharge of Chriſt, though not formal and actual till they believe. As there was a fundamental Condemnation of all in the Loyns of Adam upon his Fall, not actual till they were in being, and did actually partake of his Nature: So Chriſt having his diſcharge as a Common Perſon, all thoſe whoſe ſins he bore, have a fundamental diſcharge in that of his Perſon, from any more ſuffering. As he bore the ſins of many as a common perſon in the offering of himſelf and ſatisfied for their Guilt, ſo he hath an Abſolution as the head from all that guilt he bore; no more to lye under the burden of our ſins, or endure any penalties of the Law for them: Heb. 9. 27. As it is appointed unto men once to dye, and after that the judgment; ſo Chriſt was once offered for the ſins of many, and unto them that look for him, ſhall he appear without ſin unto Salvation. As Judgment is appointed for all men, as well as Death, and they receive their Judgment after Death; ſo Chriſt after his death was judged by God, and judged perfect, fully anſwering the will and ends of God, and ſhall not appear any more as a Sacrifice, but as a perfect Saviour: he is no more to appear in a corruptible body prepar'd to bear ſin by imputation; but in a Glorious body, as a manifeſtation of his Juſtification, fitted for the Comfort of thoſe that look for him; unto them doth this judgment extend; for upon the ſcore of this judgment paſt by God in his behalf, he is to appear at length to them for ſalvation. For if Chriſt ſatisfied for Believers, he is accepted by God on their behalf; therefore his Sufferings are imputed to them; for it would be ſtrange that Chriſt ſhould endure a puniſhment for them, be approved of God as ſtanding in their ſtead, and this Acceptance not be counted to them. If there be an Approbation of his Sufferings for us, there is an Imputation of his Sufferings to us, or elſe no ſatisfaction is made to juſtice upon our Account. As he ſuffer'd, ſo he was acquitted as our Surety, and Repreſentative.

(3) The Acceptation of our Perſons and Services, redounds to us from the fathers Acceptance of Chriſt. His love to Chriſt as Mediator, is the Ground of our Acceptation, Eph. 1. 6. To the praiſe of the glory of his Grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved. He choſe him firſt as the Head, and his Members in him, he accepts him as the firſt Beloved, and Believers in him. Had not Chriſt been accepted firſt, none could have pretended an Holineſs worthy of the notice of God. The Grace of God is the Cauſe, his Love to Chriſt the Ground, Acceptation of us in him the Effect of both. In our ſelves, we are the objects of his Anger; in Chriſt, the marks of his choice Affection, 'Tis the pleaſure God took in the Obedience of his Son, which makes Believers as his Members; and their Services, though weak imitations of him, delightful to God.

(4) The conſtant wooings of men by God flow from hence. He intreats and beſeecheth men to embrace him, to be reconcil'd to him, becauſe he hath been thus reconciling the World in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 5. 20. As tho' God did beſeech you by us, be ye reconciled to God. The Intreaty and Arguments uſed to perſwade men to the Acceptance of it, could have no Validity without this Foundation, that a Reconciliation is wrought, and the Expiatory Sufferings of Chriſt accepted by God. So much is God in love with Chriſts performance, that he condeſcends to the loweſt ſtep, to beſeech, and ſolicite the Creatures affections for him, and preſſeth them with that ſweet importunity, as loth to take any denial at their hands.

Uſe.

1. See the unexpreſſible value of Chriſt's Mediation with God. God hath given the higheſt Evidence of the Grandeur of it, of Chriſts Faithfulneſs in the diſcharge of the Truſt committed to him, Glorifying the Father in all that he undertook and taught. 'Tis from his being a righteous branch, that he is become the Lord our righteouſneſs, Jer. 23. 5, 6. he was by his voluntary ſubmiſſion, and his Fathers deſignation made ſin for us; which performance is ſo grateful, that all that believe in him are made, not bare Righteouſneſs, but the righteouſneſs of God in him; he ſeems to become ſin it ſelf, wholly Guilt; and Believers thereby Righteouſneſs it ſelf in the preſence of God. His Death is ſo valuable as to procure the caſting our ſins into the depths of the Sea, and the advancing our Perſons to the heights of Glory, to ſtand before God in his Kingdom. Our Perſons odious in Adam are made beautiful in Chriſt, and our Duties that ſmell rank by Nature, ſmell ſweet by his Merits, Rev. 5. 8. The Odors of his Merits are ſo ſtrong as to overcome the ſtench of our Nature. There is no need of any Maſſes, humane Satisfactions, and additions of any Merits of our own.

2. Comfort

2. Comfort to Believers. Since this acceptance, how doth Juſtice it ſelf ſmile? The Rod of Gods fury falls out of his hand upon the ſweetneſs of his Sons Offering, and gives way to a Scepter of Grace: nothing was omitted, which was neceſſary for the pleaſure of Gods piercing Eye. This may well calm the fears in our hearts, becauſe it ſmooths the frowns in Gods face. If no charge can be brought againſt Chriſt, ſince the acknowledgment of the ſufficiency of his Offering, no charge can be brought againſt Believers. For whom was it performed, but for them? For whom was it accepted, but for them? The acceptation muſt be for the ſame ends for which his ſufferings were endur'd: Shall not then the influence of it upon them, anſwer the intention of it for them? If it ſhould not, the firſt acceptation would be in vain: Chriſt muſt then return to offer another Sacrifice, which ſhall never be. In the acceptation of Chriſt for you, he hath accepted you in him. He ſtood in no need of it, but in relation to you; he was the Eternal Son of God, acceptable to the Father; but by this he is eſtabliſhed an Eternal Saviour. An obedient Faith on our part, will entitle us to Salvation on his part, Heb. 5. 9. And being made perfect, he became the Author of Eternal Salvation unto all them that obey him. Since God hath accepted him for you, God will appear full of Omniſcience to underſtand your wants, full of Compaſſion to pity you, full of Power to relieve you, full of Wiſdom to guide you, full of Grace to pardon you, full of Glory to bleſs you for ever. Every Believer will be accepted by God, becauſe by his Faith he owns that which gives God a reſt, and as the Grace of God aſſiſts him, ſo he contributes to Gods contentment. Oh then remember your offences againſt God to be humbled, and Gods acceptation of the Bleſſed Offering to be comforted: The Odour of this Sacrifice was ſo agreeable to God, that not content to diſcharge us from the Condemnation we had merited, he would alſo that we ſhould partake of the Life, and enjoy the Kingdom of his Son, judging it not equity to make any ſeparation between the Head, and the Members, the Redeemer, and the Redeemed; and a diſparagement to the greatneſs of the Offer, and offering to ſhut Heaven againſt them; hereby is not only condemnation remov'd, but Eternal Glory aſſur'd. 'Tis not only a not periſhing, but an Eternal Life upon Faith, Joh. 3. 16.

3. This is the main foundation of Faith. How unvaluable had all Chriſts ſufferings been, and how vain our Faith, had God diſapproved him; Juſtice had been arm'd againſt us, if a blemiſh had been in the Oblation: Faith firſt reads Chriſts Commiſſion, then caſts its Eye upon the ſtreams of blood flowing from his Heart, liſtens to his doleful cryes, conſiders them for it ſelf; but ultimately reſts it ſelf in Gods acknowledgment of the full diſcharge of the Debt, and his cancelling the Obligation wherein Chriſt was bound. After this, none have any excuſe for unbelief, unleſs they will accuſe God of weakneſs, or falſity, and impoſture in bearing witneſs to the faithfulneſs of one, who had not diſcharg'd his Office.

4. Glorifie God. 'Tis the uſe Chriſt in the Prophetick Pſalm makes of it. Pſal. 22. 23, 24. Praiſe ye the Lord all ye the ſeed of Jacob, glorifie him all ye the ſeed of Iſrael, for he hath not deſpis'd, nor abhorr'd the affliction of the afflicted, neither hath he hid his face from him: a Meioſis. His face indeed was hid for a time, but to return with freſher and brighter beams; and the warmth at the return made a recompence for the clouds upon the Croſs. How ſhould our Hearts ſwell with Praiſe, as Heaven did with Joy, and the thankful gladneſs of our Hearts keep time with the joyful acceptance of his Father?

5. Accept Chriſt. What is worthy of Gods acceptation, cannot be unworthy of ours. If this be agreeable to the Fountain of Goodneſs, why ſhould it not be grateful to the derived ſtreams? That which gratifies an infinite Ocean of purity, would ſurely gratifie us, were we not abominable ſinks of corruption: 'Tis the higheſt contrariety to God, not to ſeek and acknowledge reſt in that wherein God finds a full content. If the pure Eye of God behold not the leaſt ſpot to diſturb, but a commenſurate goodneſs to ſettle his reſt: What can we ſee in Chriſt, which ſhould make us nauſeate him? Chriſt is the Object of Gods reſt, and well may be of ours. As God reſted not in any thing after the degeneracy of the World, but in Chriſt; ſo neither ſhould we reſt in any thing, ſince the degeneracy of our Hearts, but in the ſame Object. God will love us highly for our acceptance of him; God is highly pleaſed with his creatures converſe with him, in and by a Mediator. Deut. 18. 16, 17. They have well ſpoken, that which they have ſpoken, when they deſired that God would not ſpeak to them, but by Moſes a Type of the Mediator. God never gave them ſo great a commendation, as in this caſe, nor ever approved ſo highly of any action, or words that came from the Body of this people. God dwells above in the clouds, we cannot come to him, but by Chriſt: He is a God of Vengeance, and we the Meritors of it; we cannot be skreen'd from his Wrath, but by Chriſt; accept him, and God will accept us in in him, refuſe him, and all the other Righteouſneſs in the World cannot ſecure us. Let Gods approbation be the director of ours: Acceptance of Chriſt, is a noble imitation of God.

9. God raiſ'd him. There was a neceſſity of his Reſurrection, in regard of the predictions; for ſince the Meſſiah was to dye, and not ſee corruption. Pſal. 16. 10. Thou wilt not ſuffer thy holy one to ſee corruption; 'tis clear, he was to riſe again; elſe his Body in a natural courſe would have ſeen corruption. This Reſurrection is a clear evidence of his acceptation; himſelf uſes this as an argument, both of the Authority of his Commiſſion, and fidelity in execution. Joh. 2. 18, 19, 21. Deſtroy this Temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up, ſpeaking of the Temple of his Body: Revel. 1. 5. He is the faithful witneſs, manifeſted to be ſo, by being the firſt begotten from the dead. Without his Reſurrection, his acceptation had not been manifeſt; neither could he have appeared in the quality of a Redeemer and High Prieſt, had he like one of us, layn rotting in the Grave; he had not without it, been powerfully declar'd to be the true Son of God, nor conſequently evidenc'd to be our Redeemer, nor been in a capacity, according to the decree, to Reign to the ends of the Earth. All men would have concluded him an Impoſtor; but by riſing up from the power of an ignominious Death, he was manifeſted to Angels and Men, to be not only Gods beloved Son, but his Obedient Servant, faithful in all his Will, the exact revealer of his Councels, and grateful to him in his ſufferings; whereby not only the valuableneſs and ſufficiency of his paſſion, for a foundation of Everlaſting Reconcilement, but the actual acceptance of it was evidenced: It was a teſtimony to Chriſt of his faithfulneſs, a teſtimony to us of the approbation of his Sacrifice, for thoſe purpoſes for which it was offer'd. As his Reſurrection by the Father was as it were a new Generation of him as the Son of God, Rom. 1. 4. Declared to be the Son of God with power, by his Reſurrection from the dead; ſo it was as a new conſtitution of him as the Mediator of Men; himſelf calls his Reſurrection a Regeneration, Mat. 19. 28. and he is therefore called, not the firſt riſen, but the firſt born from the dead. Coloſ. 1. 18. Who is the beginning, the firſt born from the dead; This being a new birth of him from the womb of the Earth. 'Tis a rule in the Language of the Scripture, Aliquid factum dicitur, cum factum eſſe demonſtratur. Hereby his perſon was own'd to be the Son of God, and his Works and Suffering, as our Redeemer, were declared highly pleaſing; the ſuit was depending till his Reſurrection, but then the controverſie between God and ſinners upon the account of the Law, was at an end, and the bond was cancel'd in token of full ſatisfaction; the publick decree of God determin'd it; the decree is extant, Pſal. 2. 7. the interpretation of it. Act. 13. 33. God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again; as it is alſo written, Pſal. 2. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Thus was he juſtified and declar'd Righteous, and his Obedience, which run through all his acts, exceeding acceptable. He was indeed approved of God by miracles, which God did by him in the time of his Life, Act. 2. 22. And by ſuch Miracles that could not fall under any jealouſie, but by thoſe he was teſtified to be a Prophet, a Man approved of God, a Teacher come from God, as Nicodemus argues, Joh. 3. 2. But by his Reſurrection he was teſtified to be more than a Man, the Son of God in his Majeſty. Notwithſtanding the miracles of his Life, he appear'd in the form of a Servant, and ſcarce aſſum'd any other Title, than that of the Son of Man; but after he had by his conqueſt made Death his Captive, he illuſtriouſly appears to be the Son of God, the glory of which is encreaſed by his Aſcenſion, Exaltation, and the plentiful Effuſion of the Spirit, by all which his Righteouſneſs and Obedience was declar'd to be pure without any mixture, perfect without any defect; clear gold without any droſs, and a full payment of the utmoſt farthing to Divine Juſtice, for believing ſinners.

(1.) It was the act of the Father. The body of Chriſt was raiſed, and Reſurrection is not the work of either Soul, or Body, but of God only. God raiſed him from the dead in ſuch a manner, as to declare him to be his Son; It being the declaration of the Father, his Reſurrection was the act of the Father, God rais'd him from the dead, Act. 13.30,33. Upon which account God is ſet forth in this raiſing Chriſt as the Object of Faith, Rom. 4. 24. If you believe on him, who raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead. This Being as it were a new begetting him, was the act of the Father, whoſe Son he was by Eternal Generation. 'Tis particularly aſcrib'd to the Father. Rom. 6. 4. As Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the Glory of the Father. By the glorious power of the Father, which was made illuſtrious in it; ſome take glory of the Father, for the formal cauſe, as though the meaning were, Chriſt in his Reſurrection was adorned with the Glory of the Father; others for the final cauſe; he roſe to the glory of the Father; but to take it for the efficient cauſe, is more natural; as the Love of the Father was moſt magnificent in giving him to dy, ſo the power of the Father is moſt glorious in unlooſing the bands of Death, and delivering him from the Grave with Triumph; becauſe the reuniting the Soul to the Body, and reſtoring it to all the Functions of Life, is an act of creative Power: and this Reſurrection was more glorious than a ſingle Creation, in regard of the mighty load of guilt Chriſt lay by imputation under, when upon the Croſs. 'Tis true, this Reſurrection was the work of the Trinity, It was the work of the Spirit, He is therefore ſaid to be quickned by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18. and juſtified in the Spirit. 1 Tim. 3. 16. His Reſurrection was the Juſtification of his perſon, in all that he performed for the ſatisfaction of God. Chriſt alſo is ſaid to raiſe himſelf, John 2. 19. I will raiſe it up, and had an Authority to take up his life again, John 10. 18. As he is ſaid to conquer his Enemies, 1 Cor. 15. 25. He muſt raign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet; yet the Father is ſaid to do it. Pſal. 110. 1. For acts of power are more peculiarly aſcrib'd to the Father, and Reſurrection is an act of Omnipotence, as Wiſdom is aſcrib'd to the Son, and love to the Holy Ghoſt. The conqueſt of his Enemies is the act of his Father, and therefore the beginning of his Triumph, and the overpowring the great Enemy, Death. And as he waits at Gods right hand till his Enemies be ſubdued, ſo he waited in the Grave, till his diſcharge was order'd by the Father.

2. It was moſt congruous and regular for the Father to be principal in the raiſing Chriſt. The Father had the power of Miſſion, and therefore of Acceptation; and therefore the act whereby it was declar'd, did principally pertain to the Father, as it was a full manifeſtation of the Faithfulneſs of Chriſt in his Office; as he received his Commiſſion from his Father, ſo it was moſt regular he ſhould receive his diſcharge from the ſame hand, becauſe he had been faithful to him that appointed him. The Father was the Creditor, He had covenanted with his Father to ſuffer and give him ſatisfaction; the Father then was the moſt proper Judge whether the Articles were performed, or no; whether the ſatisfaction was valid, and the debt paid; As the Father was the Law-giver and Judge, the delivering Chriſt to Death belonged to him; upon the ſame account, the delivering him from Priſon, and Judgment belonged to the Father: none have power to remit or diſcharge after the ſentence, but the ſupream Authority: So that the raiſing Chriſt, belonged as properly by right to the Father, as the power of delivering him to Death. When the account was made up in Heaven, and not a farthing of what was due was found wanting, but the demands of Juſtice fully ballanc'd by the ſatisfaction of Chriſt; He was taken from Priſon and Judgment; Iſa. 53. 8. and God ſends an Angel to roul away the ſtone, Mat. 28. 2. not indeed to make way for the Reſurrection of Chriſt, as though there was a neceſſity of rouling away the ſtone, to give his Body paſſage out of the Grave; but to evidence to the Woman that intended to come into the Sepulchre, that his diſcharge came from Heaven, and that they might ſee the Grave empty of his Body. As he that is in Priſon for Debt, ought not to go out without the Judges Authority; ſo Chriſt was held in the Fetters of Death, till his his Fathers Abſolution, and then was delivered from the Grave, as a Debtor from Priſon. God looſed the chains of Death. Act. 2. 24. It being not poſſible that he ſhould be held in thoſe chains; for it was not equitable that after he had ſatisfied, he ſhould be held longer in his Fetters; the Judge only can free from Priſon; and when the Law, where any is impriſoned, is ſatisfied, he is in Juſtice bound to order the diſcharge, and pronounce in open Court the acquittal of the Priſoner.

(3.) This act of the Father in raiſing him, was with reſpect to this work of Reconciliation, and the accompliſhment of all the fruits of it.

[1.] For the juſtification of every Believer. As the ſame Authority which had delivered him to Death, rais'd him from the Grave, ſo in the purſuance of the ſame ends for which he was delivered; he was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our Juſtification. Rom. 4. 24, 25. 'Tis declar'd as an encouragement to believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the Dead; which argument would have no validity in it to incite the Soul to Faith in God, if thoſe ends there ſpoken of, were not actually aim'd at in thoſe acts of his. The Father, who was the Author of both, had the ſame ends in both thoſe acts; they were the acts of the Father, and therefore the ends of the Father. Though his Death was the Foundation of his merit, yet his Reſurrection is the foundation of the application of that merit to all his ſeed. At this dore comes in our Juſtification; As God in delivering him up to undergo the Curſe of the Law delivered us in him, and looked upon Believers as ſuffering in him the puniſhment due to ſin; ſo in raiſing him, he vertually raiſed them in him, and fundamentally comprehended them in that diſcharge. His Reſurrection was not meritorious of our Juſtification; that was the fruit of his Death; He paid by his Death what was due for our ſins, and began to receive at his Reſurrection what was due for his ſufferings; by compact he ſuffered for us, and by compact he was raiſed for us. As the expiation of our offences depended upon the death of our Surety, ſo the Juſtification of our perſons depended upon the diſcharge of our Surety; and to that end he was raiſed up by God to be a ſtanding Foundation of, and encouragement to our Faith to believe the promiſes of God, and grow up into hope of the enjoyment of them. 1 Pet. 1. 21. God raiſed him up from the dead, that your faith and hope might be in God.

[2.] For the Regeneration of the ſeed promiſed him. This depends upon his Reſurrection, and was the aim of God in it. 1 Pet. 1. 3. Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead. As the Reſurrection of Chriſt, was as the Fathers new begetting of him to be the Son of God; ſo in regard that he roſe as a common perſon, his Reſurrection was a new begetting all his Elect to be the Sons of God: Herein was the Foundation of their Regeneration, as well as of their Juſtification ſetled: He was taken from Priſon, and from Judgment, and then it follows, who ſhall declare his Generation. Iſa. 53. 8. For by the Reſurrection of Chriſt, God having declared himſelf pacified, hath opened all the Treaſures of his Grace to Chriſt, for the framing a new Generation in the World to ſerve him; without which merit of the ſuffering, and diſcharge thereupon, there could not have been a mite of Grace given out of Gods Treaſury for the renewal of the Image of God in any one perſon. The Spiritual Reſurrection of any one Soul, is as much the effect of this Reſurrection of Chriſt, as the Reſurrection of Bodies ſhall be at the laſt day. That power which doth raiſe any Soul from a Death in ſin, would never have wrought in any heart without this antecedent to it; It would have wanted the foundation of ſatisfaction; for God only ſanctifies as a God of peace. And therefore the power which was exerted for the raiſing of Chriſt from the Grave, was put forth as a power to work in the hearts of all his ſeed. As the ſubject of this Reſurrection was not a private Perſon, but a publick repreſentative; As God acted in it in a publick manner, as the Governour and Creditor; ſo the power whereby he raiſed him was, as I may call it, a publick power, a pattern of what was to be ſpiritually wrought in the hearts of all thoſe whoſe Debts he pay'd, and for whom the payment was accepted by God. His working in all Believers, is but according to the working of that mighty power which he wrought in Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead. Eph. 1. 20. It was

alſo a pattern of that power which ſhould be employ'd for doing all works neceſſary in the hearts of thoſe that believe. 'Tis the fountain from whence all ſpiritual life ſtreams down to us: by this God put into him the ſpring of the Spirit of Life to flow out upon all his ſeed.

[3.] For to give us the higheſt ſecurity for all new Covenant Mercies. This Security was intended by God in the very Act of raiſing him. For as concerning that he raiſed him up from the dead, now no more to return to Corruption, he ſaid on this wiſe, I will give you the ſure Mercies of David, Act. 13. 34. This was in the thoughts of God, when he put forth his hand to the raiſing of him. There can be no greater Security than the fulfilling of the promiſes made, which the Apoſtle there placeth in the Reſurrection of Chriſt, For, ſaith he, we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promiſes made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children in that he hath rais'd up Jeſus again, Acts 13. 32, 33. What promiſe was that which was thus fulfilled? it was the promiſe of an everlaſting Covenant, Iſa. 55. 3. whence this is cited, that grand promiſe that God made to Adam and in him to all his poſterity, was fulfilled in this Act of Raiſing Chriſt. It being a declaration of the bruiſing the Serpents head, the Author of all the Enmity between God and Man, by the Seed of the Woman: the promiſes alſo of Bleſſing all Nations in the ſeed of Abraham, and the bringing in an everlaſting Righteouſneſs were fulfilled. Theſe were but initially perform'd by the ſending Chriſt and bruiſing him. But the Wiſdom of God, the Righteouſneſs of God, and the Truth of God, did all ſhine forth in their fulleſt beams, in the raiſing him from the dead; which was the Topſtone of our Reconciliation, as his Death had been the Corner-ſtone and Foundation. The certain enjoyment of all the Bleſſings of the new Covenant is enſur'd to us by this Act of God, and ſo intended by him in the Act it ſelf; this giving and diſpenſing of the ſure Mercies of David, i. e. the making all the Mercies which this our David had purchas'd by his Sacrifice, and had been promis'd to him in the firſt agreement, ſure and ſetled for ever.

Uſe.

How ſtrong a ground is here for our Faith and Comfort? When our Saviour was upon the Croſs, there was a black Cloud of Wrath between God and him, the Heavens were dusky, the face of God Vail'd; But in his Reſurrection the Heavens look'd clear, the Wrath of God was pacified. It left its ſting in our Saviours ſide, Chriſt therefore after his Reſurrection ſalutes his Apoſtles with peace, Joh. 20. 21. And Jeſus ſaid to them again, Peace be unto you, as my Father hath ſent me, ſo ſend I you: which ſeems to be more than an ordinary Salutation, ſince it is attended with a ſpecial Commiſſion, the fruit of his Reconciling Death. Peace dawn'd at his Birth, but was not in its Meridian till his Reſurrection. Thereby he was clear'd to all the World, and eas'd of the burden of mens ſins, which bowed down his head upon the Croſs. Had not God been a God of peace, i.e. fully reconcil'd by his death, he had not brought him again from the dead, but ſuffer'd him to have lain there, Heb. 13. 20. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Would we be perfect in every good work, would we do the Will of God? would we have every thing well-pleaſing in his ſight wrought in us? then we ſhould go to him as a God of Peace; as a God lifting up Chriſt from the Grave, that he might, with honour to all his Attributes, work ſuch excellent things in the hearts of all that believe in him, and act Faith upon this Act of Gods Power, Righteouſneſs and Truth in the raiſing the great Shepherd of our Souls. He delights now to be called the God of Peace, and by this Act hath laid aſide what was terrible to us in the Conſideration of a Judge, for the breach of his Law. Why may we not hope to attain whatſoever is needful at his hands, ſince he hath clothed himſelf with a new Title? And it is to be obſerv'd, that the Apoſtle ſaith, God brought him again from the dead, through the bloud of the everlaſting Covenant; he entred into Priſon as our ſurety, and paying the price was deliver'd by that payment, and freeing himſelf by that payment from any more ſatisfaction, he frees all thoſe that are his Members, ſo that the bloud of Chriſt will have the ſame virtue for thoſe, that it hath for himſelf. God manifeſted it to be the bloud of the the everlaſting Covenant, a bloud ſufficient to eſtabliſh the everlaſting Covenant upon, by this Deliverance of him. God hath no more to lay to his Charge, all Bonds are Cancell'd, all actions againſt him fully anſwer'd; he roſe not only by his own power and right, but by his Fathers warrant, whereby God own'd himſelf his Father, and in him our Father, upon which account he tells Mary, Joh. 20. 17. I aſcend to my Father and your Father, my God and your God; this Reſurrection is the Teſtimony, God is become your Father as well as mine, the enmity is aboliſht, you ſtand in a Relation to God, and I aſcend to him as your Father, as well as mine, to take poſſeſſion from his hands of the inheritance I have purchas'd for you.

10. God glorified Chriſt, and ſo was in Chriſt reconciling the World unto himſelf, fully eſtabliſhing this reconciliation wrought by him. All power was promiſed to him, Pſal. 2. 8. I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance. It was perform'd, Mat. 28. 18. All power is given me. His Reſurrection had not attain'd its full end and perfection, had he not been exalted to a glorious Government; it was for this end he dy'd that he died, that he roſe again and reviv'd, that he might be Lord both of dead and living. He died to purchaſe it, he roſe to poſſeſs it, and lives for ever to manage it. He was exalted for the honour of God, and the Happineſs of Believers, as Joſeph the Type was advanc'd to manage things for the Intereſt of the Crown, and the good of the People.

First, We muſt premiſe theſe two things. There is a double glory and dominion of Chriſt.

I. Eſſential as God; which was communicated to him in the communication of his Eſſence; for being God from Eternity, he had all the prerogatives of God.

II. Mediatory, which was by Agreement between them to be beſtow'd upon him, upon the accompliſhment of his work in the World. He had a right to this by the Donation of his Father at his Conception; for he was made Lord, when he was made Chriſt, Acts 2. 36. Know aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus, whom you have crucified; both Lord and * Chriſt. But he had not his Actual Inveſtiture, and full ſettlement in it, till after his Reſurrection, becauſe his reconciling death was to precede his entrance into Glory, where he was to reſide for the management of this Power. In this reſpect he is called the Heir of all things; Heb. 1. 2. Whom he hath appointed heir of all things, which Inheritance is not meant of his Eſſential dominion, for ſo he is not appointed, but begotten Heir. He might then be ſaid to be conſtituted God, as well as Heir; which would be an improper ſpeech, like the Socinians Deus factus. What is Natural, cannot be ſaid to be by Conſtitution; the one is voluntary, the other neceſſary. He is appointed Heir, as he was appointed Mediator, Heb. 3. 2. He was Mediator by a voluntary Deſignation, he was Heir by a voluntary Donation, and all Judgment was committed to him by a voluntary Deputation; but he was a Son by a natural Generation: Again, An Heir ſucceeds in the place of another; ſo Chriſt as Mediator ſucceeds in the place of his Father in regard of Government as his Delegate and Deputy; but what the Son hath from the Father as God, he hath not as his Deputy, but by an Eſſential, Natural and Eternal Communication. So that theſe two differ.

* Camero pag. 371 Meſtrezat ſur Heb. 1. 2.

1. The one belongs to his Eſſence as God, the other to his Office as Mediator.

2. The Eſſential is by Nature, the Mediatory is conferr'd as a reward of his Humiliation and Expiation of Sin: Phil. 2. 8, 9. Wherefore God hath highly exalted him, viz. becauſe of his obedience to Death. The one belonged to him without Suffering; but his ſuffering death for us, was the Moral Cauſe of his exaltation; ſince the Heavenly Sanctuary was ſhut againſt us, the expiation of our Crimes muſt precede his entrance into it, and poſſeſſion of it.

3. The Eſſential is an abſolute Soveraignty, the Mediatory is delegated. For it is a judgment committed to him by the Father, Joh. 5. 22. In the firſt he is one with the Father, in the other he is the Fathers Subſtitute and Deputy; his Fathers Lord Lieutenant in the World according to a deriv'd Authority.

4. The Eſſential is wholly free, it hath no obligation upon it; the Mediatory hath a charge annext to it. Tis a dominion with Rules, and given him as a means to bring Believers to Salvation, which is part of the work belonging to the Charge of Mediator, Joh. 17. 42. he hath this power given him by the Father, that he ſhould give Eternal Life to all that God hath given him.

5. The

5. The Essential is necessary; he cannot possibly be God without an infinite Glory and Dominion: the other, though due by Covenant, yet is a free gift; Phil. 2. 9. God hath given him a name which is above every name, ὑπερῦψωσεν. Not that God, who is Infinite Goodness and Holiness, would ever let such an exquisite Holiness and Affection to his Glory, which Christ discover'd in the whole Course of his Obedience, pass without a rewarding and Crowning it with the greatest Glory in his Treasury; (It being an Obedience Superior to that of all the Angels, it requir'd a recompence Superior to all their Glory). Yet that high Exaltation is a free * Gift.

* Cocceius de Fœder. S. 106.

(1.) In regard that the whole Oeconomy, the Mission of Christ and his Incarnation is a free act of God to us; and in his Exaltation he is consider'd as appearing for us, and receiving from the Father those Treasures which were to be dispens'd to us, and that power and dominion which was to be employ'd for us.

(2.) Because as it was the free gift of God, to unite our flesh to the Deity of the second Person, it was also an act of Free Grace to continue the manifestation of the Glory of the Divinity in the same flesh.

(3.) Because the Death he suffer'd, and the Conquest he gain'd thereby, being by the powerful assistance of the Father, according to those Promises of Assistance made to him, his Glory may be well said to be a free Gift from the Father.

(4.) Because given without Constraint, with a free Pleasure, though upon a valuable Consideration.

6. The Essential is Eternal, without beginning and End; the Mediatory hath a beginning after his Death and Resurrection, and shall have an end. When all the seed are brought in and perfected, all Enemies subdued and conquer'd, Christ shall resign his Commission and his People, for whose sake he was Commission'd and Deputed to this Government, unto his Father, 1 Cor. 15. 24. when he shall still reign with his Father in the Glory of the Deity. The Father lays aside his immediate Government, that Christ may be all in all; at last Christ shall resign the Government to the Father, that God may be all in all, and delight immediately in his People, when they shall be fully perfected, and free from sin. The Power, in regard of the particular Ends for which it was conferr'd on Christ, ceaseth when those Ends Cease; but what belongs of Right to him as God, or what was given him by Covenant, as a reward for his Obedience, will endure as long as the Humanity remains united to the Divinity.

Secondly, This is to be consider'd, that it was the Person of Christ which was exalted by the Father. The subject of this power is the Person of Christ, and the execution of this power is by the Person of Christ.

1. His Divine Nature was exalted and glorified in regard of its manifestation. The Father would manifest, that the Redeemer of the World was God blessed for ever, above Angels or Men. His Deity in the time of his Humiliation was uncapable of any change, and therefore neither did, nor could receive any detriment in its Nature and Essential Perfections. It could not be subject to Infirmities, or fall under the strokes of Death: yet the Son of God emptied himself in taking upon him the form of a Servant, and Vail'd that Deity which dwelt bodily in him, by the Flesh he took, and suffer'd Reproaches and Indignities from men, and maskt the glory of it by Humane Infirmities; but in his Resurrection and Ascension, the Deity did gloriously spring out of that obscurity, and brake out from under the Cloud of his Humanity in a glorious Lustre, which before had discover'd it self in some few sparklings; he was now cloth'd with a Vesture dipt in bloud, and his Name is called the Word of God, Rev. 19. 13. i.e. he was manifested to be the Word of God after and upon the account of his Death.

2. His humane Nature was exalted and glorified by a new acquisition and addition of perfections of glory, which had been never conferr'd upon any Man or Angel. That was really deliver'd from all that suffering and debasement, it had been subject to before in the days of his Flesh; and was drawn up into a great and glorious Condition, and endow'd with gifts above all Creatures in Heaven and Earth, and received a new Royalty and Power of Ruling; and as the Mediator had perform'd a new work in dying, ſo he receiv'd a new glory in his Exaltation. Thus the Perſon of Chriſt, and each Nature, may be ſaid to be glorified in a diſtinct ſence. The Divine in the Manifeſtation of it, from that obſcurity wherein it had been diſguis'd, the humane in the reception of that which it had not before poſſeſſed. This was fully conferr'd on him at his Aſcenſion, and ſitting down at the right hand of God; whereas before, the name of a ſervant was written upon him, the faſhion of his Veſture being chang'd, there was a new Name writ upon him, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, Rev. 19. 16.

Theſe things premis'd.

1. The Exaltation and Power of Chriſt, is every where aſcrib'd to the Father. It was his promiſe, Pſal. 89. 27. I will make him higher than the Kings of the Earth. Several Monarchies overtopt the Jewiſh Kingdoms throughout the whole duration of that ſtate. He bruis'd him as he was the Rector and Judge of the World, to whom belong'd the right of puniſhment. He advanc'd him as the Supream Governour and Fountain of all Honour; and thus he was in Chriſt ordering the Application, and enſuring Reconciliation to us upon the Conditions in his Word.

(1.) In regard of Donation. 'Tis a gift from the Ancient of Dayes, Dan. 7. 14. God anointed him to this Office, as well as to the reſt. He ſets him in the higheſt place next to himſelf, at his right hand, Pſal. 110. 1. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord. Gives him all the Enſigns of Authority, a Crown in the day of his Eſpouſals, an Everlaſting Throne, a Scepter of Righteouſneſs, Heb. 1. 8. But unto the Son he ſaith, thy Throne, O God, is for ever and ever. A Sword in his Mouth, the Keys of Life and Death, all Royal Prerogatives; ſubjects all the Angels to him, to receive Commiſſions from him, and be at his Service; they are now the Eys and Horns of the Lamb, Miniſters and Inſtruments of his Juriſdiction *. He committed all judgment to his Son, Joh. 5. 22. not only a power of judging or ſentencing, but a power of Governing and Conducting all things. In regard of the power he receiv'd, he is ſaid to ſit down, Luk. 22. 69. at the right hand of the power of God. In regard of the Authority inveſted in him, he is ſaid to ſit down at the right hand of the Throne of God; in regard of the Glory conferr'd upon him, he is ſaid to ſit down at the right hand of the Throne of the Majeſty in the Heavens, Heb. 8. 1. His Royal Power to manage it, and the Glory attending it being all the Gifts of God to him, and that not in a way of Common Providence, whereby other Kings Reign, but by a peculiar Deputation, and ſpecial Decree, in a mighty Affection, whereby he doth as it were take him by the hand and ſet him upon his Throne, Pſal. 110. 1. Sit thou at my right hand, And peculiarly calls him, His King, Pſal. 2. 6. makes him higher than the Heavens, gives him, by inheritance, a more excellent name than all the Angels; all which are peculiarly the Acts of God towards him, Heb. 1. 8, 13. the ſpecial orders of God concerning him.

* Mr. Joſ. Mede.

(2.) In regard of fitneſs for this Government. The Spirit of Counſel and Might did reſt upon him for the exerciſe of this Government, as well as for his other Tranſactions in the World; that he might reprove with Equity, ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſlay the wicked, Iſa. 11. 4. Righteouſneſs was to be the girdle of his loyns, and faithfulneſs the girdle of his Reins. This was his excellency, conferr'd upon him as King of the Church, he had ſeven horns, a full power, and ſeven eyes, a perfect Wiſdom for the management of the Government, Rev. 5. 6. He had need of the higheſt fitneſs, becauſe this Government upon his ſhoulders was a charge incumbent upon him above what all the Angels in heaven were intruſted with. He hath a ſpirit of Wiſdom to guide the Church, a ſpirit of Power to defend it, a ſpirit of Faithfulneſs to take care of it, a ſpirit of Compaſſion to pity it, and inexhauſtible fulneſs to impart unto his people in all their neceſſities, able to fill the Ciſtern the Church, and every private bucket. He was not without power to reſcue thoſe out of the hands of the Devil by Conqueſt, whom he had Redeem'd from the Wrath of God by his Death. He had full power given him to force the Jailor, after he had contented the Creditor; God fitted him with Wiſdom againſt the Wiles of Satan, and might againſt this power.

(3.) In

(3.) In regard of defence and protection in it. He hath the whole power of the Godhead to defend him in it, he ſits at his right hand: the right hand is a place of Honour, and the right hand of a great King is a place of Security. Though Chriſt hath a power to ſubdue his Enemies, yet the Father is ſaid to make his Enemies his Footſtool. Putting forth his power, to ſhow in the puniſhment of his Enemies the high Acceptance of his Perſon and Paſſion, that he will with his own hands bring down all that concurr not with him in giving honour to his Son. The power which is eſſential to the Deity, is promis'd to be employ'd for the ſubduing his Enemies under his Scepter and under his feet, Pſal. 110. 1. Till I make thy enemies thy footſtool. As he did bring him to his Throne in ſpite of all oppoſition, ſo he will eſtabliſh it againſt the ſtorms and powers of Hell. He ſet him upon the Throne with a mighty zeal for his honour, and indignation againſt his oppoſers. Then ſhall he ſpeak to them in his wrath, yet have I ſet my King upon my holy hill of Sion, Pſal. 2. 5, 6. notwithſtanding all their Counſels againſt him, and Reſolutions to caſt his Cords from them. So the increaſe of his Government and Peace, the ordering of it, the ſtability of it with judgment and juſtice, and the perpetuity of it are ſetled, protected and aſſured by the ſame Zeal that placed him in it, Iſa. 9. 7. The Zeal of the Lord of Hoſts ſhall perform this, i. e. That vehement Love which he hath both to the honour of Chriſt, and the Eternal Peace and ſecurity of his ſeed. The Power of God firſt lifted him to his Throne, and the ſame omnipotency will keep it from being ſhaken by the powers of darkneſs. And the Redeemer was ſtill to exerciſe Faith in God as his Father, as his God, the rock of his Salvation, even when he had ſet his hand in the Sea, and his right hand in the rivers, Pſal. 89. 25, 26. Then God doth promiſe to beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him, and his ſeed he would make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven, Ver. 23, 29.

2. The Father did this upon the account of his death, and to ſhow his high valuation of it, and that Reconciliation he wrought by it.

(1.) This Exaltation and dominion was upon the account of his reconciling death. His ſufferings were the way to his Crown; he firſt ſurrendered himſelf as our ſurety to the juſtice of God, before God ſurrender'd his power to the management of Chriſt for the good of Man; He died and roſe again, and reviv'd, that he might be Lord of the living and the dead, Rom. 14. 9. he obtained a new ſtate of Life, not to dye again, as Lazarus; and he was not rais'd barely to a Life, but to a Royal and Princely Life, to have an extenſive dominion over all, the foundation whereof was laid in his death. God lifted up his head, becauſe he did drink of the brook in the way, Pſal. 110. 7. and it was as he was a Lamb that had been ſlain as a ſacrifice, that he had both his power and his wiſdom, Rev. 5. 6.

(1.) The exerciſe of his dominion before his incarnation did in order of Nature preſuppoſe his death. Though he exercis'd a power in the World before his Incarnation, yet it was exercis'd by him as conſtituted Mediator; and his Aſſumption of a Mortal Body, and offering it up to death, was the Condition requir'd at the firſt Conſtitution of him as Mediator, as a reparation of the Honour of God which had been violated in the Diſorder of his firſt form of Government by the enterance of Sin. As ſoon as ever man fell, the Government of the World devolv'd into the hands of Chriſt, by virtue of the Covenant between the Father and himſelf. When Sin had undermin'd the Pillars of the World, they would have fallen had he not given a new conſiſtency to them, Col. 1. 17. and upheld all things by the word of his power, Heb. 1. 3. and eſtabliſhed the Earth, Iſa. 49. 8. which elſe would have been overthrown by juſtice, as well as the Angels. Had not the Government of the World been put into the hands of Chriſt, and a Covenant of Grace been erected, the World had been deſtroyed; the holineſs of God could not have endur'd the ſinfulneſs of it, and the juſtice of God could not have endur'd the ſtanding of it according to the Covenant of Works. And this Government was not put into the hands of the Mediator, but upon a ſuppoſition of his Death. What reaſon have we to think God ſhould conſtitute a new Mode of Government without a reparation of his honour in the firſt? The government was upon his ſhoulders when he was firſt given to us as a Son, Iſa. 9. 6. He was given to us in promiſe, before he was given to us in the Fleſh; And in that firſt Promiſe, wherein his power is enſur'd to him for us, viz. the bruiſing the ſerpents head, his death is ſuppos'd by the Serpents bruiſing his heel, Gen. 3. 15. He was a Lamb ſlain from the Foundation of the World, and it was upon this preſuppos'd oblation, that the World had its ſtanding, that any had Grace beſtowed upon them, and found acceptance with God. If the great end of the government he is ſince his death inveſted with, was perform'd by him before his Incarnation, viz. the Salvation of Souls, yet with reſpect to his future death, then the government alſo, which was but a means in order to this, was conditionally conferred upon him. As Believers were ſaved before his coming, ſo the World was govern'd by him, becauſe he was to dye. Hence he was the Angel of the Lord in delivering his Church; the Captain of the Lords Hoſts, in fighting their Battels, Joſh. 5. 14; the Guardian of the Church, and an Advocate for them in their diſtreſſes, Zech. 1. 8, 12. and attended upon his Throne with all the Angels as Meſſengers to perform his Will, Iſa. 6. 1, 2. which in the Evangeliſts Interpretation was the Lord Jeſus, whoſe glory Iſaiah ſaw, Joh. 12. 41. when the Seraphims celebrated his glory in the Earth: It was he, the foundation of whoſe glory was laid in the Earth, in the Redemption of the Sons of Men: They are ſilent of that glory God hath in the vaſt Heavens, and ſpeak only of his glory in the ſmall point of Earth, which relates to that of his Mediation, wherein the eſtabliſhing the Earth and reducing it to a due order was the main concern.

(2.) He was abſolutely confirm'd in it upon his death. There was a confirmation of it in the firſt inſtant of his Conception, for he was made Lord when he was made Chriſt; at his Birth he was proclaim'd by the Angels, a Lord, as well as a Saviour, Luk. 2. 11. But his full inveſtiture was after his death upon his Aſcenſion, when ſeated at the right hand of the Majeſty on high. David had an Authority conferred upon him at his anointing, but was not fully inaugurated, till his Coronation at Hebron. So after the Redeemer had finiſhed his Miniſterial work, God did fix him in his Royal Dignity, to exerciſe his power, not only in the Divine Nature, as he had done before, but alſo in his Humane Nature aſſum'd by it. There was an anointing of him after his bringing in everlaſting righteouſneſs by his death, and making reconciliation for iniquity, making an end of ſin, and ſealing up the viſion and propecy which centr'd in him; then was the moſt holy to be Anointed, and have his ſolemn inveſtiture, Dan. 9. 24. Becauſe of that Illuſtrious Holineſs, he had manifeſted in the whole Courſe of his Humiliation, and that ſignal Obedience upon the Croſs, he then was ſetled an high Prieſt for ever, which he exerciſeth by himſelf; a Prophet of his Church, which he exerciſeth by his Spirit; an everlaſting King, which he manages partly by his Spirit, partly by himſelf. Thus our Noah was brought out of the Ark, after the ſuffering the terror of a Deluge, to be the Father of a ſecond World; and as Iſaac was raiſed up, after he had appear'd as a Victim under his Fathers ſword, to be the Father of many Nations. He was to be Shiloh, a Peace-maker, before the gathering of the Nations under his Scepter, Gen. 49. 10. And the Son of Man, before he was to have a dominion that ſhould not paſs away, Dan. 7. 13, 14. As God brought him again from the Dead through the bloud of the everlaſting Covenant; he raiſ'd him becauſe his Bloud was a Covenant Blood, Heb. 13. 20. ſo by his own bloud he entred once into the holy place, Heb. 9. 12. But it was not only after his Death, but becauſe it was a death for man voluntarily ſubmitted unto. The Conqueſts made by him in the World, his having a portion divided with the Great, and the ſpoil with the Strong, was becauſe he pour'd out his ſoul to death, made interceſſion for the Tranſgreſſors and bare the ſins of many, Iſa. 53. 12. It was upon this ſcore of purging and expiating our ſins by himſelf, that he ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high, Heb. 1. 3. He expiated ſin by the Oblation of himſelf, not as other high Prieſts by the bloud of * Animals. If any Creature had been offer'd by him, though held in the higheſt rank in the Creation, the Prieſt had been infinite, but the ſacrifice had been finite. But it was himſelf which he offered, a finite, humane Nature, in conjunction with an Infinite Perſon, and that for the Atonement of our iniquity; for which infinite Obedience, and infinite Charity, God rewarded him with an infinite Exaltation. It was his own bloud which which procur'd his admittion into the Holy place, and he was crown'd because he had combated with the Curses of the Law, and Enemies of our peace, and Conquer'd them for us.

There are two things requisite to the exercise of this power and Dominion, the Knowledge of Gods Decrees, and Authority over the chief Ministers in the Execution of them; Both which Christ hath upon the account of his Reconciling Death.

1. The Knowledge of Gods Decrees. God gave to him the Knowledge of his Decrees concerning his people, Rev. 1. 1. No Man on the Earth, or Angel in Heaven was found worthy to open the book, i. e. to be acquainted with the Contents thereof, nor to unloose the Seals, to Dive into the depth and Misteries of his Counsels and Providence, but only the Lyon of the Trive of Judah; But it was by virtue of his death (as he was the Lamb slain, the Antitype of the Legal Lambs sacrific'd) that he took the Book and open'd it, Rev. 5. 6, 7. The prevalency of his death with his Father, was the cause of the Knowledge of all the secrets of his Will. As he was the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, and the root of David, as he had taken Humane Nature according to the Will of his Father, and suffer'd in it; he prevail'd to open the book and unloose the Seals thereof, Rev. 5. 5. that they should not be conceal'd from him, who was the head of the reconciled World: When the Justice of God was appeas'd by the prevailing death of Christ, he gives forth willingly, whatsoever may conduce to the Salvation of his people; and in order to this, there was a necessity Christ should understand his secrets. How else could he be an Executor of all the Counsels of God? This Revelation is to him as Mediator in his humane Nature, as appointed King by God, which is distinct from that Knowledge he had as God, as his Mediatory Kingdom was distinct from that essential Kingdom he had as God; As that was a delegated power, so this is a revealed Knowledge; and both one and the other he had, as he was the Lamb of God taking away the sins of the World.

2. Authority over the chief ministers employ'd in the Execution of his will. Things in heaven must bow down to him, Phil. 2. 10. All power in heaven, as well as Earth, was given him, Mat. 28. 18. and nothing was exempt from his jurisdiction, but only the Father who did put all things under him, 1 Cor. 15. 27. The innumerable company of Angels, which are Citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem and Mount Sion, the seat of his Royalty, Heb. 12. 22. are under his Scepter. His sitting on the right hand of God (as was said) was because he purg'd our sins by himself, and whatsoever did accrue to him by virtue of this Session, was upon the same Foundation with the Session it self. Part of that dominion accruing to him, as sitting at the right hand of God, was the power over Angels (1 Pet. 3. 22. Who is on the right hand of God, Angels and Authorities and Powers being made subject to him) who had Authority and Power from God in the administration of his Providence either among other Angels or among Men; they were subjected to him, i. e. by his Father. He was passive in it, and had it conferr'd upon him as part of his Mediatory glory. As God, he did himself subject the Angels to him. Thus, as an honour for the oblation of himself, were they all Marshall'd under the power of Christ, by the Father, who had power to dispose of his Creatures under the Reins of what Government he pleas'd. And the most excellent Orders of them were not exempt from this subjection, but every Person to whom God had granted a Principality, Power, Might and Dominion, either in this World, or that which is to come, was brought under his Scepter, to be serviceable to him in the Execution of those designs he had for the Church which he had reconcil'd to God by his bloud, Eph. 1. 21. Far above all principality and power, not only ὑπὲρ but ὑπερὰνω, exceedingly above in excellency of Dignity, and largeness of Authority. Whence they are called his Angels, Rev. 1. 1. And fellow-servants of those that have the testimony of Jesus, Rev. 19. 20. and therefore servants to Christ as Mediator. And as a testimony of this subjection of them, God sent all his Angels to wait upon him at his Triumphant reception, as his Chariots to convey the humane Nature of Christ to Heaven, and to welcome him after his Victory, Psal. 68. 17. He was among them as in Sinai, when he came down to give the law; he was the commander of them, and gave them directions in that affair; this is ſpoken with reſpect to his Aſcenſion, as it follows, ver. 18. Thou haſt aſcended on high: they attended him to his Throne, and waited upon him, to be employed in the Execution of his Royal Edicts. Now this adoration which the Angels are commanded to render him, was becauſe he had expiated Sin, Heb. 1. 3, 6. Their waiting round about his Throne to attend his pleaſure, and the joyful Acclamations they ſhout forth in his praiſe, is becauſe he was the Lamb ſlain; the Reconciling ſacrifice, whereby God and man were brought together, Rev. 5. 11, 12.

3. It was very fit and congruous that he ſhould have this Glory. This was the Agreement between the Father and the Son before he ſet foot out of Heaven. He had glorified God, had given him a foundation by his ſubmiſſion to the ſharpneſs of his Mediatory work, to diſplay his Wiſdom in the higheſt Glory, his Juſtice in the deepeſt Severity, his Mercy with the cleareſt Luſtre, his Veracity in the firmeſt Stability; without his undertaking this, none of thoſe Attributes could have appear'd in ſuch Glory upon any other Foundation; they could never have been thus manifeſted by any Creature, or the undertaking of the whole Creation. As he therefore glorified the Father more than all Creatures could glorifie him, ſo it was fit he ſhould have a glory tranſcendently above them. As he had improv'd his Talents above them, ſo he ſhould be poſſeſſed with a rule above them. Without this power, he could not have conducted thoſe whom he had purchas'd to a bleſſed Eternity. It was very reaſonable, that as the Father had by him done the hardeſt work, viz. the expiating ſin, he ſhould alſo by him work the full accompliſhment of it. It was congruous that things ſhould be given into the hands of the Redeemer to manage, who had purchas'd them all by a price ſo valuable as that of his Death. If he dyed to purchaſe them, it was fit he ſhould have Authority to perfect them. He being a Divine Sacrifice, was of Infinite price; and as his Sufferings ſurpaſt the puniſhments of all Creatures, ſo the value of his Sacrifice exceeded the Riches of the whole Creation, both of Heaven and Earth, Angels or Men. He had not had a Reward commenſurate to the value of his Death, had not a Dominion been added to him as Mediator, beſide that of his Deity, which was his by Nature, and could not fall within the compaſs of a purchaſe, ſince he never was, nor could be diſpoſſeſſed of it. It was but reaſon the Angels ſhould be ſubjected to him, who had been preſerved and confirm'd by him. For God had in him gathered together things in heaven as well as things in earth, Eph. 1. 10. which Collection would have ſignified little, unleſs by it they had been wrapt up into a permanent ſtate and a full Aſſurance from any danger of Apoſtacy from God, and a fall into Miſery, as ſome of their Fellows had done. It was very convenient, that they who had received ſo great a benefit by him, ſhould be ſubject to him; that they who had been gathered under his Wing, ſhould be as well under his Scepter. Beſides, as he had diſcover'd himſelf faithful to Death, againſt ſome reluctancy of Humane Nature, he ſhould have an opportunity to diſcover himſelf faithful in the other parts which concern'd the honour of God; he that was faithful to him under the Curſe of the Law, would not be unfaithful to him under the bleſſing of Deliverance. And very fit at laſt that he that was the innocent ſufferer, ſhould be the Judge of his Guilty Enemies, and condemn the great head of that Enmity which was the occaſion of his conflict with his Fathers wrath, to remove it out of the way. As he being rich in the Deity, and in the form of God, became poor in his humanity and in the form of a ſervant, Eclipſing thereby the glory of his Godhead, it was fit he ſhould reaſſume his former ſtate, as the Heir of all things, and exerciſe that power in his Humanity, which he had a right unto in his Deity.

4. This power was conferr'd upon him for the application and perfection of the fruits of Reconciliation. This power and dominion is given to him for the advantage and full growth of his ſeed. When his people ſhall be perfected, and his Enemies ſubdued, the Government devolves wholly to his Father, there being no longer any occaſion for the Exerciſe of this Mediatory dominion. If it were conferr'd upon him only for himſelf, the power would not ceaſe as long as his perſon endures. But the Ceſſation of it upon the accompliſhment of ſuch effects, evidenceth that thoſe effects were the end for which it was firſt conferr'd. 'Tis upon this ſcore the Scripture placeth the extent of his Dominion, Eph. 1. 22. He, i. e. the Father, hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church. For the Churches welfare, for the good of the Subjects, as well as the glory of his Empire. He is the King of Saints, to Rule them by his Grace; and the King of Nations, to Rule them by his Providence. He is ſet to reign in Sion, the hill of holineſs, *Pſal.*2.6. as the Center of all the Power and Wiſdom of his Government: As the chief City of a Prince partakes moſt of the fruits of his Valour in Conquering, and his Wiſdom in Ruling. As his prophetical Office is not to ceaſe till Inſtruction be ſwallowed up in viſion, nor his Prieſtly till his interceſſion be ſucceeded by immediate Communion, ſo neither his Kingly till there be a total Ceſſation from all danger, and not an Enemy left to diſturb their peace.

1. For the beſtowing gifts on men for the publiſhing this Reconciliation. He received gifts at his Triumph, that he might as a Royal Steward of his Father, diſtribute them for the good of thoſe that had been Rebels to the Government of God, to fit them for the great Fruit of this peace, viz. a Communion between God and them; that the Lord God might dwell among them, Pſal.68.18. Eph. 4. 8, 11, 12, 13. Theſe gifts come from God as a God of Salvation, as the Doxology infers, Pſal. 68. 19: Bleſſed be the Lord who daily loads us with his Benefits, even the God of our Salvation. The intent whereof was to wound the head of the Enemy Satan, who had been the firſt make-bate, Pſal. 68. 21. God ſhall wound the head of his Enemy. The Spirit therefore was not given in that eminency and fulneſs of gifts and graces, till the glorification of Chriſt, wherein he abſolutely received the Keys of all the Treaſures of his Father, as well as the Keys of Hell and Death, Joh. 7. 39. The Spirit was not yet given, becauſe that Jeſus was not yet glorified. The giving the Spirit depended on the Glorification of him as Jeſus a Saviour. God would reſerve thoſe gifts for the Triumphal Coronation of his Son, as an evidence of the Peace which was made by him, by the Effuſion of the richeſt Treaſures of God. The Spirit was in the World before, as light was upon the face of the Creation the three firſt dayes, but not ſo glorious, ſparkling, and darting out full beams till the fourth day, the day of the Creation of the Sun, and fixing it in the Heavens; ſo was the rich beaming forth of Light, when after four thouſand years, the fourth Divine day, the Sun of Righteouſneſs was ſeated in the Heavens to diſperſe his Beams. The firſt Edict he gave out, after the Receipt of his Power, was the Commiſſion for Preaching the Goſpel, Mat. 28. 18, 19. All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; Go therefore and teach all Nations. It was the intention of his Father, that he ſhould diſpoſe of his power for this end; for he who did all things according to his Fathers Will, would not uſe his power in the leaſt, but for thoſe ends for which it was conferr'd upon him.

2. For the inviting of men to an acceptance of him. As the moſt beneficial Commands that ever he gave, ſo the moſt Condeſcending Affections he ever diſcovered, the moſt gracious Invitations that ever he made, were at thoſe times where he had a ſence of this power in a more peculiar manner, to ſhow the proper intendment of it, and to what ends he was to manage it. The grant of this Power is the Foundation of that invitation he makes to weary Souls, Mat. 11. 27. All things are deliver'd to me of my Father, the inference is, Come unto me all ye that labour; and his governing them as a Leader and Commander to the People, is the encouragement God uſes to men to accept of that Rich and Liberal invitation of coming to the waters and buying wine and milk without money and without price, Iſa. 55. 1, 4. God exalted him to all his power, to enable him to make the moſt gracious offers to men, and encourage their Acceptance of him, as himſelf intimates in that fore-mention'd, Mat. 11. 27. that the delivery of all his Treaſures to him, was to make a Revelation of his Father to the ſons of Men.

3. For the preſerving the reconciliation for ever firm. As there is an increaſe of his Government, ſo there is an increaſe of his peace, Iſa. 9. 7. Of the increaſe of his government

vernment and peace there is no end. His government, and the peace he purchas'd go hand in hand; as his glory riſeth to the Meridian, ſo doth the Reconciliation. He therefore went to heaven to purify the heavenly things themſelves with his ſacrifice, Heb. 9. 23. i. e. (ſay ſome) heaven it ſelf, which in ſome ſence was polluted by the ſtench of our ſins, coming up into the preſence of God, into which Chriſt as the high Prieſt entred with his bloud, to ſettle the ſweet ſavour of that before God, inſtead of the lothſome ſavour of our ſins, which had offended his Majeſty. But howſoever, this Exaltation was, that he might appear in the preſence of God for us, Heb. 9. 24. and preſerve by his Interceſſion, what he had wrought by his Paſſion. He hath therefore his head incircled with a Rainbow, Rev. 10. 1. to Evidence the perfection of the peace he had made, and the eſtabliſhment of the ſecurity in heaven, againſt the opening any more the floud-gates of Wrath for an overflowing Deluge.

4. For the ſubduing his and our Enemies. He is to continue in the Exerciſe of this Power, till all the enemies be put under his feet, 1 Cor. 15. 25. All the Enemies, all the Enemies to him as God, all the Enemies to him as Mediator, all the Enemies to the great deſign of his Mediation, all the Enemies to him in that ſtate and Condition wherein he ſits at the right hand of God, which is as Mediator, and therefore whatſoever is contrary to his Mediation and the intendment of it, all thoſe Enemies to his Members which would hinder their Arrival at Happineſs, and their bleſſed Conjunction with their head, are to be deſtroyed. And thoſe are,

(1.) Sin, which hath reigned unto death, Rom. 5. 21.
(2.) Satan, who as a Prince hath reign'd in the World, and kept up ſin in its Vigour, Joh. 12. 31.
(3.) Death, the laſt Enemy, which hath reign'd from Adam to Moſes, Rom. 5. 14. and will reign to the end of the World, 1 Cor. 15. 26. Whatſoever ſets it ſelf in contrariety to the happineſs of Believers, is an Enemy to the deſign of Chriſt, and is to be put under his feet, as one end of the Authority granted to him. All the Powers of Hell muſt be cruſht, all the Fortifications of the Devil muſt be demoliſh'd, and himſelf diſpoyl'd of his Arms. This was neceſſary, that his Kingdom ſhould extend over the Devils to repreſs them, if it did extend over his Subjects to ſecure them; theſe could not be advanc'd by his Mercy, if the others did not ſink under his Power.

5. For the perfect Salvation of his Seed. His Exaltation was for the Perfection and perpetuity of Salvation, the Apoſtles inference elſe would have no validity, Rom. 8. 34. It is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo makes interceſſion for us. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? But the Apoſtle ſets forth the Eternal knot between him and Believers, upon his Seſſion at the right hand of God, with a rather. God exalted him to be a Prince and a Saviour, Act. 5. 31. A Princely Saviour, to beſtow the Royal Gifts of Repentance and Forgiveneſs of Sins. As he appointed Chriſt to give it, ſo he hath appointed men to attain it by him, and from him, 1 Theſ. 5. 9. As he merited Salvation by his Death, he might perfect it by his life, Rom. 5. 10. That as his death was by the Ordination of God to purchaſe a ſeed, ſo his Exaltation was, by the like deſignation, for a full ſanctification of this ſeed, that he might at laſt behold them in their perfect glory; And therefore what he thought his proper work, upon a ſence of it in his ſoul, when he conſider'd his Divine Original, and his approaching Glory, when yet it was not abſolutely conferr'd upon him, Joh. 13. 3, 4. he will think his work, when he is in full poſſeſſion of it, viz. The full Sanctification of his people, the waſhing their Souls, which was ſymbolically ſignified by the waſhing their feet: What ſeems to be the end of that preſent ſence, will much more be the end and iſſue of his enjoyment. As he was humbled to ſave them, ſo he was exalted to perfect them; and ſince he was made ſin for us in his death, he is in his advancement made Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, Sanctification and Redemption, a full treaſury to ſupply all our neceſſities, that as he was the Author ſo he might be the finiſher of our Faith. If God deliver'd to him the full Contents of his Will, becauſe he was a Lamb ſlain, it muſt be in order to carry on that work for which he was ſlain; to perfect an Eternal Amity between God and them, that there might be an Eternal rejoycing in one another. The Mediator being to Reign till the whole Church be brought to Heaven, the intendment therefore of his Heavenly Royalty, is the Perfection of them in an heavenly Glory. That as in his Humiliation he was the way of our Acceſs, as by his Spirit he was the diſcoverer of the Truth, ſo by his Life he might be the perfecter of our Happineſs, Joh. 14. 6. I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. As he glorified his Father on the Earth, by a full ſatisfaction of his Juſtice, ſo his Father glorified him in heaven, to make a full application of his Merits, Joh. 17. 1, 2.

God

4. By this the Father teſtifies the higheſt Acceptance of his Perſon, and the ſufficiency of his Death. Joh. 3. 35. The Father loves the Son, and hath given all things into his hands. His Coronation teſtifies the acceptation of his Perſon, and it being after his death, teſtifies the acceptation of his Paſſion. As Pharaohs elevating Joſeph from a Priſon, to the higheſt Dignity in Egypt, next to that of the Soveraign, was a Teſtimony of that Kings high admiration of Joſephs Wiſdom.

This acceptance is teſtified by two things. 1. The Manner of his Reception and Settlement. 2. The Nature of his Power.

1. The Manner of his Reception and Settlement. It was with an infinitely pleaſed Countenance, and all the marks of Joy in the Soul of God, which rejoyced him more than the Crown of pure Gold ſet upon his head, or the length of days for ever and ever granted to him. The Pſalmiſt placeth all the joy of Chriſt upon his Aſcenſion in this, Pſal. 21. 3, 4, 5, 6. Thou haſt made him exceeding glad with thy Countenance, בְּשִׂמְחָתְךָ חַדֵּהוּ thou haſt made him glad with joy. One frown in the face of God would have dampt all the joy of Chriſt. The Pſalm was anciently underſtood of the Aſcenſion and Glory of Chriſt, and Ainſworth makes a pretty obſervation of the word rejoyce, יְשַׂמַּח, by tranſpoſition to be מְשִׁיחַ Meſſiah. If there be joy in Heaven at the return of Sinners, How great was the joy of God at the return of the Saviour of them, after the performing unto God ſo eminent a ſervice? How heartily did the Father take him in his Armes? How ſtraightly did he embrace him? How magnificently did he fix him in a Throne of Immortality and Advocacy? And when he did thus conſtitute him his King upon his holy Hill, he eſtabliſhed his Throne and perpetuity of his Kingdom by an Oath, Pſal. 89. 35, 36. Once have I ſworn by my holineſs that I will not lye unto David, his ſeed ſhall endure for ever, and his throne as the Sun before me. What men are mightily pleas'd with, they confirm under the higheſt obligations. As when the daughter of Herodias pleaſed Herod, he confirms by an Oath the Grant he had made of whatſoever ſhe ſhould ask him, Mark 6. 22, 23. And the Solemnity at Chriſts entrance into Heaven, and ſitting upon his Throne, laſted ten dayes before the ſending of the Spirit as the firſt fruits of his purchaſe.

2. The Nature of that glory and power inveſted in him. 'Tis not in the Orbs of the Planets, or the ſtarry heaven, where Chriſt hath taken up his Reſidence, but he is mounted above all the viſible heavens, Eph. 4. 10. Far above all heavens; ὑπεράνω, not ἀνω, exceedingly above the Heavens; into the Holy of Holies, the Habitation of the glorious Majeſty of God; a place of purity for a pure Redeemer, a place of Glory for a glorious Mediator. And he is ſeated in his humanity in the higheſt place of heaven next the Father, at the right hand of the Majeſty on high; Yea in the midſt of the throne, Rev. 7. 17. an honour never allow'd to the higheſt Angels, Heb. 1. 13. which ſtand before the Throne of God, but ſit not in the Throne with him. The Obedience of Angels never did, never could equal the Obedience of the Son of God. His Empire is of the ſame extent with his Fathers; ſo highly did his Father value his expiatory offering, that he would not exempt an Angel in Heaven, nor a Devil in Hell, nor any Creature upon Earth, from a ſubjection to him; but pour'd the whole Rule and Government into his hands, order'd the ſame worſhip to be perform'd to the Son as to himſelf, Joh. 5. 23. And that in heaven, Heb. 1. 6. Rev. 5. 13. And for duration it is for ever and ever; he is to Reign as Mediator, till all the ends of it be accompliſht; and afterwards for ever with the Father, in

* Meſtrezat. the Glory of the * Deity; Heb. 1. 3. He is to Reign as Mediator in the place of the Father, till the Church be perfected, by reducing all Enemies to an entire ſubjection, and then to reſign his power to his Father. As the Son of a King ſent to reduce Rebellious Countries to Obedience, hath a Royal Commiſſion from his Father to act as King, an Authority to pardon or puniſh, till his Conqueſt be finiſh'd: So when Chriſt ſhall have gain'd the full Victory, he ſhall ceaſe his Mediation, and God ſhall Reign immediately over all, and Chriſt ſhall Reign with him, not as Mediator, but as God. God ſhall be all in all, 1 Cor. 15. 28. which is oppos'd to Chriſts Interpoſition or Interceſſion as Mediator; there will be no need of Gods communicating himſelf by a Mediator, but he will immediately ſhine forth upon them, when the fruits of ſin, and ſin it ſelf is aboliſh't in them. But for the Father to reſign things to the management of his Son, as the Son had given himſelf up to the Juſtice of the Father, in a ſort to Eclipſe his own glory for ſo long a time, as the Son had Eclips'd his Deity in his Humiliation, and as it were lay by the immediate exerciſe of his Authority of judging and governing which originally pertains to him, and Vail it, to let the beams of it ſhoot into the World only through this Medium, is ſuch a mark of his acceptation, that higher cannot be given. It cannot be conceiv'd how the Father ſhould do more than this, for a Teſtimony of his pleaſure in him and his Sacrifice. 'Tis impoſſible the Father ſhould dethrone himſelf, and therefore any thing higher than what he hath done, cannot be imagin'd. For tho' the Authority ſtill reſides in the Father, and is extant in every act of Chriſts Government, yet he acts not immediately, receives no Addreſſes immediately to himſelf, but all in and by his glorified Son. Had he had the leaſt diſpleaſure with him, or found the leaſt blemiſh in him, he had not lodg'd the exerciſe of his power in him.

Uſe of this Head.

First, This Exaltation of Chriſt by the Father is a mighty encouragement to Faith in Chriſt.

1. Hereby we have aſſurance, that all that Chriſt ſpake and did, was agreeable to the Will of the Father. This Exaltation of Chriſt, will not ſuffer us to think that any thing was left undone by him, which he ought to have done. Otherwiſe the exact juſtice of God, would never have conſented to have put the Government of all things into his hand; an exact Obedience was to precede, before a Glory was to be conferr'd. Since therefore this Glory is conferr'd, 'tis evident his Obedience was unblemiſht. All the World, and the concerns of it, would never have been laid upon his ſhoulders, had the piercing eye of the Father diſcern'd any fault in it. The Infinite Wiſdom of God would never have intruſted him with ſo great an affair, if he had not been faithful in the management of what had been before committed to him; becauſe if he had been unfaithful in one, there was no ground to think he would be faithful in the others. But it is a ſtrong Argument, that he will be exact in the Glorious part of his Charge, ſince he hath been exact in the ignominious part of his work. 'Tis upon the account of his being a faithful Witneſs, that he is the Prince of the Kings of the Earth, Rev. 1. 5. 'Tis this Argument the Spirit uſeth to convince the World of Righteouſneſs, i. e. the Righteouſneſs of his Perſon, the Righteouſneſs of his Mediation, that there is a full expiation of Sin, becauſe he is entertain'd and receiv'd by the Father, Joh. 16. 10.

2. Hereby we have aſſurance, that it is the intent of the Father, that all things ſhould be manag'd by Chriſt for the good of thoſe that believe in him. Since he hath delivered the Book to Chriſt, containing the ſecrets of his Will, becauſe he was a Lamb ſlain, 'tis evident, that it is the pleaſure of the Father, that his Government ſhall be for thoſe ends for which he was ſlain; and that the Book contains the Will of God, purſuant to the Ends of that Death. Had that Book contained any thing contrary to thoſe ends, and to the intereſt of his people, the Father would not have delivered it into his hands. The end of his Exaltation, can never croſs the end of his Paſſion; nor could the unchangeable love of the Father, give him Rules for his acting in his Government, oppoſite to thoſe he had deſigned his Humiliation for. Since therefore he was in Chriſt upon the Croſs, reconciling the World to himſelf, he is in Christ, upon his Throne, pursuing the ends of that Reconciliation and bringing the fruits of it to a glorious Maturity, by the Glorification of the Reconciler. How soon were the Tears of John dried up, when he look'd upon Christ opening the Book of Gods Decrees, and found by the praises of the Elders, that the World was committed to him, to order all things for the good of the Church, Rev. 5. 4, 5. What encouragement would they else have had to have fallen down, singing the praises of him, and acknowledging him as their Lord and King, and to present to him their Golden Vials full of Odors, which are the Prayers of the Saints? The first Homage he receives, after his opening the Book, and that as a pleasant Odor, is the prayers of Believers, Ver. 8. And when he had taken the book, the four Beasts, and twenty four Elders, fell down before the Lamb; having every one of them Harps and golden Vials full of Odours, which are the prayers of the Saints. Which doth evidence their Good to be the intendment of the Father, in delivering it to him; and that the Rules in it were to that purpose, and his own Resolution to observe the Rules of it.

3. 'Tis to be considered, who this person is, that is thus exalted, in order to the encouragement of Faith. 'Tis the same Person, in whose Humiliation the Father was Reconciling us; our Kinsman, by the assumption of our Nature, but more by the relation of our Faith to him, into whose hand this power is put. He is made the Steward to dispence his Fathers Gifts, who knew our indigences and wants of them, and whose tenderness cannot be question'd, since he hath had an experience of our Infirmities. He that shed his bloud to save us, will not spare his power to relieve us. As he had not dyed, but to Reconcile us; so he would not have been exalted as a Reconciler, but to perfect it by bringing us to the Father: by the one he made way for our Access, and by the other for our perfect Conjunction. His being quickned by the Spirit, and the Glory following thereupon, as well as his being put to death in the Flesh, was to bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. He hath a tenderness as he is the Son of God, partaking of the same Nature with his Father; he hath a tenderness as our Mediator, and cloth'd with our Flesh; he hath also an engagement of Faithfulness, since all the Treasures of Heaven are put into his hands, to be expended for those ends for which he died. He is not only Administrator of his Fathers Goods, but Guardian of the Souls committed to him by his Father, and faithful he is in both.

How may we then cast our Souls into this bottom, since the directions he receives from the Father, are agreeable to all the former Oeconomy! Since, as a Lamb slain, he is Gods Steward to distribute; since both his heart, and the heart of his Father are so full of Love, one in the Execution, the other in the Acceptation, nothing can be cross to the Interest of those, for whom the one Dyed, and the other accepted it. No higher ground can there be of Faith, than the love the Father hath shown to our Redeemer for his Reconciling Passion, by his glorious Exaltation. He lov'd him in the laying down his Life, and he lov'd him in the taking it again, Joh. 10. 17. Get your Thoughts then up into heaven. Behold the Father taking him up in his Armes, Congratulating his Victory, Adorning his Triumph, Conferring upon him, and perpetuating a Government. See if in all this you can find a frown on Gods Face; any doubt in his Heart, of the Validity of his Sacrifice: See if any Letters, but those of Grace, be written about his Throne. And if God hath no doubt of it, who is more concern'd in his Glory, than you in your Salvation, why should any Jealousies remain in any heart that accepts him, discards all Affection to sin, and endeavours to imitate him in an holy Obedience to God? Be followers therefore of God as dear Children, since he hath so magnificently entertain'd his Son, upon the account of what he did, for all that will believe in him. And wait upon God till he shall send his Son in all his Royal Attire, to bring you to the full enjoyment of all the fruits of this Reconciliation, so strongly wrought, and so heartily accepted. And till that be accomplish't, let Hope every day pierce through the Vail, and enter into that which is within it, more inward, Heb. 6. 19. εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τῦ καταπετάσματος, Inning our Souls by Faith and Hope every day in the Vail. This Faith is a firm Anchor to hold the Soul safe in Stormes, and the Fathers admission of Christ into Heaven is the Rock on which it should fasten.

The Second Uſe is of Comfort.

1. Sin is fully expiated. Since it is upon the account of the Expiation of it, that he is thus dignified. The purging of our ſins by himſelf, hath met not only with a bare Acceptation, but an high Valuation with the Father. Since he hath thus Crown'd and Enthron'd him, what aſſurance have we of the full Atonement by the Bloud of his Croſs! How can we doubt the full Satisfaction, Delight, and Content of the Father with him, and with us upon the Condition of Faith, ſince it was for the purging not his own, but our ſins that he did ſit down, as of right, on the right hand of the throne of the Majeſty on high? Heb. 1. 3. The Gratifications the Father made to our Redeemer, manifeſt the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice, ſince not only Gods Kindneſs, but his Juſtice, which is a part of his Majeſty, was employ'd in the welcom reception of him. Had that frown'd, there had been no Throne for him to ſit on; and if it ever frown upon him, his Throne will ſhake under him. But it never ſhall, for it is a Throne for ever and ever, and that becauſe his Scepter is a Scepter of Righteouſneſs, Heb. 1. 8. A Majeſty ſtill offended, would never have admitted him to this honour. Is there any room for ſorrow and dejection, for jealouſies of the ſufficiency of the Ranſom, after ſo illuſtrious a diſcharge from the Father?

2. Accuſations ſhall be anſwered. We have great Enemies; the Devils that tempt us, our Corruptions that haunt us, and both to accuſe us. To whom muſt they accuſe us? To that Majeſty, at whoſe right hand Chriſt hath his Reſidence. Whence muſt the Vengeance they call for iſſue, but from that Majeſty upon whoſe Throne Chriſt ſits as a Lamb ſlain, who ſits ready to anſwer the Accuſations, and ſtop the Revenge? He tore Satans Charge upon the Croſs, will he let it be piec'd together in his Triumph? as he bowed down his head upon the Croſs to expiate our ſins, ſo his head is lifted up on the Throne to obviate any Charge they can bring againſt us. Satan knows it is fruitleſs for him to bring his Inditement there, where Chriſt perpetually appears, and is never out of the way. The perpetuity of our Juſtification, reſults from this ſitting of Chriſt at the right hand of God; for he ſits there, not as an uſeleſs Spectator, but an induſtrious and powerful Intereſſor to keep up a perpetual amity, and prevent ſin from making any new breach, 1 Joh. 2. 1. Sin we muſt not, but if any man ſin, (not a Courſe of ſin, but fall by ſome Temptation) we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous. He ſits as an Advocate, as a Reconciler and a Propitiation for ſin, ſpreading before his Father, the Odors of his Merits and Righteouſneſs, to anſwer the Charge and Inditements of Sin. He appears in the preſence of God for us, Heb. 9. 24. before the face of his Glory in the higheſt heavens. It was through the bloud of the Covenant he aroſe, it was through and with the bloud of the Covenant he entred into the Holy Place, to carry the Merit of his death as a ſtanding Monument into Heaven. God, by his Advancement, would have the ſight of it always in his Eye, and the ſavour of it in his Noſtrils; that as the World, after the ſavour of Noahs Sacrifice, ſhould no more ſink under the Deluge; ſo the Believers in Chriſt ſhould no more groan under the Curſes of the Law, though they may, in this World, ſmart under the Corrections of a Father. 'Tis a mighty Comfort in the midſt of all Infirmities, (where there is the anſwer of a good Conſcience towards God) that Chriſt is gone to heaven, and is on the right hand of God, to ſave thoſe that are baptiz'd into his Death, and that have the ſtipulation of a good conſcience towards God, which is the Apoſtles reaſoning, 1 Pet. 3. 21, 22. ἐπερώτημα.

3. Wants ſhall be reliev'd. 'Tis that humane Nature wherein the Expiation was made on Earth, which is Crown'd with Glory in Heaven by the Father: that humane Nature with all the Compaſſions inherent in it, with the ſame Affections wherewith he endur'd the Croſs, and deſpis'd the ſhame, with the ſame earneſtneſs to relieve them, as he had to deliver them. With the ſame deſire to drink of the fruit of the Vine with them in the Kingdom, as he had to eat the paſſeover with them upon the Earth; to ſupply their Wants, as he had redeem'd their Perſons. If the free gift of all things, be argued from the Fathers delivery of the Son to death, Rom. 8. 32. the full diſtribution of all things may be expected from the Fathers ſetting him upon his Throne, and giving him the Keys of Death and Hell to ſtop their inroads upon a Believer, and the Command of his Treaſures to diſpence at his his pleasure; what can be denied to the Merit of his Death, since as our Surety he is established in an Eternal Throne? Since he was admitted as a forerunner for us, Heb. 6. 20. εἰσῆλθεν, what can there be necessary for us in our journey, till we overtake him, that we may not expect at his and the Fathers hands? all our needs will be supplied, since there are Riches in Glory, in Jesus Christ, Phil. 4. 19.

4. Spiritual Enemies shall be conquer'd. All Enemies are to be made his footstool, Psal. 110. 1. Satan, who was wounded by him upon the Cross, shall not rise, since he is upon his Throne. He that could not overpower him while he was cover'd with the Infirmities of our Flesh, cannot master him since all power is deliver'd to him in Heaven and Earth, and the Keys of Hell put into his hands. He bruis'd him while he was known only to be the seed of the Woman, and bruis'd him for us; and shall he be able to repair his broken strength, since his Conqueror is now declar'd to be the Son of God with power? Our inward Enemies shall fall under the same might. It was the purpose of the Father to conform his Elect to the glorious Image of his Son, Rom. 8. 29. What hath Christ this power in his hands for, but to destroy the power of that in the heart, the Guilt whereof he expiated by his bloud? that as he appeas'd the Anger of God, and vindicated the honour of his Law by removing the Guilt, so he may fully content the Holiness of God, by cleansing out the filth. As he had a Body prepar'd him to effect the one, so he hath a power given him to perfect the other; that as there is no Guilt to provoke his Justice, there may be no Dirt to offend his Holiness. That as the Father hath been reconcil'd by the Death of Christ, he may delight himself in the Soul by the operation of the power of Christ. This will be accomplisht. The first Fruit of his Exaltation, was the Mission of the Spirit, whose proper Title is a Spirit of Holiness, in regard of his Operation, as well as his Nature; and whose proper work is, to quicken the Soul to a Newness of Life, and mortifie by Grace the Enemies of our Nature. The Apostle assures the believing Thessalonians of it, from this Argument, of his being a God of Peace, 1 Thes. 5. 23. The very God of peace sanctifie you wholy, ἁγιάσαι ὁ θεὸς. That God of peace, ver. 24. Faithful is he that calls you, who also will do it. 'Tis not only a Petition, but an Assurance; as appears by ver 24. that it will be done by him as the Author of Reconciliation. And compleatly done, ὁλοτελεῖς, wholly perfect, universally for the subject, in Understanding, Will, Affections, Body, in spirit and soul and body. The Enmity else would not be taken away; As the Enmity is remov'd from God in the Satisfaction of his Justice, by the Bloud of his Son; so the Enmity shall be remov'd from a Believer, in the Renovation of his Image by the Grace of his Spirit, that there may be at last no disgusts on either side; For he is faithful who hath call'd you. He is not a God of Peace for a day or an hour; 'tis not an imperfect Reconciliation he design'd; 'Tis a faithfulness to himself, to his own Resolves, to his own Honour, to his Sons Bloud, to the call of his people. And this is a good Argument to plead in our Prayers for Sanctification, since God hath manifested himself to be a God of Peace in the Raising Christ, Accepting him, Exalting him; all which were Evidences of a perfect Reconciliation, that he would perfect in you every good work, Heb: 13. 20, 21.

3. Use. As the Fathers Exaltation of Christ is Comfortable to the Believer, so it is as terrible to the unbeliever and unregenerate. He that advanc'd him to the Throne, and conferr'd upon him a power of asking the Heathen for his Inheritance, confers also upon him a power of destroying his Enemies, Psal. 2. 8, 9. Ask of me, and I will give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, &c. and thou shalt break them with a rod of Iron: The breaking refers to ask of me; and as thou shalt have blessings for Believers, so thou shalt have Wrath and Judgment for Unbelievers. Unbelievers that break his Bands, and cast his Cords far from them, are so far from having the Benefit of Christs Intercessions for Mercy in his glorified state, that they have a dreadful Interest in his pleas for Wrath. He hath a power of dashing them like a potters Vessel conferr'd upon him. He that gives Christ the whole World upon asking, will not contradict him in his severest acts against his unbelieving Enemies. For that love to him that advanc'd him, as a Lamb slain, will spirit his Wrath with a greater fury againſt the undervaluers of his Death and Sufferings. Will the Father, who upon his death thought him worthy to devolve the Government of the World upon him, and to act all by the hand of his Son, take it well that he is not imitated by his Creature? Is it not a reflection upon the Father, as if he had acted a weak part? had ſet too high a value upon the death of his Son? that his eyes were too dim to pierce into the Nature of it? Will God, who is pleas'd with him, bear with ſuch real Blaſphemies againſt him? for ſo all unbelieving rejection of Chriſt is. Shall his Obedience be ſo pleaſant to God, and be unreveng'd, if it be unpleaſant to us? Shall God ſubject the whole Hoſt of Angels to him, and let Worms deſpiſe him without ſevere puniſhment? If there be not an holy Eſtimation of Chriſt, Obedience to his Will and Laws, it will not conſiſt with the Fathers Exaltation of him; to ſuffer the Affront; or let his Authority be an idle name, an Authority without hands, an empty Title; No, as he hath a Scepter of Righteouſneſs, ſo he hath an Iron Rod to bruiſe his Enemies. What a Folly is it to deſpiſe that Redeemer, wilfully to violate his Laws, who hath all power given him in Heaven and Earth, and the power of judging committed to him by the Father? This is to dare the Curſes of the Law; break open the ſtore-houſe of his Wrath, and be bent upon Hell with Violence.

4. Uſe. Let us accept Chriſt then, as our Reconciler and our King. God is not contented only with the eſtabliſhment of him in this Honour, but he loves to hear the World ring with acknowledgments of it; he will have every tongue to confeſs to the glory of God the Father, that Jeſus is the Lord, Phil. 2. 11. That every tongue ſhould confeſs that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. For the Glory of God, who Conducted him through this great undertaking, Accepted him for it, and Dignified him for bringing in an everlaſting righteouſneſs. The way to glorifie God the Father, is to acknowledge the Dignity of Chriſt, and to accept him for thoſe ends for which the Father hath exalted him. All things are for the Glory of God, but this more ſignally; hereby he hath diſcover'd the wonders of his Wiſdom, Juſtice, Power and Love, before Men and Angels; and he that owns Chriſt as a glorified Mediator, owns God in the glory of all thoſe Perfections; without this Acceptation of him, we cannot anſwer the end for which God hath exalted him; he hath given him a name above every Name, that we might confeſs and acknowledge him as he hath declar'd him, and pay him a Service by our Faith. If we do not render him a voluntary Homage now, we ſhall be forc'd to render him an Homage hereafter in a deplorable ſtate. Heartily to accept him for our Lord, is to perform a duty in fellowſhip with the Angels which encompaſs his Throne. Faith is a Choice of Chriſt for Head and Governour, 'tis therefore expreſt, Hoſ. 1. 11. They ſhall appoint themſelves one head, i. e. The Meſſiah, they ſhall believe in him. Chriſt is an head of Gods appointing, and of Believers approving. God ſets him as an head authoritativè, and we ſhould embrace him voluntariè and obedientialiter, freely and obediently. As the Magiſtrate chooſeth a publick Officer, and the people conſent to him, the Magiſtrate gives him the Authority, and the people encourage him in the Exerciſe. God ſet his Son upon the holy Hill of Sion, Pſal. 2. 6. and we are commanded to kiſs him, which is a token of Acknowledgment, Conſent and Subjection. As he ſits at the right hand of God, he ought to ſit in the Center of our Hearts. Since he is poſſeſſed of the higheſt place, and doth not diſdain the loweſt, 'tis unworthy to keep him from it. Serve him as a Lord. As he hath made himſelf a Sacrifice for us, and roſe again and reviv'd, Rom. 14. 9. i. e. acquir'd a new ſtate of Life, we ſhould ſerve him as a living Lord, in Obedience to the pleaſure and Authority of God the Father, who hath been in him reconciling the World, and for his work hath advanc'd him to the Dominion over all Creatures. As God exalted him out of a ſence of what he had done for the appeaſing his Wrath, and the Salvation of man, ſo ſhould we exalt him in our hearts out of a ſence of what he hath done for our Souls. He that honours not the Son, honours not the Father who hath ſent him, John 5. 22, 23. and who hath glorified him. For he contradicts the end for which God hath given all judgment to the Son.

5. Uſe.

5. Use. Glorifie God in Christ, Glorifie Christ. God is gone up with a shout, Psal. 47. 5. God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a Trumpet, sing praises to God, sing praises, sing praises to our King, sing praises. Alluding to the Joy in the fetching up the Ark, 1 Chron. 13. 8. There were shouts of Angels at his entrance into Heaven, God Reigns over the Heathen, God sits upon the Throne of his holiness; a Throne which his holy and righteous Obedience purchas'd; or the holiness of God is now gloriously apparent, fully vindicated. Glorifie the Father for it: The Father and the Lamb are joyn'd together in their Praises, Rev. 5. 13. Blessing, Honour, Glory and Power be unto him that sits upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. As the Father hath enlarg'd his hand to Christ, as our Reconciler, we should enlarge our hearts in thankfulness to him. God was not satisfied with giving a little Mite to Christ, a small reward; all the Treasures of Heaven must be open for him; Why should we put off God with a little Praise?

I. Information.

1. This declares the Excellency of the Christian Religion, above any other that ever was in the World. All the Philosophy and Learning in the World can never acquaint us with these Mysteries. In the Gospel we see the face of God unvail'd, whereas with natural Light we can but feel or grope after him, Act. 17. 27. He is not far from us by the light of Nature, but in a Cloud, not barefaced; but the light of the Glory of God shines forth in the Face of Christ. How doth this way of the Gospel shame all other Religions, all other Notices of God! It resolves the question, which nonplusses the natural Learning of the World, and gives light to the impossibilities of Reason. No other Knowledge presents us with a Reconciled God, and a Reconciling Jesus; this only salves the Honour of God, repairs the Ruins of Nature, ensures the happiness of the Creature, and discovers an Eternal Inheritance upon a firm Foundation; this Varnisheth all Gods Attributes, Calms the Conscience, Cures natural Jealousies of God, and restores the Creature to answer the End of his Creation; This declares things worthy of God; honourable to him, as well as Beneficial to the World; It shows him in the heights of his Wisdom, and the depths of his Holiness; the length of his Love, and the breadth of his Justice.

[1.] It declares the Glory of God. We know something of God by natural Reason; but the full story of his Glorious Perfections is not printed in the Book of the Creation, as in that of Redemption. Hence when he speaks of his redeeming Design, he often adds, that I may be glorified, Isa. 49. 3. Isa. 60. 21. as though he had no Glory lying in the Womb of Creation, but all was to spring out from that of Redemption. The Creation of the World was but a preparation to this, the Creation was too dim a Glass to show the Image of Gods Glory; he seems to intimate, Isa. 42. 5, 6. That his creating the heavens and stretching them out, the spreading forth the earth, and that which comes out of it, and giving breath to people upon it, was as a stage on which he would call Christ to act the highest part as a Covenant for the people. He laid the Foundation of the old World, to build those new things upon. The Glory of the Creation was too low for a Great God to rest in. Upon sin the Creation was laid waste, and the Glory of God had sunk with the Ruins of it, had not this succeeded. This restor'd to him the glory of his Creation, with Interest and Increase. His stretching out the heaven, and spreading the Earth, had glorified his Power; the Damning Man upon his Fall had honour'd his Justice; where then should the standing Angels have had a prospect of his tenderest Love, immense Wisdom, and severest Justice? He had never been known in his full Beauty by any Creature, had not the platform of this Counsel been laid and executed; whence he calls his Calling Christ in righteousness, to open the eyes of the Blind, and committing the Work of Reconciliation to him, his glory, that he would not give to another, i. e. intrust in any other hands, than in the hands of his Son, Isa. 42. 6, 7, 8. peculiarly his Glory, which he doth not ascribe to himself so eminently in stretching out the Heavens. His Attributes were glorified, some in one Act, some in another; here they kiss each other with mutual Congratulations;

Mercy

Mercy rejoyces that Juſtice is ſatisfied, Juſtice rejoyces that Mercy is manifeſted; Wiſdom and Holineſs joyn the hands of Mercy and Juſtice together. In other things they are ſcatter'd in various Subjects, here they are banded in one knot, and ſhine forth with united beams. In which reſpect Chriſt may be ſaid to be the brightneſs of his glory and the expreſs image of his perſon, as well as in that of his Deity, Heb. 1. 3. χαρακτὴρ; wherein we may ſee the perfections of God engraven as viſibly as a ſtamp upon the Seal; his Wiſdom, Mercy, Juſtice, Holineſs and Truth. The light of the glory of God breaks forth in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6. In the actions and ſufferings of Chriſt God exhibits himſelf in the glory of his Nature, and gives a fuller view of himſelf, who was but imperfectly known before. Here the World may ſee him in the beauty of his Holineſs, the condeſcending ſweetneſs of his Nature, the ſeverity of his Juſtice, the inexhauſtibleneſs of his Bounty, and brightneſs of his Wiſdom; thus he ſhows himſelf at once clearly legible in all his Perfections. What Religion in the World gives us ſuch an account of God? What diſcovery did ſo fully evidence him in his Robes of Royalty at once? Never was the earth ſeen ſo full of the Glory of God, as in the Mediation of Chriſt; Then was there glory to God in the higheſt aſcents, a glory reaching as high as the higheſt heavens, when there was peace on earth, Luk. 2. 14.

(1.) It manifeſts his Wiſdom. Which ſhoots forth with clearer beams in his Son than in the Creation. In which regard Chriſt is call'd the Wiſdom of God, i. e. the higheſt diſcovery of his Wiſdom; there is a Counſel, as well as Will in the more minute paſſages of his Providence; but there is a more glorious workmanſhip of Wiſdom in the work of Reconciliation; a manifold Wiſdom in laying the Reconciliation frame with advantage to the glory of his Name, and the welfare of the Creature; which could not be conceiv'd by Angels or Men before they ſaw it unfolded, for it was hid in God from the beginning of the World, and was not then made known to the Angels, Eph. 3. 9, 10. What is the frame of heaven and Earth to this? Juſt as his Power and Wiſdom is in the making a clod of Earth, to that which appears in the Fabrick of a Man. In the Creation it is like a Sun-beam through the cranny of a Wall, this like the Sun facing us in its full Glory: He is the only wiſe God, as he is our Saviour, Jude ult. And the Apoſtle fixeth the beſt note to it, when he calls it, All wiſdom and prudence, wherein God abounded too, Eph. 1. 8. Wherein he hath abounded towards us in all wiſdom and prudence. All Wiſdom in contriving and determining the way, Prudence in ordering and diſpoſing the means conſonant thereunto; Wiſdom in drawing the platform, and Prudence in digging through all impediments, and making even the ſeeming obſtacles ſerve as ſteps to the Execution. How great was that Wiſdom that reſtor'd us by that λόγος, that word, whereby he had created us, and appointed his Son, who had an Holineſs exactly to obey him, and a power to bear the weight of whatſoever was neceſſary, to make up the breach? And this Myſtery he kept ſecret in his own breaſt from the beginning of the World, reveal'd to none diſtinctly, but by the Goſpel, after the incarnation of Chriſt; that it might evidently appear to be the work only of his Wiſdom, and therefore called hidden wiſdom, 1 Cor. 2. 7. whence the Apoſtle ſpeaking of this as a Myſtery kept ſecret, breaks out into the praiſe of God for it, as the only wiſe God, Rom. 16. 25, 26, 27. What Religion in the World declares the ſecurity of Gods rights with mans happineſs? What Doctrine beſide this, anſwers all Contradictions, and diſcovers Juſtice poſſeſſing all its rights, and Mercy fully anſwer'd in all its deſires?

(2.) His Power. As the Father was in Chriſt reconciling the world, Chriſt was the Power of God, as well as the Wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. Chriſt the power of God and the wiſdom of God. The power of God in breaking the heart of the Enmity by the death of the Croſs, and overthrowing all the deſigns of the Evil Spirit. The power of God is manifeſt in ſuſtaining all things after the foundation of the world totter'd, more than if he had deſtroyed this world, and made a new one. That man hath a mighty power over his own Paſſions, that when he is extreamly injur'd without giving the leaſt occaſion, yea and againſt multiplyed benefits, ſhould ſtudy ways of reconciliation with that perſon, though he knew he ſhould receive new ſlights from him upon the offers of ſuch kindneſs; a mightier power would be be manifeſt over himſelf, if he ſhould part with his deareſt Friend, or a beloved Son to expoſe him to Contempt and Ignominy, for renewing the Amity between him and his ungrateful Adverſary; ſuch a Man would have a mighty power and Royalty. Rex eſt qui ſibi imperat. Other things ſhow the power of God over the Creatures, this is as it were power over himſelf. If the pardon of one ſin, or the ſins of a Nation argue the greatneſs of Gods power, Numb. 14. 17. the power of God is pleaded by Moſes as an Argument to pardon the provoking Iſraelites, Let the power of my Lord be great; much more doth the reconciling a world; here is a power over his own wrath deeply provoked by his offending Creatures, a power over his own Affections and love to his Son; a power over himſelf after ſuch vaſt provocations, and a foreſight of more, enhanc'd by ingratitude and ſlights of his Creatures, and ſtudying ways of reconcilement, while the offender was exerciſing freſher hoſtilities againſt God. 'Tis an unconceivable power, and greater than that which is viſible in the Creation, and will be acknowledg'd ſo by thoſe that underſtand the evil of ſin, and the immenſe provocations offer'd to the juſtice of God. What Religion in the world gives us any notice of ſo vaſt a power in God, as the Goſpel doth in this Caſe?

(3.) The Wonders of his Goodneſs. How is the Goſpel an Edition of Gods heart as it wrought from Eternity? An unfolding, and opening of his Bowels which lay ſecretly yerning? This brings life and immortality to light, 2 Tim. 1. 10. which lay lock'd up in the Cabinet of Gods purpoſe, till they were unlock't and brought down to men in the Goſpel. In this we may ſee the Scheme and Model of his Thoughts, the method of his Counſels, the Treaties about Mans Recovery, all the Motions of his Goodneſs, in its deſcent to Earth and aſcent to Heaven, carrying at laſt the Creature with it, to the wearing an Eternal Crown upon its head. How did he prepare all things for Mans Recovery, before Mans Fall, which was foreſeen by him, and decreed to be permitted; providing a Medicine before the Diſeaſe; and a Soulder, before the Crack: Caſting about to reduce Rebels to Amity, before they had a being wherewith to Rebel? Where is that Religion beſides, that preſents us with ſuch draughts of divine love, that declares its ſecret reſolves and tranſactions, that tells us of ſuch an immenſe floud of Bounty flowing down upon Mankind? The Heathens regarded God as ſevere, though they ſaw Teſtimonies of his Patience: they ſaw not thoſe ſprings of kindneſs bubbling up in his own breaſt; they imagin'd them ſqueez'd out by their Sacrifices and ſolicitations, and purchas'd by their Services. Here is the Goodneſs and tender Compaſſions of God making the firſt motion, laying on one Colour after another, till it was brought to perfection. The Goſpel ſhows us God contriving Redemption by his own Wiſdom, drawing it with his own hand, working it by his own power.

All this ſhows the Excellency and Amiableneſs of his Nature. Honourable to God, a pattern of Goodneſs to men, the higheſt incentive to a Worſhip, Adoration, and Service of him, to all thoſe duties which are moſt fit for a Creature toward God, Admirations of him, Self-humiliation, Dependance, ingenuous Obedience; ſuch diſcoveries of God leave men without excuſe in all their contradictions to him. He is not repreſented in the Goſpel with his Standard up, his Weapons ſharpned, his Bow bent, and his Arrows prepar'd, unleſs againſt inveterate and wilful unbelievers; but the Goſpel draws him to our view ſheathing his ſword, placing his Arrows in his quiver not in his Bow, with his Arms open, his Countenance ſmiling; means ſufficient to make us ſink down in a ſelf-abomination, and riſe up in the choiceſt Affections to God. No Religion repreſents God ſo admirably, ſo amiably to Man, ſo worthy of himſelf, and with greater motives to thoſe duties which become a Creature, and therefore this hath an excellency above all other Religions in the world.

[2.] It hath an excellency above all other Religions, in ſhowing the true way of attaining peace with God, and thereupon peace in our ſelves. God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf; Not in any other Methods, not in purifications and waſhings ſuperſtitiouſly practic'd by the Heathens; Not in Sacrifices of Beaſts, though commanded to the Jews; but only as Types of the great Sacrifice God intended. All other ways of appeaſing God are fond and fooliſh, cannot find a foundation in common and ordinary Reaſon; they diſparage God rather than honour him, in ſuch mean and ſordid thoughts of him, as tho' an infinite juſtice could be brib'd by the bloud of a Beaſt; All other Religions widen the Breach, but do not in the leaſt cloſe it. But here we ſee a God of Peace, and a Prince of Peace embracing each other, and the voice of the Turtle is heard in the world. The Goſpel is the Dove bringing an Olive-branch of Peace, put into its mouth by God: It brings us news of the allay of his Wrath, which was due to our ſins, and that his ſword is blunted by himſelf in the Bowels of his Son, that it might not be ſheath'd in ours. It ſhows us a ſhelter for ſtormes, a light in Gods Countenance even in the ſhadow of darkneſs. Here God draws near to man, that man may have acceſs to him. He makes his Son like to man, that man might be render'd capable of approaching to God. Two Natures are joyn'd in one Perſon, that there may be an amiable conjunction of two different parties; he expoſeth his beloved Son to the ſtrokes of his Juſtice for a time, that he might reaſſume his Life with honour for ever. 'Tis a way that Reaſon cannot diſapprove of, ſince nothing could conduce more to the Honour of God, and nothing more eſtabliſh the peace of the Creature. Other Religions have fram'd Mediators of their own, Deified men, whereby they might have acceſs to God. God in the Goſpel preſents us with a Mediator of his own chooſing, of his own fitting, of his own ordering; one that he will not refuſe, whoſe Interceſſions he is pleaſed with; That he might keep off the darts of Divine Juſtice from us, that we might draw near through the vail of his Fleſh, Heb. 10. 20. that we may look upon God in Chriſt, without being dazled by his Glory, or ſcorch'd by his Wrath. Now may devouring Fire and combuſtible ſtubble meet together; Fire without ſcorching, ſtubble without conſuming. Here Miſery may approach to Glory, becauſe Glory condeſcends to miſery. Hereby Guilt is remov'd, which makes us uncapable of acceſs to God; and Wrath is remov'd, which hinders our actual acceſs. Here may all that will believe in God through Chriſt and conform to his Laws, walk in the midſt of the Furnace of Gods Juſtice without having an hair of their heads touched, without feeling the ſmart of that, which will be quick in conſuming unregenerate men. Since nothing elſe diſcovers any peace with God, no Doctrine elſe can make any peace in the Conſcience. 'Tis the old way gives reſt to the ſoul, Jer. 6. 16. the way as old as the firſt promiſe of a Reconciler. All other ways, if rightly conſidered, rather promote than allay ſuſpitions of God. Conſcience hath no ground to make any comfortable reflection without ſome plain declaration of Gods reconcilableneſs and reconciliation. Conſcience can ſhow us our guilt, but nothing in the world evidenceth the way of our peace but the Goſpel; no other Religion diſcovers God in treaty about Reconciliation.

Herein the Chriſtian Religion tranſcends all others; It Glorifies God, and Dignifies the Creature. Salvation is beſtowed upon fallen man, but the honour of all redounds to God, that no fleſh may glory in his preſence. Here is an admirable temperament of Juſtice and Mercy, in the Reconciliation of God and the Creature, Hoſ. 2. 19. I will betroth thee unto me in righteouſneſs and judgment, in kindneſs and mercy. Judgment in the ſatisfaction by the Surety, an efflux of Mercy in requiring no portion at our hands.

Second Information. If God be the Author of Reconciliation and Redemption, then the knowledge of this, the declaration of the Goſpel, is an ineſtimable bleſſing to a Nation. What better News can God ſend to men? The very Declaration of it, is a lifting a Nation up to Heaven; Mat. 11. 23. And thou Capernaum, that art exalted to heaven. The Bibles in our hands are unexpreſſible bleſſings, ſince God hath made a large Comment upon that firſt promiſe which he gave to Adam; God hath declar'd to the world in full, what he gave Adam as it were in a ſcrip of paper: he hath unfolded in his Word the Myſtery, brought it to perfection, and proclaim'd it openly, and given us a glaſs wherein we may ſee his Glory. * The diſcovery of Chriſt in the Fleſh, was a greater glory belonging to the ſecond Temple than what was in the firſt, notwithſtanding all its Ornaments and Riches. The people wept when they ſaw the Beauty of the ſecond Temple inferiour to that of the firſt: and indeed there was wanting in it, the Propitiatory, the holy Fire, Urim and Thummim, mint, the Spirit of Prophesie, and the Ark of the Testimony; yet, Hag. 2. 9. God tells them the glory of the latter house should be greater than that of the former, though it wanted all those things. The matter of it was not so precious, the condition of the Inhabitants was more greivous. The Temple was often pillaged, by Antiochus, Pompey, Crassus. There must be some other gift proportionable to the Majesty of that God who had promis'd, as the words following declare, I will give peace: Not a temporal Peace; for they never had such cruel wars as after the building of that Temple. But a spiritual peace, a peace between God and Man, between Gods Justice and our sins, by the means of the Messiah. He would not adorn the Temple with Riches; He could if he would, for the Gold was his and the silver his, ver. 8. But the Declarations of Peace which should be wrought in that City, and publisht in that Temple, was the Glory of the place. What though a Nation should be brought to Poverty and Disgrace, have the waves of all kind of Afflictions go over their heads, while God keeps up the declarations of a spiritual peace, while he proclaims still the Reconciliation he is the Author of? That Nation is still glorious, though externally Miserable. God never employ'd his Thoughts so much about the Riches and Honour of a Nation, the Gold and Ornaments of the Temple, as about the Reconciliation of man. While God declares that to a people which is the subject of his Thoughts, the delight of his Heart; the glory of a Nation is preserved: But when once he shuts his Mouth, and will speak no more, when his voice shall not be heard in our streets, when he shall shake off the dust of his feet against us; then we may write Ichabod upon our selves, the Glory is departed, though wealth and outward glory should stay behind. The proclaiming the everlasting Gospel, is the Fall of Babylon. When the Angel comes forth with the Everlasting Gospel, Rev. 14. 6, he is presently followed by another that brings the Tidings of Babylons Fall, ver. 8. Babylon is fallen, is fallen. The removing the Everlasting Gospel is the rising of Babylon, and makes way for an Army of Judgments: Desolation follows upon a Nation, when Gods Soul departs from them; Jer. 6. 8. and his Soul departs from them, when he breaks off any further Treaties with men upon the Articles of peace in the Gospel. The Gospel is nothing else but a proclamation of the Articles of Peace. His thoughts of Peace were the Cause of his sending Christ, the accomplishment of the Reconciliation is the ground of proclaiming it. He sent Christ to effect it, and his Spirit in the Gospel to ratifie it. 'Tis called by the Title of the word of Reconciliation, 1 Cor. 5. 19. as though nothing else was intended in it, but to make God and man at Peace together actually. 'Tis a declaration of his ardent desire to return into Amity with us, that he is satisfied by the Death of his Son, and can admit us without any contradiction to his Justice, and with a stronger security than at the first Creation: What a Mercy is it, that God should make known his Gospel to us, and not to all in the world! If he did not intend to be reconcil'd to some in a Nation, he would never transmit it from one Nation to another. He hath made known his Godhead and Power to all, Rom. 1. 20. but not his placability and Mercy to all. Men may know by Natural Light, that God is Merciful, and yet not know that he hath erected a propitiation for the world in Christ; and without this distinct knowledge no man can be saved under the New Testament; and by all the knowledge of Gods Mercy in the world, they were never able to arrive to this without a special Revelation, no more than by the knowledge of the Nature of a Candle they can arrive to the knowledge of the Nature of the Sun in the Heavens. Is not this a Glory, a Happiness? what Praise doth God deserve from us for it!

Third Information. This Doctrine acquaints us with the whole concern of Faith. It shows,

1. What a strong foundation of Faith we have. God Chose him, Call'd him, Counselled him: he is Wise, and would not choose a feeble, and uncertain Reconciler, unable to manage the business committed to him; he is immutable, and in regard of the Holiness of his Nature, will not and cannot recede from his own choice and approbation; he hath done all that he can possibly to show himself placable, and pacified. Chriſt hath done all which concern'd him to the high ſatisfaction and content of God. All the buſineſs lyes on our ſide, whether we will joyn iſſue with God in it; whether our hearts ſhall endeavour to run parallel with the Counſel of God in it; whether his approbation ſhall be the joyful meaſure of ours. What high ground have we to own and accept this pacification; or what pretence can we have to refuſe it? If we do not refuſe it, God cannot. His act hath been already paſt: For Chriſt is a reconciler of his Election. 'Tis his Glory, and our Security, that he is a God that changeth not; Mal. 3. 6. For I am the Lord, I change not, therefore you Sons of Jacob are not conſum'd. Which ſeems to me to be ſpoken in relation to the Meſſenger of the Covenant, ver. 1. and not to the words immediately foregoing, ver. 5. As if God ſhould ſay, I will puniſh, for I am unchangeable in my Juſtice; which would infer rather their deſtruction than their preſervation: But I have decreed the ſending the Meſſenger of the Covenant, and I am unchangeable in this purpoſe, and in the accompliſhing all the fruits of his coming, therefore you Sons of Jacob are not conſum'd. The Aſſurance is ſtronger, ſince the decree hath been manifeſted, and the ſatisfaction accepted by the injur'd Father. God hath provided ſuch a ſatisfaction to himſelf, in the death of his Son, as is anſwerable to the greatneſs of the Creatures Guilt, a remedy for the Creatures Fears. The God who was offended, is pacified; the Law which curſt the Sinner, is ſatisfied; the Honour of God, which ſtood in the way of happineſs, is repair'd. He ſent him when we did not deſire him, he ſent him when we did not expect him; when there was ſcarce any Faith in the promiſe of the Meſſiah left in all the land of Judæa; and ſent him not to procure a temporal Good, but the Favour of God, which is the womb of unconceivable happineſs; and was ſo far from dealing with us as Enemies when we were in his hands, that he did the utmoſt he could to lay a foundation of Amity, and put the management of it into the hands of the Perſon deareſt to him, whom he could only truſt.

Had God ſpar'd any coſt to reconcile us, our doubts might be excuſable; but ſince he hath diſcover'd a combination of gracious Acts about Chriſt, that his thoughts only run upon this, and had no other intention but the glory of his Name in the happineſs of the offending Creature; there is no room for diſtruſt, if we embrace his Conditions. The very end of raiſing him and giving him glory, and therefore of all the actions preceding, was that your faith and hope might be in God, 1 Pet. 1. 21. that you might believe him to be a God reconcil'd, and thereupon hope for all Bleſſings from him which he hath promis'd. As Crucified, Chriſt is the object of Faith; as Exalted, he is the ground of Faith. This ſufficiency of Chriſt as a ground of Faith, God hath witneſs'd in the higheſt manner poſſible, 1 Joh. 5. 7. There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and thoſe three are one, i. e. That give an Heavenly and Divine Authority to this Truth. The word Heaven, is not to be taken for the place or local Heaven, for many there bear witneſs to it, innumerable Companies of Angels and Martyrs and glorified Spirits: But we muſt underſtand it of an extraordinary teſtimony. (As Job 20. 27. when it is ſaid, the heaven ſhall reveal his iniquity, i. e. God by an extraordinary judgment ſhall manifeſt to man, that he was a wicked Creature) and theſe three are one, not only in their eſſence, but in their Teſtimony, which gives a greater ſtrength to this witneſs; as the teſtimony of a man is ſtronger, when it is in conjunction with the Teſtimony of others, who are worthy to be credited; and this record is, that Faith hath a ſtrong Foundation, and will have a bleſſed ſucceſs; it was the whole purpoſe of the bleſſed Trinity to joyn together in this extraordinary witneſs in all their acts, that Chriſt is a full ground of Faith in God. So that now a faithful perſon may highly plead this, Lord I preſent thee with a Mediator of thy own choice. Thou didſt chooſe him for me, before I did chooſe him for my ſelf; thou didſt counſel him to undertake this Office, before thou didſt command me to accept him; thou didſt call him to be a reconciler, before thou didſt call me to be reconciled; thou didſt bruiſe him for me; this is thy only act, and this I plead, and upon this foundation will I reſt the weight of my Soul. 'Tis a ground for a brave plea; for God would not buſie himſelf about any thing that ſhould have no effect. God would not deceive his people, and feed them with vain hopes in a buſineſs of ſo great a concern; he will not go back from his own Appointment, he cannot go back from his own Word, his own Deed, his own Counſel, which he is pleaſed with, eſpecially ſince it was not by permiſſion as Adams ſin was, but by his Grace, which makes, in the Apoſtles judgment, the efficacy of Chriſts death ſtronger for Reconciliation, than Adams Offence was for the breach of Amity, *Rom.*5.15. If through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man Jeſus Chriſt, hath abounded unto many, i.e. acting all along in it, and with it in a way of Grace from the firſt original of his Gift, and therefore it abounds, i. e. is more efficacious to the Salvation of Men, than Adams was to their Condemnation.

2. It ſhows us the nature and neceſſity of Faith. God hath appointed Chriſt a Mediator between himſelf and man. God hath teſtified himſelf reconcil'd in this Mediator; all his acts about him ſignify thoſe things. Faith on our parts, is nothing elſe but an act of our Souls, anſwering to thoſe Acts on the part of God. As God Choſe him, Commiſſion'd him, Accepted him, Glorified him, ſo Faith is a full Approbation of all the Acts of God in this concern. A Choice of Chriſt, an Acceptance and Glorifying him, putting our concerns into his hands, receiving him as our Mediator and King, upholding him, as far as Creature-Ability reaches, in his Office; reſting in him in his Precepts by Obedience, in his Promiſes by Dependance; and by ſuch terms Faith is ſet out in Scripture. As God looks to him as his reſt, *Iſa.*66.2. ſo we are to look to him and *be ſaved, Iſa.*45.22. As God looks unto him with all the Affections of a God, we ſhould look unto him with all the Affections of a Creature. A Mediator muſt be accepted by both Parties that are at variance, and they muſt ſtand to what that Mediator doth: As when two Princes are at difference, and a third interpoſes to make an Agreement between them, they muſt both conſent to accept of that Prince for Mediator, and both put their Concerns into his hand: he can be no Mediator for him, that doth not accept of him in that Relation. God hath appointed this Mediator and ſetled him in this Office, becauſe God and man did not ſtand upon equal terms; God being the Soveraign and only offended, Man being the offending Criminal. God hath declar'd himſelf fully contented, and hath complyed with all the Conditions of the firſt Agreement; it onely reſts now, that man will accept of him for thoſe purpoſes for which God did conſtitute him; and comply with thoſe Conditions which God hath ſetled. This is neceſſary, God ſaves no man againſt his will; and he that doth not joyn iſſue with God in conſenting to this, declares he hath no purpoſe to be ſaved by him.

There muſt be ſome Mediator to make God and Man meet in Agreement, to anſwer all the ends of God, and reſtore the fallen Creature; God hath appointed no other than his Son; if men could find out any other, and propoſe him, God is not bound to accept of him. But what Mediator can man appoint to treat with God? Without conſent to this Perſon, man is utterly undone; for all the wit of Men and Angels cannot find out a perſon fit for ſo great a buſineſs. If it were poſſible, 'tis an increaſe of the Crime, and an high preſumption for a Criminal to ſtand upon Terms, and refuſe the perſon the Prince chooſes to mediate for him, when there can be no exceptions againſt him: which ſhows the neceſſity of Faith in Chriſt, in whom God hath been reconciling the World, and onely in him; and the Duty of the Creature, to acquieſce in Gods contrivance, and conſtitution. God hath taken a full meaſure of Chriſt and all his Sufferings, and found him compleat; therefore our Faith ſhould be compleat in him. As God hath ſingled him out from Angels and Men, to be an expiatory Sacrifice, and a great King, ſo Faith ſutes it ſelf to this act of God in ſingling Chriſt out from all other Competitors, to be a Reconciler and Lord; and the Righteouſneſs of God, from all other Righteouſneſs. This Faith muſt not be a naked Aſſent, as Gods Act about Chriſt was not a naked Aſſent, but a full hearty Conſent; a Joy in him, an Acceptation of him, with all his Affections: So muſt ours be.

3. It ſhows us the true Object of Faith. Not God in the ſimplicity of his own Being, not Chriſt alone in his Incarnation and Death, but God in Chriſt. As God was in Chriſt

Christ reconciling the World, so God in Christ is the object of Faith. God is the ultimate object of Faith, Christ the immediate object; Joh. 12. 44. He that believes on me, believes not on me, but on him that sent me. not on me ultimately, his Faith is directed to God; as he that believes an Ambassador, doth not only give credit to him, but to the Prince that sent him: And to God, not as Creator, but as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; to God as ordering, to Christ as acting; to God as commissioning, to Christ as commissioned, Joh. 14. 1. You believe in God, believe also in me. In God as the Author of all good, in Me as the Mediator and Purchaser of all grace: In God as the first Author, in Christ as the faithful Executor: God is the Sun, Christ is the beam; our eye ascends to the Sun by the beam, but terminates not in the beam, but in the Sun: Faith ascends ultimately to God, as being the head of Christ, 1 Cor. 11. 3. And the salutation is first peace from God the Father, 1 Cor. 1. 3. the fountain and spring of all that Christ did. In Christ we see the smiles of God, in Christ we hear the joyful sound of his Bowels, in Christ we feel the beatings of his heart: The Father is the Reconciled, the Son the Reconciler, Faith is therefore called Faith towards God, Heb. 6. 1. and we are said to believe in God through Christ, 1 Pet. 1. 21. And through his Name, Act. 10. 43. God is the primary and principal object, Christ the immediate; both must be taken in. He that believes not in the Son, believes not in the Father; he that believes not in the Son as Reconciler, believes not in the Father as Reconciled: He that believes not in the Satisfaction and Mediation of Christ, believes not in the Father satisfied; for he that honours not the Son, honours not the Father which hath sent him, Joh. 5. 23. for they are one in the work of Redemption, and in all the grace which flows down to us, as well as in Nature. As Christ is the Son equal with the Father, we believe in him as God; as he is Mediator, we believe in him as Gods Servant, furnisht by him with Authority and Ability. He is the proper object of Faith, as being one with the Father. If he were not God, he could not be the object of Trust, Jer. 17. 5, 7. Cursed is the man that trusts in man; blessed is the man that trusts in the Lord. And a blessedness is pronounc'd to those that trust in the King, God hath set upon Sion, Psal. 2. 12. And in the chief corner stone he hath laid in Sion 1 Pet. 2. 6. He is the Medium of our Faith, as he is Gods Servant. We believe in God as the Author, we believe in Christ as the means. Faith fastens upon Christ as a gift, upon God as the Donor. It receives Christ as Gods token, and gift of transcendent kindness; and from ravishments with this gift, the Soul ascends to confidence in the Giver. It reads Gods heart in Christ, sees the glory of God in the Face of Christ, and mounts up to clasp about one who hath declar'd himself in Amity. We eye Christ as the expiation, God as the Judge; We see Christ upon the Cross, and in Heaven; But we consider by whose Authority he is there, for what ends he is there; and both the Authority and the Ends lead us naturally to God, to place our Confidence in him as the Rector, the Accepter, and in Christ as Mediator. For Faith is a grace that comforts the Soul; joy and peace comes in by believing, Joh. 15. 13. What joy can there be in Christs actions and passion, unless we regard God the Father as concern'd in them? God is a God of all comfort as being a God of all peace. All Christs Sufferings signifie nothing, but as they refer to God, and have his Approbation and Concurrence; so our Faith is not right and signifies nothing, which doth not make the whole honour redound to God.

4. It shows the acceptableness of Faith to God, and the high pleasure he takes in it. Faith is an approbation of Gods actions herein, and of the whole Scheme; 'Tis a sealing the counter-part, as Gods act was a sealing the original deed; 'tis a testimony to the glory of all those Attributes he honour'd in the Mediation of Christ. As Abraham by his faith gave glory to God, Rom. 4. 20. (Faith doth actively glorifie God, and passively too, for every one that trusts in Christ, is to the praise of the glory of his grace, Eph. 1. 12.) To his truth, and to his Power, which were concern'd, one in the intention of making good his promise, the other in his ability to perform it; so in believing in God as reconcil'd through Christ, and that he hath taken off the Curses of the Law, and will bestow an everlasting Righteousness, and relying upon him in a way of obedience (as Abraham did in that Case)

we acknowledge Gods Veracity, Wiſdom, Holineſs, Juſtice, Love; and we acknowledge Chriſts Love, Tenderneſs, and Sufficiency. 'Tis an applauding the Wiſdom of God in his choice. Certainly that God that gives us ſo many exhortations to be followers of him, to be like him, is delighted to ſee men have the ſame ſentiments with himſelf; to be like him in their judgments of things in regard of Knowledge, and like him in the practiſe of things in regard of Holineſs; he delights to ſee that his Sons bloud was not ſhed in vain; to perceive himſelf and his Son glorified by men in laying down their Weapons. Every act of Faith is a new glory to God; 'tis to the Praiſe of the glory of his grace. God juſtifies us by this way of Reconciliation, and our Acceptance of it juſtifies God from all charge and imputations from the Creature, as the approving of Johns Baptiſm, Luk. 7. 29. was a juſtification of God. Next to the joy God hath in Chriſt, he hath a joy in the beginnings of Faith, there is joy in the preſence of the Angels, Luk. 15. 10. Chriſt hath a joy in the Faith and Obedience of his people, Joh. 15. 11. And when their Faith is perfect, they ſhall at laſt be preſented before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy, Jud. 24. The preſence of his glory, God will appear more glorious, when he comes to ſee all the purchaſed and redeemed ones of Chriſt that have approved of his gracious and wiſe contrivance, and given him the honour of his Attributes by a believing Obedience to his will. With exceeding joy, ſince the ſubject of this joy is not determin'd in the Text, it may be underſtood of the joy of God, of the Mediator, of the Saints. Preſented; God ſhall receive the preſents ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει with an exulting joy.

Fourth Information. We ſee here the ſtrength and ſufficiency of Chriſt for all the concerns of his Mediation. God would not have call'd him out for this work, had he not been able to accompliſh it: he would never have laid the Government of things, in order to a Reſtoration, upon unable ſhoulders. God would no more have choſen him, or been pleaſed with any propoſition of it, than he was pleaſed with Sacrifice and Burnt-offerings. God would not fail of his End; his End was Reconciliation; Chriſt therefore was able to pacifie the ſharpeſt wrath. It was not agreeable to Gods Wiſdom to chooſe an unable or an unskilful Agent. God was certain of the Event, he would never have expos'd the humane Nature, united to the ſecond Perſon, to a Task wherein it ſhould have utterly ſunk under the Juſtice of God. God had more love to his Creature, than to venture the Eternal Concerns of thoſe he was reſolv'd to ſave, in a weak bottom that could not have reſiſted the ſturdyeſt Rocks, and moſt bluſtring ſtormes. God foreſaw the vaſt number of thoſe ſins (though numberleſs to man) that ſtood in need of pardon, when he fingled out Chriſt to this charge. It was for many offences he intended the Merit of Chriſt, Rom. 5. 16. even for as many offences, as thoſe for whom he died, would be guilty of; and he would not lay them upon the ſhoulders of one who was not able to bear them. He was every way able, in regard he had the ſame nature and glory with the Father; he was every way fit in the affinity he had with both parties, whereby he could reach out his hand to both; the hand of his Deity to the Father, that of his Humanity to Man. As God he could ſatisfie for all Mankind, as Man he could ſuffer. Had he not been every way fit and able, the Majeſty of Heaven, who was deſirous of Reconciliation, would not have pitched upon him. No creature could ſatisfie by ſuffering, becauſe no creature had an infinite dignity in his Perſon to render temporary ſufferings of infinite value: nor could any creature preſent a ſervice as valuable as the offence was provoking. No man can be profitable to God, Job 22. 2. Good ſervices among men take not off the Sentence of the Law in a Court of judicature without a pardoning Act of the Supream Power. Where was there any creature who had ſtrength enough to bear our ſins, and dignity enough to ſatisfie for them? Our offences were too great a load for a creatures ſtrength, or a creatures ſuffering, or expiation. Here was the humanity in conjunction with the Divinity, to be the Sacrifice; and the Divinity in conjunction with the Humanity, to be the Altar, for the ſanctification of it. The whole method of Gods proceedings aſſures us of the ſufficiency of Chriſt for the work of Mediation: had he not been fit, God would never have laid all his honour at ſtake in the choice of him to it. And the ſequel ſhows that God is fully ſatisfied with it, ſince on the conſideration of it, Juſtice forgets the injuries done to the Deity, and treats Believers as heirs of Heaven in ſtead of Rebels.

Fifth Information. It gives an aſſurance of all Spiritual and Eternal Bleſſings. Since God was in Chriſt reconciling the World, and was the Author of all the Methods of it, and the Acceptor of the performance. Chriſt muſt ceaſe to be a reconciler, before God can ceaſe to be reconciled. God was in Chriſt from Eternity in the Reſolve of it; he hath been in Chriſt in time, in the acting of it; he will be in Chriſt for rendring the fruits of it fully ripe. Chriſt is the knot and band of the Reconciliation, and is gone to Heaven in our Nature to ſecure it. God is in Chriſt approving it; the ſecond perſon is in the humanity enſuring it: his conducting Chriſt through the World in humane infirmities to Eternal glory, is an aſſurance that he will dignifie all thoſe that by faith lay hold on him, and lay down their weapons againſt him. If he be in Chriſt reconciling the World, he is in Chriſt wrapping up all other bleſſings for us; ſince it is an everlaſting Goſpel, the Womb of it is full of everlaſting bleſſings.

1. Gods end is not yet perfected. God hath not attain'd his full end: Reconciliation was but in order to further bleſſings. There may be a reconciliation wrought between Parties, whereby a Party is freed from puniſhment, without being partaker of a ſpecial Amity. God did ſend Chriſt to make peace, not ſimply to be at peace with his Creature, but to ſecond it with other Mercies which the Enmity before was a bar unto. 'Tis a Reconciliation that teems with many more unexpreſſible bleſſings. The Riches of his Grace, and the glory of his Grace would not be fully diſplay'd by a ſingle peace. The Myſtery which he purpos'd in himſelf was, That he might gather together all in one, even in Chriſt, to the full poſſeſſion of the purchas'd inheritance, to the praiſe of his glory, Eph. 1. 10, 14. his glory would not attain its full praiſe, without further bleſſings at the heels of this. He will rejoyce in Believers for ever. How can he rejoyce in them, if they never come to rejoyce in themſelves? if there be alwayes a defect and indigency in them? The remnants of Enmity will drop off, the appearances of Anger in his face as a Father, will one day for ever vaniſh, and every frown be ſmooth'd. God is perfectly reconcil'd, but believers are not yet fully fit for all the fruits of it. But ſince he hath been in Chriſt laying the foundation in grace, he will be in him rearing the ſuperſtructure to glory. God would be at peace with us, that he might beſtow the higheſt kindneſs upon us. Juſtice ſtood in the way, and God would have his Juſtice ſatisfied, that Mercy might flow down without any obſtacle. Since therefore he hath been in Chriſt contenting his Juſtice, he will be in Chriſt fully pleaſing his Mercy. As infinite Juſtice was not contented without the Death of Chriſt, ſo mercy will not be contented without an efflux of Benefits upon the Believer. We ſhould not underſtand God fully appeas'd, if things ſtood alwayes at one ſtay.

2. The Glory of God is concerned in it. If he be the Author of it, he will no leſs be the Guardian of it; the ſame motives of honour and love which excited him to contrive it, and brought it to this iſſue, will have the ſame influence on him to ripen all the fruits of it. As he hath the title of the God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in regard of the whole intereſt he hath in this affair of Redemption, ſo the Apoſtle gives him another Title in relation to the ſame work, Eph. 1. 17. The God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Father of Glory. He is the Father of Glory, as he is the fountain of all the glory which accrues from this work, as well as he is the Father of glory ſubjectively, in the glory of the Divine Eſſence infinitely glorious, and objectively, as all glory is due to him from his creatures. He is the Father of glory, as all the actions of Chriſt did center in the honour of the Father; or the Father of glory, as being the Author of all thoſe gracious and glorious communications deſign'd to be beſtowed by him, as the God of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, upon his creatures. 'Tis by him as the Father of glory in Jeſus Chriſt, that a Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of Chriſt, is given; a full and compleat knowledge of him, and the riches riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints. If God designes to show himself a Father of glory, as the God of the Lord Jesus Christ, and if he shows himself a father of glory in increasing the knowledge of Christ by a Spirit of Wisdom in the hearts of his people, and acquainting them with the Riches intended for them; the Crown of his glory would be dim, if there were only a knowledge of it, and no possession at last, and full enjoyment of all that which Christ hath purchas'd. How little glory would God get by acquainting them with it, if the knowledge of it should not at last mount up into fruition?

3. All that remaines to be done in this kind is more feasible, and hath less obstacles than what already hath been done. The grand obstacle to the fulness of his Mercy, in regard of the demands of Justice, is quite remov'd; the Merit of Christ hath surmounted the demerit of men: and what is behind is a lighter thing to the Power, Wisdom, and Mercy of God, than the laying the first stone of our Redemption was. Since the delivery of his Son to death, which might have found resistance from the Affections of the Father, hath been performed, what is there that can be capable of any demur? How is it possible a believer should perish, since Christ hath suffer'd to reconcile infinite justice by the Will of God? How is it possible he should miss of Eternal happiness, since for God to give his Son to dye for reconcilement, is infinitely more than the justification of him by his bloud, and saving him through his life from wrath? Peace is the root of all Joy and Blessedness; and in the Angels Song, Good Will towards men, follows Peace on Earth: when Peace is made, there is no bar to the highest manifestations of good will.

4. No enemies can possibly obstruct it. If God were in Christ reconciling the World, who can prevent the execution of his resolution to the full? Since it hath been thus far carryed on, all the venom of Satan spit out against a Christian, can no more deprive him of what God will do, then it could hinder what God hath done. He was baffled in attempting the hinderance of it, though he engag'd all the powers of Hell in the contest; and was fool'd, since the way he took to prevent it, did eventually promote it; and in his resolving to be an hinderer, he was by a reach of infinite Wisdom beyond his own wit, made a furtherer of it; and if he could not prevent the foundation, he shall be less able to deface the superstructure: And if the greater sins of Unregeneracy did not hinder the influence, and application of it, the infirmities after regeneration shall not obstruct the full perfection of it.

Sixth Information. It shows us the unworthiness of mans dealing with God. God cannot do any thing higher to sweeten our spirits towards him; he hath not another or a dearer Son to give: nothing more can be acted upon the World for the security of the Creature: There are no wider channels for the love of God to run in, no higher way to secure his Honour from Contempt, and his Creature from Vengeance. He was angry with us, and with good Cause; we were children of Wrath, and deserved it; God is appeas'd by the bloud of Christ; he delights in the laying aside his Anger, he hath done his utmost to assure men of it.

Then certainly,

1. Our rejecting Christ, and the way of his appointment, is a high contempt of God. 'Tis a slight of God, in the glory of his grace; an envying him the honour of the Restoration. Adam envyed his Soveraignty and independency, and every Unbeliever envies his Wisdom and Merciful Bowels. Since his heart was set upon this work, that all the Councels of Eternity Center in it; a deafness to his proposals is a contradiction to all his Counsels, and the great desire of his heart. As faith in Christ redounds to the honour of God, as being an approbation of all Gods acts in this affair; so unbelief of Christ redounds to the contempt of God, as slighting all those gracious Manifestations of his Grace and Wisdom. As the Murther of a man, and every degree of Murther in the contempt of him who is the image of God, is a dishonour to God in regard of the relation man bears to God in that respect, Gen. 9. 6. so every unworthy usage of Christ, every act of Unbelief, redounds to the dishonour of the Father, whoſe Ambaſſador Chriſt is, and the exact Image of his Perſon. If men do not heartily think reconciliation by Chriſt worth their higheſt thoughts, and entertainments, they reproach God; as if he were buſie from Eternity about juſt nothing, or a ſleeveleſs matter, and run through ſo many ſtages in his acts about Chriſt to no purpoſe. 'Tis a making light of a rich Feaſt of Gods providing, Mat. 22. 5. 'tis a ſelf-deſtroying,fury worſe than that of Devils. It is a making all other ſins againſt God more ſinful, Joh. 15. 22. If I had not come and ſpoken to them, they had not had ſin; their ſin had not appear'd with ſo much Malice.

2. Our Jealouſies of God. Men are fond of ſuſpicions of God when they are ſtruck down with a ſence of their ſin, though this deſpair is not ſo ordinary as preſumption. This is a meaſuring God by man and bringing him down to the creatures Model; a contracting Gods goodneſs,according to the creatures ſcantineſs. Can there be any juſt Reflections upon God, after the manifeſtation of his earneſtneſs for the reconciliation of man? If the owning God in thoſe acts,be a juſtifying God, (Luk. 7. 29. They juſtified God) the diſowning him is a condemnation of God. As Abraham glorified God when he ſtagger'd not at the promiſe, but claſp'd it in his Armes by Faith; ſo we diſhonour God unexpreſſibly, when we ſtagger not only at one Promiſe, but at his whole ſcene of amazing acts in the founding, and carrying on this work in Chriſt. 'Tis unworthy in any truly humbled ſoul, to imagine God an Enemy ſtill, after all his myſterious contrivances for the relief of the Creature, and his delight in his Son for anſwering his purpoſes.

3. Our Enmity and Diſobedience to God, Though God be in Chriſt reconciling the World: as therefore we diſparage him by our jealouſies of him, we alſo deal unworthily with him by ſinful preſumptions. There are terms expected to be perform'd by us; 'tis not a lazy belief, an aſſent to this, accompanied with a love of any one ſin, (which was the cauſe of Gods Anger) that gives men a title to it; as Gods love in this, and his acceptation was not a lazy love, &c. neither muſt our Faith. The application of it,is not but to ſuch a faith that purifies the heart. For us not to leave the love of Sin, when God hath quencht his wrath in the bloud of Chriſt, is an unworthy uſage of God, and cuts a man off from any intereſt in this Reconciliation. Abrahams Faith, whereby he glorified God, appear'd eminent in this act of Obedience, in a willingneſs to ſacrifice his Son. Not to endeavour to pleaſe God in a courſe of Obedience,is to keep up our Enmity under Gods offers of Amity. To preſume upon his goodneſs, to act the higheſt unbelief under pretences of the contrary, to think God will be your friend, while you perſiſt in your Enmity, is a contradiction to the whole Tenour of the Goſpel. Faith in his Promiſes is never accounted of, without Faith in his Precepts. As he hath been a God in Chriſt Reconciling the World, ſo he hath been commanding in Chriſt the World to a ſubmiſſion; and it is outrage, and high ingratitude, not to endeavour to pleaſe God, ſince he hath been ſo careful to pleaſe us.

4. Omiſſions of prayer. Hath God done ſo much to render us capable of coming to him, and himſelf capable to receive us with honour to himſelf, and is it not very diſingenuous and ſlighting, to neglect this privilege, founded upon the Counſels of wiſdom, and the coſt of the bloud of Chriſt? Before, we could with no more Comfort approach to God, than a Guilty Malefactor could to the Judge; but ſince God hath laid by his fury in Chriſt, and diſcovers an alluring glory in the face of Chriſt, what can we plead for our neglects of his allurements, our ſeldom approaches to him, or our ſlight and lazy Addreſſes? He uſes his friend unkindly, that will not make uſe of his friendſhip, and upon urgent occaſions deſire his Aſſiſtance. All neglects imply either an inability or unwillingneſs in God, and both caſt dirt upon his reconciling work, ſince there can be no greater evidences of his Power and Willingneſs than he hath diſcover'd in the whole working of it. We Virtually deny the Father to be the fountain of all Grace, when we go not to him. We deny Chriſt to be the purchaſer of all peace, when we go not in his Name. God ſent Chriſt to conſecrate a new and living way for us to enter into the holieſt by the bloud of Jeſus, Heb. 10. 19. By neglects we diſparage Gods Miſſion, and Chriſts Conſecration, and the liberty he hath procured. What ſhould we have done,if we had had been to approach to God as a Judge upon a Tribunal of Justice, when we will not draw near to him as a Judge upon a Mercy-seat, through the Reconciliation wrought in Christ?

Well then, Let us consider the danger of slighting this Reconciliation. Well may that man deserve doubly the Curses of the Law, that will not believe and obey after Gods demonstrations of the Riches of grace, well may he deserve to be crusht in pieces under the insupportable burden of his own guilt, that will still be fond of his Treason against a reconciling God. Shall the great King descend from the Throne of his Majesty to become a reconciler, and after that a solicitor, and feel nothing but heels lifted up, Joh. 13. 18. instead of hearts? Such an one is doubly a child of wrath, first by nature, and after by a particular refusal to become a friend. The interest of our Souls lyes at stake; without changing our unworthy courses, Wrath will be executed upon us; God hath provided no other Reconciler; and is resolved not to let his weapons fall by any other motive than the bloud of the Redeemer.

Seventh Information. It shows us the way of all Religious Worship. If God be in Christ reconciling the World, all our recourse to, and dealing with a reconciling God, must be in and through Christ: as God motion to us is in Christ, our motions to God must be through the same Medium. He is the way, the truth, and the life, Joh. 14. 6. No man comes to the Father but by me; as no man hath the Father coming to him, but by Christ; the way whereby God communicates Truth and Life to us, the way whereby we must offer up our true and lively services to him. As God is the ultimate Object of Faith, Christ the Medium; so God is the Object of Worship, Christ the Medium. As Christ is equal with God, he is the Object of Faith; the Object of Worship: as Christ is Gods Servant, he is the way whereby we believe, the way whereby we have access to God. The Soul must be carried altogether by the consideration of Christ, in presenting Petitions in his Name, in expecting answers upon the ground of his Merit; we must regard him as the Meritorious cause of our access to the Throne of Grace, and our welcom at it. How can we go to God as Reconcil'd, but in the Name of the Reconciler? We cannot come with any boldness upon any other account. 'Tis by the knowledge of the Son, we ascend to the knowledge of the Father; by the Merit of the Son, we have Access to the Throne of the Father; by the Intercession of the Son, we have Access to communion with the Father; in the Name of the Son we are to ask what we want, and by the Merit of the Son we must only expect what we beg. 'Tis as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he communicates himself to us, Eph. 1. 3. 'tis as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we must bow our knees to him, Eph. 3. 14. remembring still, that Christ is the Band that links God and us together. What confidence can we have in God, if we respect him not as the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ: For in him only he is the Father of Believers: otherwise he is the Father of the whole World, a provoked Father; in Christ a Reconciled Father. As the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, our praises must be offered to him, 1 Pet. 1. 3. All Acts of Worship, are only acceptable to the Father through Christ, Heb. 13. 15. By him let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God; all must have the stamp of this Reconciler upon them. 'Tis by his satisfaction we have the priviledge to come to the holiest, before the seat of God, with our prayers and services. 'Tis in his bloud, the sword set to prevent our entrance into Paradise, hath lost both its edge and flame. 'Tis by the bloud of Christ only we have this boldness, Heb. 10. 19, 20 his bloud is our best plea: his flesh our only screen from the Wrath of God in all our services, We must therefore in all our services rest in his office, propose him as the Mediator of our services.

Eighth Information. There is then no Mediator, no Reconciler but Christ. God is in Christ reconciling the World: In him, and none but him: In him exclusively of all others. He is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the World, Joh. 4. 42. By way of Excellency, in regard of the danger he saves us from. By way of Exclusion, in regard of the sole designation of his Person, exclusive of all others. We must believe that Christ is He, the only person design'd in the Prophesies, Promises, and Types, Joh. 8. 24. If you believe not that I am he. There was none anciently but he; he was ſet up from Eternity; he was the only lamb ſlain from the foundation of the World. This ſeed of the woman was only in the Promiſe, only deſign'd by the Types; by this band only, were the ancient Believers united to God; In this Immanuel he was God with them, as well as with us: None were counted Gods Friends before, but by his Mediation; none can be ſince, becauſe God hath accepted no other. No Ark but that of Gods appointing, could ſecure Noah, and reſiſt the force of the waters. None hereafter, he is the ſame for ever; he is to day, as he was before, Heb. 13. 8. the heart of God is fixed upon him, and his reſolution concerning the duration of his office unalterable: he hath ſumm'd up all the diſpenſations of former ages in him. Eph. 1. 10. He hath gathered together in one all things in Chriſt, even in him, in no other. All other things were preparations to him, ſhadows of him. But the perfection of all was in Chriſt; and God who had various ways of communicating himſelf to men, hath ſumm'd up his whole Will in his Son, and manifeſted that all his tranſactions with men did terminate in his Son Chriſt, Heb. 2. 1, 2. Theſe are the laſt dayes, God will ſpeak by no other.

1. None elſe was ever appointed by God. No other Sacrifice was ever ſubſtituted in the room of Sinners; none elſe was the Center of the Propheſies, the ſubject of the Promiſes, the truth of the Types, no name erected for a ſhelter for the Nations to truſt in but this Name, Iſa. 42. 4. The Iſles ſhall wait for his law, Mat. 12. 21. In his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt: none elſe hath the title of Peace-maker conferr'd upon him, Eph. 2. 14. which title he hath by his death on the Croſs, Col. 1. 20. Thoſe therefore that reject this way of Mediation, muſt infallibly Periſh. He that will have any good by a Prince, muſt go to that Miniſter of State he hath ſetled for that End. God hath ordain'd no other Mediator. God hath thought none elſe fit to truſt with his concerns; to do his work, reſtore his honour, receive glory from him. We muſt acquieſce in Gods judgment, and not ſet up the Pride of our Reaſon and Will, in contradiction to infinite Wiſdom. None elſe was ever honour'd by the voice of the Father, teſtifying him to be his beloved Son, in whom he was well pleaſed: None beſides him had this Teſtimony, none in conjunction with him, none in ſubordination to him in the work of Mediation; that he might be the firſt born among many brethren, enjoying all the rights of primogeniture; as God employ'd no other in the Creation, ſo he employs no other in the Reſtoration of the World.

2. None elſe was ever fit for this. Satisfaction there muſt be for the honour of God, that the Law might be vindicated, Juſtice glorified, Holineſs illuſtrated: none but Chriſt an infinite Perſon was able to do all this. Security there muſt be to the Creator, that the honour of God might not be again at a loſs; this could not be enſur'd in the hands of a mutable Creature: ſo that by any other Mediator we cannot honour God by a ſutable ſatisfaction, nor promiſe our ſelves an unſhaken preſervation. Without infinite ſatisfaction, guilt muſt remain; without infinite power to preſerve it entire, guilt would return. This Mediator only had an alliance to both Parties; to God, whereby he could call him Father; to us, whereby he could call us Brethren. That God and Man might be joyn'd in one Covenant of Grace, the Mediator of that Covenant is God and Man in one Perſon. Had he been only God, he had had no Alliance to our Nature; had he been only Man, he had had no Alliance to the Divine Nature, and had been an inſufficient Mediator, uncapable of performing what was requiſite for our Redemption. In this poſture of fitneſs, there is none elſe in Heaven and Earth. Had the Mediator been only Man, he had been uncapable of ſatisfying; had he been only God, he had been uncapable of Suffering; But being God and Man, he was capable of both. No motive was powerful enough to appeaſe the Anger of the Father, but the bloud of the Croſs; and no Power ſtrong enough to bear, no Perſon worthy to preſent ſuch ſufferings, but only this Mediator. It was upon no other Perſon, that the Spirit deſcended like a Dove, to furniſh his Humane Nature with all Ability for the diſcharge of this truſt. He is Infinite, and what can be added to Infinite? If Infinite be not ſufficient to reconcile, finite beings muſt for ever come ſhort of effecting it for us.

3. None

3. None elſe was ever Accepted, or deſign'd to be Accepted, but this Mediator: No other Surety was ever accepted by God for the payment of our Debts. All Sacrifices could not make the comers thereunto perfect, Heb. 10. 1. could not ſet them right in the eſteem of God, and make a reconciliation with him; they were an Image, not the Life; and God accepted them as Shadows, not as the Subſtance; the repetition of them was a certain Evidence of their inability to effect the Reconciliation of Man, Heb. 10. 2. as the iteration of a Medicine dayly, ſhows its inefficacy to Cure. The Law was not able after our Fall, by reaſon of our diſagreement with the terms of it, to bring us near to God. Gods Juſtice, and our ſins, ſtood in the way of Amity; therefore God commanded bounds to be ſet to the People, when the Law was given, Exod. 19. 12. that they ſhould not come near the Mount. But the Covenant of Grace, Vail'd in the Ceremonial Law, was laid in the bloud of Chriſt, typified by that bloud ſprinkled by Moſes upon the people, Exod. 24. 8. to which the Apoſtle alludes, the bloud of ſprinkling ſpeaks better things than the bloud of Abel, Heb. 12. 24. Than the bloud of the firſtlings, which Abel ſprinkled, Gen. 4. 4. which was the firſt eminent Type of the Death of Chriſt upon Record, which the Spirit of God mentions here, as the firſt ſacrifice, though no queſtion, Adam did not ſpend all that time between his Fall, and the growth of Abel to mans Stature, without a Sacrifice. Thoſe ſacrifices were poor and feeble; unworthy, in themſelves, of the Acceptance of God; not able to expiate Sin, nor ever intended for propitiation, becauſe they had no intrinſick value in them, for ſuch an End. But the Bloud of Chriſt, being the Bloud of the Lamb of God without ſpot, is a worthy and valuable price for the ſins of the world. Theſe, nor our own righteouſneſs, were ever intended to be of worth, or ſtrength, to expiate the ſin of the Soul, and Reconcile us to God; Chriſt is the only Peace-maker, the only peace Conveyor: no other Righteouſneſs is called the Righteouſneſs of God, the Righteouſneſs of Gods appointment, or the Righteouſneſs of Gods Acceptance. Any thing in our ſelves, is too low and ſordid to be joyn'd with him. God hath accepted none elſe, and we muſt have recourſe to none elſe. Whatſoever we would joyn with him, is unworthy of Gods Acceptance. None elſe was ſet forth to be a propitiation, and no means appointed of enjoyment, but Faith in his Bloud. This Bloud was ſprinkled upon the Mercy-ſeat in heaven, as the Bloud of Sacrifices was in the Temple, which ſtill'd Juſtice, refreſht Mercy, and reviv'd it towards us.

4. None elſe ever did do that for us, which was neceſſary to our Reconciliation with God. None elſe ever interpos'd as a ſhelter between the irreſiſtible Wrath of God and our Souls. He alone bore our griefs and carried our ſorrows, Iſa. 53. 4. he received into his own bowels that ſword, which was ſharpned, and pointed for us; by his ſtripes we are heal'd, upon him alone did the ſcorching wrath of his Father fall for our peace. He trod the Wine-preſs alone, none of the people were with him; he endur'd the bruiſes of his Father, and the reproaches of his enemies, and would not deſiſt till he had ſetled the foundation of our Peace. He bore the puniſhment of our ſins, all our iniquities were conſider'd by God in his Perſon, and he paid what we ow'd. In one body he reconcil'd us, Eph. 1. 16. his own body, ſaith Peter *: none drew in the ſame yoke with him; none were partners with him in his Sufferings; none ſharers with him in his Office. He ſeal'd Heaven alone, and alone made the entrance to his Father eaſie. None ever did, none ever could anſwer the demands of the Law; ſilence the voice of Juſtice, by removing the burden of our Guilt. He only fill'd up that gap and gulf which was between God and us: why ſhould any thing in our hearts, carry away the honour of a Mediator from him, ſince none elſe remov'd the miſeries we had deſerv'd, and purchaſed the mercies we wanted? Till God therefore conferrs the title of Peace-maker, and Prince of Peace upon any other, own nothing elſe as a ſharer with him in this honour; that would be to contradict Gods Order, deny his Sufficiency, and contemn his kindneſs; and turn our backs upon the only Tower, that can hinder us from being cruſht by the Wrath of God. But alas! men delight in their Worm-eaten, wither'd Righteouſneſs, which they ſet up in the room of the Mediator; this, the grand cheat of the World, claims a precedency of Chriſt.

5. None

5. None elſe is appointed, or can ſecure to us the fruits of Reconciliation. As God is in Chriſt Reconciling the World, ſo he is in Chriſt giving out the fruits of that Reconciliation, not imputing our treſpaſſes to us: he is not only the Mediator of Reconciliation, to make our Peace; but the Mediator of Interceſſion, to preſerve it. He only took away our ſins by his Death, he only can preſerve our Reconciliation by his Life. As he Suffer'd effectually, by the ſtrength of his Deity, to make our Peace; ſo he Intercedes in the ſtrength of his Merit, to preſerve our Peace. He did not only take away, but aboliſh and ſlay the Enmity, Eph. 2. 15, 16. He ſlew it, to make it uncapable of living again, as a dead man is; and if any ſin ſtands up to provoke Juſtice, he ſits as an Advocate to anſwer the Proceſs, 1 Joh. 2. 2. All the gifts of grace, not only in their firſt purchaſe, but in their full conveyance, and abundant Communication, are by and through him; Rom. 5. 15. by him onely we can come to the Throne of Grace; in this beloved Son onely we are accepted for Adopted Sons, Eph. 1. 6. To none elſe God gave children for a ſeed; children to beget, and preſerve, and offer up to him at the laſt day. He rent the Vail by his Death, open'd the Holy of Holies by his Paſſion, and keeps it open by his Interceſſion; that we may have a Communion with God, and a Fellowſhip with Angels, by this only Mediator. Immanuel is a name only belonging to him, Iſa. 7. 14. Not that this was the Name by which only he was called, but that this was his work, to make way for Gods dwelling among the ſons of men, and communicating to them the richeſt of his gifts. Not an Angel in Heaven, but hath his ſtanding upon the Account of Chriſt, as their head; and therefore not a man upon Earth, can be ſecure under any other wing, or have the conveyance of grace through any other Channel. He is the προσαγωγὸς, the Introducer of us into the inward Chambers of the Fathers goodneſs, where our bonds are Cancell'd, our pardon aſſur'd, and our Father, who was angry with us, falls upon our Necks and kiſſeth us. Our conſtant acceſs to the Father is by him, Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 3. 12. Acceſs, προσαγωγὴ He ſits in heaven to lead us by the hand to the Father, for whatſoever we want; as a Princes Favourite brings a man into the preſence of a gracious Prince. The Grace of Chriſt is put in order by Paul, before the Love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghoſt, in the Benedictions, becauſe it is the only band that knits us to God, and the Foundation of every expreſſion of love from the Father, and of every act of Communion we have with the Holy Ghoſt. Whatſoever grace God works in us, is through Jeſus Chriſt, Heb. 13. 21. he is therefore made to us Wiſdom and Sanctification, as well as Righteouſneſs and Redemption, 1 Cor. 1. 30. God tranſmits his Virtues through Chriſt; as the Heavens, which impregnate all things, tranſmit their Virtues hither by the Sun.

Well then. Let us have recourſe only to this Mediator; the Fire of Gods Wrath will conſume us without this Screen. 'Tis the bloud of the Lamb of Gods appointment, which can only ſecure us from the ſcorching heat of the Wrath to come; Typified by the bloud of the Paſcal Lamb, ſprinkled upon the Poſts of the Iſraelites Doors; not ſo much to be a mark to the Angel, who could have known both the Houſes and Perſons of the Iſraelites from the Egyptians, without that ſign on the Poſt; as to repreſent this Mediatory bloud of the Lamb of God, as our only ſecurity from deſtroying fury. Let men make lyes their refuge, and hide themſelves under falſehood, the falſe Coverings of their own Righteouſneſs, and think to ſhelter themſelves from the over-flowing Scourge, Iſa. 28. 15, 16, 17. it will be a miſerable Self-deceit, the Hail will ſweep away ſuch a Refuge, and the Waters will overflow ſuch a hiding place: 'tis the Corner-ſtone which God lays in Sion, that is our only ſecurity; becauſe he is only Elect, 1 Pet. 2. 6. Choſen by God, and precious in his account, ver. 6. which is inſerted (as ſome obſerve) between thoſe two verſes, to ſhow the miſerable ſhifts of men, to provide ſhelters for themſelves, other Mediations and Mediators, not regarding the Foundation God hath laid, all which will end in Self-deſtruction, as they begin in Self-deceit. All Humane ſatisfactions, Interceſſions of Saints, refuge in any other Righteouſneſs, are weak hiding-places to preſerve us from the overflowing Waters of Divine Vengeance. No ſure Foundation, but the Stone God hath laid in Sion.

One

One would think there were not ſo much need to preſs this Information; but whoſoever will look into the World, and into his own heart, will find it neceſſary. What the Papiſts do one way, many Proteſtants do another: one ſets up Mediators without him, others ſet up Mediators within them. The great buſineſs Chriſt urg'd in the dayes of his fleſh was this, that he was the Meſſiah, the only Perſon ſent of God to redeem. Though men profeſs Chriſt is ſo, yet it is too common to bring in ſome ſharer with him.

Ninth Information. We may here ſee the incomprehenſible Love of God; in that he did not deal with us ſummo jure, as a ſevere Law-giver. We are not deeply ſenſible of it; if we had a due ſence of this Love, we ſhould have little kindneſs for ſin. It was not a low kind of Love, but exceeding riches of Grace in his kindneſs toward us in Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. 2. 7. Grace never appear'd in all its Royalty, but in Chriſt. A ſweet combination of Grace in the Father and the Son: had the Son manifeſted his Love in offering himſelf, nothing could have been done without the Acceptation of the Father; had the Father manifeſted his Love in moving it, nothing could have been done without the Sons undertaking it: The firſt motion was from the Father, as the fountain of the Trinity; the Execution was from the Son, by a free and dutiful Acceptance of the offer of the Father. In this work God ſet his heart upon man, Job 7. 17. the glorifying his name in the Redemption of Man, was that which ran in his Mind, and had the chiefeſt place in his heart from Eternity. How great alſo is the Love of Chriſt? ſince he was the Perſon that the firſt Sin was particularly againſt, as well as againſt the Father. It being an affecting of Wiſdom to be like God; and Chriſt was the Wiſdom of God. Every days Mercy is a Miracle; but the Mercies of our Lives are to this of Reconciling us by his Son, as a Molehill to a Mountain; a grain of Sand, to the whole frame of Nature. When by our offence we were fallen under the ſentence of the Law, and ſhut up in the hands of Juſtice, and could not ſatisfie for the offence, God pays a Ranſom out of the Treaſures of his own Bowels, opens the Heart of his deareſt Son, and Redeems us by the moſt Precious thing he had: Here Love doth come to the top of its Glory, and doth perfectly Triumph.

1. His own Love and Compaſſion was the firſt Riſe of this Reconciliation. This way by Chriſt, was a new as well as a living Way, Heb. 11. 20. not known by all the Wiſdom of Man. New to Men, new to Angels: It could not enter into any of their hearts to conceive of it, before it was declar'd. He purpos'd in himſelf, Eph. 1. 9. It lay hid in the Womb of his own Love. There was none beſide him from Eternity, to put up a requeſt. It was the reſult of his Bowels, before the Being of any Creature was the effect of his Power. Though our Juſtification, Sanctification, and Eternal Bleſſedneſs, be the Fruits of the Meritorious Death of the Redeemer; yet the firſt ſource of all, in his Miſſion and Commiſſion, was abſolutely from the unconceivable Love of God: Whatſoever is Merited by Chriſt for us, his firſt Miſſion was not Merited by himſelf: His Perſonal Relation to God, rendred him fit for the Honour, and Office of a Mediator; but as Mediator, he did not merit his own ſending into the World, becauſe he was ſetled Mediator by God and ſent too, before he could as Mediator Merit. Chriſt did not dye to render God Compaſſionate to us, but to open the paſſage for his Bowels to flow down upon us with the honour of his Juſtice. Gods Bowels wrought within himſelf; but the ſentence pronounc'd by Juſtice, was a bar to the flowing of them upon Man: Chriſt was ſent to remove that by his Death, that the Mercy, which ſprang up from Eternity in the Heart of God, might freely flow down to the Creature. And when the time came, God look'd about and ſaw that there was no man, none to deprecate his Wrath, and therefore his own Arm brought Salvation, Iſa. 59. 16. and his own righteouſneſs ſuſtain'd him, i. e. his own Truth, and Righteouſneſs engag'd in the Promiſes made to the Fathers. The Satisfaction of Chriſt doth not impair the Kindneſs of God; his Pity to us did precede the conſtitution of Chriſt. Had there been no Compaſſion, there had been no Contrivance, no Acceptance of a Mediator: but ſince he had threatned Eternal Death to Sinners, there was need of an honourable Reconciliation by Death, to maintain the honour of Gods

Truth

Truth, engag'd in that Sentence; and content his Juſtice, which was obliged to execute the Sentence, for the honour of his Truth. It was by the Grace of God that Chriſt taſted death for us, Heb. 2. 9.

2. 'Tis the greateſt love that God can ſhow. As Abraham could not ſhow a greater proof of Faith and Obedience, than by offering his Son, the Son of his Affections, and his only Son; ſo neither can God ſhow a richer Teſtimony of his Affections to us, than by making his own Son an Oblation for us. How mighty tender was God of our Salvation? How valuable was man to him, when he priz'd him at the rate of his only Son? As high as God did eſteem Chriſt, ſo highly did he value his own Glory in Mans Reconciliation.

(1.) His Love was more Illuſtrious, than if he had pardon'd us by his Abſolute Prerogative without a Satisfaction. It had been a glorious Mercy, but had wanted that enriching Circumſtance, the Death of his Son; in this way he honours his Mercy, more than our Sin had abus'd it. His Mercy had not appear'd in ſuch ſweetneſs, had not Chriſt drunk the bitter Cup: Mercy ſung ſweeteſt, when Juſtice roar'd loudeſt againſt the Redeemer. Every Attribute had a ſignal Elevation in this way of Reconciliation, but eſpecially his Kindneſs. We ſhould have been happy, had he pardon'd us without a Satisfaction; but neither his Love nor his Juſtice had been wound up to ſo high a ſtrain. God did not aim only at the praiſe of his Grace, but the Praiſe of the Glory of his Grace, Eph. 1. 6. he would have his Grace appear in the richeſt Attire, and with all the Ornaments Heaven could clothe it with.

This is Evident,

(1) By the Condition of the Perſon. He was his Son. Was it not the Victorious Triumph of Mercy, to make his Son a ſufferer, when we were the Sinners? to make his own Son a ſervant to his Juſtice, when we were the Debtors? He was his only begotten Son, Joh. 3. 16. not meerly his own Son, but his only Son; he had but one Son in the World, and that Son he made a Sacrifice for the World: he had not another begotten Son in Being. He was the expreſs image of his Perſon, one who was equal with God without robbery, or detracting any thing from his Glory, Phil. 2. 6. An only Son enjoying the ſame Majeſty, and Perfections in the Deity with the Father; a Son dearer to him than Heaven and Earth; the Son he ſolac'd himſelf with from all Eternity, Prov. 8. 30. before ever any ſtone of the World was laid; and if we could ſuppoſe numberleſs Worlds Created before this, yet all his Joy was placed in him. Can there be a greater Aſſurance of the immenſity of his Love, than in ſending a Son that lay in his Boſom? A Son who never in the leaſt offended him, nor ever could? He always did the things which pleaſed him, and when he was in the World, there was nothing in him, that the Devil could faſten upon, as any reſemblance to himſelf, Joh. 14. 30. In this Son was God reconciling the World. The nearer and dearer the Son was to the Father, the greater is the Fathers Love in pitching upon him to undertake this work. His Love bore proportion to the greatneſs of that Son whom he ſent.

(2) The Condition in which he was ſent. He was made lower than Angels, to ſtoop to the Condition of a Servant. To ſend an only Son out of his Boſom to the Croſs, an Innocent Son from Glory to Ignominy, and not upon a ſuddain reſolve, (which might be thought a Paſſion) but by a deliberate Counſel, never repenting of it, always glorying in it, even to this day; is a diſcovery of the moſt rooted affection. The lower the Condition of Chriſt was, the more wonderful is the kindneſs of God in ſending him in it. If we would walk into the Garden, and ſee Chriſt beſmear'd with Clods of Bloud; ſtep up to mount Calvary, and ſee him hanging upon the Croſs; look up to Heaven, and ſee the bright ſword ſheath'd in the Bowels of the Son of God; ſee him with his ſcourged Back, his nail'd Hands, his pierced Side; ask then your ſouls this queſtion, whether here be not bottomleſs love? whether any Affection of God can be more miraculous than this, to give his Son to endure all this for our Ranſom, the Lord of Glory to ſuffer this for Rebellious Malefactors? whether this is not greater kindneſs to you, than if he had pardon'd you without the Sufferings of his only Son?

(2.) 'Tis a love that cannot be wound up to a higher strain. 'Tis the utmost bound, if I may so speak, of an Infinite Love; God So loved the World, Joh. 3. 16. So, above the conception of any Creature; So, that his Affection cannot mount an higher pitch. His power could discover it self in laying the foundation of Millions of Worlds, and his Wisdom could shine brighter in the structure of them; but if he should create as many Worlds, as there are sands and dust upon the Face of this; and make every one of them more transcendent in glory than this, than the Sun is above a clod of Earth or an Atome of dust, yet he could not confer a greater love upon it, than he hath done upon this; than to be, upon their revolt, a God in Christ reconciling those Worlds to himself: There is not a choicer Mercy than to be in Amity with God, nor a more Affectionate way of procuring and establishing it, than by giving his only Son to effect it: In giving whom, he contracts to give himself to be our God, and live with us for ever. If God should take the meanest Beggar that lives upon common Almes, and transform him into an Angel, and make him the head of that heavenly Host; it would be incomparably a far less love, than the gift of his Son for him. A more condescending kindness cannot be conceiv'd, unless the Father himself should become Incarnate, and dy for man: But that cannot be suppos'd. If the Fountain of the Trinity, the Judge of all, should take flesh, and suffer, (to whom should the Offering be made? the Rector and Judge is to be satisfied, and 'tis not fit for the judge to make satisfaction to himself: But the Father hath given that Person next to himself, to be our Propitiation; most fit, as having the Father, the fountain of the Trinity, to offer the Sacrifice of himself unto.

(3.) 'Tis a greater Love than has been yet shown to Angels. The Angels in Heaven never did partake of such a vast Ocean of Love, for the Son of God never died for them, though they come under his Wing, as a head exalted to that Dignity, as a reward of his Death: the Angels come under him as an Exalted Head, but not as a Crucified Saviour: they have their Grace by the Will of God, without the Death of his Son; we by the Will of God, through the Death of his Son. What Confirmation they have, they have it from Christ, by Virtue of his Headship over them, not by Virtue of any Death for them, and therefore they are in the opinion of several, understood by the things in heaven, which are reconcil'd to God, Col. 1. 20. What Reconciliation is to us, Confirmation is to them; yet there is not such an Excess of Love in their Confirmation, as in our Reconciliation by the Bloud of the Cross. As the preservation of a Life from Death, is less than the restoring Life to one that is dead; the latter argues more of kindness, as well as more of Power.

(4.) Take a prospect of this love by a review of the Condition we were in.

(1) Our Vileness and Corruption. What are we in our Being, but dust, slight and empty pieces of Clay? is it not wonderful, that God who hath Angels to attend him, should busie his thoughts about worms? That he who hath the beauty of Angels, the most glorious piece of the works of his hands to look upon, should cast his eye upon such Noysom Dunghills? that he should not rest in the Praises of Angels, but repair such broken instruments as men are, to bear a part in the Consort? If the Sun knew its own Excellency, it would think it a condescension to bestow a beam upon so dark and miry a body as the Earth, that can return to it no Recompence; much more is it in God, to look upon such pieces of Clay as we are; much more to give out his Grace and Love to man, who can give him no requital. We would be loth to take a Toad into our Bosoms, and bestow our Friendship upon it: By Corruption, we are worse than the most venemous Toad that creeps upon the ground; yet God entertains thoughts of Amity, and establisheth it for us in the bloud of his Son. We are unworthy of any one thought of unbounded goodness, much more unworthy of a Thought of so high a strain. * Would not any man think that King distracted, that should send his Son to keep Company with Grooms and Scullions, to wear the same Livery, to advance them to a better state by his own bloud? Nothing but the End for which he doth it, and the Love which mov'd him to it, could excuse him. How much more condescending is God, than the greatest Prince in the World would be in this Act.

* Nerimberg.

(2) Impotence. When we lay wallowing in our bloud, and it was the time of our weakness, that was the time of his Love; when we had no eye to pity us, nor a heart to pity our selves, then were we the Object of his Compassions, Ezek. 16. 4, 5, 6, &c. When there was not one Solicitor for us among all the holy Angels; the peace was broke with them as well as with God, and we were justly hated by those holy Spirits upon the Creators Account; when not a man in the whole Race of Mankind had any thoughts of presenting a Petition for Recovery: when God look'd about, and to his astonishment, found none that had any thoughts of interceding and soliciting a Restoration, Isa. 59. 16. When there was not a person in Heaven or Earth besides himself, could save us, his own arm, without the least Auxiliary force, brought Salvation. 'Tis the glory of his love, that he was found of us when we askt not for him, Isa. 65. 1. What Allurements were there in our Nature, unless Deformities and Demerits could pass for attractives? We had not Virtue to merit his Love, nor ever shall have Power to requite it; both are utterly impossible in a Creature. God saw our demerit, it was in his thoughts, otherwise a Reconciler had not been appointed; one to Merit that for us, which we had forfeited, and never could have recover'd. Justice might find cause of punishment in the Rebellion of the Delinquent, but Grace could find no reason but in the pity of our Creator; the Amazement of a true Believer, when he comes to be seriously sensible of it, doth manifest the impossibility of ever thinking of it himself.

(3) Rebellion, which is worse than Vileness and Impotence. He was a God in Christ Reconciling the World, when our Enmity to him was as great as our Misery; when we had not one spark of love for him, who had a boundless Ocean of Compassion for us. We had enter'd a league with Satan, the only Enemy God had, rendred our selves his Bondslaves, and that presently after our Creation by his powerful hand; and it was far worse, if Adam did know the sin and state of the fallen Angels; howsoever his Pride in his Aspiring Thought to be like his Maker was less excusable than that of the Devils, in regard that he was an inferiour Creature. (Though the Devils was greater, in regard of his greater knowledge of the Excellency of God above him.) Pride in a mean Person, is more odious than in one upon a Throne. Then it is that he contrives with his Son, and by the bloud of his Son to redeem Rebels; and though he disrelisht and loathed the Crime, yet he had a Tenderness and pity for the Malefactor: assur'd by an Oath, Heb. 7. 28. The word of the oath which was since the law, makes the Son who is consecrated for evermore. As the word of the Oath was after the Law; the Declaration of the Oath, after the Declaration of the Law; so in the Eternal Counsel of God, the Constitution of the Reconciler suppos'd a Law Enacted, and a Law violated by Transgression. After this, the Cry of our sins for Vengeance, could not alter his resolve of sacrificing his Son; and bringing that Vengeance upon the sins, which they sollicited against the sinner. How easie was it for God to have spurn'd us into Hell, when we lay under his Foot, without all this expence? one touch of his Iron Rod, would have broke us like a Potters Vessel; yet he takes occasion to display his Grace, where we give occasion to pour out his Wrath. He would enflame us by his Love, rather than turn us into ashes by his Fury; and Reconcile us to himself by the bloud of his Son, rather than satisfie his Justice by our own.

(5.) It was a love in the freest manner; without Cost to us, but Expensive to God. We hear of no struglings in the Heart of God, from the first Foundation to the Top-stone; his Affections travel through every stage without the least relenting; he was in Christ reconciling the World, from one end of his Counsel to the other, without any repenting Reflections. It cost him the Bloud of his Son, more expensive than the making Millions of Worlds. There was no need of any Combat in his Affections, to make as many Worlds as he pleas'd; but we may wonder (since God represents himself to us often in Scripture according to the manner of men) that there were no pull-backs in his Affections to the delivering up of his Son. If there be a conflict in his heart, when he is to give up a Creature; Hos. 11. 8. How shall I give thee up O Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee Israel? my heart is turn'd within me; Could we reasonably suppose less in giving up his Son? (though indeed the one was Eternal, the other Temporary) yet in this caſe we read of no ſuch turnings of Bowels, no ſuch kindlings of repentings together. His Soul was free in it, and let the peace coſt what it would, he would procure it though with the greateſt Charge.

(6) Conſider what it was his Love deſign'd in this. Not a petty inconſiderable thing, but a propitiation for ſin, 1 Joh. 4. 10. the non-imputation of guilt, the removing all the bars between him and us, the turning the edge of the ſword that was pointed againſt us, reducing us to an Eternal Amity. He would draw us out of the Condition into which we were fallen, and from a Wrath we had Merited, to elevate us to an Eternal Life we had rendred our ſelves unworthy of, and expos'd his Son to the Curſes of the Law, that the edge of them might be turn'd from us. And that we might have a free Converſe with him, he makes the Mediator of kin to us, that by reaſon of the communication of our Nature we might with more boldneſs approach to him. All delightful Converſe is between thoſe of the ſame ſpecies; we could not have convers'd freely with a Reconciler of a different Nature from us.

(7) This Love is perpetual. He was in Chriſt Reconciling the World, he will to the end of the World beſeech men to be reconcil'd to him. Love was the Motive, the glory of his Grace was the end: what was ſo from Eternity, will be ſo to Eternity. His Love is as ſtrong as it was, for Infinite receives no diminution; his Glory is as dear as it was, for to deny his Glory is to deny himſelf. How great will be the joy of thoſe that accept it! how Diſmal the Torment and Sorrow of thoſe that refuſe it!

Second Uſe of Comfort. How great may the joy of Believing Souls be, to be brought by God, and by ways of his own contriving, into actual favour with Him, after they had lain in a ſtate of Wrath? To have an Almighty, Infinite, Juſt God at variance with us, cannot but be a matter of ſadneſs; to have a Peace ſtruck, and the light of his Countenance ſhine upon us, cannot but beget a tranſcendent Joy: 'tis in the very Notion of it, to the Underſtanding joyful, yea tidings of great joy, and in the ſence and feeling of it, triumphant. The publication of it was uſher'd in with words of Comfort in the Prophet, Iſa. 40. 1. Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, ſpeak comfortably to Jeruſalem, cry unto her that her warfare is accompliſht, that her iniquity is pardon'd, for ſhe hath receiv'd of the Lords hand double for all her ſins. Three words to note the great comfort ſhould be taken in the Goſpel-adminiſtration; the matter of it is the ceaſing of the war between God and the Creature, the pardon of their Iniquities upon the ſatisfaction of Chriſt, the fruit whereof is received by the Believer: the ſatisfaction of Chriſt in regard of the infiniteneſs of his Perſon, was great, which is expreſs'd by double; and the fruits of it receiv'd by the Church are great and double, freedom from the Wrath of God, from the Tyranny of the Devil, and the Collation of the Gifts and Graces of the Spirit. Thoſe words, For ſhe hath received of the Lords hand double for all her ſins, cannot be meant of the puniſhment which they lay under, for that could be no Cauſe of the Pardon (as the particle For ſeems to be cauſal) neither is it a comfort to think of the greatneſs of puniſhment after it is paſt. But if we conſider what follows ver. 3. &c. it will appear to be a Goſpel Promiſe, and the Believer receives of the Lords hand double; either it is meant of Chriſt, who made the ſatisfaction, the fruits whereof the Believer receives; or of the Father, who ſpar'd not his own Son, but exacted of him the puniſhment of our ſins, and gives out to us the fruits of his reconciling Death. This is the Comfort, that the Enmity is ſlain, the War ceas'd, an end of Sin made, and God beheld with Comfort, taking away the Power of the Devil, who firſt rais'd this war between God and Man; as it is ver. 9, 10. Behold your God, behold the Lord God will come with a ſtrong hand, and his Arm ſhall rule for him, he ſhall feed his flock as a Shepherd, he ſhall gather his Lambs with his arm, and carry them in his boſom, and gently lead thoſe that are with young; all this is the fruit of Reconciling Grace. God is well pleas'd with thoſe that are ſprinkled with the bloud of Chriſt. As after the ſprinkling of the bloud of the Covenant, God appeared to the Elders of the people in a clear, not a cloudy and ſtormy Heaven, Exod.

24. 8, 10. (a cloudy and ſtormy Heaven is a ſign of Gods anger) and his feet, the inſtruments of motion, ſtanding in a clear Heaven ſhow, that all the paſſages of his Providence to his people, are Mercy, Truth and Kindneſs upon the account of the blood of the Covenant of Peace. God cannot hate thoſe who accept of this Reconciliation: Though God hates the remainders of ſin in them, yet it is not with ſuch a hatred as redounds to their perſons, becauſe their perſons are reconcil'd to God; they believe and apply the Reconciliation made by God in Chriſt. If God deny the acceptance of ſuch, he denies his own act and deed, he denies himſelf and his whole contrivance from one end to the other. This would be to publiſh, that he was miſtaken in his firſt deſign, that it was a fruitleſs thing, that there was a defect in his Wiſdom laying the ſcene of it, or a defect in Chriſt who undertook to accompliſh it, and that things iſſued not according to his will. If any accept it upon the terms God offers it, nothing can be charged upon him. God muſt deny his whole contrivance, his commiſſion to Chriſt, or find ſome flaw in the execution of it, before Salvation can be denyed to ſuch a perſon; but God hath already teſtified again, and again how highly pleaſing the whole negotiation of Chriſt was to him, and therefore it is not poſſible, that God (who cannot be deceived in his foreſight of events, to whom nothing is contingent) ſhould delight in this before it was acted, pleaſe himſelf with it after it was acted, and yet dart out the frowns of an Enemy, upon the accepters of it, who are called Sons of Peace Luke. 10. 6. No, the proper effect of this is non-imputation of ſin, as it is in the Text, God was in Chriſt Reconciling the World unto himſelf, not imputing their Treſpaſſes unto them; and Reconciliation and Juſtification are one and the ſame thing in the Apoſtles Doctrine, Rom. 5. 9. what is called Juſtification by his Blood is called verſe 10. Reconciliation to God by the death of Chriſt. Sincere acceptance of it with a reſolution to obey him, gives an intereſt in this, Luke 2. 14. Good will towards Men. Some read it, peace on Earth to Men of good will, actively, that bear a good will to Chriſt, that are upright in heart towards God in Chriſt. But the Pſalmiſt is clear in it, that where there is no guile in the Spirit in accepting this Righteouſneſs God will not impute ſin, Pſal. 32. 2. and though a believing perſon may not be ſenſible of his happineſs, yet his happineſs is enſur'd upon Faith, though not teſtified to the ſoul: Reconciliation and the ſenſe of it are two diſtinct things; a name may be written in the Book of Life, and the eye not clear enough to diſcern it. The Prince may have a favour for a malefactor and his pardon ſealed too, yet the Priſoner know it not, and perhaps have little hopes of it, but caſts himſelf at the foot of the Princes Mercy. How comfortable is it to have this peace, and a ſenſe of it too in our Conſciences, by the ſprinkling of the Blood of Jeſus? Worldly goods are ſmall, Corn, Wine, and Oyl are little things to the light of Gods countenance, ſhining upon the Soul; here is the ground of joy and glorying, that God exerciſeth loving kindneſs, Jer. 9. 24. Let him that Glories, Glory in this that he knows me, that I am the Lord which exerciſes loving kindneſs.

There are ſeveral particular comforts ariſe from hence.

(1.) The Angels, the whole hoſt of Heaven are at peace with the Believer. The Angels upon the ſin of man, by vertue of their obedience, took part with God, and could not becauſe of their purity, be Friends to a defiled Creature; nor, becauſe of their affection to God, bear any reſpect to him to whom the Lord was an Enemy: They were placed as a guard to barr man from re-entrance into Paradiſe after his fall, and to keep the way of the Tree of Life, Gen. 3. 24. Our ſins broke the alliance between Heaven and Earth, ſo that the good Angels could have no converſe with the Enemies of God; had it not been for this diſobedience, they could have had no averſion to man. But ſince their Lord is ſatisfied, thoſe obedient Spirits cannot be diſcontented; for this reconciliation tyes their hands, and makes all ill intelligence ceaſe between them and Believers. * The death of Chriſt expiating our ſin, eſtabliſhed a good correſpondence between the two great parties of the World, Angels and Men: The Monarch being reconciled, the two ſtates of Men and Angels reaſſume a mutual commerce. By this they are reduc'd into one Corporation, into one Family, and combin'd under one Head, Eph. 1. 10. All things which are in Heaven and on Earth, are gathered together in Christ. That place Coloss. 1. 20. It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell, and by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in Earth or things in Heaven, is understood by some of the Reconciliation of things in Heaven to God, i. e. Believers in the promised Messiah, who dyed before the coming of Christ; shewing thereby the extent of the death of Christ which look'd backward: By others of the Reconciliation of heavenly Spirits unto us, as being a grand state of the World depending upon the universal Monarch. Hence the Angels rejoyce and sing a Hymn at the publishing the Gospel, Luke 2. 13. and rejoyce more in it than men do; for they delight in the glory of God, but men delight naturally in their enmity to God: They rejoyce at the Repentance of a sinner, and his acceptance of this Reconciliation. They cannot rejoyce at mens Reconciliation to God, and be unreconcil'd themselves. They are ministring Spirits to the Heirs of Salvation, Heb. 1. ult. instruments of God in the deliverance of his Church and People, furtherers of the conversion of Men as to outward means, as in the example of the Eunuch, Acts 8. 26. And at last conduct the Heirs to the possession of their inheritance reserved in the Heavens for them, Luke 16. 22. They are Ministers of wrath upon the unbelieving World, Ministers of good to the believing Creature, and guard him with those weapons wherewith they fought against him, from whence we have many invisible assistances. As God did not hate his Creatures as Creatures, (for then he had hated man as made by him, which is inconsistent with the pure goodness of God.) But as sinners; so the Angels followed their great pattern in the hatred of men; but now they are reconcil'd to man, because God, to whom they pay an obedience, is reconcil'd. They are put under the Government of Christ as their Head, as he is the Mediator, and cannot be Enemies to us, till Christ as head, become an Enemy to himself as Mediator. Their commission for guarding the heavenly Paradise against us is cancell'd, and should they now obstruct the way, they would be no longer good Angels, but impure and disobedient Devils. There is one place which some understand of this peace we have with Angels, Revel. 1. 4, 5. Peace from him which was, and which is, and which is to come, and from the seven Spirits which are before his Throne, and from Jesus Christ who is the faithful witness, &c. The seven Spirits are said to be before his Throne, as waiting for the commands of God, as the seven Angels are said to stand before God, Revel. 8. 2. * But it is more likely it is meant of the Spirit of God; 'tis not reasonable to think the salutations of creatures to the Church should be mixed with the benedictions of the Deity, with the exclusion of the third person, who is here to be understood, and called seven Spirits in regard of the variety of gifts and graces, given out by him to the Church, seven being a perfect number; and placed in the midst of this benediction, perhaps because of his procession both from the Father and the Son.

* Illyricus in locum.

(2.) Peace with all Creatures. If the Lord of the Creation be the Author of this Peace, then no creatures which are under his conduct can be at enmity with a Believer. When Adam fell, he did deserve that all creatures should act in hostility against him, as the Rebel against the Soveraignty of their common Creator. But when God enters into a new amity with man, and ceaseth to be provoked, he renews the Covenant with the Beasts, that all creatures shall be serviceable to the reconcil'd Believer Hos. 2. 18. In that day I will make a Covenant for him with the beasts of the Field. In the day of the Evangelical espousals, as he had before promised if they continued in obedience, Levit. 26. 6. Though no formal covenant can be made between God and irrational creatures, yet they shall hurt no more, than if they were tyed up by a formal Covenant, and were honest and wise enough to observe it. As in the first Covenant made with Adam, while he stood in terms of peace with God, and own'd a subjection to him as his Lord, all creatures were spontaneously to be under his dominion, which right depended upon the observance of the terms of the Covenant which was between God and him. This right is renewed by the satisfaction of Christ, procuring the restoration of that which Adam forfeited, and disarming nature which was before armed against man. The Corn and the Wine shall hear Jezreel the seed of God. Hos. 2. 22. The right to all things preſent, things to come, Life, Death, all intermediate things is reſtored by Chriſt, 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23. The World, univerſal nature, all is yours for your good, becauſe you are Chriſts who hath purchas'd thoſe things, and Chriſt is Gods, ſettled by him in this office for the purchaſe of them, and accepted by God to that end. The right to all creatures is perfect, the poſſeſſion enſur'd in the head who hath taken livery, and ſeiſin of all, and ſhall be perfect in the members, when there ſhall be a new Heaven and a new Earth; all ſhall be in an harmonious combination for the glory of the Believer. They do yet often inſtrumentally afflict them, but not hurt them: * they hurt the man, not the Chriſtian: they hurt a Believer no more than death can, which though it kills him, yet without a ſting: they hurt us, yet without a curſe; they are in the hand of a reconciled Father, who uſeth their natural enmity againſt us for our good. As the Shepherd doth the curriſhneſs of the Dog to reduce the wandring Sheep to the Fold. The hurts we ſeem to feel from them, iſſue in Mercy, and are ſo intended by that reconciled God who guides them; they wound us, and thereby break our Impoſthumes. The ſame inſtrument may convey kindneſs to a Believer, which is a mark of wrath upon an Enemy. The ſame knife, which in the hand of an Executioner, may cut off the arm of a Malefactor, in the hand of a Chyrurgion may cut off the gangreen'd member of a patient; the ſame knife performs a Friends office to the one and a wrathful to the other. Since we are not perfect in our ſervices of God, we cannot expect the creatures ſhould be perfect in their ſervices of us; as our obedience is only inchoative here, ſo the performance of Gods promiſes are here in their blade, not in their full Harveſt.

(3.) Acceſs to God is another comfort ariſing from hence. As God was in Chriſt reconciling the World, ſo he is in Chriſt giving Believers acceſs to him. As he was in Chriſt reconciling our perſons, ſo he is in Chriſt receiving our prayers. As Chriſt made ſatisfaction for us by his death, ſo he ſweetens our ſervices by his merit. As Chriſt was the means of our Reconciliation, ſo is he the means of our Acceſs, Rom. 5. 1, 2. By whom alſo we have Acceſs; the word alſo intimates this freedom of acceſs to be as great a benefit as Juſtification. Though Juſtification is a tranſcendent Mercy, yet it would not compleat the happineſs of a creature without communion with God. Peace was not the thing God ultimately aim'd at, it was but the medium; he would be our Friend, that there might be ſweet interviews between him and a Believer. Before guilt on our ſide, and Juſtice on Gods, ſtood as barrs to our Acceſs. Guilty Souls cannot converſe with a ſevere Judge, a provoking creature and an offended God, can have no commerce; but when the guilt is taken away the diſtance is removed. How may an humble believing creature come to a reconcil'd God, whoſe own Heart put him upon laying the foundation of Friendſhip without any deſires, or ſo much as expectations of the Creature. We could no more before, endure the preſence of God than the Devil; but by this the barr is taken from us, though not from him. This acceſs is conſequent upon this Reconciliation. As there was a communion between God and man in innocence, which was broken off by the entrance of the Enmity, ſo upon the reſtoration of the Friendſhip there is a renewing of a mutual converſe; that as God reveals his gracious will to the ſoul, the ſoul puts up holy deſires to God; that as God deſcends to us in Chriſt, we may aſcend through Chriſt to him in fruitful Meditations, and take a delightful view and proſpect of God. It was not only peace that Chriſt came to procure, but alſo good will: not only to ſlay the enmity, but to raiſe an entire and intimate Friendſhip: The meſſage the Angels proclaim'd, was made up of the one as well as the other, Luke 2. 14. peace on Earth, good will towards men, εὐδοκία a good pleaſure in men.

[1.] Acceſs with confidence. We go to our Father who hath had the greateſt hand in all this affair. Since he is the author of this peace, what ground of dejection? We have God in Chriſt to receive us, and Chriſt by Gods order to introduce us. It was the purpoſe of God and his eternal purpoſe, that by the Faith of Chriſt, and in him, we ſhould have boldneſs and acceſs with confidence: Eph. 1. 12. παῤῥησίαν. And what higher ground of confidence than the conſideration of Gods appointing and giving this Mediator to us for that end? How can a faithful, holy, true God deny deny his own act in denying us, when we come in the way of his own appointment? For since he hath settled such an High Priest over his house, we may well draw near in full assurance of faith, if we come with sincere and true hearts, Heb. 10. 21, 22. flying with a deep humility to his throne of grace, with a plerophory of Faith, a full sail filled by this wind of love: 'Tis not meant of a personal assurance or a certitudo subjecti, but objecti, a full belief of the doctrine of propitiation, and Gods setting forth Christ and preparing him, to take away sin which was the cause of the enmity between God and us; for this is but the use the Apostle makes of what he had doctrinally in this point delivered in the foregoing part of the chapter. We may go to God with more confidence upon this account, than Adam could in innocence. He had access to a God of goodness, we to a God of grace; he could not look upon God as reconcileable if he should sin, God threatning was a bar to that; if he knew any thing of God, he knew him to be just and true to his word, from which knowledge did arise those terrors of Conscience upon his face, and his endeavouring to run and hide himself from God: but God in this dispensation hath given us other notions of himself than Adam had, therefore we may go with more confidence than he could, and pour out our souls before him. Lament. 3. 24. The Lord is my portion, therefore will I hope in him. The Lord is my reconcil'd Friend, therefore will I hope in him for the mercy I beg.

[2.] Delight and joy in our access. We could not come to him before, no nor think of him without a slavish trembling; but now we may think of him, and approach to him with joy and comfort, for he deals not with us as an Enemy by a strict justice, but as a Friend in a way of an obliging mercy. If Adam had a sense that he might fall, he could not come to God without some dejection: The very possibility of falling would not be without fear attending it. But since God was in Christ reconciling the World, we go to him upon the account of an immutable Righteousness, a Righteousness he settled as an act of grace to us, and security to his own glory: whereas Adam could approach to him, but upon the account of a mutable Righteousness, which might be as the grass standing this day and wither'd to morrow. Our access to God is with a joy in the hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 2. and when we take hold of his Covenant, this Covenant of peace, we have his word that he will make us joyful in the house of Prayer, Isaiah 56. 6, 7. actively joyful, full of delight in his service, solacing our selves in a sweet consideration of the infinite grace of a reconciling God, whereby a transcendent delight is rais'd in the soul, which is a direct delight in God as the object of Faith, discover'd in Christ and apprehended by spiritual reason and sense: Passively joyful, by receiving in his service more of the refreshing waters of Life, and being fed with the hidden Manna, which God communicates in and by Christ to his Friends. And beside, though our services are imperfect, God expects not a perfect obedience from us, but from his Son Christ; 'tis a full assurance of faith he expects from us and a true heart, not a perfect obedience; his promise gives us joy, though the sense of our imperfections create a sorrow. Though we cannot delight in our selves, we may in God, in his promise, in his gracious condescension, in the compensation he hath from his son for us, in his acceptation of it, and application of it to our souls. You are upon believing, Gods Friends, not only his Servants; 'tis Christs speech to his Disciples John 15. 15. Hence forth I call you not servants. It must not be understood of a freedom from all kind of service, which cannot be conferr'd upon a Creature: (it were injustice in God to free a creature from so Righteous and noble a vertue, as gratitude to himself: God cannot command a creature not to love him, for he should then command the creature not to love the chief good.) But it is a freedom from a bondage and servile fear in duties, and bringing to a filial and more dutiful manner of service, a service from principles of grace, and encouraged by the views of Gods reconciled face. Service is not excluded by admission to this Friendship, but perfected to a more delightful garb. Peace opens the way for a delightful and successful Trade, which War and Enmity locks up.

4. The conquest of Satan is ensured by this. When we are at peace with God, the Devils themselves are subject to us. When God was in Christ reconciling the World, World, he was in Chriſt deſtroying him that had the power of death, Heb. 2. 14. and bringing Satan under the feet of the Mediator, and the feet of his Members. This was the intent of God in the firſt promiſe of a Mediator, to deſtroy him who had infected Mankind, and brought death into the World; the bruiſing his head was the deſign of Chriſts Miſſion, Gen. 3. 15. That the great incendiary who had broken the League, and ſet afoot the Rebellion, might feel the greateſt ſmart of it. And ever ſince it is by the Goſpel of Peace, and the ſheild of Faith, that we are only able to quench the fiery darts of the Devil, and make his attempts fruitleſs, Eph. 6. 15, 16. by the Reconciliation God hath wrought and publiſht by the Goſpel. God as a God of peace ſhall tread him under the feet of believers, Rom. 16. 20. Unleſs he had been a God of Peace, we had never been deliver'd from that Jaylor who held us by the right of Gods Juſtice. And ſince we are deliver'd, God as a God of Peace will perfect the Victory, and make him ceaſe for ever from bruiſing the heel of the Spiritual ſeed. As God hath given Peace in Chriſt, ſo he will give the Victory in Chriſt. Peace cannot be perfect, till it be undiſturb'd by invading Enemies, and ſubtle Adverſaries endeavouring to raiſe a new Enmity. Our Saviour ſpoil'd him of his power upon the Croſs, and took away the right he had to detain any Believer Priſoner, by ſatisfying that Juſtice, and reconciling that God who firſt order'd their commitment. He anſwers his Accuſations as he is an Advocate at the right hand of God, and at the laſt when death comes to be deſtroyed, and no more to enter into the World, the whole deſign of the Devil for ever falls to the ground. Since we are at peace with God, while we are here, the Devil himſelf ſhall ſerve us; and the Meſſenger of Satan ſhall be a means to quel the pride of a believing Paul by the ſufficiency of the grace of God, while he fills the heart of an unbelieving Judas with Poyſon and Treaſon againſt his Maſter.

(5) Comfort in all afflictions. 'Tis a Cordial to chear in the hotteſt ſervices and ſharpeſt difficulties. What can the greateſt danger ſignifie, while God remains reconcil'd to the Soul in Chriſt and the peace remaines unbroken? God thought the promiſe of it ſupport enough in all the ſtanding puniſhment Adam was to endure; he therefore made this promiſe to him, before he denounc'd the puniſhment after the Fall. We may as well digeſt all Croſſes with this Peace purchaſed, as Adam could do with this Peace promis'd; God was then in Chriſt promiſing it, God hath now been in Chriſt performing it. The peace as deſign'd, was offer'd to the ancient Iſraelites as a ground of joy and relief under their oppreſſing Calamities, Iſa. 9. Mich. 5. 5. This man ſhall be the peace, when the Aſſyrian ſhall come into our land. The Peace God hath effected in Chriſt, is a more firm matter of joy under oppreſſions, by how much the comfort of the performance exceeds the joy of the promiſe, as the joy of Harveſt doth the joy of ſeed-time. Mercy was manifeſted in the making the Promiſe? Truth as well as Mercy glorified in the performing. If it were a ground of Joy before he wrought it, what a riſe is there for a triumphant joy ſince he hath laid an unalterable Foundation for it. This was the Armour Chriſt furniſht his Diſciples with againſt the injuries of the World, Joh. 16. 33. In me you ſhall have peace, in the world you ſhall have tribulation. This was thought by our Saviour to be a ſufficient defence for his weak diſciples againſt all the furies of men, and rage of Devils, an Univerſal Remedy againſt all diſcouragements. In Chriſt God ſmiles, when the World frowns. Cauſe thy face to ſhine upon us, is thrice repeated Pſal. 80. 3, 7, 19. as the chief Confidence of a gracious Soul under ſmart diſtreſſes. Reconciliation with God changeth the Nature of every thing that is Terrible, Dungeons into Palaces and Tears into Cordials. 'Tis a ſheild againſt fears, a Treaſure againſt Poverty, Phyſick againſt Diſeaſes, Security againſt Danger, and Life againſt Death. Indeed under ſharp Afflictions, a believing Soul may not have a ſtrength of a Faith to diſcern God as a Father from God as a judge: ſence and carnal Reaſon may diſpute againſt Faith and ſtagger it. If he be reconcil'd, why then doth he make me his mark to ſhoot at? There may be a fatherly diſpleaſure, when there is not a wrathful anger. The ſatisfaction of Juſtice excludes not the Rod of Mercy. Juſtice hath no plea againſt a Believer, becauſe it is ſatisfied: Mercy is the only attribute that orders all for a reconcil'd perſon. The viſiting the tranſgreſſion of the ſeed of Chriſt with a Rod, was knit together with the continuance of Gods

kindneſs to them, in the Covenant of Redemption God made with Chriſt, Pſal. 89. 30, 31, 32, 33. God was in Chriſt Reconciling the World, 'tis a leſs thing for him to be in every Affliction ordering it for good.

(6.) Comfort in the expectation of all other Mercies. If God were in Chriſt reconciling us to himſelf, he will be in Chriſt giving forth all other ſutable Mercies. If he detains any you ſeem to want, 'tis a part of his reconcil'd Wiſdom when he ſees them not good for you. 'Tis inconſiſtent with his Amity, to with-hold any you have real need of; it would not be then a much more, as Chriſt argues, but a much leſs, Mat. 7. 11. If you being evil know how to give good things to your children, much more your Father which is in heaven: but conſider, they are only good things he hath oblig'd himſelf to give, and he is the proper Judge of what is good, not we our ſelves. If, as a God of Patience and Goodneſs, he feeds the unclean Birds; will he not, as a God of Grace and Peace in Chriſt, feed his Friends? will he let them ſtarve while his Enemies fatten? He hath ſtruck a Covenant of Amity and Friendſhip; what may not be expected from a ſincere and powerful Friend, and one who made it his buſineſs from Eternity to be caſting about for the working of this Peace? If this, which neither Men nor Angels could have imagin'd, be effected by his Wiſdom and Grace, all ſubſequent Bleſſings are far eaſier to God than this could be; ſince in this he hath conquer'd his own Affection to his Son, what can remain unconquer'd by him, which ſtands in the way of a Believers Happineſs? It was a greater act to be in Chriſt Reconciling the World, than to be in Chriſt giving out the Mercies he hath purchas'd. If he hath overcome the greateſt Bank, that ſtopt the Tide of Mercy, ſhall little ones hinder the Current of it? Juſtice and the Honour of the Law, were the great mountains which ſtood in the way; ſince thoſe are remov'd by a Miraculous Wiſdom and Grace, what pebbles can ſtop the floud to believing Souls? If God be the Author of the greateſt Bleſſings, will he not be of the leaſt? If he hath not ſpar'd his beſt Treaſure, ſhall the leſs be denyed? 'Tis the Apoſtles arguing, Rom. 8. 32. He that ſpar'd not his own Son, but deliver'd him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him freely give us all things? He cannot but be as free in the leaſt as he was in the greateſt; there were more Arguments to diſſwade him from that, than there can be to ſtop his hands in other things. If any thing you deſire be refuſed by God, know it is your Saviours Mind you ſhall not have it; for God would deny him nothing of his purchaſe. Oh how little do we live in the ſence of thoſe Truths, how doth our impatience give God the Lye, and tell him he is a deadly Enemy, notwithſtanding his Reconciling Grace!

(7.) There will be peace of Conſcience. If God be Reconcil'd, Conſcience cannot charge. If God be the Author of this Peace, Conſcience, Gods Deputy, cannot keep up an Enmity againſt us, for that muſt ſpeak as God ſpeaks; Peace with the Viceroyes and Governours, depends upon Peace with the Prince. The ſame bloud which was ſprinkled on the Mercy-Seat, is ſprinkled upon the Conſcience of the Believer. As it procur'd peace with Heaven, it will produce Peace in the Soul, Heb. 10. 22. Having our hearts ſprinkled from an evil Conſcience: An evil Conſcience is an accuſing Conſcience; when ſprinkled by this bloud, it is an acquitting Conſcience; not from the Facts, but from the guilt of them. Whatſoever hath a power to ſatisfie God, cannot be invalid to ſatisfie Conſcience. Where Infinite knowledge can raiſe no Objection, a pur-blind Conſcience is too weak to find out any. If God hath been the contriver of this Reconciliation, and accepted it as fully finiſhed, Conſcience muſt Acquieſce. Adams Conſcience flew in his Face upon his ſin, and did not leave quarrelling, till its mouth was ſtopt with the promiſe of a Reconciler. Guilt ſets Conſcience on fire; when the Guilt is quencht, Conſcience muſt be at eaſe. Nothing will ſatisfie Conſcience, but that which ſatisfies God; and whatſoever ſatisfies God, muſt ſatisfie Conſcience; for that acts by Commiſſion, and a deriv'd Authority. All other things are too weak to take away the conſcience of Sin; the bloud of bulls and goats of Gods Inſtitution could not do it, Heb. 10. 2. 'tis the proper effect of this Peace; all the waters in the world cannot quench the flame of Conſcience, till God be reconcil'd. The Foundation of this peace of Conſcience, is laid in peace with God, though preſent actual comfort may not be enjoy'd: the day may be clouded, though the Winds be ſtill; there may be no ſtorms, yet no Sun-ſhine.

(8) Comfort againſt Death. If God be the Author of Reconciliation by Chriſt, then Death, which was the fruit of that ſin which is now removed, can be no dreadful Apparition. God was in Chriſt and is ſtill, conquering his Enemies, and this is one Enemy which muſt fall under his Sword, and be made his Footſtool. As God was in Chriſt reconciling you, he is in Death calling for you to enjoy the full-blown Felicities of that peace. 'Tis no more than a departure in peace, when God is a God of Peace: Old Simeon thought ſo, Luk. 2. 29. He ſpeaks, ſaith one *, like a Merchant that had got all his goods on Ship-board, and now deſires the Maſter of the Ship to hoiſt Sail, and be gone homeward. Death was before a Servant of Divine Juſtice; ſince Juſtice is ſatisfied, it is the Meſſenger of Divine Mercy. It was a Jaylor to encloſe us in the Priſon of the Grave, 'tis now a Conductor to the Glories of Heaven. Where this peace is in Maturity; where Gods face ſhines clearly without Diſguiſes, Vails, and cloudy Interruptions, the Name Death is terrible, but the reconciled ſoul is beyond the Fears of it. It hath loſt its ſting, which was Gods Juſtice: Chriſt ſatisfying the one, hath diſarm'd the other of what is hurtful. There is a knot between Juſtification (which is term'd Reconciliation) and Glorification, Death comes between them, but doth not diſſolve it; Rom. 8. 30. Whom he juſtifies, them alſo he glorifies; which knot cannot be untied by Death, though that between our Soul and Body is; it ſends the body to the Grave to endure the Sentence againſt ſin denounc'd in Paradiſe, and the Soul to Heaven, to enjoy the benefit of the Promiſe.

* Gurnal.

(9) This Reconciliation is Effectual. 'Tis upon this all the other Comforts depend. If God was the Author of it, contriving, counſelling Chriſt to effect it, furniſhing him for the accompliſhment of it, it cannot be a weak and imperfect Peace. Infinite Wiſdom would not have ſpent innumerable thoughts, which cannot be reckoned up (as the expreſſion is, Pſal. 40. 5.) about a fruitleſs thing, a peace which might be eaſily blown away; he would never have ſent his Son to ſhed his bloud, and endure his wrath to no purpoſe, and make his own contrivance to end in a meer Chimæra, as though he would be ſo buſie only to deceive his Creatures. The counſel of the Lord ſhall ſtand; every counſel of his, much more his choiceſt purpoſe, to which all his other reſolves are as ſmall Rivers which run into this great Sea, and combine together for the perfecting this counſel: all other thoughts are lines drawn to, or from this Center. As all things in Heaven and Earth are gathered in one even in Chriſt; ſo all the Counſels of God gather into this one of Chriſt and peace in him, this was the great ſource and pattern of all the reſt, Eph. 1. 10, 11. Beſides, God hath receiv'd this reconciler into Heaven, whereby he hath remov'd all ground of ſuſpition of his remaining yet unreconcil'd. If juſtice had any Exception againſt his ſacrifice, it would not have open'd Heaven Gates to Chriſt, but have barr'd with a flaming ſword Chriſts Entrance into Heaven as well as Adams return to Paradiſe. The honourable title of, Our peace, had not been conferr'd upon Chriſt, had an imperfect reconciliation been all the fruit of his bloud. By this Name he is called, Mich. 5. 5. Eph. 2. 14. and by that of our righteouſneſs, Jer. 33. 16. God is the Author, and Chriſt the Prince of Peace, the reconciliation muſt be full and righteous and effectual, that hath ſuch a contriver, ſuch a procurer. We are apt in our unbelieving moods to ſuſpect God; becauſe we have been unfaithful to him, we are jealous he will be unfaithful to us; but he asks the queſtion, what could I have done more for my vineyard? he appeals to men in that caſe, as if he ſhould ſay, If men can tell me what I can do more, I will do it: do it to engage them, do it to encourage them: he hath contriv'd it with the choiceſt wiſdom, laid the foundation of it in the Richeſt bloud, given the fulleſt aſſurances of his ſincerity in it, and never refus'd it to any that deſired it; but it hath been rejected by many whom his Spirit hath ſollicited. Chriſt whoſe honour lay upon it, would never have aſſured his Diſciples of it, after his return from Paradiſe, Joh. 20. 21. Peace be unto you, had it been imperfect; a ſalutation he uſed, which is not recorded to be uſed by him in the time of his life.

(10) This Reconciliation is perpetual, as well as perfect, and effectual: 'tis durable and fixed. It was an Eternal Redemption obtain'd *. Eternal in regard of its Efficacy, Eternal in regard of Application, Eternal in regard of the good things procur'd procur'd for us by it. Man nor Devils cannot undo it, becauſe of their weakneſs, nor God becauſe of his Faithfulneſs. 'Tis a grace wherein we ſtand by Faith, Rom. 5. 1, 2. not a tottering, but ſtable grace. Believers are receiv'd into the grace of Gods good will, and God is not a light and unſtable Friend. All humane Friendſhip is perfidiouſneſs in reſpect of this. The tye is Everlaſting, and knows no diſſolution. His own grace and good Will mov'd him to it, and the ſame good Will in an immutable God, will preſerve it. Good Will made the Motion, Juſtice acquieſc'd in it; but ſince the Death of Chriſt, the Righteouſneſs and Mercy of God joyn hand in hand to keep it intire: Righteouſneſs and Peace have kiſt each other, Mercy and Truth have met together, and congratulated one another for their mutual Satisfaction. The Mercy of God is as prevalent with him to keep the Covenant of Peace from being remov'd, as for the firſt ſettlement of it; Iſa. 54. 10. Neither ſhall my covenant of peace be remov'd, ſaith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee. Such conſultations, ſuch expenſive accompliſhments of it cannot be mutable; Mercy made it, and Mercy perpetuates it. He can no more condemn a believing Soul when he looks upon Chriſt, than he can drown the World againſt his own promiſe when he looks on the Rainbow. His Throne is encompaſſed with a Rainbow, an Emblem of a perpetual peace: It was ſo encircled in Ezekiels time, Ezek. 1. 28. with the ſame garb he appear'd to John ſome ages after, Rev. 4. 3. and the predominant colour was green, that of an Emerald, to note that this peace is always green and flouriſhing, as freſh in after ages as in the firſt. God was in Chriſt reconciling the World, God is in Chriſt as a Prieſt keeping up that reconciliation: The Interceſſion of Chriſt, which is a part of his Prieſtly Office, was as much in the thoughts of God, for his keeping firm this Reconciliation, as the Death of Chriſt was upon his heart to effect it. He confirms his Eternal Prieſthood by an Oath, Pſal. 110. 1. and therefore his Interceſſion for it; otherwiſe there would be no Prieſtly Act for Chriſt now to perform. Chriſt by his death quencht the flame of the ſword which guarded Paradiſe againſt us; at his Reſurrection he ſheath'd the ſword it ſelf; and by his Interceſſion keeps it perpetually in its Scabbard; keeps the edge from ever being turn'd againſt a Believer. Reconciliation is wrought by the Death of Chriſt, and preſerv'd by his Merit. Chriſts Affections remain in his heart to ſollicite, the Fathers Affections remain in his heart to grant, Chriſt hath an irrepealable Liberty to approach to God to preſent his reconciling merit. Till therefore the unchangeable God change his Reſolution, and repent of all his Counſel, Cares, Furniture, Commiſſion and Acceptance of Chriſt; till Chriſts Merit become invalid, diſtaſtful, and nauſeous to the Father, this peace will ſtand firm. Chriſts merit hath been paid, it cannot be unpaid; it hath been accepted, it cannot now be refus'd. If the ſoul he hath redeem'd be not ſafe, Chriſt can have no ſatisfaction for all his Sufferings. Keep therefore your Wills from ſin, ſtrive againſt the motions of it, agree not with it, and the peace will not be broken. As Princes enter not into War, but where there is a real affront done, and no ſatisfaction given; ſo God breaks not the peace he hath made, upon every failing. When the Will is not engag'd, the ſin is reſiſted; but where any give up their Wills to ſin, and delightfully wear its Chains, they are ſo far from having this Reconciliation perpetual, that they never had ſo much as the leaſt intereſt in it. 'Tis perpetual to them that embrace it, not by a pretended faith, but a real and obedient Faith.

(11.) The ſtate believers have by this Reconciliation is far happier than that Adam had in innocence. 'Tis likely, had he perſiſted in it ſome time, he might have been confirm'd in that ſtate; but how long time he might have liv'd in that mutable condition, and whether if he had perſiſted, he would have enjoy'd ſuch a degree of Glory, is not upon Record. God was in Adam making a Covenant of Works, he is in Chriſt making a Covenant of Peace. Chriſt came not only to give a ſimple life, or a ſimple peace, but to give it more abundantly, Joh. 10. 10. more abundantly than we had it by Creation in Innocence. After the fall we were dead, and Chriſt reſtor'd us to life, but to a more abundant life; not that we had after the Fall, for we had none at all, we were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; but more abundantly than we had in Adam before the Fall; a better Life than man could challenge by the Covenant of Works. The ſecond Creation muſt be greater than the firſt, becauſe the thoughts of God about the firſt, were but a ſtep to a ſecond. In the firſt Creation, meer man was the head, God in him gave out the Precepts and Promiſes to his Poſterity; in the ſecond Creation, God is in Chriſt giving out his Covenant; as the means of Conveyance are higher, ſo the things conveyed are more glorious. God would provide a way of peace that ſhould not fail again, the ſecurity ſhould be built upon a ſtronger bottom. The Lord give every one of us an intereſt in this Reconciliation and the Comforts of it.

Third Uſe of Exhortation. Is God in Chriſt Reconciling the World, then 'tis fit we ſhould joyn iſſue with God, and be in Chriſt reconcil'd to him. We muſt comply with God in this his great ordinance. The conſideration of it ſhould work relenting, ſhould work believing. Let the deſign of God prevail with us. 'Tis in this we ſhall find expiation of Sin, the grace of God, peace of Conſcience; in a word, whatſoever God as reconcil'd can give, whatſoever Chriſt as reconciling hath purchas'd. Better to be the vileſt ſlave in the Gallies, the ſcoff and reproach of men, ſpurn'd by every foot, than be unreconcil'd. It was tender Mercy, bowels of Mercy, whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us, Luk. 1. 8. When we lay wallowing in a miry ſink, ready to be cruſht by Gods righteous hand, then he pitied us; the more diſingenuous to refuſe his Amity. The Dignity of the Donor renders a gift more valuable than it is in it ſelf: a Preſent from a Prince is more prized than that which is beſtow'd by an ordinary Merchant. The gift of Chriſt, and the offer of peace by him, is incomprehenſible in it ſelf, and receives a value from that God that prepared and offers it. What pleaſure can we taſte in any Earthly Comfort, though we had a confluence of all Princely Delights, if we have no ſhare in a reconcil'd God, by a reconciling Mediator; while we will force that God, who is the Author of Peace, to ſtand over us with a drawn ſword pointed to our breaſts? Corn, Wine, and Oyl are little things to the light of Gods countenance.

1. Something muſt be done on our parts. Though God be the Author of our Reconciliation by Chriſt, yet ſomething is incumbent upon us. If all men were reconcil'd, without any condition on their parts, the Apoſtle might have held his Pen, and not have added the other Clauſe, ver. 20. after the Text, we pray you in Chriſts ſtead, be ye reconcil'd to God: there had been no need of that inference. In the Text he ſpeaks of the Fundamental Reconciliation; in this, of the Actual. If all men had been Reconcil'd to God, it had not been ſence to ſay, you are reconcil'd, therefore be reconcil'd. It would have been an Exhortation to do that, which had been already done to their hands. If all men be actually reconcil'd, how come any to miſs of the fruit of it? why is it not applyed to all? Becauſe all that are called, do not comply with their Call, anſwer not Gods command and Intreaty. The purchaſe and application are two diſtinct things: the purchaſe was made by Chriſt alone upon the Croſs, without any qualification in us; the Application is not wrought without ſomething in us concurring with it, though that alſo is wrought by the grace of God. God hath ordain'd peace for us. But there is a work to be wrought within us, for the enjoyment of that Peace; Iſa. 26. 12. Lord thou wilt ordain peace for us, for thou alſo haſt wrought all our works in us. The one is Grace in the Spring, the other is Grace in the Veſſel: the one is the Act of God in Chriſt, the other is the Act of God by his Spirit. Though the fire burn, if I would have warmth, I muſt not run from it, but approach to it.

2. This qualification is Faith. As Grace in God qualified God (if I may uſe the expreſſion) for effecting it, ſo Faith in us qualifies us for applying and enjoying it. Though Chriſt be the purchaſer, yet Faith is the means of inſtating us in it; Rom. 5. 1. Being juſtified by Faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Not a Man hath peace with God, till juſtified by Faith. This ineſtimable Mercy is not conferr'd, but upon Men of good Will; Men that affect it, value it, conſent to it. We muſt lay our hands upon the head of the ſacrifice, and own him for ours. This is the band which unites us to Chriſt as the purchaſer, and by him to God, as the Author of this Reconciliation: it gives us a right to this peace, and at laſt the Comfort of it.

3. The

3. The order is, firſt an acceptance of Chriſt, then of God in and through him. We muſt firſt comply with the means, before we can attain the end. Our nearneſs to God was purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt, and is actually confer'd by union with Chriſt, Eph. 2. 13. But now in Chriſt Jeſus, ye who ſometimes were afar off, are made nigh by the blood of Chriſt. Faith hath recourſe firſt to the atoning bloud of Chriſt, and by that blood to God, Rom. 3. 25. Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through Faith in his Blood. This blood only quencht the conſuming fire of Gods wrath. By him we are reconcil'd, and by him only we can receive the atonement, Rom. 5. 11. We joy in God through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have now receiv'd the attonement. As God was in Chriſt reconciling, ſo we muſt be in Chriſt accepting this Reconciliation with God. You are Chriſts, and Chriſt is Gods, 1 Cor. 3. 23. We muſt firſt be Chriſts by the acceptance of him, as Chriſt was Gods by his calling and miſſion. As God goes out to us in him, our return muſt be by him to God. He paid the debts, made an end of ſin, remov'd the wrath which we had merited. God was the Judge, Chriſt the Mediator: We muſt firſt go to the Mediator to be conducted by him to the Judge. We had offended the Law-maker, we muſt firſt go to him who is the repairer of the honour of the Law: We muſt take the Redemption of Chriſt along with us, the pacifying blood to preſent it to God, by whoſe authority we were under wrath. 'Tis that blood only joyns us to God, no cement without it. If we are not firſt by Faith in Chriſt ſatisfying, we are ſtill but as ſtubble before God, who is a conſuming Fire. Chriſt is the only band of union between us and God. Think not of ſtanding ſecure by abſolute mercy, mercy through Chriſt only ſaves us. It breathes in no other Air. We muſt firſt take hold of the ſtrength of God, before we are at peace with him, Iſaiah 27. 5. Let him take hold of my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and he ſhall make peace with me: of Chriſt, who is as well the power of God, as the wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. where you have a direction, how to gain it, by laying hold of his ſtrength; the end to be aim'd at in the act, that he may make peace, with me; and an aſſurance to obtain it in that method, he ſhall make peace with me.

Motives,

[1.] Here is the higheſt encouragement, and ground of acceptation. There is no room for any hard thoughts of God after ſo ſignal a diſcovery of himſelf: He is not a God of unquenchable wrath; he was willing his juſtice ſhould be appeaſed: He took all the courſe that was poſſible for infinite Wiſdom to invent, for infinite power to effect, for infinite love to propoſe. What greater ſecurity for our bleſſings, than that he ſhould make his ſon a curſe, that we might be bleſſed by him? How ſhould ſo much love make us change our unworthy opinions of God? Here are the three perſons employ'd in it, the Father contrives it, the Son effects it, the Spirit ſtands ready to apply it to every Believer. A refuſal puts a ſcorn upon all the three perſons. As ſoon as ever Adam ſinn'd, even the ſame day, Gen. 3. 15. God applies this remedy of a Redeemer. He did not let a day ſlip, for any thing we know, not an hour, before he made it known to him; his Heart was in travel, and longed to be delivered of the gracious promiſe of a Mediator. He arm'd our firſt Parents with this Cordial before he ſubjected them to their ſtanding miſeries. What his heart was then, it is the ſame ſtill. His kindneſs was deſirous to publiſh the promiſe, can his truth have leſs zeal to perform it? His kindneſs which mov'd him to aſſure it, hath moved him to effect it, and will move him to apply it to every one that ſeeks to him for it in and by his belov'd Son. His wrath which we were ſubject to, is overcome by his love to the mediation of his Son, who hath honoured him more than ſin had diſhonour'd him. By accepting this, we own the glory of God, and honour him as much by Faith, as we have diſhonour'd him by ſin; for thereby we own that ſatisfaction which was as grateful to him, as our ſins were hatefull. As he honour'd himſelf by the death of his Son, ſo he honours himſelf by giving forth the fruits of his death. He delights to honour Chriſt, and to ſee him honoured by us: We contribute to Gods delight, when we approach to him by Faith in his Blood. Did God make this proviſion? Did he contrive an expiatory offering before the World was? And will he not communicate this? Would he provide him never to beſtow him? Did he bruiſe him for nothing, but to keep him up as a Jewel

in

in a Cabinet, not to give out? To whom ſhould God give him, but to thoſe that deſire him? Would any Father lay up Treaſures for his Children, and not diſpenſe them, when they are earneſt for them in their neceſſities? Can there be a greater argument than this doctrine, to overcome our Rebellion, extinguiſh our fears, haſten our approach and add confidence to our deſires.

[2.] The Terms required, are as low as can be imagined. Nothing can be objected againſt the conditions he requires, Repentance and Faith. Can any Malefactor expect peace with his arms in his hand? Is it not fit there ſhould be ſuch conditions to juſtifie God, ſince we were the guilty offenders? Can there be leſs, than to caſt away our weapons, bewail our crimes, receive his ſon as our Mediator, ſerve him with newneſs of Life, all which are deſirable priviledges? It was in his power to appoint what conditions he pleaſed, becauſe he was the free and ſole Benefactor; what could be leſs, than the believing and receiving the Reconciliation? It was impoſſible the benefit could be without it: 'tis no benefit unleſs it be eſteem'd ſo; no reaſon any ſhould enjoy a benefit, that doth not think it a benefit. All the ſelf love of men could not have fram'd more reaſonable terms. Men would have thought of Rivers of Oyl, and thouſands of Rams, meer impoſſibilities, Mich. 6. 6, 7. God requires no more, than to lye humbly at his feet, and reach out our hands to receive the aſſurance he gives. What can be eaſier? If Faith be difficult, 'tis ſo, not in regard of its ſelf, but in regard of our natural enmity to God, and the pride of our own wills; 'tis hard only as the Law is weak, through the fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. But nothing could be more reaſonable, nothing more eaſie in it ſelf. An ingenuous amazement at unexpected kindneſs, ſhould make us run more ſwiftly to embrace God, than ever we ran from him. We ſhould ſubſcribe to his Articles. As he is a God to contrive the peace, let him be your God to impoſe the methods of enjoying it, ſince he hath given this gift to a brutiſh World, who he knew would grieve and deſpiſe him, yet requires no more at your hands, than that you ſhould believe and accept him, which is but a juſt due to the greatneſs of the bleſſing.

[3.] There is an abſolute neceſſity for this compliance for our happineſs. If you have not a peace of Gods ordaining, you can have none of your own inventing. There can be no fellowſhip with God without it: We cannot be happy, becauſe we cannot enjoy God, wherein all the felicity of a creature conſiſts: How can guilt and purity converſe together? What ſociety can ſtubble have with Fire, but to its deſtruction? We cannot ſee Gods face without it; and if the ſight of Gods face be wanting, felicity is at a diſtance. The greateſt part of hell remains, though there be no poſitive puniſhment. This cannot be without a reconcil'd face. How can two walk together, unleſs they be agreed, Amos 3. 3? What entercourſe can there be between a guilty Rebel and a frowning Judge? Between a ſinfull Creature and a provoked Deity? If he hide his face, who can behold him? Job 24. 29. But when an agreement is made, there may be mutual endearments. We are enemies to God by birth, God an Enemy to us by his Law; the enmity will remain on Gods part, while enmity remains on ours. Strike up then the treaty with God, ſince there is a neceſſity for it, and God hath provided all things to that end; ſhall not Gods love melt you, and your own neceſſities move you?

[4.] Wrath is unavoidable without a compliance with God. If we will not enter into theſe terms of Reconciliation, the Heart of God which was before incenſed by our ſin, cannot but riſe with an higher indignation at a reſolve to perſiſt in it. Abuſed love kindles the hotteſt wrath. What fence can inexcuſable guilt have againſt an equitable Juſtice? When man after his Creation prov'd perfidious to God, there commenc'd a dreadful War, which only can be ended by him, who hath put an end to ſin, or elſe it will endure for ever in Hell. All muſt have endur'd what Chriſt ſuffered, had he not ſtood in their ſtead; and thoſe that refuſe him, as he is proffer'd by the grace of God, muſt endure the ſame for ever. If we will not receive him as a Friend, we cannot avoid him as an Enemy; his eye will behold us and his hand will reach us, in the thickeſt coverings of darkneſs, Pſal. 139. 9, 11. Where he is not accepted as the authour of Reconciliation in his own way, he will be the author of Judgment in his own way. If the ſatisfaction of his juſtice which he hath provided, be ſlighted, that juſtice will be ſatisfied upon our own perſons. If we deny him his honour by the ſufferings of Chriſt, he will vindicate it by the ſufferings of our own perſons. The Law was in full force againſt us, whereby God hath obliged himſelf to inflict death upon the ſinner, *Gen.*2.17. 'Tis his Law upon record, that damnation ſhall be inflicted upon every one that believes not. There is no diſcovery out of Chriſt, but of wrath prepared againſt the day of wrath: The day wherein God and his unreconcil'd enemies ſhall meet together, is called a day of wrath: Rom. 2. 5, 6. a day wherein there ſhall be an appearance of wrath only to ſuch. The Angel that hath a Rainbow about his head, hath feet as pillars of Fire, Revel. 10. 1. to conſume them that refuſe the Peace. Conſider then, we are ſunk under infinite guilt, and cannot riſe up without an Almighty hand; we are defiled with an univerſal filth, and cannot be cleanſed without infinite purity; ſin is ſtrong in its accuſations, our Righteouſneſs imperfect in its defence, and can make no compenſation for the wrongs by the other; our duties are beſpotted, and are not fit for a pure eye. An eternal weight of wrath is due to all thoſe; there is but one way of eſcape which God hath provided. But one City of refuge whereby we may eſcape the edge of the revenging Sword: The Sword of divine juſtice reaches all that are without this ſhelter, toucheth none that are under Chriſts wings, but like a conſuming fire devours every thing elſe. We cannot perpetuate the War againſt him, but to our own ſorrow; one ſpark of wrath will be enough to conſume ſtubble; death will put a period to all Treaties.

[5.] All other ways of reconcilement are inſufficient. To pretend to any other ways is an injury to divine Wiſdom, as though his contrivance were not ſufficient for the Creatures reſtoration and ſupport; divine mercy will claſp no man in its arms with a wrong to any one Attribute, nor to the diſhonour of Chriſt. It will therefore never receive any, who denies Chriſt and the efficacy of his Prieſthood. Men naturally are ſtudious of making God compenſation, applauding themſelves in their own inventions, and ſatisfactions of their own coyning, unwilling to acquieſce in the wiſdom and will of God. The two great things God would advance in the world by this grace, is his Wiſdom and Authority: Theſe are the things men oppoſe, his Wiſdom by the pride of reaſon, his Authority by the perverſity of Will. But conſider, do we need Reconciliation or no? If we need it not, how came we Friends with God ſince we were born Enemies; if we do need it, is it not ſafer to enter into the terms God hath propoſed, wherewith he is ſatisfied, than to ſtand to our falſe, or at beſt but uncertain methods? The ſafeſt way is always the choice of wiſe men: Let us not be fools then in refuſing the Goſpel method, unleſs we can meet with any thing that hath as fair a plea to divine Revelation. Had we all the Angels on our ſide, and all the men on Earth to intreat for us, it would be ineffectual. God never was in them reconciling the World; this one Mediator whom God hath appointed, hath done and can do that, which neither men upon Earth, nor Angels and Saints in Heaven can do by their joynt interceſſions. Place no confidence then in your own humiliations, ſervices, duties, God never was in thoſe reconciling any man: all that is done without faith, is but Enmity, and that in the beſt part, your minds, Rom. 8. Whatſoever fair colours they are painted with, they cannot pleaſe God. The Scripture ſettles an impoſſibility on the head of all of them, Heb. 11. 6. without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, to gain or keep his favour. Were your Righteouſneſs of the higheſt elevation, it is but a Creature, and therefore not the object of truſt. Though Adam while he continued in his natural Righteouſneſs, might have entered it as a plea, yet becauſe mutable, it was no fit object of truſt for him. But ſince the fall all pleas of a fleſhly corrupted Righteouſneſs are overruled in the Court of Heaven. Abſolute Mercy without Faith in Chriſt cannot ſave you. As God could not after the ſanction of the Law, in regard of his Truth pardon the violations of it without a ſatisfaction, ſo ſince he hath ſettled the way of Reconciliation by Faith in the Blood of Chriſt, he cannot upon the ſame ſcore of his Truth, ſave any in a way of abſolute mercy; eſpecially when that way which he hath appointed, is refuſed. As it would be againſt his Truth, againſt his Juſtice, ſo alſo againſt the honour of his obedient Son; for if he be at peace with one man by abſolute mercy, why might he not upon the ſame terms, have reconcil'd others, and then what need of the ſufferings of his only Son to make up the breach? If any thing elſe therefore be choſen as the way of this peace, God at the hour of judgment may remit us to our Righteouſneſs, ſervices, carnal confidences, ſaying go to the reconcilers that you have choſen, and ſee whether they can make your peace; as he did to the Iſraelites, Judges 10. 14. Go cry to the Gods which you have choſen, let them deliver you: a dreadful, but a juſt ſpeech.

[6.] God ſeeks it at our hands and is willing to receive us. He is not only a God in Chriſt reconciling the World, but he is a God in his Ambaſſadors intreating: As though God himſelf did beſeech you by us, ver. 20. after the Text. This is the tenour of his proclamation, Be you reconciled to God. If he had not deſir'd it, he would not have ſpent ſo many thoughts about it, and been at ſuch expence to effect it. He was not bound to it; for he might have left Adam to ſink into the death he had merited, without expoſing his Son to a death he had not deſerved, and contracted a neceſſity of, only as our ſurety: He was no more bound to ſeek out Adam and make him a promiſe of Redemption, than he was bound to make him a Creature. He might have rais'd a new World, and have filled it with new inhabitants. It muſt be ſomething of a vaſt concernment to us, that God hath been ſo buſie about, and ſo deſirous of our acceptance of. Doth God ſeek to us to receive wealth and worldly honours? No; this therefore muſt be a thing of higher value. A God ſeeks to us, who is infinitely more glorious than we are vile: A God who never did us the leaſt wrong, but hath born with many injuries from us: A God who could as eaſily ſend us into Hell with his breath, as breathe out a kind invitation to us: A God who needs our Friendſhip no more than he fears our enmity: A God no more benefited by it than the Sun by darting a beam upon a grain of Sand. Sure that ſoul never was ſenſible of the miſery his War with God hath ſunk him into, who refuſeth to receive the peace he offers; nor can without an unconceivable ſhame, look God in the face at the laſt day after ſo notorious a rejecting an intreating God. He ſeeks it this day, perhaps he will not ſeek it at our hands to morrow. There is a day wherein we may know the things that concern our peace, Luke 19. 41. When the day is over, peace will not return. There is a day wherein he will pour out his wrath upon the unbelieving World: While he is yet a great way off and his Thunders at a diſtance, he ſends an Embaſſy of Peace, Luke 14. 33. He yet ſeeks to his ſworn Enemies, and thoſe that were in league with Satan: You may be in league with me, I have not yet ſhut the door. Liſten, do you not hear Gods voice in the goſpel? he ſhuts out none that do not ſhut out themſelves. What a guilt will the refuſal amount to, when we are to anſwer for not onely the firſt publication, but repeated offers? Beſides, he is willing to receive us into favour, more willing to embrace us than we to receive him. The eternal motions in his Heart which gave birth to this gracious deſign, are of the ſame force, and ſtrength ſtill: he can never forget them. As the remembrance of the years of the right hand of the moſt high is our comfort in times of trouble, ſo Gods remembrance of the years of his own right hand, the workings of his own Heart, hath the like force to excite him to a reception of us, as they had to commiſſion Chriſt for us. He never broke his word; and leſs will he do it at the upſhot of all, when his people are almoſt gathered, the World near its period, and the Proclamation of the Goſpel ready to be taken down and folded up for ever: He will not at the end be worſe than he hath been all along. Let us be as willing to be at peace with him, as he is to be at peace with us. God ſets us a pattern, he ſeeks to us, 'tis an imitation of God to ſeek to him.

2. Exhortation. Is God in Chriſt reconciling the World, then we muſt be at enmity with ſin. God was in Chriſt reconciling ſinners, not ſin. God and ſin are irreconcileable Enemies, ſo that where there is a peace with one, there muſt be a War with the other. Fire and Water may ſooner agree than God and Sin, than a peace with God and a peace with ſin. The Traytor may be reconcil'd to the Prince, and the Treaſon as hateful to him as before. This is the beſt evidence to any that he is actually reconcil'd, when he hates that which made the firſt ſeparation. Chriſt expiated ſin, not encouraged it; he died to make your peace, but he died to make you holy, Tit. 2. 14. To purifie a people to himſelf. The deſign of God in the manifeſtation of Chriſt in the fleſh, was to deſtroy the works of the Devil, 1 Joh. 3. 8. The chief work of the Devil, was to enter man in a League with himſelf and rebellion againſt God. God aim'd at the death of our ſins, when he aim'd at the life of our Souls. The Ends of Chriſts Death cannot be ſeparated: he is no Atoner, where he is not a Refiner. 'Tis as certain as any word the mouth of God hath ſpoken, that there is no peace to the wicked. A beſpotted Conſcience, and an impure Will keep up the Amity with Satan, and Enmity with God. He that allows himſelf in any ſin, deprives himſelf of the benefit of Reconciliation. This Reconciliation muſt be mutual; as God lays down his wrath againſt us, ſo we muſt throw down our Armes againſt him. As there was a double Enmity, one rooted in Nature, another declar'd by wicked Works; or rather, one Enmity in its root, and another in its Exerciſe, Col. 1. 21. ſo there muſt be an alteration of ſtate, and an alteration of Acts. The End of Chriſts Death was to Reconcile God to us, and bring us back to God: We are not therefore link't in a peace with him, unleſs we be transform'd into the Image of his Son. How can we expect to be taken into the boſom of God, when we every day wilfully defile our Souls? Can familiarity with God be kept up, when daily bars are laid in the way? Why was God in Chriſt Reconciling the World? Becauſe he was a Holy, as well as a gracious God; and to ſhow his deteſtation of Sin, as well as his Affection to the Creature. Shall this encourage any practice againſt the holineſs of God? God is of as pure eyes, and can as little endure to behold iniquity, ſince the Reconciliation, as before. God was ſanctified in Chriſt when he was reconciling the World in him, and he will be ſanctified in us if we have intereſt in this Reconciliation. All Gods Acts about Chriſt are the higheſt obligation to be at enmity with that, for which the Son of God was appointed, and made a ſacrifice: to receive encouragement from hence to ſin more freely, is to act Judas his part with Gods Grace, and betray it to ſerve our luſts. Be afraid therefore to offend God, not ſo much becauſe of his power to hurt you, as becauſe of his love whereby he hath oblig'd you. The peace was broken by the diſobedience of Adam: It was reſtor'd by the obedience of Chriſt. But our Obedience is neceſſary to the joyful fruits of it. Great peace have they which love thy law, Pſal. 119. 165.

3. Be Induſtrious and Affectionate in the ſervice of God. Hath God been in Chriſt reconciling the World, manifeſting his deſire for it, and Affection to it, by ſuch various Acts; and ſhall we put God off with a little ſervice, who hath not put us off with a ſcanty Grace? God hath done his utmoſt to engage our affection and encourage us in the choiceſt Services: there could not be an higher way to procure it, and deſerve it of us. The view of the Creatures, and Gods goodneſs in them, raiſes a common love to God in the more ingenuous Natural Minds. To what heights ſhould our love aſcend, who have ſuch ſteps to mount by? A weak love is leſs than is due to him, who hath diſcover'd ſuch an immenſity to us. Shall we return not a drop, or but a drop, for an Ocean? How much ſhould we think our ſelves oblig'd to a Prince, who ſhould but ſtop a torrent of Legal penalties deſerv'd by us? God hath done this and more. How ſhould we combine all our Thoughts and Affections together to ſerve that God acceptably, who hath made all his Thoughts conſpire to reduce us honourably, and ſucceſsfully? I am the Lord thy God which hath brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of Bondage, is the Preface to the Decalogue, as an incitement of them to a choice reſpect to all his precepts. I am the God reconciling you in Chriſt, is the Tenour of the Goſpel; and much more an incitement to ſervice, by how much the deliverance in the Antitype, exceeds that in the Type; this being Spiritual and Eternal, that Temporal. If you are actually reconcil'd, ſerve God as your friend. As God hath given you an higher ſtate, give him a greater honour. Do all things out of love to God as reconcil'd, without any baſe ends and ſordid deſigns. God had no other End in being the Author of Peace, but his own glory, and your good; have then no other end, but Gods glory in your own welfare, advancing further to him and enjoying his reconcil'd Favour. Serve him with a delight in him; a dull ſlaviſh Spirit becomes not any in his approach to ſo hearty a Friend. Every duty ſhould be perform'd with a triumph and glory in the God of Salvation, Hab. 3. 18. I will joy in the God of my Salvation. God would then delight in us; next to the delight he hath in his reconciling Son, he hath the choiceſt delight in his reconcil'd Servants, and ſervices ſpringing up from a ſence of his love to them.

4. Let all our Approaches to God be begun and attended with a ſence of this. God in all his communications to his people acted as a reconciled God: we ſhould eye him ſo in all our approaches to him. As there is not one Mercy, one act of Grace God ſhows to us, but ſprings from this reſtor'd Affection; ſo not any Duty we offer up to God, but ſhould riſe from a ſence of it: Whatſoever is not by and through Chriſt, is not accepted as a Duty. This conſideration before all Addreſſes, would animate them with all thoſe Graces neceſſary to be acted in them. It would make us humble to conſider what we were, and how freely God reduc'd us. It would make us believing with an holy boldneſs; what deſpondency can there be, when God hath given ſo many tokens of his heartineſs in it? It would make us earneſt: it would be a fetching fire from Heaven for the enflaming our Souls. Earneſtneſs is grounded upon Hope; what greater Foundation for Hope, than the conſideration that this was Gods ſole Act? Think before every Duty, of the great love God bears to Chriſt as Mediator, greater than to all Men and Angels; this will be a ground of Confidence. For the love of God to Chriſt as Mediator, was with reſpect to all that believe in him. Think much of the Virtue of Chriſts Death, wherewith he ſprinkled the Throne of God, and turn'd the ſeat of Juſtice into a Throne of Grace. 'Tis the beſt way to receive anſwers; by pleading this, we mind God of all his engagements. Every Act about Chriſt is an argument fit to be uſed in Prayer. God will never deny his own Acts, nor the ends of them, which was to make a way for communicating himſelf to his Creatures. God is only in Chriſt entertaining us, as well as reconciling us. Let us not lift up an eye to him without Faith in him as a God in Chriſt, and carry this atoning bloud in the hands of Faith in every Act of Communion with him.

5. Look for Grace and Spiritual ſtrength from God in Chriſt. The Conduct of Mercy and Grace is unſtopt by Chriſt to flow freely down to man. This is the Foundation of the Regeneration of any Soul, 2 Cor. 5. 17, 18. All things are become new, and all things are of God who hath reconcil'd us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt. Having ſpoken of the new Creation, ver. 17. he lays down the true Cauſe, God; the Foundation, the Reconciliation by Chriſt. All things are of God, all the powerful effects and operations of the Goſpel in the hearts of men are from God as a Reconciler by Chriſt, not from God as Creator. The deep meditation of and cloſing with the promiſe of God in and through Chriſt brings Grace into the heart, not a conſideration of Gods precepts, but of Gods promiſes. The Application of the reconciling love of God in Chriſt by Faith, is attended with a powerful Benediction of the Spirit, pulling up the foundations of the Enmity on our parts; the Spirit is receiv'd by the Preaching of the Goſpel, the Meditations of the Goſpel, the Applications of the Goſpel; the Spirit is convey'd with thoſe, not with the Precepts of the Law, Gal. 3. 5. Men begin at the wrong end, they would riſe from Obedience to Faith, and deal with God as if he were to be appeas'd and ſatisfied by them. But begin at Faith, a firm aſſent, a full conſent to the Goſpel, and the offers of Redemption, and go down by virtue of that to Obedience; 'tis by caſting our ſelves upon God in Chriſt, that we receive Vigour for all Spiritual Obedience. The Spirit of holineſs is the principle whereby we obey, not the effect of our Obedience. Chriſt is firſt Redemption, then Sanctification. God a God of Peace, and then a God of Grace; we ſhould look upon God as a God of Peace, and under that

Title

Title implore him for increaſe of habitual Grace. As a God of Peace, he works in us that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight. Heb. 13. 20, 21. Our Sanctification depends upon our Juſtification. God promiſ'd to be as a dew to his people under the Goſpel, Hoſ. 4. 5. Dew deſcends from a clear ſky, and Grace from a reconcil'd God. As God in Adam had convey'd a natural Righteouſneſs to his Poſterity, had Adam ſtood; ſo God in Chriſt only conveys a Spiritual Righteouſneſs, to Chriſts Spiritual offspring.

6. When any riſing of Enmity is in the Soul, go to God in Chriſt. As God was in Chriſt reconciling the World, ſo he is in Chriſt reconciling a Soul after the readmiſſion of guilt through Temptation. Not that the guilt of the whole Maſs of ſins of a Believer returns upon his Fall; but a particular guilt of that ſin he hath committed lyes upon him, for which he muſt have a freſh application of Reconciling Mercy. He muſt go to God in Chriſt for this; as the firſt Application was made in and through Chriſt, ſo muſt the ſecond, and third, as often as we need it even in our daily pardons. Chriſt ſits an Officer in Heaven to this purpoſe, and God hath conſtituted him an Officer to this end, and is in him in his Interceſſion accepting it, as well as in his firſt ſatisfaction. The Corinthians the Apoſtle writes to, ſome of them at leaſt were reconcil'd, yet he beſeecheth them to be reconcil'd to God, i. e. renew their Reconciliation upon every new breach, and regain the favour of God which they had forfeited by their ſins, for which he had reprov'd them in the former Epiſtle. This muſt be ſued out every day. What was the Foundation of the firſt peace, is the foundation of the renewals of it: the ſame courſe you took at the firſt, will be ſucceſsful for the ſecond. God was not out of Chriſt in the firſt, and he will not be out of Chriſt, whenever there is any need. As God was willing and deſirous to make Reconciliation by the bloud of Chriſt, when all your ſins lay before him with their crimſom aggravations, much more will he renew it upon a particular fall. But he may hide his Face, till you ſue out a pardon upon his own Proclamation, and Contrivance; and if it be a preſumptuous ſin, he may deny you the comfort of this peace a long time, perhaps as long as you live. Let not any preſume upon this, for it belongs not to any man that lives in a courſe of known ſin, which is inconſiſtent with a reconciled ſtate.

7. How contented ſhould thoſe that are Reconcil'd be in every condition? The peace of God ſhould bear rule in our hearts, to compoſe them upon any emergency, Col. 3. 15. This will keep the heart and mind from ſollicitouſneſs, Phil. 4. 6, 7. this will make us deſpiſe the Promiſes of the World alluring us, and the Threatnings of the World to ſcare us. This peace ſhould be the guard of our Souls, and will render us happy, when the World may account us moſt miſerable, and therefore ſhould render us contented. If you would not have the Riches and Honours of the World without it, you may well bear the Scorns and Reproaches of the World with it. The whole World could not ſecure you, if you had a war with God, nor defend you from the Arrows of his wrath. But ſince you have peace with God, you are mounted above the enmities of the World, and your ſpirits ſhould be guarded by it from any tumultuous paſſions. If the Wrath of God be ceas'd towards us, we may well bear the ſtroaks of a Father, ſince we are not like to feel his Sword as a Judge. How chearfully may we kiſs the afflicting hand of God, when he is at peace with us? Look upon all your Mercies too (though they are of a meaner bulk outwardly than others) as flowing from this Fountain, which may make you not only contented with them, but highly value them. It gives a ſweeter reliſh to Mercy than Adam could have: he had the goodneſs of God, but not the goodneſs of a reconciled Father, while he was in Innocence. If this makes heaven the ſweeter, it ſhould make Mercies here more ſavoury.

8. Let us then be Reconcilable to others. Not only where we offer, but from whom we receive an injury. Gods Reconciliation ſhould be our rule in dealing with others. Hard hearts and uncharitable diſpoſitions are unlike to God, who had a heart full of tenderneſs to them, who will not part with a grain of their right to their brethren, when God parted with his Son to work their peace with him; and had he not been more forward in it than they, they had periſhed for ever. God ſets his own Actions to us as a pattern of ours to others, Luk. 6. 36. Be ye therefore merciful as your father alſo is merciful; if we are irreconcilable to others, we are not imitators of God, but reject the nobleſt pattern, and diſcover no ſence of the kindneſs of God to us. Since God hath made Chriſt a propitiation for ſin, the Apoſtle makes this inference, that if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another, 1 Joh. 4. 10, 11. Did God ſend his ſon out of his Boſom, and vail his glory to be at peace with us, and intreat us to accept his Favour; and ſhall we be upon every occaſion at Swords point with our brother? Such a diſpoſition is againſt the whole Tenour of the Goſpel, and a keeping up a wolviſh and brutiſh Nature againſt the deſign of the Goſpel Adminiſtration, Iſa. 11. 6. Chriſt came to ſlay the Enmity between God and us, between Jew and Gentile; 'tis a croſſing the deſign of God, to preſerve Enmity between Chriſtian and Chriſtian; 'tis to keep up the partition Wall, and fruſtrate (what in us lyes) the End of Chriſts Death, which was to demoliſh it. The peace God wrought was a matter of Grace, the peace we owe to our Brother is a matter of Debt; 'tis due to the command of God; God firſt laid the ſcene of our Reconciliation, not aſſiſted by the counſels of others; not ſought to by our ſelves, but ſeeking us. Our doing the like to others is an imitation of God; whereas to be implacable in revenge, is to partake of the Devils Nature.

9. Glorifie God for this. Since God ſends out ſuch a bleſſing to us, we ſhould ſend out loud prayers to him *. Heaven ſmiles upon Earth, and Earth ſhould bleſs Heaven. Glorifie God as the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; though we have all immediately from Chriſt, yet Chriſt hath all from the Father. He is the propitiation for our ſins, but he was appointed by the Father. He came to Redeem, but he was ſent by God upon that Errand. He paid our debts as a ſurety, but he was accepted by God. He was a Mediator to bring us to God, but he was commiſſioned by God to that End. What a love did God retain to his creatures, though he abominated their ſins, and in the midſt of his indignation againſt their Iniquities, had bowels for their perſons! How did God forecaſt for us, when we were priſoners in the pit wherein was no water, Zach. 9. 11. the captives of the mighty, and the prey of the terrible? Iſa. 49. 25. When the Law of God was againſt us, and his Truth taking part with his Law; his Wiſdom and Mercy found a way to preſerve his Truth, and ſatisfie the curſes of the Law, that we might enjoy the bleſſings of the Goſpel. when we could not in the leaſt deſerve it, unleſs peeviſhneſs and perverſity, treachery and diſloyalty, weakneſs and wilfulneſs could paſs for allurements; we had then been unconceivable Meriters. Such free and full compaſſion deſerves our thankfulneſs, tho' we could not merit his Grace. 'Tis not a contracted, half-made, or oppreſſive peace, 'tis an extenſive, tender and abundant peace, like a river and a flowing ſtream, a peace whereby we are born in his boſom, Iſa. 66. 12. How ſhould we adore the depth of that Wiſdom which found a refuge for us, when heaven and earth were at war with us! Adore his goodneſs, that when we were no ſooner born, but we were the objects of a curſing Law, the ſcorn of a malicious Devil, our Jeſus ſhould be ſent to pacifie the Law, and ſhame the Devil our Enemy. Angels glorifie him for this peace; ſhould we be outſtript by being leſs concern'd in it? God is only praiſed in and through Chriſt; God and Chriſt are joyn'd together in the Saints praiſe, Rev. 5. 13. Bleſſing, honour, glory, and power, be unto him that ſits upon the throne, and to the Lamb, for ever and ever; and ſo they ſhould in ours. How beautiful will this whole work appear, when the whole methods of it come to be read in Heaven in the Original Copy? when they ſhall be ſeen in the Face, in the Boſom of God in fair and plainer Characters? To Conclude. If all the ſparks that ever leapt out of any Fire ſince the Creation, and all the drops of Rain that have fell upon the World, were ſo many Angelical Tongues, their Praiſe would come ſhort of the Exceſs of this Love. Let the Praiſe of God for this, be not the buſineſs of a day, but the work of our lives, ſince Eternity is too ſhort to admire it.

A DISCOURSE OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

JOHN XVII. III.

And this is Life Eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

THIS Chapter contains Christs last Prayer with his Disciples, after his Farewel Sermon, which began after Judas his Departure, Joh. 13. 31. and ends at the end of the 16 Chapter. The design of his Sermon, and that of his Prayer, was one and the same: His Discourse to them was, that they might have peace in him, Joh. 16. 33. * That they might acquiesce in him for Peace with God, that Peace of Conscience was only to be possessed by the knowledg and love of Christ. His Prayer for them in their hearing, was that they might have a firm and full joy, ver. 13. that they might have an Antidote against all their Fears and Troubles they should meet with in the World, and a strong Foundation for their own Supplications to God. Zanchy calls it, the foundation of the Church from the beginning of the World to the end of it; it always had, and alwayes will have its efficacy for every Believer. 'Tis a copy left upon the Earth, of what he doth intercede for as an Advocate in Heaven. By an inspection into it, we may know what Christ is doing above; for it was, that his People might have a full joy, a strong Cordial in all Afflictions, Desertions, Temptations.

* Ferus.

Some think it to be the same with that prayer in the Garden. * But that opinion hath no firm foundation,

* Gerhard Harm. cap. 180.

(1.) The Matter of the Prayer is different: In this our Saviour prays for his own Glorification, for Assistance in his approaching Passion, and an unlooſing afterwards the Bands of Death by an happy Resurrection. In that he prays for a removal of the Cup which was brew'd for him.

(2.) The Gesture is different; In this he lifts up his Eyes to Heaven, in token of a Confidence in his Father, for the answer of his Prayer, with such confidence as he hath in Heaven in his interceſſion. In the Garden he fell proſtrate upon the Earth, Matth. 26. 39. He fell on his face and prayed. His eyes were towards the Earth.

(3.) His Company were not the ſame; in this his Diſciples were with him, in that he withdrew from his Diſciples taking only three with him, Matth. 26. 37. and preſently went aſide from them alſo by himſelf, ver. 39. This Prayer they all heard, the other they did not, for ſleep had poſſeſſed them.

(4.) In this he Prayes as Mediator, and pleads the terms of the mediatory Covenant, which had been agreed upon before his coming into the World. In that he Prays more like a man from the ſtrugglings of the Fleſh as though there had been a conteſt between humane Nature and his Mediatory office; in the one he declares his Deity, in the other evidenceth his humanity in the infirmities of the Fleſh; in this his ſoul was free from diſturbance, in that his ſoul was ſorrowful and very heavy even unto Death, Matth. 26. 37, 38. He Pray'd then as one ſtanding charg'd with all our ſins which made him bow his head to the ground, he prayeth here as one that hath ſatisfied for our ſins, triumph'd over his Enemies and performed his Fathers Will, John 17. 4. I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do. In fine, This Prayer in regard of the matter, he doth ſtill purſue in Heaven, the other Petition he never did afterwards, nor ever ſhall reaſſume into his Lips.

If any part of Scripture be to be magnified above another, this ſeems to claim the preheminence, it being the breathing out of Chriſts heart before his departure, for the comfort of his Diſciples, and the ſucceeding Church to the end of the World; a ſtanding monument of his whole mediatory deſign and his unalterable love.

Verſe 1. Theſe words ſpake Jeſus and lift up his eyes to Heaven, and ſaid, Father, the hour is come, Glorifie thy Son that thy Son may alſo Glorifie thee. * Chriſt firſt acted with man in the name of God by teaching, he now acts with God in the name of man by Praying. * 'Tis a miraculous Prayer in the Perſon of Chriſt, who is eſſentially one with the Father to whom he prays: Perſonally one with the Son of man who Prayes here to the Father.

* Illyric. in loc.

Father.] Not our Father, as he had taught us to Pray, but Father, to ſhew that the paternity of the Father to him was in another manner than that to his people, he was the natural Son of God, Believers Adopted ones.

Thy Son,] In a way of eminency and peculiarity above others; thy Son, by eternal generation: Thy Son in his humanity by the grace of perſonal Union.

The hour is come.] The hour of my paſſion, the hour of thy ſatisfaction, the hour of thy expectation, the hour of my victory and thy glory. I am coming to the laſt upſhot of my humiliation, I have managed an obedience to thee hitherto with all care and diligence, I am now come to perfect it by my death, I will not decline the laſt act of it, decline not thou, Oh Father, the glorifying of me, while I ſtand as the but of all thy wrath for the ſins of men.

Glorifie thy Son.] Glorifie him in his death, by accepting it as the death of thy Son for the ſins of the World: Glorifie him in his death by manifeſting at that time that I am thy Son. God did ſo by miraculous Teſtimonies of his innocency in the time of his paſſion, by rending of the Temples vail, obſcurity of the Sun, quaking of the Earth, and the cleaving of the Rocks, which made the Centurion that guarded him, pronounce him to be truly the Son of God, Matth. 27. 54.

Glorifie him in a Reſurrection, Glorifie thy Son in his Deity by a manifeſtation of it; glorifie thy Son in his humanity by conferring new endowments of honour and immortality upon it. He prays here for a manifeſtation of the glory of his Deity which had been obſcur'd, for an addition of glory to his humanity which had not been yet enjoyed, by a Reſurrection and Exaltation of it to the right hand of the Father. He prays for a manifeſtation of his Deity. Glorifie thy Son; he was the Son of God by eternal generation, 'tis the glory of his Deity therefore which is here deſir'd by him. Not the eſſential glory of the Deity, for that could not be interrupted. Not any addition to it, for being infinite, he was not capable of it. But a manifeſtation of it: Not ſimply in it ſelf, but in his humanity, which had been vail'd by the Fleſh ever ſince he emptyed himſelf into it. He prays to be glorified in that ſtate wherein he prays, which was a ſtate of Union with the humane nature.

nature. His eſſential glory could ſuffer no detriment, his manifeſtative did; as the ſins of men are ſaid to diſhonour God, not that they detract from the glory of his eſſence, which cannot ſuffer any diminution by the ſins of men, but as they deny or obſcure the manifeſtation of his glory: The Sun ſuffers no loſs of light in its body by the vail of a thick cloud, but the brightneſs of his beams is maskt. As the Father was to be glorified by Chriſt, ſo was Chriſt to be glorified by the Father; now the Father could not be glorified by the Son in a way of addition, but manifeſtation, cauſing the glory of God to break out upon the World, which had ſo long been obſcur'd by an univerſal Idolatry; he glorified the Father by a manifeſtation of his Name, verſe 4. and in like manner is glorifyed by the Father in the manifeſtation of his Deity.

* That Chriſt prayes here for the glory of his Deity as well as of his humanity, is evident. Becauſe, he prayes as Mediator and Prieſt deſiring a Mediatory glory; but he was Mediator and Prieſt according to his Divine as well as humane Nature, and therefore deſires, that he might be known to the World, not only to be a juſt and innocent man, but the eternal Son of God, the Redeemer of the World, the expiator of ſins, and in that work infinitely delightful to the Father. Glorifie thy Son,] Glorifie him as thy Son, that as thy Son he may glorifie thee. The Son of God was in the World as a great light in a dark Lanthorn, clouded and covered with clay, that though the Candle burn'd, it did not appear but through ſome crannies; he deſires that this thick miſt might be diſperſed, that the glory of his Divinity might ſhine forth in his humanity as a Candle through poliſht glaſs. The glory of Chriſt was to be manifeſted to be the Son of God, John 1. 14. We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father. A glory in his Reſurrection, his Aſcenſion, in the miſſion of the Spirit, which declared him to be no other than the only Son of God: and ſo ver. 22. of this chapter is to be underſtood, The Glory which thou gaveſt me, I have given them, as it is my glory to be the Son of God, ſo I have given them this glory to be the Sons of God by Adoption, that they may be one as we are one, in the ſame relation of Sonſhip, though in a different manner.

* Zanch. de tribus Elohim part. 1. l. 4. c. 16.

His Petition for this glory he urgeth by two Arguments.

(1) One in verſe 1. That thy Son alſo may glorifie thee. The glory of the Father was concerned in it, whoſe Juſtice, Wiſdom, Love (and all the Attributes ſo ſignally manifeſted in Redemption) had lain under as great a diſguiſe without the glory of Chriſt, as the Deity of the Son did under the vail of his Fleſh.

(2*) Another, taken from the happineſs and Salvation of the Elect, verſe 2. as thou haſt given him power over all Fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal Life to as many as thou haſt given him. Unleſs the humanity had been glorified by a Reſurrection, there would have been no aſſurance that the debt had been ſatisfied, and no ſure ground of Faith: unleſs he had been Exalted to the right hand of God as an Advocate, there had been no ſecurity for our debts. His Reſurrection was neceſſary to make men Believers for what was paſt, his Exaltation was neceſſary to make them comfortable Believers for the time to come: And unleſs his Divine Nature had been manifeſted in the miſſion of the Spirit, and the collation of miraculous gifts; there had been no foundation for the propagation of the Doctrine of Redemption, and ſo that glorious work had lain wrapt up from humane view. The other was neceſſary as a ground of Faith, and this was neceſſary to the declaration of the Doctrine of Faith, and an incentive to the embracing of it. Since he was ſhortly to dye and be executed under the notion of a Criminal, a Blaſphemer, and a Wicked man; if he were not rais'd again, not one would Believe in him as Mediator, and ſo the glory of the Father and the Salvation of the Elect, had ſunk with the glory of the Son.

* Zanch. ut ſupra.

Obſerve.

1. The unexpreſſible care of Chriſt for the comfort of his people before he went out of the World. He had Preacht to them, he would Pray for them in their hearing, that their joy might be full. He could not manifeſt his care in an higher manner than by uſing his Power with his Father for their good; here he gives an aſſurance of the efficacy of his mediation, the certain terms wherein he ſtood with the Father. They might before have queſtioned the truth of thoſe things, which he had ſaid unto them; but there was no room for any doubt, when they find him a little before his death aſſerting the ſame things to his Father, begging the accompliſhment of them; howſoever ſome of them might ſuſpect the declarations of a man, they would not ſuſpect his appeals to God.

2. The conſideration of Gods being a Father is the higheſt ground of confidence in Prayer, and a ſtrong Argument to excite the kindneſs of God towards us. Father, Glorifie thy Son. 'Tis a glory Chriſt hath purchaſed for, and given to every Believer, to call God Father, John 20. 17. My Father and your Father; before his Paſſion it was, I go to the Father, now your Father as well as mine. Not our Father, but my Father and your Father, mine by nature, yours by grace; yet as really yours by grace, as mine by nature. Our addreſſes are to be to God as a Father, ſince the relation is real; really purchaſed, really confirmed. Members ſhould imitate the head: uſe their priviledges, ſince the Redeemer hath taken our infirmities that we might partake of his dignity. With what confidence may a child ask, with what bowels will a Father give? Chriſt had the ſenſe of his Sonſhip when he pray'd, and we ſhould have the ſenſe of our Adoption.

3. The paſſion of Chriſt was the determination of God. The hour is come, the time pitcht to a moment, the hour and the work of the hour agreed on and determin'd, between the Father and the Son in an Eternal Councel; all the conſultations of the Jews againſt him were ſucceſsleſs, till this hour. Times and events are in the hands of God.

4. Chriſt was a voluntary Redeemer. The hour is come. I am ready to perform what thou haſt enjoyned and I have promis'd; He ſought no ſhelter from ſuffering; he expreſs'd here no ſorrow for it, no grief at it; he lookes beyond the hour of ſuffering to the hour of glory. We ſhould be voluntary ſubjects, and look through the Cloud of ſuffering to the glory of the Crown.

5. The full aſſurance of obtaining what we want, muſt not chill our ſupplications for it. Who can have greater aſſurance of ſupply, than our Redeemer had of aſſiſtance in his task, and Exaltation after it? Enſur'd by the promiſes to him, back't by the Oath of God that he ſhould be a Prieſt for ever, of which he had at this time a ſenſe and impreſſion upon his Heart, John 13. 1, 3. He knew that he ſhould depart out of this World unto the Father, and knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, that he was come from God and went to God, yet he pray; for that glory. Promiſes are not damps but incentives and guides to prayer, they are to enflame us, not to cool us. How can we pray in Faith without a promiſe which is the ground of Faith, ſince Prayer is nothing but a putting promiſes in ſuit? Precepts command us to Pray, and Promiſes direct us what to Pray for, with hopes of ſucceſs. The Promiſes of a ſeed to Chriſt ſtand firm, yet he is now in Heaven an Advocate interceding for it. As Chriſt though aſſur'd, hath nothing without asking, ſo neither can his Members. Promiſes encourage to put in our claim to them, and not our waving it. When Daniel knew that the term of the Churches Captivity was near expir'd according to the promiſe of God, he buckles more to Prayer, Daniel 9. 2, 3.

6. The Glory of God muſt be principally in our minds, and neareſt our Hearts in all our ſupplications. Chriſt Prayes firſt for his own glory, but as a means for the glory of his Father, before he Prays particularly for the good of the Church. Glorifie thy Son, that thy Son alſo may Glorifie thee; and only for ſuch a glory for himſelf, whence the glory of the Father might ſpring with a greater brightneſs upon the Son; for by the raiſing Chriſt, and manifeſting the glory of his Deity, the Father would be glorified in full declarations of himſelf, as the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Author of the great Redemption, as a God that ſo loved the World as to ſend his Son into it for the Redemption of it. Hallowed be thy Name, is the firſt Petition in the Lords Prayer. The glory of God muſt weigh more in our thoughts than our private intereſt: His Glory is to be our end in our common actions, 1 Corinthians 10. chapter 31. verſe much more in acts of Religious Worſhip. If another end be higher in our Hearts, in our Prayers, though we Pray to God, we really Wor-

Worship an Idol, viz. Self; though God be the object, yet he is not the end. We must seek to God for all blessings with the same end for which God gives them, he gives us the highest for his glory, Eph. 1. 6. He hath accepted us in his beloved to the praise of the Glory of his Grace. We must beg for self subordinately, but for Gods glory ultimately: Our Saviour begg'd glory for himself, that he might return glory to his Father. To beg any thing for our selves principally, is the Prayer of some Lust, Ambition or Covetousness; to beg any thing for Gods glory is a Prayer of grace like that of our Saviours.

7. The Glory of the Father and the Son are linkt together. The Father cannot be glorified without the Son, nor the Son without the Father. They are in Conjunction in all the actions of Redemption, and therefore in the glory redounding from it. The Father glorified the Son when he declared him to be Saviour of the World; and by this declaration was the Father discover'd to be full of bowels to the World. The Sun in the Heavens is not glorified but in his beams, and the beam is not glorified but by the communication of light from the Sun, what glory the Sun hath is discovered in the beam, what glory the beam hath redounds to the Sun. The Father was Glorified in all his acts which concern'd the glory of Christ: His Wisdom in finding out so full and efficacious a remedy, his Justice in his death, his power in the sustentation of him in his sufferings, and his Resurrection from the grave, his Veracity in every circumstance which had been foretold, his Love and Kindness in the mission of the Spirit, to spread his wings over the World, who was before confin'd to the Jews. As the glory of both is linkt in it self, it must be linkt in our services, we must honour both, one as the object of Worship, the other as the medium: The Father as the Rector, Christ as the Embassador; as the Father is not glorified by Christ, but by first glorifying Christ, so neither is the Father glorified by us without our glorifying Christ first by Believing. When we glorifie Christ as the Son of God, we glorifie God as the Father of Christ, we cannot glorifie the paternity without acknowledging a filiation, nor acknowledge a filiation without honouring the paternity.

8. Christs Prayer being argumentative, teacheth us the manner of our praying, which should consist of arguments for Gods Glory and our happiness: Not that arguments move God to do that which he is not willing of himself to do for us, (as Christs pressing arguments to his Father, was not to inform God of the necessity of what he prayed for,) as though the infinite wise God needed information, or the infinitely loving God needed perswasion; but it is for strengthning our Faith in him. All the prayers in the Scripture you will find to be reasoning with God, not a multitude of words heap'd together; and the design of the promises is to furnish us with a strength of reason in this case, Dan. 9. 16. Now according to all thy Righteousness, I beseech thee, let thy anger and thy fury be turned away from thy City Jerusalem. He pleads Gods Righteousness in his promise of the set time of deliverance; after he had settled his heart in a full belief of the promise of deliverance, he shows Gods own word to him. The arguments you will find drawn from the Covenant in general, or some promise in particular, or some Attribute of God, or the glory of God. All this prayer of Christ is full of arguments drawn from several heads, the first petition is backt by one. Verse 2. As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give Eternal Life, to as many as thou hast given him. Which is another reason he urgeth for his sustentation in his Passion, and his Resurrection, and Exaltation; and the sense runs thus, 'tis necessary I should be glorified, since thou hast given me a power to give Eternal Life, to as many as thou hast given me, which was not given me as an empty Title and useless power; give me therefore such a glory which may make that power I am endow'd with, significant for those ends for which it is conferr'd; the giving Eternal Life was the great end of my coming into the World, which Life cannot be had without the Knowledge of thee the true God, and of Jesus Christ as Mediator: The glory of my humanity, and the manifestation of my Deity are necessary to the exercise of this power, and the attainment of the end thereof, that those which thou hast given me may know who I am, that I am a Priest and Mediator of thy appointment, thy Son in whose hands their happiness is secure, that so they may trust me and Believe in me, and herein,

O Father, thou wilt be glorified, for by this they will underſtand how Wiſe, Holy, True, Good, Merciful, Loving thou art to the Sons of men.

Obſerve,

1. The Glory of Chriſt, and the Glory of the Father in and by Chriſt, is the ſecurity of the Glory of the Church and every Believer. The Glory of the Father is the firſt link in the chain, upon which all the other benefits Chriſt deſires for the Church do depend. The firſt reaſon he preſſeth for his own glory, is the glory of the Father, the next is the Salvation of his Elect: As they are joyned in Chriſts Prayer, they are alſo knit together in themſelves: 'Tis the glory of God that the whole lower Creation made to ſet forth his Praiſe, ſhould not be the triumph of the Devil, that he ſhould not boaſt that he had fruſtrated Gods deſign. Is it not the Glory of God that his Eternal Counſel ſhould have its full accompliſhment, that the beauty of his Believing Creatures ſhould be reſtored, the honour of God eſtabliſht and the Enemies of God put to confuſion? This hath the ſame bottom as the glory of the Father hath, viz. The glory of Chriſt; ſince this is eſtabliſhed, the other will be compleated, and the Eternal glory of Believers ſtand as firm as the glory of the Father. The perſeverance of a Believer is ſecur'd, for if it be the honour of God to ſnatch ſouls out of the Devils hand, 'tis for his honour to keep them, that they may not be regain'd by the Enemy from whom they have been delivered.

2. The glory of Chriſt was neceſſary for the Salvation of Believers; 'Tis upon this account Chriſt pleads for it: Had he not been rais'd, ſin had not been expiated; had he not aſcended, Heaven had not been opened; had he not been ſet at the right hand of God, the atonement of ſin had not been ſecur'd: Had not the Spirit been ſent into the World for the glory of Chriſt, the Knowledge of this expiation had not been propagated.

3. The infinite Love of Chriſt ſhines forth in this. A Power was given him: He deſires no glory of his Father but what was neceſſary for the good of his people, and what he would lay out wholly for their intereſt. Chriſt eſteems not any glory but as it is of uſe to his Elect, and his chiefeſt glory conſiſts not in poſſeſſing a Power, but in exerciſing it for their benefit. Take notice of the love of the Father too, this power was given by him to this end, that he ſhould give Eternal Life to thoſe that were his Fathers donatives. Upon this the Salvation of the Elect ſtands firm: The end of Gods giving Authority to Chriſt, and the end of Chriſt deſiring a glory for the exerciſe of that Authority, is one and the ſame; Chriſt will not be unfaithful to his Father to neglect the end of the power he is intruſted with, nor will he croſs the end of his own petition. What ſtronger argument can a believing Soul urge in Prayer, and embrace as a ground of Faith? The Fathers gift and the Sons requeſt centring in one end, which will be denyed by neither, affords a ſtrong Conſolation. As the end of the Righteouſneſs Adam had, was to convey it to his poſterity, ſo the end of the power Chriſt hath, is to convey Righteouſneſs and ſecure happineſs to his Spiritual ſeed: Who hath the immutable ſtrength of the Deity ſurmounting the weakneſs and mutability of Adams humanity, and will be as faithful to his truſt as Adam was falſe to his.

4. How large and extenſive is the Kingdom and Authority of Chriſt? 'Tis not limited to narrow confines: It extends over every Creature, over all Fleſh, not one exempted, he hath a Throne above the greateſt Monarchs, he is King of Kings and Lord of Lords. They cannot eſcape his iron rod, who refuſe to ſubject themſelves to his gracious Scepter. All that are fallen under the power of the Devil by ſin, are now under the dominion of Chriſt in Grace or Juſtice: All Nations are ſubjected to him as his inheritance and poſſeſſion, Pſal. 2. 8.

5. The Kingdom of Chriſt is by a divine Authority. Thou haſt given him power, Pſ. 2. 8. Ask of me and I will give thee. 'Tis not uſurpt, but by an eternal grant and perpetual. Whatſoever he doth in his Kingdom in order to the Eternal Life of Believers, is ratified by God the Father the Donor of this power to him.

6. The whole ſcene of the Government of the World is for the promoting the Eternal Life of the Elect. All the World is in the hands of Chriſt. He hath power over all Fleſh, for this end, to give Eternal Life to thoſe that God hath given to him. Every act of his Government tends to this end; what is the end of his power, is the true end of the exercise of that power, in every act of it in the World. It must needs be so by consequence; and how sweet will it be at last to see the whole combination, how unanimously every providence did conspire to this end, which our ignorant Souls cannot now discern?

7. We see what is the right way to gain Eternal Life. The power of bestowing it is invested in Christ; we must have recourse to him, not only as the purchaser, but as the Donor, by Authority from the Father. We must Believe in him as the purchaser upon the cross, call upon him as the distributer upon his Throne. He had power given to merit it as he was one sent, he had power given him to confer it as he was one exalted.

8. One Mercy sometimes is a strong plea for the obtaining of another. The gift of a power over all Flesh is an argument used by Christ for a further Glory. The power would be a fruitless gift, God would lose the honour of it, the praise of it, the improvement of it, if Christ were not put into a full capacity for the exercise of it. How often may we find Logick enough in one Mercy to argue for more with that God, who is not willing the honour of his Mercy should be lost, when the desires of his Creatures are to Glorifie him? To what purpose should God justifie and sanctifie, if he did not intend to glorifie? He would else lose the Glory of his former Mercy, and his People would lose the comfort of it. If God lays the foundation it is a strong plea for his raising the building to its full height.

We come now to the Text, This is Eternal Life, &c.

This is a transition from his Prayer, declaring what Eternal Life was. Some understand it of the intuitive Knowledge of God in Heaven. But it rather seems to be meant of the Knowledge of God here in this state of Pilgrimage.

* 1. The reason of the Petition evinceth it. Since thou O Father hast design'd me to give Eternal Life, I can never accomplish this unless thou dost glorifie me, because Eternal Life can only be conferred on those who acknowledge thee, and the Mediator thou hast sent. If I be not rais'd, none can be rationally indue'd to believe me to be Mediator; and if I do not ascend to Heaven, the Spirit cannot come into the World, and consequently all means of manifesting thee in the Mediator will be wanting, and the Eternal Life I was design'd to give, be kept from those thou hast design'd for it. * Gerhard. Harm. cap. 180.

2. He declares that those Apostles who were then with him, had known that he came out from God, and had believed that God had sent him, verse 8. and so had the root of Eternal Life in them: Who yet were without an intuitive Knowledge of God, of a blessed vision, which belongs only to a state of glory; it must therefore be meant of a Knowledge of God by faith in this World.

But it is the effect for the cause; the knowledge of God is not formally Eternal Life, but the cause of it, and the antecedent means to it. 'Tis not Eternal Life in the formality and nature of it, but in the infallibility of causation; because if men had the true Knowledge of Christ impress upon them, it could not be but they must believe in him, and consequently have both a right to Eternal Life, and the foretast of it. 'Tis frequent in the Scripture to put the effect for the cause, as John 3. 19. This is the condemnation that light is come into the World, i. e. This is the cause of condemnation.

This Knowledge of God is not only a Knowledge of God, and Christ in the Theory. But such a Knowledge which is saving, joyned with ardent love to him, cordial trust in him, as 1 Cor. 13. 12. Then I shall know even as also I am known, i. e. I shall love and rejoyce, as I am beloved and delighted in by God. 'Tis not only a Knowledge of God in his Will, but a Knowledge of God in his Nature, both must go together; we must know him in his nature, we must be Obedient to his Will. The Devil hath a greater knowledge of Gods being than any man upon Earth, but since he is a Rebel to his Will, he is not happy by his Knowledge. It must be such a knowledge as leads to Eternal Life, and hath a necessary and infallible connexion with it, as the effect with the cause, which is not between a speculative Knowledge and Salvation. It must be therefore such a knowledge which descends from the Head to the Heart, which is light in the Mind, and heat in the Affections, such a Knowledge of God as includes Faith in him.

Two things conſtitute this knowledge.

1. We muſt know God, the true God, as the Goſpel diſcovers him, in oppoſition to all falſe Gods; that he is ſpiritual, juſt, powerful, merciful, faithful.

2. We muſt know God as the Father of Chriſt; we muſt know him in that relation to Chriſt, without which knowledge we can have no right conceptions of the Oeconomy of Redemption, becauſe all proceeds from the Father through the Son.

That which is the greateſt ſtumbling-block in the Text, is that clauſe, thee the only true God, whereby ſome would exclude the Deity of Chriſt. Chriſt prays to the Father, and acknowledgeth him the only true God; if the Father therefore, ſay ſome, be the only true God, then Chriſt is not God, and they tell us that Chriſt is Deus factus, Deus conſtitutus. But to ſay a made God, is as great non-ſenſe, as to ſay, an uncreated Creature. Both carry a contradiction in the Terms. The Scripture doth frequently and plainly aſſert the Deity of Chriſt: no Creature can be equal with God: But Chriſt was in the form of God, and thought it no Robbery to be equal with God, Phil. 2. 6. He was equal to God in his Deity, tho' inferiour to God in his Humanity; the form of God ſtoop'd to the form of a Servant, but the form of a Servant deſpoil'd him of nothing eſſential to the form of God; he ceas'd not to be what he was before, when he became in the Womb of the Virgin, what he was not before. All things that the Father hath are mine, ſaith Chriſt, Joh. 16. 15. what is more the Fathers than his Eſſence and Deity? The Eſſence therefore and Deity of the Father, is the Eſſence and Deity of the Son. Auſtin argues well upon, Joh. 1. 3. All things were made by him, by the Word; therefore himſelf was not made, for nothing can make it ſelf; and it is added, without him nothing was made. Therefore the λόγος is not ex rebus factis. He is therefore God, for there is no medium; and He is called God bleſſed for ever, Rom. 9. 5. Of whom as concerning the fleſh, Chriſt came, who is over all God bleſſed for ever. Where the Greek Article ὁ is added, which the Adverſaries of this Truth deny to be added to θεὸς when it is attributed to Chriſt. And John, as if he had foreſeen what work would be made of this ſolum againſt the Deity of Chriſt, gives us an Antidote againſt it, 1 Joh. 5. 20. We are in him that is true, in his Son Jeſus Chriſt: this is the true God and Eternal Life; where the Article alſo is added.

The Anſwer to this is various.

* Zanch. de trib Eloh. Part. 1. Lib. 4. cap. 10.

1. * Some underſtand the word, μόνον, one, not alone, or only, and ſo tranſlate it, that they may know thee the one true God; and the word is often of that ſignification.

2. Others ſay, Chriſt here acknowledgeth the Father the only true God, becauſe the Father is the Fountain of the Deity. In regard of the Eſſence there is no prerogative, but only in reſpect of the Perſons, which conſiſts only in order and perſonality, as the Father is ſaid to beget, and the Son ſaid to be begotten. That may be affirm'd in one reſpect, which cannot in another; as Mark 13. 32. the Son is ſaid not to know the day of Judgment, but the Father; not the Son of Man, but the Son abſolutely; he knew it not as Man, but he knew it as God.

3. Others ſay, To omit many other Anſwers, That this particle only is put to exclude falſe Gods, which is moſt ſatisfactory. It excludes none that are of the ſame Eſſence, but all that are not; the Son is not excluded from being God; as Deut. 32. 12. So the Lord alone did lead them, Jehovah: the Son is not excluded by that name Jehovah, for Chriſt led them, and in their murmuring they are ſaid to tempt Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10. 9. It was Chriſt who is called the Angel of the Lord, that conducted them, Exod. 23. 20. Exod. 32. 34. Iſa. 63. 9. * The word only doth not exclude the Son; for then when it is joyn'd with the Son, it ſhould exclude the Father from being God. But it is joyn'd with the Son. Iſa. 45. 22. Look unto me, and be ye ſaved all the ends of the earth, for I am God, and there is none elſe; I have ſworn by my ſelf, that unto me every knee ſhall bow, and every tongue ſhall ſwear. That this is underſtood of Chriſt by the beſt Interpreter is evident, Rom. 14. 10, 11. where ſpeaking of the ſtanding of all before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt, he proves it by this place; for as it is written, As I live ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow to me, and every tongue ſhall confeſs to God. In Iſaiah, it is ſpoken in oppoſition to Idols

as appears by the 20th. Verse; and according to the Apostles Understanding, it was Christ that spake there, asserting three times there was no God besides him, ver. 21, 22. Shall the Father therefore be excluded from the Deity, because Christ saith so positively there is no God besides him? There is no place, to which that in the Romans can refer, but to that in Isaiah.

Again, Worship is due only to God, Mat. 4. 10. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve. Doth this exclude Christ from being worshipped, to whom it is due from the Angels as well as from men?

Again, This word only in other cases doth not exclude, but include those that have the same respect with the Person spoken of, as Deut. 1. 35, 36. God swears, that not one of that Generation should see the good land save Caleb; yet Joshua is not excluded, who manifested the same Integrity in the report of Canaan, after they had been to view it.

Again, When Paul saith, he determin'd to know nothing but Jesus Christ, and him crucified, 1 Cor. 2. 2. doth he exclude the knowledge of God the Father, and the knowledge of Christ glorified, as well as Crucified? No surely.

Again, What is attributed to the Son, the Spirit is not excluded from; therefore what is attributed to the Father, neither the Son nor the Spirit are excluded from. As when it is said, Mat. 11. 27. None knows the Father but the Son, is the Spirit excluded, who searcheth the deep things of God, and knows the things of God? 1 Cor. 2. 11. And indeed in common expression, the word Only is not exclusive of any that are in conjunction with a Person we speak of; as when we speak of a Tradesman, that usually hath the choicest Commodities of this or that sort, we say, he is the Only Man in London for such wares, we exclude not those that are Partners with him in his Trade; but all that are not in conjunction with him in it.

4. * The Scope of the place doth evidence that the Father is called the true God in opposition to Idols; for when Christ saith all power was given to him, that he might give Eternal Life, to as many as were given to him; those that were given to him were among the Gentiles as well as the Jews, he here respects them both; the Gentiles worshipped many gods, the Jews worshipped one God, but rejected Christ as Mediator. Now the knowledg of both is necessary to Salvation. In the first clause he respects the multiplicity of Heathen gods, in the other the Jewish contempt of the Mediator: so then the Expression excludes only the Heathen Idols. In 1 Thes. 1. 9. How you turn'd to God from Idols, to serve the living and true God. God is called the true God in opposition to Idols.

5. The Deity of Christ is asserted in every verse almost, before and after, and therefore is not excluded in this. He hath power over all flesh, to give eternal life to them: too great a power to be entrusted in the hands of a meer Creature, and too great a gift to spring from a meer Creature; the one is an infinite power, and cannot be managed by a finite head and hand, it requires omniscience to the due exercise of it; the other is an infinite happiness, and cannot be bestowed and secur'd by a finite strength. This Eternal Life is the knowledge of God; there must be a work upon the Understanding and upon the Will to produce this saving knowledge; these two Faculties in spiritual things, lye open only to the touch of an Infinite Power. The power over all Creatures extends to their inward Motions, thoughts, turnings of their heart for the good of the Elect, which is only the Prerogative of God, not of a Creature. He had a glory with the Father before the world was, ver. 5. not in his humanity before it was in Being, therefore in the Deity; and the glory conferr'd upon his Humanity, cannot be manag'd without a conjoyn'd Divinity.

Again, The Knowledge of the Son, is made a cause of Eternal Life, as well as the knowledge of the Father; 'tis not to be thought that the knowledge of any Creature, should be counted equally necessary to Salvation, with the knowledge of God: If our happiness consist in the knowledge of both, then both the Father and the Son are of the same Nature. The term Father manifests it, God was the Father of Christ from Eternity; Christ was with him before any Creature was in being. If the Father were the Eternal Father, the Son must be an Eternal Son.

6. I might offer another consideration of this place, viz. That the true God may refer to the veracity of God the Father in his Covenant with Christ, and his Pro-

Promises to us (the Syriack seems to carry it this way, to know thee to be the only God of truth) a fiducial knowledge is here meant, a knowledge accompanied with Faith and Trust in God, the ground whereof is particularly the veracity and faithfulness of God in his Promise; and the Truth of God in his Promise to Man, is founded upon the Truth of God in performing his Covenant with Christ, which Christ insists upon, ver. 4, 5. where he speaks of his own Office perform'd by him in the manifestation of Gods Name, as a work God gave him to do, and claims a glory as due by a former transaction between them. Or thus, I cannot give Eternal Life, unless I be glorified; by this thou wilt evidence thy self to be a true sincere God, not giving me an empty Power; and mens knowing and understanding this, and thereby knowing me to be thy Christ, sent by thee, will be their way to Eternal Life. Or it may be understood of the Promises declar'd by the Prophets of exalting him, after the performance of his work upon the Earth; and by the glorifying of him after he had made himself a sacrifice, God would declare himself a God of Truth in the performance of the covenant made with him, and the promises publisht by the Prophets, the Knowledge whereof would be a motive to and ground of Faith, and so the means of Eternal Life: so it is Life Eternal to know and believe in God, as a God of Truth in his Promises, made to and concerning Christ; not only in his Mission, but in his Exaltation. * The word ἀληθινὸς is many times taken so, as ἀληθινοὶ λόγοι, Plutarch, and ἀληθινοὶ φίλοι true friends that do not deceive. The Father so may be said to be the only true God, as he was the person promising Christ to us, and covenanting with Christ about the work of Redemption, and the Person to whom the Mission of Christ is ascrib'd. Christ was the Person promised to us as a Redeemer, and the Person Covenanting with God the Father about Redemption. Christ now being upon a plea for himself, and his People, that he might be enabled to glorifie God, urgeth the declaration of Gods Veracity, as the only means whereby Eternal Life might be convey'd to men. And since Veracity is an Essential Attribute, neither the Son nor the Holy Ghost are excluded from being the true God, but the Father is consider'd here in a personal transaction as standing in the present Oeconomy. I will not urge it, because it is an untrodden path but leave it to consideration, which perhaps it may somewhat deserve.

* Stephani Thesaurus.

We may see in the Text,

First, The Cause or Nature of Happiness, Knowledge; by way of Excellency and Exclusion of every thing else, as the Cause of Happiness.
Secondly, The Object of this Knowledge, God and Christ.

1. God, To know him in his Nature, Perfections, Effluxes in and through Christ, to know him as one.
2. Christ, To know him as Commissioned and sent by God; In his Person, and in his Offices.
3. Conjunctly, God and Christ, God in Christ. 'Tis ἐν τῇ τοῦ, as 2 Pet. 1, 2. through the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ, i. e. through the knowledge of God in Christ; and Rom. 1. 5. Grace and Apostleship, i. e. the grace of Apostleship.

Observe,

1. Knowledge of God and Christ, is the Life and Happiness of the Soul. What meat is to the Body, that, and more are Divine Truths to the Soul. In the clear sight of God as the Supream good, the Understanding is satisfied, the Will fill'd with love, and all the desires of the Soul find the Center of their Rest. The vision of God in Heaven, is the satisfaction of the Soul, and the imperfect knowledge of him here, is our imperfect felicity. 'Tis the Root of Eternal Life, which will spring up in time to mature Fruit, to the knowledge of him above, which is the compleat Happiness. * True Happiness ariseth from truth known, and goodness beloved.

* Senault.

2. Eternal

2. Eternal Life and Happineſs conſiſts not in any worldly thing; not in Riches or Honours; The Soul is a more Excellent part of a Man than the Body, the Happineſs of it muſt conſiſt in ſomething which is the proper Object of it, and more Excellent in the rank of Beings, than the Underſtanding is in the rank of Faculties. The Operations of that, conduce more to Felicity than the Actions of Senſe.

3. The Knowledge of Chriſt is as neceſſary to Happineſs, as the Knowledge of God. If a Man had the Knowledge of God in as clear a manner as the Angels have, yet without a knowledge of Chriſt he were as remote from Happineſs as a Devil. Tho' the knowledge of Chriſt be not ſimply neceſſary to the Angels who never fell, and ſo needed not a Mediator; yet it is neceſſary to us, who are obnoxious to Gods Wrath, and ſo need a Reconciler, becauſe of the Enmity; a Redeemer, becauſe of our ſlavery; a Refiner, becauſe of our Filthineſs; a Mediator, becauſe of our diſtance to bring us to God.

4. The true Knowledge of Chriſt is not only a knowledge of his Perſon, but a knowledge of his Commiſſion, as ſent. 'Tis a material queſtion that the Phariſees askt our Saviour, By what Authority doſt thou theſe things? Tho' they askt it maliciouſly to get advantage againſt him by his Anſwer: We could have no Comfort, if we did not know and conſider by what Authority he acted in this great Affair. Our ſecurity in Chriſt lies in his Authority from God. Faith hath Comfort in him as he is the Son of God, Comfort in him as he is Gods Commiſſioner, but higher Comfort as he is both joyn'd together; as being the Son of God he hath Ability, as being ſent of God he hath Authority; he might have been the Son of God, without Authority to ſuch a work, had he not been Commiſſion'd; he might have been ſent of God, and Commiſſion'd by him, and not have done the work he was appointed, had he not been the Son of God, and ſo had an Infiniteneſs of Ability; Chriſt ſets out both theſe as the ground of Faith to us, Gloriſie thy Son, ver. 1. whom thou haſt ſent, in the Text.

Thoſe which I ſhall inſiſt upon are.

Doct. I. The Knowledge of God, and Chriſt the Mediator, is the neceſſary means to Eternal Life and Happineſs.

Doct. II. The true and ſaving Knowledge of God, is only in and by Chriſt.

For the firſt. The Knowledge of God, and Chriſt the Mediator, is the neceſſary means of Eternal Life and Happineſs. 'Tis the knowledge of God as diſcover'd, not in the Creatures but in the Scripture; a knowledge of God through Faith in Chriſt, which is able to make us wiſe to Salvation. The Tree of Knowledge in Paradiſe became our Death, and the Tree of Knowledge in the Goſpel becomes our Life. The Knowledge of God and Chriſt doth not only free us from a dark and obſcure walk, but is the light of Life, Joh. 8. 12. The true knowledge of God and Chriſt is an effectual and infallible means of Salvation, becauſe upon ſuch knowledge Faith doth depend, Pſal. 9. 10. They that know thy Name, will put their truſt in thee. Tho' no man can come to Chriſt unleſs the Father draw him; yet God draws every man by the Cords of a Man, by ſuch means as are proportion'd and fitted to the Principles of his Nature: now it is as proper for a man to be led and drawn by the light of knowledge, as it is for a ſpark to fly upwards, or a ſtone to move downward. The drawing by the Father to Chriſt, is explain'd by Gods teaching of men, and Mens apprehenſion of that teaching; and between Mens thus Learning of that which God teacheth, and their coming to Chriſt there is an Eſſential Connexion, Joh. 6. 45. Every man that hath heard and learn'd of the Father, cometh unto me.

This Knowledge is a certain, full and perſwaſive aſſent to the unity of God, his Nature, his Word, to the Mediation of Chriſt, and Gods communications through him grounded upon a Divine Light, as plain and evident to the Mind as any Natural Light is.

I. In General, What kind of Knowledge this is.
II. That this is Necessary.
III. In what respects it is necessary.
IV. What are the Properties of this Knowledge, whereby 'tis distinguished from other Knowledge which is not saving.
V. Use.

I. What kind of Knowledge in general this is.

1. There is a speculative knowledge. A study and knowledge of God upon the same account that men study and desire to know other things that are Excellent and delightful; as both the Contemplation of God in Creation, and the Contemplation of God in Redemption afford Notions very gustful to a delicate understanding. Thus a man speculatively knows God and Christ, when he is well skill'd in the Revelation of God, the History of Christ, the Analogy between the Types and Predictions of Christ in the Old Testament, and the Accomplishment of them in the New, in the Person of Christ. A knowledge of God by Creation, many of the wiser sort of Heathens had, who have discours'd excellently of the Nature of God Rom. 1. 21. they are said to know God: A knowledge of God by Revelation, the Jews had in the Old Testament, who yet rejected the Son of God; a knowledge of Christ many Learned Men professing Christianity have, who know Christ in the Bark of the Letter, not in the Sap of the Spirit, as the Jews knew him under the vail of types, but were ignorant of his Person when he came among them. This is such a knowledge which men have of a beautiful picture, or a comely Person with whom they have no acquaintance; or as an Astronomer knows the stars without receiving any more special influence from them than other men, or the inanimate Creatures.

(1.) This Knowledge is Natural. In regard of Natural Education whereby they suck in and vent those notions rooted in them; in regard of Natural Principles in the Soul which conclude something of God, tho' nothing of Christ. There are some fragments of the broken Tables of the Law in the hearts of men, whereby they know the Being of a God, and something of his Nature, helpt by Reason and Discourse, removing imperfections from him, in their Conceptions of him, and comparing him with things that are most excellent in their apprehensions; But there is no natural Knowledge of Christ; for all the sparklings of Creatures, and all the letters of the Law laid in them and put together, present not a syllable of a Mediator. But this Natural, Educative and Historical Knowledge, is not that here meant. 'Tis a spiritual Knowledge our Saviour intended, for he intended that which hath a connexion with Eternal Life, which must have a Principle fram'd by an higher hand than that of Nature. As things visible in themselves, cannot be seen without a visive faculty, and Eye, and that well temper'd, and rightly dispos'd for the perception of the Object; so neither can God, who is wholly spiritual, be spiritually known by Evangelical Revelation, without the Cure of the Mind from those films which are upon it by Corruption. A spiritual Principle is as necessary to a saving knowledge of God, as a Visive Faculty is to the discerning of visible Objects.

(2.) This is not enough. A man may know an Artificer by the Excellency of his Workmanship, without any Affection to his Person, Rom. 1. 21. They glorified him not as God, nor were thankful. Not one of all those Philosophers, as one observes *, tho' they discours'd of one God, had some right Apprehensions of his Nature, yet ever compos'd one Hymn in the praise of him, tho' there be among their Poets some Hymns writ in the praise of their Fabulous Deities. They pleas'd themselves barely in those enquiries and Reasonings, without descending to that Piety which is the true end of Knowledge. And tho' their Understandings had some glimmerings of Light, their Wills sunk under their imperious unrighteousness. If a speculative knowledge were our felicity, the Devil who is in the deepest Misery, would be seated in the highest happiness; he knows God, because once he enjoy'd him; he knew Christ, because he most feared him; he did profess his knowledge of him, when scarce any upon Earth well understood what he was: Luk. 4. 34. I know thee who thou art, the holy One of God; yet notwithstanding that knowledge, was desirous

* Estius in loc. what they knew naturally, in those things they did corrupt themselves.

to continue in the Exerciſe of his Government, and the practice of his Impieties; Let us alone. His Knowledge is not his Eternal Life, but his Eternal Death. Since therefore God is known in his Perfections, more by the Devils, his profeſt Enemies, than by any of the Sons of Men; this knowledge of God, which is the way to Eternal Life, is ſuch a diſcovery which never did, nor ever can enter into the Hearts of Devils. Speculative Knowledge of God, without any further Reliſh, is like the knowledge of the Nature of Meat in the Brain of a ſtarved Philoſopher, that hath not a bit of Bread to put into his ſtomach. Speculations are often a Torment without Affections. No Man could find a repoſe in the Knowledge of God in Heaven without Love in his Will, as well as Light in his Mind; Light without heat preſerves not a man from Chilneſs and Shaking.

(3.) Yet tho' this ſpeculative Knowledge be not Saving, 'tis uſeful in the World. 'Tis a promiſe that the Earth ſhall be full of the Knowledge of the Lord, Iſa. 11. 9. They ſhall not deſtroy in all my holy Mountain, for the Earth ſhall be full of the knowledge of the Lord. Not a ſaving knowledge, becauſe it is of another kind than the knowledge in the mountain of the Lord, and Subjectively in the Earth the carnal part of the World, as diſtinguiſht from the Holy Mountain. By ſuch a knowledg in Man, God ſecures his People from the Evil of the World, and juſtifies his proceedings in the Hearts and Conſciences of the World. 'Tis alſo uſeful to the perſon that hath it; for without this, he could never have a ſaving knowledge; 'tis the Foundation of a Spiritual; tho' a ſpeculative might be without a ſpiritual, yet a ſpiritual cannot be without a ſpeculative; a foundation may be without a ſuperſtructure, but a ſuperſtructure can never be without a foundation.

2. There is a practical knowledge of God and Chriſt, which is not only an acquaintance with God, but a laying up his words in our hearts, Job 22. 21, 22. which is not a floating knowledge in the head, but a knowledge ſinking to the heart; not a knowledge in the Brain, but efficacious to make an Union with him, 1 Joh. 5. 20. He hath given us an underſtanding that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, where Union follows upon knowledge. The Speculations of God may fill the Head, and the Heart be empty of a ſence of him, and the Life barren of an imitation of God. This doth not deſerve the Name of a Knowledge, but in the Apoſtles account is truly an Ignorance, 1 Joh. 2. 3, 4. Hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that ſaith I know him, and keeps not his commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him. Such anſwer not the end of knowledge; and it can no more rationally be called a knowledge of God, ſince it hath no life and ſoul in it, than a dead Carcaſs can be called a Man. Such a knowledge that hath no Life in it, cannot be the means to Eternal Life: what hath not life, cannot convey life. The Devils knowledge, is a dead knowledge; but the knowledge of God in an Angel, joyn'd with Obedience to God in his practice, is his Eternal Life. The other is knowledge floating in the brain, buoy'd up by ſome corrupt Luſt from ſinking further. This is Wiſdom entring into the Soul, truth in the hidden parts, Pſal. 51. 6. not a Flouriſh in the Paper, but a Letter; the knowledge of the object, and an embracing the end of that knowledge. For tho' it may be a clear knowledge in the Head, yet it is really a deep ignorance; a fluttering bubble, becauſe the Notion of God is not ſuckt in for that end, for which it is let out: 'tis made known, that it may be melted into an Affectionate practice, and not lye like a hard lump in the head. Every man ought to know God, in order to his embracing him; and without this Affection and Love, he knows nothing as he ought to know, 1 Cor. 8. 2. If any man think that he knows any thing, he knows nothing yet as he ought to know. For a man may have knowledge enough to ſtuff his Head, but if barr'd from his Heart and Affections, it ſtands but begging in the outward Court for admittance. The thinking of God and Chriſt with the Head, and embracing Chriſt with the Heart, are two diſtinct things; as the ſeeing a Country in a Map, and by Travelling over it with our Feet, are different kinds of knowledge. The one is a knowledge of the Truth, the other an acknowledgement of it as it is after godlineſs, Tit. 1. 1. When the Notion of God is not only pictur'd in the Head, but the Image of God engraven upon the Heart; when the ſtamp in the Heart, is like that in the Word, as a Counterpart of a writing: a Heart to be his People, as God hath a heart to be our God; Jer. 24. 7. I will give them an heart to know me, they ſhall be my people, I will be their God, for they ſhall return unto me with their whole heart. The Evangelical Promiſe is not ſo much to give us an Head, (tho' that is included) as a Heart to know God.

For,

(1.) This is an enlivening Knowledge. A Spiritual Knowledge is always attended with a Spiritual Life; A new Man, and ſuch a knowledge as is after the Image of God, go together; Col. 3. 10. Having put on the new man, which is renewed in Knowledge, after the Image of him that created him. As the natural Image of God conſiſted in Underſtanding and Will, ſo the Spiritual Image of God by Grace conſiſts in a rectifying thoſe Faculties; the Underſtanding with a ſpiritual Knowledge, and the Will with a ſpiritual Byaſs. The Faculties we have from God as Creator by Nature, the operation of thoſe Faculties about their proper ſpiritual Objects, we have by Grace. As the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth the form of Godlineſs from the power, 2 Tim. 3. 5. ſo he doth a form of knowledge, from the life of it, Rom. 2. 20. which is a knowledge in the Letter, not in the Spirit, ver. 29. the one is a picture wherein every Limb is painted, the other is quickned and animated with a Divine Life. Speculative Knowledge is as the light of Torches, guiding, not heating; this as the Sun, which both directs and warms; a fire felt, as well as ſeen; Truth known, and Truth uſed as a Compaſs to Sail by. When the knowledge of the Nature of God is impreſt upon us for imitation, and is, as the conference of Chriſt with his Diſciples, enflaming the heart, Luk. 24. 32. and driving away the cold affections towards God; when Righteouſneſs is underſtood as well as Judgment, and that as a path, and a good path to walk in; when we are not only directed to the path, but are pleas'd with the goodneſs of it, and the approving wiſdom enters into the heart, and the knowledge of it becomes pleaſant to the Soul, Prov. 2. 9, 10. When there is not only a knowledge of God, but a liking to retain it; a ſight of the Sun, and a delight in his Beams; a knowledge of the fire, and approach to its heat; a mighty pleaſure in God and Chriſt, as a ſweet Oyntment pour'd forth. When God is known and embraced as the chief good and ultimate End; Chriſt known and embrac'd as the way to be at Peace with God, and an honourer of him; ſuch a knowledge as is not onely like Animal Spirits in the Brain, but Vital Spirits in the Heart enabling for Action; not like a cloud hanging in the Air, but diſtilling in fruitful ſhowers, for the aſſiſtance of the Earth.

By knowledge, the Jews for the moſt part, if not alwayes, underſtand a practical knowledge; and by Wiſdom, a Theoretical. Jacchiades in Dan. 1. 4.

(2.) A likening Knowledge. When we know Chriſt Crucified in the conqueſt of our ſins by his death, Chriſt glorified in the Elevation of our Souls by his Aſcenſion. To know a living God with a dead Heart, is at beſt but a Carnal Knowledge, a dead Knowledge, unſutable to a living Object, which calls for lively Actions. To know Chriſt Crucified, and have no Efficacy of his Death, to know Chriſt riſen, and lye clos'd up in the Grave of Sin, to know Chriſt is aſcended, and have creeping Affections upon the Earth, this is a Notion of Chriſt not a knowledge of him. That is the teaching of God, when the Truth is Learned as it is in Jeſus, Eph. 4. 21. Powerfully directive, conforming the Soul as it did the Humane Nature of Chriſt to the Will and Mind of God: When the Underſtanding is not forced to comply with the corrupt Appetite of the Will, but the Will conform'd to the true Notions of an enlightned Underſtanding. Such a knowledge which raviſheth the mind, quickens the prayers, ſeaſons the converſe and fortifies againſt Temptations. Such a knowledge as wraps up the Soul in Admiration, ſpirits the Will to Operation, allures it to a cloſe Union, with the Truth diſcover'd, till it be like a leaven working in the Will, and ſhaping the whole man according to its own mould: the fixing our eye on God by a ſpiritual knowledge derives a tincture from him, dying our ſouls into his own likeneſs; if the life doth not differ from that of an Infidel, the knowledge, tho' as high as an Angels, is no more ſaving than that of a Devil.

And if Knowledge be not thus.

[1.] 'Tis uſeleſs. No knowledge in the World is commendable but as it is digeſted into Will and reduced into practice. Should the Eye direct the hand and foot, and and they never move, what advantage would the body have by the eyes direction? 'Tis all one to be blind and not to have the end of the visive faculty answer'd by the motion of the members.

[2.] 'Tis not commensurate to divine Revelation. 'Tis not a knowledge according to the word, if it be not like the Word, the instrumental cause of it. If it be not sharper than a two edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of the Soul and Spirit, the rational part from compliance with the corrupt Affections of the sensitive, and so a destroyer as well as discerner of the sordid thoughts and intents of the heart, Heb. 4. 12. No material thing is perfectly known, unless it leave an impression upon those senses which are requisite for the knowledg of it; neither is Divine Truth known, unless it leave a full and commanding impression upon the mind the faculty of knowledge: And because Divine things are reveal'd for their goodness as well as for their Truth, and the Truth reveal'd in order to the apprehension of their goodness, 'tis not knowledge suitable to the intent of Divine Revelation, if the goodness be not swallow'd and digested as well as the Truth chewed.

[3.] There is an experimental knowledge of God. Speculative knowledge is a sound of words and thoughts, experimental a sense of them, and God hath not left the soul without a spiritual relish, any more than he hath left the body without a tasting palate. * And therefore one calls it well Gustus spiritualis judicii, 'tis a witness of the Truth in us, 1 John 5. 10. There is a knowledge of Christ after the Flesh, an admiration and esteem of him as some excellent moralist that hath publisht eminent precepts for the regulation of humane conversation; this is no more a saving knowledge of Christ than the knowledge of a Philosophers Thesis, or Seneca's moral Aphorisms amount to: 'Tis a putting Christ in the same ballance with them. But a spiritual knowledge of Christ is not only a relish of those precepts, but a draught of Christ in the soul, a receiving the spiritual emanations of God and Christ upon the heart. Tis to know God in the power of his grace, and Christ in the vertue of his Life, Phil. 3. 10. God in the streams of his love, and Christ in the sweetness of his blood; when we see him upon the Cross and tast him in the soul, which is not only a knowledge by the understanding, but a knowledge by a spiritual sense, Phil. 1. 9.

* Junius.

There is such a knowledge as this. The Scripture expresseth the knowledge of God by the acts of sense as well as by the acts of reason, for we have more experience of things by sense, than we have by discourse. After the discourse of any thing with all the reason in the World, there must be recourse to sense to make it plain and evident; hence ariseth the advantage of similitudes drawn from sensible objects, which clear what meer reason is not able to do. We find the knowledge of God set out by the acts of sense; as by tasting, 1 Pet. 2. 3. If so be you have tasted that the Lord is gracious. Or relishing, Matth. 16. 23. By smelling, 2 Cor. 2. 14. The savour of his knowledge. By feeling, 1 John 1. 1. Often by seeing, which being the quickest and most piercing sense, represents things to the understanding more clearly than bare report. And this kind of knowledge is necessary to happiness, for without it we can have no clear nor worthy notions of God, but more likely disparaging ones; as a man that never saw the statelines of London or any City like it, cannot mount higher in his Conceptions of it, than that it may be a little better than the best Market Town which he hath seen in his Countrey, but he is not like to have conceits of it according to the greatness of the place, the magnificence of the buildings, the gallantry of the People: When once he comes to behold it, he will find his former Conceptions of it to be vastly short of the beauty of the place: He would scarce be convinc'd of it without a sight. Indeed this knowledge of God is imperfect here because of our present state. But some experience there is here answering to the vision hereafter, as a Map of that which the soul is travelling to a sight of. This kind of knowledge of God is banished from the unclean Spirits, they have lost the savour of what they knew of God and feel nothing but the power of his wrath.

This differs from a ſpeculative Knowledge.

[1.] In the means and manner of knowing; Not in the object. The object is the ſame in both God and Chriſt, the difference lies in the manner of their apprehenſion: One is by a common created underſtanding, the other is by an underſtanding given for that peculiar end, 1 John 5. 20. The Son of God hath given us an underſtanding that we may know him that is true: One is a conception of God, the other a taſt, one knows God as a man by a humane ſtrength, the other knows God as a Chriſtian by ſenſe and a Divine Knowledge: One is by feeling after God, Acts 17. 27. The other is by Gods breaking out in divine beams upon the ſoul like a day ſtar ariſing in the Heart, 2 Pet. 1. 19. One is by the natural ſtrength of the underſtanding improved by Hearing, Meditation, Diſcourſe; the other is the effect of an infuſed Faith and the Spirits operation: One knows God in the Scripture by Reading, the other by reliſh, and finds ſomething in his own Heart agreeing with it; what he Reads with his eye, is drawn by a Divine pencil in the Soul. There is a knowledge of a thing without us, and a knowledge of a thing within us: Men know there is a happy Heaven, and Heathens entertain'd it as an univerſal notion; but a Believer knows it in himſelf by ſome beamings upon his Heart, Heb. 10. 34. Knowing in your ſelves that you have in Heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance, which do more powerfully break in upon him in the time of ſufferings. So there is a knowledge of God from Reaſon, Nature, Report and a knowledge of God in our ſelves by the workings of his grace; a man may know this or that meat to be ſweet by Report, yet not have the knowledge of it by the Taſt; the one depends upon the ſtrength of his head to conceive, the other upon the goodneſs of the palate to reliſh it. Though both have the ſame object, yet they are not the ſame knowledge; he that prayes from right principles, and he that prayes from wrong have the ſame object of Prayer, both pray to God, but they differ in the manner of their praying, which makes one acceptable, the other not, and therefore the object doth not make our prayer right; ſo neither doth the object make our knowledge ſaving. Yet the firſt knowledge makes us in a capacity for this, but it is frequently without it; a man may know that which he doth not ſpiritually deſire, but he can never ſpiritually deſire that which he doth not know. As the manner of Adams knowing ſin before and after his fall was different, ſo is the manner of knowing God: Adam knew ſin in the Theory before he was guilty, (for knowing the Law he could not but know what was contrary to the Law, and what acts would violate it) but when he turn'd offender he knew the power of ſin, felt the evil of that which he did before but underſtand. A natural man knows God as Adam did ſin before his fall; he underſtands ſomething of his nature; but a gracious man feels the influences of God, and finds himſelf under the power of Divine grace.

[2.] In the clearneſs of Knowing. This is ſuch a knowledge that can better deſcribe God, from his ſpiritual illapſes into the Soul, than the cleareſt reaſons of men with all their ſpeculative notions. A blind man may know ſomething of the reaſon of colours, but he cannot know them ſo feelingly as he that hath eyes in his head. A man may know Wine by the ſight and ſmell, but not ſo clearly as when he taſts the ſweetneſs and feels the Cordial warmth of it in his ſtomack. Speculative knowledge is ſuch a knowledge as Peter and John had of Chriſts Reſurrection upon the report of Mary Magdalene, John 20. 2, 3. &c. They ſaw the linnen cloaths and no body there, which increaſed their belief and knowledge; this was a dim-ſighted knowledg to that which Chriſt gave them by his apparition, when they could ſee both his hands and his ſides, this was an experimental knowledg; and when he pronounc'd peace to them, this was a knowledge of intereſt, an aſſurance given that they were intereſted in the happineſs and fruits of his Reſurrection. There is an excellency in Divine knowledge that cannot be diſcover'd by the tongues of Men or Angels, an experience and ſpiritual ſenſation renders a man more intelligent than all diſcourſes can. As the natural ſenſe beſt judgeth of ſenſible objects, ſo doth the ſpiritual ſenſe of Divine. He that hath taſted hony, hath a more lively knowledge of it than the moſt learned man that never taſted the ſweetneſs, or felt the operations of it: Nor can any conceive ſo clearly of the excellency of the Sun, by the diſcourſes of the richeſt fancies, as by ſeeing its glory and feeling the warmth of its beams. A mans own ſenſe will better inform him of the beauty of the Heavens than the elevated reaſonings of Philoſophers. Divine Truth acted upon the heart and felt in its influence is more plainly known than by diſcourſe and reaſon. I would rather have the feeling which a ſincere ſoul hath of God than all the deſcriptions of him by a notional apprehenſion. One is knowledge in the notion, the other in reality: The one is the effect of well educated nature and common grace, the other the fruit of a ſpiritual eye ſalve, Revel. 3. 18. and an inward breathing: the one is a ſhining upon the head, the other a ſhining into the Heart, 2 Cor. 4. 6.

[3.] In regard of the effects. This works the effects which the other is too weak to produce. A little experimental ſenſe of the Majeſty of God brought Job more upon his knees than all the preſſing diſcourſes of his Friends, or his own knowledge before his affliction, Job 42. 5, 6, I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now my eyes ſee thee, wherefore I abhor my ſelf; a glimpſe of God will bring forth more ſaving fruits, than all the reports of him to the ear, or ſpeculations in the mind. God and Chriſt felt refreſh the ſoul more than the lifeleſs notions of them. The inward vertue of bread taſted and digeſted refreſheth the body more than the colour and figure can delight the eye. The contemplation of meat may pleaſe a Philoſophical underſtanding, but the turning it into our nature, the having it in our body ſtrengthens and cheriſheth the whole man. There is a pleaſure in the hiſtorical knowledge of God and Chriſt, a pleaſure in the Meditation of the Nature of God, the ends of the Coming, Paſſion, and Reſurrection of Chriſt, the nature of his Mediation. But what is this to the powerful operation in our hearts and the conveyance of his Life into our Souls? Juſt as Meditation of health by a ſick man comes ſhort of the pleaſure of feeling health in his veins and every member of his body. The one is like the delight a man takes in ſeeing a City in a map, the other like the contentment he takes in ſeeing the ſtrength of the place, the beauty of the buildings, the harmony of the Government, and the obſervations he makes thereupon.

[4.] There is a knowledge of intereſt. Or an intereſted knowledge of God and Chriſt. Experimental knowledge Peter and John had of Chriſts Reſurrection when Chriſt appeared to them, intereſted knowledge when he pronounced peace to them. Though the knowledge of the excellency of God and of Chriſts going to Heaven is a ground of comfort, yet an intereſt in this is the formal part of our felicity. What ſatisfaction can we have, if we have no part in God, if Chriſt went not to Heaven for us? The Devil hath a knowledge of God in the theory, but a torment from that knowledge in the reflection. The knowledge of God without hopes of an intereſt in him, is terrifying. While Adam retained his purity, the Attributes of God were cordials to him, he could delight in his goodneſs, have acceſs to his power, refreſh himſelf by the faithfulneſs of God; innocence and intereſt ſee nothing but what is highly raviſhing in God: But all the Divine perfections which took the part of innocent man, while he continued faithful to the Law of his Creation, render God terrible to fallen nature; there can be no happy knowledge of God with a ſatisfaction to the ſoul without a recovery of his loſt intereſt. That knowledge which renders us as happy as we can be in this World, is to know God in covenant our God; to know God as our Father, Chriſt as our Mediator, to know Chriſt as a ſurety paying our debts, and God as a Creditor accepting the payment for us, to know God in his eternal Counſels as a Father, to know Chriſt in all his offices as our perfect Redeemer, ſettling and ſecuring our happineſs upon a ſtable bottom: to know Chriſt as our Lord, John 20. 28. to know God ſo as to be accepted by him, and to know Chriſt ſo as to be found in him, Phil. 3. 8, 9. to know God not only as a pardoning God in his nature, but a pardoning God to our Souls. (Such a knowledge God promiſeth, Jer. 31. 34. They ſhall all know me from the leaſt of them unto the greateſt, for I will forgive their iniquity) as alſo a knowledge of him as our Saviour and Redeemer, Iſaiah 6. 16. That is a happy knowledge, when we can ſay with Paul, Chriſt who loved me and gave himſelf for me, Gal. 2. 20. when we can feel Christ dwelling in us by Faith, the hope of Glory, Col. 1. 27. A speculative knowledge is Contemplation, this is fruition; that elevates us in Admiration, this springs up in Affection; that is like the knowledge of a Picture, where the Features of the Person are commended by strangers to them; this like the knowledge of the Friend, whose Picture it is, and the remembrance of the sweetness of his Disposition, his Cordial Affections, &c. which possesseth the Soul with a more sensible delight, than others can take in the comelines of the piece.

These four sorts of Knowledge are not equally necessary: the Speculative is necessary as a Foundation; Practical, Essentially necessary; Experimental and Interested, necessary to the comfort of Knowledge. The two first are necessary to the Being of a Christian; the two latter, to the Well-being: The two first together, constitute our Happiness; the two latter, sweeten our imperfect Happiness in this World. Indeed Experimental Knowledge, and Interested, are necessary in regard of the matter of the knowledge, tho' not in regard of the actual sence and knowledge. We cannot have any initial happiness, without the influence of Gods Grace, without a share in his Favour; but both these may be without the actual sense and perception of them. Speculative, is knowledge receiv'd; Practical, knowledge expresst; Experimental, the relish of it; and Interested, the foretast of happiness. A Speculative knowledge, is like that of the Queen of Sheba's, at a distance; an Experimental is like her sight of the Order and Glory of Solomons Court, that left no more Spirit in her.

II. This Knowledge of God is necessary. Religion and true Grace, is called Wisdom in the Proverbs. Wisdom, is the knowledge of the Highest things: no Wisdom without the knowledge of Truth, therefore no Wisdom without the knowledge of God, the prime Truth, the chiefest Good, whence all Truth and Goodness in other things flow. This is the portal *: No happiness can be without Truth and Goodness; all Religion consists of them, all Felicity is compos'd of them; Truth to be known, Goodness to be embraced by the Creature, else no Communication of Happiness to it. Knowledge and Love fit us for acquaintance with, and enjoyment of God: we actually embrace him by Love, after we perceive him fit for our embraces by knowledge. Knowledge imprints the similitude and Idea of the Object upon the Understanding, Love draws out the Soul to close with the Object so understood. By Knowledge God conveys himself in his glorious Perfections to our view; by Love we give up our selves to him: By Knowledge we see God, by Love we enjoy him. By Knowledge we see what is enjoyable, and worthy our Affection and Fruition; by Love we enjoy what we see. Still remember that this is not to be understood of a common Knowledge of God, where the Gospel is Preach'd; 'tis such a Knowledge which is given by Christ to those he hath a Charge of; 'Tis such a Knowledge, that is not only the Effect of Christs universal power over all flesh; (for so the general Preaching of the Gospel is, whereby men attain a Common Knowledge) but such a Knowledge as those only have who are sanctified by Faith, Act. 26. 18. He had power over all flesh, that he should give Eternal Life, i. e. he had power to propagate the Gospel among the Gentiles, that the Knowledge of God might be given to those, that had been given him by his Father; whereby it is manifest, that it is a knowledge different from the common Knowledge of the Gospel.

* Nulla res qualiscunque est intelligi potest nisi Deus prius intelligatur, is a Maxim in the Schools.

1. This was the Subject matter of the Ancient Gospel promises. This God promised in the Evangelical Dispensation, when he would manifest himself in the Riches of his Glory, and Treasures of his Goodness to his Creatures, Isa. 49. 23. Thou shalt know that I am the Lord; and the chief happiness of the Church in the Confluence of the Gentiles to her, as the Foundation of all Religion, is his Manifestation to them, and their clear view of that Manifestation; Isa. 19. 21. And the Lord shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day. 'Tis the peculiar of the Gospel, Hos. 6. 3. then shall we know the Lord; When the knowledg of God shall be spread over the World by the great Prophet, in the Teachings of his Spirit, then should

ſhould men have an ardent Zeal to encreaſe in the knowledge of God. And in this Knowledge, our Spiritual Life conſiſts; We ſhall live in his ſight; How? By the Knowledge of the Lord. By the Knowledge of God in this Life, men have foretaſtes of the Life to come. 'Tis by the Knowledge of God in Chriſt, that we ſee the Sword of Juſtice ſheath'd, which guarded Heaven againſt us; the Bowels of Mercy enlarg'd to open Heaven for us. It diſcovers God calm'd and appeas'd, gives us delightful views of him, and a ſecure and compleat happineſs.

2. There is no way of conveying happineſs can be conceiv'd without this. Our Ignorance muſt be remov'd, whereby we may underſtand God, as well as our perverſity, whereby we may ſeek him. All Sin begins in Folly, Ignorance, and Forgetfulneſs of God, Pſal. 14. 2. None that did underſtand and ſeek God. Firſt, the fool hath ſaid in his heart there is no God: From that Ignorance ſprung up Corruption, and Abominable Works. What the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of one, ver. 1. he ſpeaks of all ver. 2, 3. They are all gone aſide, and the not underſtanding of God was the root of it, Rom. 3. 11. the root of our Miſery muſt be remov'd to plant that of our happineſs. God hath order'd knowledge to be the firſt ſtep to Salvation, ſo that none are ſaved that come not in by the way of the knowledge of God reveal'd in the Goſpel, 1 Tim. 2. 4. Who will have all men to be ſaved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. The Goſpel being nothing elſe but a manifeſtation of God in Chriſt, a knowledg of this precedes the Application of Salvation. * As the Sun doth not make his Heat to be known, but by his Beams; ſo God doth not ſave according to his ordinary Diſpenſation, but by the Knowledg of himſelf; though the Diſcovery of himſelf, in divers Ages, hath been various, and by degrees. As the Light at the Dawn is more obſcure, than that which is near the Approach of the Sun to the Horizon; ſo there was a more obſcure Knowledge of God, and the Redeemer, at the time of the firſt Promiſe. Adam might not know well what to think of God, when he ſaw himſelf expell'd Paradiſe, juſt after a gracious promiſe of a Deliverer. It was ſomewhat brighter at the giving the law, when God would give man ſome dark ſhadows and pictures of Chriſt; and when himſelf would be known by his name Jehovah, and the conduct of his Angel. It was clearer in the times of the Prophets, when the Chariot of the Sun of Righteouſneſs was approaching to the World, and the light broke out before him; but a more glorious diſcovery, when this Sun did ariſe and appear in the Earth; yet from firſt to laſt, every diſpenſation was made up of ſome diſcovery of God, the manifeſtation of his Name, the declarations and repreſentations of the Meſſiah. The knowledge of God and the Redeemer, being the deſign of God in every age of the World, is no leſs neceſſary now than it was then. And indeed the knowledge of no other thing can confer a bleſſedneſs upon us. Whatſoever makes another happy, muſt be greater and better than that which is made happy: But ſince nothing in the World is better than the Soul of man, all the knowledge of inferior things cannot conſtitute him bleſſed. The knowledge of God and Chriſt, can only fill the inſatiable Mind, ſatisfie the vaſt deſires, and ſettle the ſtaggering Soul.

* Amyraut de l'Evangile pag. 148, 149.

3. The happineſs of God conſiſts in the knowledge of himſelf, his own perfections, and delight in them. * God is the Object of his own happineſs. The knowledge of God himſelf, is the Felicity of God. No Being is really happy, without Reflection upon, and Knowledge of that Happineſs. If God ſhould be happy by the knowledge of any thing elſe but himſelf, that which he did contemplate and know, would be greater and better than God, becauſe his happineſs would depend upon it; Felicity can never be in any thing inferiour: God hath nothing higher and better than himſelf to contemplate. This gave him a ſatisfaction before the World was, and this would ſtill be his Bleſſedneſs, if all things ſhould be reduc'd to the depths of nothing. Since therefore he created the World, to communicate himſelf and his own happineſs to the Rational Creature, Felicity cannot be attain'd by any thing leſs than the knowledge of the Supream good according to the Creatures Meaſures. The Angels themſelves are only bleſſed, in the Contemplation of him, and Affection to him; in being encompaſt with his bright rayes, and having their Affections enflam'd enflam'd by him, Mat. 18. 10. they behold the face of God. As Gods knowledge and fruition of himſelf, makes up his Felicity, ſo the knowledge and fruition of God compoſeth our happineſs.

4. The happineſs of Heaven, which is the ultimate, and compleat happineſs of the Soul, conſiſts in a knowledge of God. The ſight of God is made by our Saviour the reward of purity of heart, Mat. 5. 8. The pure in heart ſhall ſee God. And to ſee him as he is, in the Glory of the other World, 1 Joh. 3. 2, 3. when all the rational faculties ſhall be ſatisfied with light, and the deſires repleniſh'd with Love. The privation of this knowledge is Hell; the puniſhment conſiſts in a Baniſhment from the preſence of the Lord, 2 Theſ. 1. 9. If Felicity in the higheſt Region, conſiſts in a ſight and knowledge of God; the happineſs of the ſoul muſt conſiſt in the ſame, according to the imperfect degrees. If a perfect happineſs cannot be without a perfect knowledge, imperfect cannot be without a partial knowledge. When we are acquainted with him, we are not only at peace, but we can delight our ſelves in the Almighty, and lift up our faces unto God, Job 22. 21, 26. Knowledge of God here, is the dawn of Heaven; knowledge hereafter, the Meridian of it.

5. This is that the Devil endeavours moſt to hinder. He is the Enemy of mans happineſs: he envies man a better ſtate than himſelf hath: his time is ſpent in barring the door againſt it. The courſe he takes, is to bemiſt the Underſtanding Faculty, that the light of the Goſpel of Chriſt might not ſhine into it, 2 Cor. 4. 4. He put our firſt Parents upon the knowledge of other things, to deprive them of the knowledge of God. He is always pecking at this ſeed of knowledge. If he cannot kill it, he will ſow ſome Cockle to choak it. All Errors in the Mind have the Devils Bleſſing; and Knowledge, his Curſe. His Kingdom is a Kingdom of Darkneſs. Light is an Enemy to his Dominion, and he to Light. When the Knowledge of God breaks in upon the Heart, the Devil falls like Lightning from Heaven, as well as at the preaching of the Goſpel by the Diſciples, Luk. 10. 18. It expels his, and introduceth another Empire. This is our Happineſs, which is the Devils Grief. That muſt be neceſſary for us, which Gods, and our great Enemy took all the pains to ſtifle.

III. In what reſpects is this Knowledge of God neceſſary. We owe duty to God as we are Creatures, we are unable to perform it as we are guilty Offenders; we muſt know God to know our duty, we muſt know Chriſt to know the way of performing it; we muſt know God therefore in the perfections of his Nature, and Chriſt in the ſufficiency of his Mediation. We muſt know God in his raviſhing Goodneſs, his affrighting Juſtice, his condeſcending Mercy, his adorable Wiſdom, his unſhaken veracity; we muſt know him as offended by ſin, as pacified by Chriſt; without the one we ſhall not be humbled, without the other we ſhall not approach to him; we muſt know him in his precepts, elſe how can we obey him? in his Promiſes, elſe how can we truſt him? We muſt know Chriſt in his Offices, as an atoning Prieſt, as an inſtructing Prophet, a protecting and governing King. We muſt know him in his Tranſaction with his Father, deſcent to the Word, his return to Heaven; in his Humiliation on Earth, Exaltation in Heaven; we muſt know him upon the Croſs and upon the Throne, and the Ends of both his ſtates, Phil. 3. 10. Know him and the power of his reſurrection, and the fellowſhip of his ſufferings. How elſe can we be conform'd to his death, or have Confidence in his Life? We muſt know him in his Nature, without which we cannot have a knowledge either of the Truth or efficacy of his ſatisfaction; the Truth of it depended upon the reality of his humanity, the efficacy upon the ſtrength of his Divinity; without this knowledge how can we believe in him? how can we love him? how can we perform thoſe acts which are neceſſary to our Salvation? This is a knowledge above the knowledge of Nature: that is too muddy to be a ſpring of any ſpiritual action, raiſed love or hearty reliance. 'Tis not a knowledge of God, by Rational Deductions, but Spiritual Illuminations. The knowledge of God in the Creatures, is as the dawn; the knowledge of God in the Scripture, is as the day-ſpring. But what is either dawn or day-day-ſpring to a blind eye? The day-ſpring may be in the World, yet not in our hearts; we cannot work without Light, and tho' there be the greateſt light we cannot work without ſight.

That which is precedent to Eternal Life, cannot be without the knowledge of God.

1. Without it there can be no motion towards God or for God. Without a Natural knowledge of God, we can never think of him, or have any natural motions to him; without a ſpiritual knowledge, we cannot perform any ſpiritual Action. Without knowledge we cannot act as Rational Creatures, becauſe all action tends to Reſt. No Creature Acts for that end, that it may always Act; but Acts for ſome end wherein it may acquieſce. That which is our proper Reſt muſt be known, we can never elſe order our motions to it. Every thing that hath Rational or Senſitive Life, muſt have ſome kind of knowledge to act ſutable to its Station in the World, and the Nature it is endowed with. A Beaſt cannot live without ſome knowledge by natural Inſtinct, of the proper food for the maintaining the Life of it: a man cannot act Rationally, tho' he have the ſhape and life of a Man, without a habit of firſt Principles which is by Nature put into him: ſo neither can a man act ſpiritually without truth put into the heart by Grace, as an indwelling and abiding Habit, a Truth known, and a Truth dwelling in us and abiding with us for ever, 2 Joh. ver. 2. There are the firſt principles of the Oracles of God, and of the Doctrine of Chriſt to be known, Heb. 5. 12. Heb. 6. 1. before we can go on to a ſpiritual perfection; anſwering in a ſpiritual Creature, to thoſe firſt principles which are in every man by Nature, without which he cannot act as a Rational Creature. The Apoſtle implies the neceſſity of thoſe Principles, while he blames them for ſticking there without making a further progreſs. As knowledge is neceſſary to the Being of any action, ſo a various kind of knowledge is neceſſary to the various kinds of actions. Natural knowledge is neceſſary to natural actions, Moral knowledge, to moral Actions; ſo ſupernatural knowledge is neceſſary to ſupernatural Actions. As the Acts are, ſo muſt the Knowledge be; ſupernatural Acts cannot flow from an underſtanding ſtuffed only with natural principles, no more than Rational Acts can be the products of a brutiſh Fancy and inſtinct; that is, As a Beaſt cannot act Rationally, unleſs he had the Reaſon of a Man; ſo a Man cannot Act Spiritually, unleſs he hath the Underſtanding of a Chriſtian: an Underſtanding given, whereby to know him that is true, who ought to be the proper Center of all our Actions, 1 Joh. 5. 20. The whole body is dark if the eye be ſo, Mat. 6. 22, 23. the whole body of a Mans Acts, are Acts of darkneſs if the Mind be blind. As the Mind is, ſo the Nature is: Corruption of Nature began in wrong Notions receiv'd in the Mind, whence thoſe Actions ſprung which laid Adam and his Poſterity as low as Hell, without the Grace of God. There muſt be then other Notions in the Mind, and other Principles in the heart, before we can be fit for Recovery out of Natural Miſery. While the eye of the Soul remains muddy, all our perceptions will be tinctur'd with that Corruption: a ſuffuſion in the eye, will cauſe a confuſion in the Acts; what the Eye is to the Body, that is the Underſtanding to the Soul. The Truth was in Jeſus, it muſt be in us as it was in him; not as a looſe Notion, which would have engender'd ſtaggering Motions in the Service of God, and work of his Mediation; but as a rooted Habit, a Law in his heart, eſtabliſh'd as firm in his Heart, as it was in the Sanction. Since therefore all our Actions towards God, are to be both a reaſonable, and a ſpiritual Service; there muſt be a reaſonable and a ſpiritual Knowledge, as the Foundation, to raiſe up Action as the building.

(1.) There can be no worſhip of God without it. Since God made us for his own Glory, that we might do thoſe things whereby he might be honour'd, we muſt know the Excellency of his Nature, and what is ſutable to him: 'tis impoſſible to glorifie him, whoſe Honour and Greatneſs we are wholly ignorant of Pſal. 119. 125. David was Gods Servant, had a deſire to ſerve him, and therefore deſires God to give him underſtanding that he might know his teſtimonies. Worſhip is the fruit of Knowledge. God promiſes to be known of the Egyptians in the time of the Goſpel, and then they ſhould do ſacrifice and oblation, Iſa. 19.21. The Egyptians knew there was a God, a ſupream God, but they never worſhipped him till they came to know him in the Goſpel Revelation. In that day, he would be known to them; In what day? In the day when they ſhould ſpeak the Language of Canaan, ver. 18. In the day when he ſhould ſend them a Saviour, ver. 20. There is no worſhip acceptable to God without the Knowledge of Chriſt, and acceſs by him. Daniel open'd his Window, and prayed to God towards the Temple, a Type of Chriſt. He that comes to God, muſt not only know that he is; but he muſt know that he is a rewarder, Heb. 11. 6. not by a Natural Knowledge (for ſo the Heathens both knew the Being of God, and the bounty of God) But a diſtinct knowledge of God, as a Rewarder and Accepter in Chriſt; For that the Apoſtle means when in deſcribing this way of worſhip, and giving Examples of it, he gives inſtances of the Faith of the Worſhippers and their reſpecting God in Chriſt.

(1.) Without this Knowledge of God, we ſhould never worſhip him in a right manner. We muſt know that he is, before we can direct any Religious Act to him, ſo we muſt know what he is, before we can direct any Religious Act to him in a right manner. If we would worſhip him out of love, we muſt know that he is amiable; if with fear, we muſt know that he is powerful and juſt. Whatſoever the Principle of the Worſhip is, it muſt have knowledge for the Foundation. Without a knowledge we cannot affect him, without a ſtrong knowledge, we cannot love him ardently. If our Love be low, our Worſhip will be ſlight, and want that Affection, which is a neceſſary ingredient in it; according to the weakneſs of our knowledge, is the ſlightneſs of all our Acts towards God. When we underſtand not his Juſtice, we ſhall preſume upon him; when we are ignorant of his Glorious Majeſty, we ſhall be rude with him; unleſs we underſtand his Holineſs, we ſhall leap out of ſin to Duty; and the ſteams of our luſts will be as nimble, as the deſires of our Souls. If we are ignorant of his Excellency, we ſhall want Humility before him: If we have not a deep ſenſe of his Omniſciency, we ſhall be careleſs in his preſence, full of roving thoughts, guilty of vain-babling, as if he wanted information, Mat. 6. 6, 7. Ignorance renders a Worſhip falſe, as well as a Zeal Erroneous, Rom. 10. 2. If we Worſhip God from Cuſtom, and not from Knowledg of him, we render him no better a worſhip than we ſhould render to the Impoſtor Mahomet, if his Religion were the Religion of our Country.

(2.) We ſhould be apt to worſhip ſome Falſity, and Fancy inſtead of God. Such an one that knows not God, would be as eaſily induc'd to worſhip ſome Angel or Saint in a glorious Apparition; as a man that comes to Court to ſee the King, and knew him not, might be apt to imagine that ſome Perſon of Quality he ſaw richly dreſt, and bravely attended, might be the Prince. The Heathens having not the knowledge of God, ſtampt every great Benefactor a Deity; and ador'd every one that was highly uſeful to their Country as a God. Without a knowledge of him we ſhall be apt to ſeize upon any thing from which we find aſſiſtance, as a God; and, like ſome Heathens, worſhip the firſt thing we meet in a morning. If we know not God, yet ſince we have naturally a Notion that there is a God, we ſhall be apt to have falſe Conceptions, and miſrepreſentations of him. To worſhip what we miſconceive, is not to Worſhip the true God, but a God coyn'd and moulded by our own fancy: and ſince falſe Conceptions of God, are Degradings and Diſparagements to him, all worſhip guided by them is a worſhip of that Notion and Image we have ſet up in our Mind, and not a worſhip of the true God. 'Tis at beſt a worſhip like that of the Athenian Idolaters, a worſhip of an unknown God, Act. 17. 23. they knew not who he was, and they knew not why they worſhipped him. Certainly as worſhip is a flower in the Crown of the Deity, ſo a worſhip of him according to his Infinite Perfections, is a debt we are bound to pay, and therefore bound to know him, that we may give him his due; otherwiſe we ſhall worſhip not a Scripture-God, but a Fancy-God; a God made up by the Capricio's of our own Brains, and modell'd according to our own Genius. 'Tis an obſervable and difficult place, Amos 5. 25. Have you offer'd to me ſacrifices and offerings in the wilder- ness forty years, O house of Israel. Did they not offer sacrifices to God? the worship of Moloch was entertain'd in the following Ages: God denies that they worshipped him all that Forty years: what if we should conjecture this as the Reason, because all the while they had Notions of God according to the Egyptian Idols? the adoring the Calf, was but an imitation of the Egyptian worship: while they had a false Notion of God, likening him to the Egyptian Apis, all the worship they perform'd to the true God, being tainted with this Notion and Conceit, was not a worship of God. Did you offer to me, when you had such ridiculous and unworthy Conceptions, that you could find out nothing in the whole frame of Nature as an Image to represent me, but that of a Calf? It was a sign what unworthy conceits of me, did lodge in your Minds, which render'd your worship unacceptable and displeasing to me; which Conceits were not displac'd from their heads by the breaking of the Idol.

[3.] Such an ignorant worship is certainly Idolatry. 'Tis not only a wrong Object draws upon men the guilt of Idolatry, but a right Object worshipped in a wrong manner. When we worship him not suitably to his Perfections, or not according to his Command, Levit. 17. 3, 4, 7. God commanded that an Ox, or Lamb, or Goat, intended for Sacrifice, should be brought to the door of the Tabernacle; not kill'd in the Camp, or out of it; if they did, he would count them guilty of Blood, and ver. 7. esteems it no more than as a Sacrifice offer'd to Devils; The Tabernacle being a Type of Christ, Heb. 9. 11. this command signified, that whatsoever was offer'd to God out of Christ, was of no value to him; as hateful as Murder, and esteem'd by him, as if it had been offer'd to Devils.

* Since therefore Nature cannot represent God in his brightest Apparel to us, we cannot worship God by all our Natural knowledge of him; for as by Nature we rather know what God is not, than what he is; so by Nature we may rather tell what Worship is not worthy of him, than what is. We cannot then worship God, without the knowledge of him. We cannot know him in Christ by all the strength of Nature, without Divine Revelation. And indeed it was a natural Notion among the Heathens not to receive a form of worship, but what had a stamp of a Divine Authority; therefore all those Lawgivers who setled any Religion among them, pretended an intimate Acquaintance with some of their esteemed Deities, to make their form of worship entertainable. There is a necessity therefore of the knowledge of God, and of Christ, to present a worship to God acceptable to him.

* Mornæ. verit. Relig. Christian. cap. 20. p. 388, 390, 391.

(2.) No Obedience to God, without the Knowledge of him. The will of God is the Rule of Obedience, and Christ is the Pattern of Obedience. Obedience to God is an imitation of God in Righteousness and Holiness; we must therefore know the Perfections of God, which we are to imitate, as well as the Law of God, according to which we are to regulate our Actions. Obedience therefore is describ'd *, to be nothing else but knowledge digested into Will, Affections, and Practice. The Motion of the Will cannot be regular, without a touch of the understanding: if the spring of the Wills Motion be from the Affections and Apperite only, it is an erroneous Motion in regard of the order of Nature, tho' to a right Object. Now where there is a defect in the first Concoction, there will be a defect in the second and third: Defect in Knowledge, will cause an Error in Practice. Alienation from Gods Life, i. e. from an imitation of his Life, as well as Animation by a living Principle contrary to him, is rooted in the blindness of the heart, Eph. 4. 18. and the reason Men take steps from one sin to another, and are fruitful in iniquity, is because they know not the Lord, Jer. 9. 3. When men are ignorant of the true God, they will not want Pharaohs Apology for their Sin, who is the Lord that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? Exod. 5. 2. The whole Mass of Vice in the World ariseth from the false Ideas of God, whom men shape according to their depraved Fancies; as the Ethiopians paint the image of their gods black, according to their own dark colour. Hence men receive encouragements to all kinds of Vice, when they think God such an one as themselves. There is no Truth nor Mercy among the ten

* Sibb's bruised reed. p. 241.

Tribes, becauſe there was no knowledge of God in the Land, Hoſ. 4. 1, 2. had they known the nature of God, they could not have ſinned at ſuch a rate, as if they had paſt beyond the limits and cenſure of any Law.

All obedience ariſeth from knowledge. As error in knowledge was the firſt deformity of man and the cauſe of all the reſt, ſo the knowledge of God is the firſt line the Spirit draws upon the Soul, whence as from the firſt matter, all thoſe beautiful Graces that appear in every Region of the ſoul, are form'd. Every action of obedience as it muſt be quickned with grace, ſo it muſt be informed with knowledg. Holineſs muſt be a Holineſs of Truth, ſpringing up as a branch from Truth as a root, Eph. 4.24. True Holineſs, or in the Greek, Holineſs of Truth. As all Rebellion againſt God ſteams up from a falſe conception of him, ſo Goodneſs and Holineſs break out of the womb of a ſound notion of him. The mind is firſt renewed ere the new man is created in Righteouſneſs, Eph. 4. 23. 24. The Apoſtle renders it impoſſible for a man to know God and willingly break his commands, and gives ſuch a pretender to Divine knowledge no better term than that of a lyer, 1 John 2. 4. He that ſaith I know him, and keeps not his commands, is a lyar, and the Truth is not in him, he hath not a grain of a Divine habit of truth reſident in his heart. Know thou the God of thy Fathers and ſerve him with a perfect heart is Davids directory to Solomon, 1 Chron. 28. 9. No ſervice without knowledge, no ſincere ſervice without a ſpiritual knowledge of God in covenant. As ignorance of God is the cauſe of ſin, ſo the knowledge and ſenſe of him is the beſt antidote againſt it. Men cannot ſin freely under an acquaintance with infinite fury. The common knowledge of God and Chriſt brings forth ſome fruits of a ſort of obedience in Men, and cleanſeth them from the common and barefac'd pollutions of the World, the common knowledge of God hinders many wicked men from hurting in his holy Mountain. What more glorious fruits than bare appearances would the ſpiritual knowledge of God and Chriſt produce and ripen in the World? 2 Pet. 2. 20. If we know him in the glory of his grace, in the amiableneſs of his nature, what a choice delight ſhould we have in our approaches to him and our actions for him? The more clearly he is underſtood the more he is beloved, and the more he is beloved the more readily he is obeyed. The Angels that behold his face, run moſt chearfully to perform his errands. Pſal. 103. 20. and no doubt but the perfect illumination of the glorified ſoul is a partial cauſe of the ſteadineſs of their wills. Whatſoever looks like obedience, and is not inform'd by knowledge is no more an act of true obedience than the action of a man in his ſleep can be called a humane action, ſince it is no product of his reaſon, but a ſtart of his volatile fancy. Pauls queſtions were orderly when he was charged by Chriſt, firſt, Who art thou? Then, What wilt thou have me to do? Let me know whom I am to obey.

2. No Grace can be without the knowledge of God. Some knowledge of God may be without grace, the Devils are as much filled with one as they are empty of the other. But it is not conceivable how grace can be without knowledge. The knowledge of God in the Text may be call'd Eternal Life, becauſe all graces which are the ſeed of Eternal Life grow up from that as a root. In the change of the ſoul there is an act of viſion before an act of transfiguration, the removing the vail before the turning the Heart, 1 Cor. 3.16. The eye is opened, light darts upon the underſtanding, and thence beams upon the will. The Glory of God is beheld, before the frame of the Heart is changed, 1 Cor. 3.18. The whole work of grace is therefore called light, as the whole ſtate of nature is called darkneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 9. as the underſtanding is the leading Faculty, ſo knowledge, the priviledge of the mind, is the directing principle, that leads, and the will follows: the enlightnings of the one make men immediately capable of the quicknings of the other. As the common knowledge of God makes men capable of ſin, which a Beaſt becauſe of the want of underſtanding, is not; ſo the ſpecial knowledge of God in Chriſt puts men in a capacity for grace. The Philoſopher determines that moral vertues cannot be without intellectual. All Divine motions in the ſoul are regular: Every wheel in the watch moves in due order; the faculties are not jumbled together, the underſtanding commands and the will obeys. Light firſt diſcovers and will embraceth. * The new Creation as well as the old begins with a Fiat lux, whence all the Creatures were to derive their beauty, and are more excellent and ſerviceable as they are endued with a more ſparkling light: The knowledge of God and Chriſt is the chief ingredient which makes the compoſion of the inner man. As without light there could not be a viſible World, ſo without this there cannot be a ſpiritual. As the common engrafted notions of God, left in mens hearts by nature, are the root from which common moral vertues grow, ſo the ſpiritual knowledge of God in the goſpel is the root from whence Divine graces branch themſelves. No form without matter, no grace without knowledge of God. No active principle can be without an object; God is the object of grace. Whence the new Creation of a man is called a tranſlation from darkneſs, Col. 1. 13. and renewed men are called light in the Lord, Eph. 5. 8. when the mind which was ſtufft with baſe and unworthy opinions of God, is made by the Spirit the candle of the Lord, ſpreading its light through the whole man. All thoſe things which pertain to Godlineſs, whereof grace is not the meaneſt, are given through the knowledge of him, 2 Pet. 1. 2, 3. This knowledge of God and Chriſt ſhining upon the heart of a natural moral man, makes his moral virtues to commence ſpiritual graces; as the more generous and commendable acts of a beaſt would ceaſe to be brutiſh actions, and become humane if he had a rational underſtanding infuſed into him. Without the knowledge of Gods juſtice we ſhall not fear him, without knowledge of his ability and fidelity we ſhall not truſt him. Without knowledge of his goodneſs we ſhall not ſeek to him, and without a knowledge of his Majeſty we ſhall not humble our ſelves before him. So that without the knowledge of God there will be no grace in the principle or habit,

As, to inſtance in particular graces.

(1.) Faith cannot be without the knowledge of God and Chriſt. Without the knowledge of God we know not the ultimate object of Faith, without the knowledge of Chriſt we know not the immediate object of faith, and the way to come to God. This grace therefore is ſet in a double ſeat by Divines, in the underſtanding, and Will: 'tis properly a conſent of the Will, which cannot be without aſſent in the mind. Knowledge is antecedent to faith in order of nature, 2 Tim. 1. 12, I know whom I have beleived, Iſaiah 43. 10. That you may know and beleive that I am he. Who can read that doth not know his Letters, who can believe that underſtands nothing of the perfections of God or offices of Chriſt? What image is in the inward ſenſe, was firſt in the outward organ: what fiducial frame there is in the will, was firſt uſher'd in by aſſent in the underſtanding, Heb. 11. 6. He that comes to God muſt know that he is. The knowledge of the bare exiſtence of God will not bring the Creature to him, but the knowledge that he is a Rewarder will, becauſe this knowledge includes an apprehenſion of ſome good in the object known, and ſo hath a Spirit of Life in it to quicken the Affections, and elevate the Heart, which was before dead to any ſuch motion. That knowledge which acquaints a man with no good in the object known, will never excite any motion to it. No man can come to God who is infinitely above him, unleſs he knows him to be infinitely good and ready to receive him. Who will apply himſelf to a Prince or any other man for help, whom he thinks to be ſevere, ſowr, tyrannical, one more like to ſcoff at his miſery than relieve him? There is therefore a neceſſity of the knowledge of God, as a God of tender bowels, and therefore a neceſſity of the knowledge of Chriſt, in whom only he diſcovers himſelf to be a gracious Father. The Spiritual knowledge of him in Chriſt is as an emiſſion of virtue from the Loadſtone that draws the Iron to cleave to it. We muſt know the goodneſs the Fountain, and his faithfulneſs the executor of promiſes, and his power that enables him to be as great and good as his word. We never reaſonably truſt a man that we know not fit to be truſted; we cannot truſt a God whom we know not to be the higheſt goodneſs. Men by Reaſon know that there is a God, but it is ſo dimm in the diſcovery of his perfections, that it ſees not light enough to raiſe it up to any cloſe act of a fiducial dependance on him. The diſcovery of God in Chriſt in the Heart ſets the whole man a crying out, ſoul return to thy reſt.

(2.) No

(2.) No deſire for God without it. The Iſraelites ſtomacks were never ſharpned for Canaan, but wambling towards Ægypt, till they taſted the grapes of the Countrey. The apprehenſion of God as true makes us adore him, the apprehenſion of God as good makes us deſire him. The more clearly we know his perfections, the more fervently we ſhall deſire both to enjoy him and imitate him. How ſoon will ſuch knowledge bud in deſires, and bloſſom and flower in good Affections? If thou hadſt known, thou wouldſt have askt, John 4. 10. If thou hadſt a clear knowledge, thou wouldſt have had an eager affection. The clearer the repreſentations, the more nimble the deſires. Doubtful and wavering conceits of the goodneſs of a thing, keep back the appetite from any motion. If we know not how full a ſpring God is, and ready to emit his ſtreams, how can we thirſt for his boundleſs communications to us? Where there hath been a reliſh, there will be an appetite, 1 Pet. 2. 3. deſire of the word riſeth from a taſt that the Lord is gracious. Knowledge of a thing alwayes precedes our appetite to it. A Toad not having the knowledge of its own venemous nature, and the excellency of other Creatures, can never deſire the being ſtript of his own or inveſted with the other. This deſire after God ſprings not from a bare ſpeculation, but a ſtrong impreſſion, a ſpiritual taſt; for a bare ſpeculation hath no more ſtrength to make a motion in the will, than the Poetical deſcriptions of far Countries can perſwade a potent Prince to take a long voyage for the Conqueſt, or a Merchant to venture his ſtock thither for a Trade. The more diſtinct and ſavoury our notions of God and his goodneſs are, the more ardent flame will be in our wills. The more diſtinctly a man conceives of the excellent reliſh and wholeſomeneſs of this or that kind of meat, the more will his appetite be invited to taſt of it, eſpecially if before he hath ſenſibly enjoyed a ſatisfaction in it: And indeed a ſtrong appetite is a great ſign of a ſpiritual illumination. 'Tis ignorance of God choaks any longing for him, and makes us either not to deſire the enjoyment of him, or beg for it very faintly. Men that never put up a quick prayer to him, never had any knowledge of God in them, and when any of us pray faintly, our knowledge of God is not actuated in us. Without ſome knowledge of God men will rather ſhake off all thoughts of him, all wiſhes for him, and no more deſire the fruition of him than a blind mole deſires to ſee the light of the Sun. Their Language is with thoſe in Job, depart from us, not come unto us, Job 21. 14. Where there is no knowledge, there can be no fruition, and where no deſire of knowledge, there can be no deſire of enjoyment.

(3.) No love to God without knowledge of him. Though a thing be made up of delights, and hath an amiableneſs interwoven in every part, yet if it be not known, it cannot be affected. We cannot love God with all our hearts, with the affective part, till we firſt love him with all our minds, with our reaſon and intelligent part. Mark 12. 30. Love always ſuppoſeth the knowledge of the beloved object, ſince it is nothing elſe but perfectum judicium de bono amato. Good cannot allure the affections unleſs it be apprehended, and knowledge cannot enflame the affection unleſs the object be imagined as good; both muſt concur to the exciting love. None can pay a debt of love to any thing, till he knows it juſtly deſerving and challenging that love: No man in the World can be beloved by another, till ſomething be ſeen in him as lovely, either the Wiſdom of his Head, the Sweetneſs of his Nature, the beauty of his Perſon, or the Obligingneſs of his Carriage. How can we have any elevated Affection to God, unleſs we underſtand the Amiableneſs of his Nature, the infiniteneſs of his Perfections, and the expreſſion of them for the good of Mankind? How can it be expected any can have a heave of Affection to Chriſt, who underſtands nothing of thoſe treaſures of Knowledge, Grace, and Wiſdom wherewith he is repleniſht; who knows nothing ſpiritually and feelingly of the deſign of his coming, his low condeſcenſion, his yearning compaſſion, his full goodneſs and his ſincere Affection? Without it we ſhall value God and Chriſt no more than a Swine doth a Pearl, a Child a Learned book or a Prince a heap of Rubbiſh: No more than the Jews did the Divinity of our Saviour hid in the weak casket of his humanity. The beams muſt be united together in the burning glaſs, and ſhine directly upon the Heart, before the Affections will take Fire. The Daughters of Jeruſalem ſeem'd to

ſcorn him and reproach the hot affections of the ſpouſe as if unworthily placed, or too fond in their exerciſe till a glimps of knowledge by her deſcription quickned them with ſome heat of love, which kindled in them deſires of ſeeking him, Cant. 5. 9. What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou doſt ſo charge us? Whereupon ſhe begins a deſcription of his beauty, and then Cant. 6. 1. They deſire to ſeek him with her. So ſoon may a little ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt drop't into the Heart turn a ſcoffer into an admirer. Had the Jews known Chriſt to be the Lord of Glory, they had never crucified him, 1 Cor. 2. 8. They had turn'd adorers inſtead of murtherers. The mind muſt be ſpiritually illuminated to ſee God; in an Evangelical luſtre, it muſt be filled with aſtoniſhing and affecting notions of God before the Heart can have a valuation of him, and a diſeſteem for the things of this World. The Apoſtle indeed ſaith, 1 Pet. 1. 8. Whom having not ſeen you love, but he doth not ſay, whom having not known you love: There is a knowledge of inviſible things by Faith, which takes poſſeſſion of the Heart by the ear and attracts the affections. Ignorance of God muſt be removed before an affection to him will take place, ſince it is not only a cauſe but a part of our enmity to him, Eph. 4. 18. We may have the knowledge of a Scholar without the love of a Chriſtian, but we cannot have a Chriſtian love without a Chriſtian knowledge, and ſavoury apprehenſion of God and Chriſt. Unleſs we know the nature of God, we may love ſome falſe thing inſtead of God, and unleſs we know the nature of Chriſt, the union of his two Natures, and the fulneſs of grace, we can never love him after a right manner.

(4.) Joy and delight in God. I mean that delight which is a duty, not that which is only Gods diſpenſation, an active not a paſſive delight. Who can delight in Muſick that cannot hear it? Or be pleaſed with the ſcent of a Roſe that cannot ſmell it? Who can delight in God that hath no ſenſe of the goodneſs of his Nature, and the happineſs of fruition? Who can delight in his wayes, who doth not underſtand him as good and indulgent in his precepts, as he is ſweet and bountiful in his Promiſes? If we did know him, we ſhould be as eaſily drawn to rejoyce in him, as by ignorance we are induc'd to run from him. Such charms would be tranſmitted to our Hearts as would conſtrain a joy in them in ſpite of all other delights in periſhing pleaſures. Knowledge of God is a neceſſary preface to a ſpiritual joy in him, Pſal. 104. 34. Firſt by a ſweetneſs taſted in Meditation, and then a Delight in God the object of it, and according to the apprehenſion we have of the object, are the degrees of our delight in it. 'Tis all one to a blind man to be in a palace richly furniſh'd, or a dungeon hung with Cobwebs. What pleaſure can a man ignorant of Gods Nature and delightful Perfections, and that repreſents him through ſome miſtaken glaſs, which imprints unworthy notions of God in his mind, what pleaſure can ſuch a man take in approaching to God, or what greater freedom can he have in coming to him, than a Malefactor in being brought before a Judge?

(5.) No Repentance without the knowledge of God. The times of ignorance and impenitence are one and the ſame, Acts 17. 30. If there be no right conception of the Nature of God, there can be no ſenſe of the evil of ſin, and the contrariety of our Nature to him *. But when the ſoul ſees God and ſees it ſelf, it will be filled with ſelf abhorrency. How can we bewail our offences, if we underſtand not the purity of his Holineſs, the ſeverity of his Juſtice, the tenderneſs of his mercy, the irreſiſtibleneſs of his power, and the inevitableneſs of his wrath?

* Contraria juxta ſe poſita magis illucęſcunt.

(6.) No fear of God without it. As the Juſtice of God and his Anger muſt be apprehended before he can be feared ſlaviſhly, ſo the Majeſty of God and his goodneſs muſt be underſtood before he can be feared filially. Who can ſtand in awe of a Majeſty he is ignorant of? * Men knowing not Gods nature have often preſum'd ſo much upon his mercy, that they have been deſtroyed by his Juſtice, as ſome through ignorance of the true quality of a fruit have found their death where they expected their pleaſure.

* Barlow on Tim. par. 1. p. 29.

(7.) No true patience without it. Since true bleſſedneſs conſiſts in the ſpiritual and affectionate knowledge of God as the ſupream good, no man can be truly content under croſſes, who doth not apprehend the goodneſs and fullneſs of God and Chriſt

Chriſt. All patience not founded upon this bottom, is a brutiſh Stupidity. The Apoſtle lays the Courage of the believing Hebrews upon their ſpiritual Illumination, Heb. 10. 32. After you were illuminated, you endur'd a great fight of Afflictions. When their Light was great, their Patience was ſteady; and they had not only a Contentedneſs under Sufferings, but a Joy in them; becauſe they had an experimental ſenſe and knowledge of God as a rewarder, and had ſome ſweet foretaſts of the rich Inheritance he had provided for them, ver. 34. You took joyfully the ſpoiling of your goods, knowing in your ſelves that you have in heaven a better and more enduring ſubſtance. The feeling of Chriſt, and the taſting his ſweetneſs, is the beſt Antidote againſt Temptation. He that knows no richer ſweetneſs, than is in the Devils Baits, will eaſily be expos'd to the danger of them. Without this Knowledge, the ſlight impreſſions on men will be like a few heat drops, dryed up by a ſcorching Temptation almoſt as ſoon as they fall.

As none of theſe Graces can be without the Knowledge of God and Chriſt; ſo

(2.) Without it, there can be no acting of any Grace. All Grace is nothing elſe but an imitation of God, a reſemblance of Gods Perfections in the Creature, and the acting of it a repreſentation of the Lineaments of his Divine Vertues, Eph. 5. 1. Be you followers of God as dear Children. The Copy muſt be known, before it can be imitated. 'Tis a conformity to the Image of Chriſt, Rom. 8. 29. all grace is ſumm'd up in a Conformity to God and Chriſt; for it is nothing but a reſtoration of the Divine Image, a re-implantation of that in the Soul, which was defaced and loſt by Adam; as the Seal leaves the whole print upon the wax, even the leaſt point engraven upon it; ſo doth God and Chriſt upon the heart. Every grace is a Member and part of the Divine Image, and anſwers in ſome proportion to ſome imitable Perfection of God. If we know nothing of the Lineaments of God, how can we make a report of his Excellency to the world in our Actions? How can we expreſs our ſelves in any Virtue, if we know not the Proto-type, the firſt pattern? The want of the knowledge of God, made all the Heathen Virtues trivial things, meer ſhadows: the knowledge of God and Chriſt could only Tincture, and Dye them into Divine Graces. Humility proceeding from ſome ſordid humour, or By reſpects, is not a Grace; but when it ſprings from a knowledge of the Condeſcenſions of God, or contrariety to God, or a knowledge of the Humility of Chriſt, it is then a Grace.

How can we return lively Affections to him, if we know not the emanations of his love? How ſhould we be at a loſs for Holineſs, if we underſtood nothing of the holy Nature of God, and his hatred to Sin? How would the Conſideration of Gods Juſtice againſt ſin, help us in the exerciſe of our juſtice in the Mortification of our Affections to it; and the knowledge of the Patience of God under Affronts received by us, make us patient and ſubmiſſive under ſtrokes inflicted by him! 'Tis this makes the Chriſtian more ſignal in gracious actions towards others. How readily would his love break out to others, in an imitation of Gods love to Man? what a tender and compaſſionate diſpoſition would be manifeſted to Men, if there were an actuated knowledge of Gods Mercy and Compaſſion to us? The conſideration of Gods Veracity, would render men faithful in Promiſes. The Perfections of God, if more ſpiritually known, would bring forth more of thoſe pleaſing fruits in the Soul. 'Tis impoſſible an Act can be without an Object; nothing is Grace, but as it is converſant about God, or hath a reſpect to God. There can be no Act about an unknown Object. There can be no form without matter, nor any acting of that form but in matter; no Grace without knowledge, no acting of Grace but in Knowledg. The frame of Grace is rais'd upon the infuſed Notions of God; Illumination precedes renovation of the Will. As the right Motion of the Will, ſuppoſeth an enlightned Mind; ſo the acting of Grace in the Will, implies a preſent and actuated knowledge of the object about which it is Converſant. There is no Faculty excited in any Act, but by ſome Object; that Object is not entertain'd at firſt in any power of the Soul, but in the Underſtanding, that firſt propounds the Object, as worthy and ſutable to be followed by the other Powers of the Soul, whoſe Office it is to Act. All Impreſſions upon the lower Faculties, are made by the higheſt, as all Motions depend upon the higheſt Sphear in the Heavens. There muſt

therefore be a distinct knowledge of God; God abstracted from his Perfections, his Power, Holiness, Faithfulness, Love, is not the Object about which any Grace can be conversant; but God as revealing himself, cloathed with such Excellency as sute and answer the Creatures Necessities. If I act Faith, I must conceive of his power to relieve me. If I act Faith upon his promise, I must conceive of his faithfulness and Truth to make good his word. We cannot work without Light, nor act Grace without the Knowledge of God and Christ. If we must be perfect as God is perfect, we must know the Perfection of the Copy we are to follow. The more knowledge we have of God, and of the Nature, Offices and Communications of Christ, the more distinct are the actings of Grace.

(3.) No growth in grace without it. As the degrees of our knowledge are, so are the degrees of our grace, Rom. 15. 14. You are full of goodness, filled with all knowledge. Growth in grace is promoted by the knowledge of Jesus Christ, 2 Pet. 3. 18. the one is the Root, the other the Branch; the root may be without the branch, but the branch can never grow without a root. As the root is strengthen'd, so are the branches; what is in the root, is communicated to the branches. If love flames more vehemently, 'tis by the addition of the fuel of knowledge; Phil. 1. 9. That your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgement. Love, which is a grace that adorns us in the World, and is a part of the glory of Heaven, burns hotter as our knowledge is clearer: a firm and stable knowledge is as necessary to the increase of Love, as to the being of Love; Ἐπίγνωσις signifies a clear knowledge. Fruitfulness in every good work depends upon the increase of the Knowledge of God, as the fruit of the ground upon the dew of Heaven, Col. 1. 10. Being fruitful in every good work and encreasing in the knowledge of God. The strength of Grace is promoted by the increase of Knowledge; a man of knowledge increaseth strength, Prov. 24. 5. the strengthening the foundation is a strengthening the building. All Graces depend upon the increase of Faith, and Faith is the firmer by an encrease of knowledge. The path of the just, or his walk in the wayes of God, is expresst by a shining or growing light, Prov. 4. 18. As there was more Truth, so there was more Grace by Christ than by Moses, Joh. 1. 17. As there was but obscure Truth under the Law, so there was but weak Grace; when Truth shone, Grace flourished; as the Plants renew their strength with the Springs Sun. The Law made no such Discoveries of God as were reveal'd by Christ: the communication of the greatest knowledge of God, was reserved for the Honour of the great Prophet; and the full effusion of Grace, was reserved for the Honour of his Royalty. All the Declarations by the Law, could not give so much knowledge of Truth as the Gospel, and therefore make no such impression of Grace upon the Soul. Truth and Grace go hand in hand together, and spur on one another: Truth excites Grace, and Grace spurs on to the enquiry after Truth. Christ himself had not been full of Grace, unless he had been full of Truth, throughly acquainted with the Nature of God, and Mysteries of his Will, Joh. 1. 14. Full of Grace and Truth; 'tis the fulness of his Humane Nature, for he speaks of the Word as made Flesh and dwelling among us. And accordingly, when he prays for the increase of the Disciples Graces, and their progressive Sanctification, he prescribes the means, Joh. 17. 17. Sanctifie them through thy Truth, thy word is Truth. The Word is nothing else but a Discovery of God; which affords Motives to Holiness, and can strengthen the Soul against all the Invasions of the Devil that envies Grace, and endeavours to rifle it. A Spiritual knowledge of God would spring up in delightful thoughts of him, and those would be as a refreshing influence to all the Graces of the New Man.

(4.) No continuance in Grace without it. True Grace cannot be totally lost, but it may miserably decay. True Grace will decay, and pretended Grace will quite wither without it. As it is impossible any man can close with God in Christ without a knowledge of him; so it is as impossible that he can persist in that state, without the continuance of that Knowledge. Knowledge of God is part of the anointing of the Spirit which teacheth the believer all things. 1 Joh. 2. 27. Grace is the Divine

Lamp in the Soul, which lives and burns by the oyl of the Spirits Teaching: a Lamp will out without oyl to feed it; and Grace will burn dim, without knowledge to ſupply it. The Apoſtle owns the knowledge of Chriſt to be the Anchor that keeps us from being toſt to and fro like children, Eph. 4. 13, 14. Ignorance is the Mother of inconſtancy in the wayes of God, the unlearned and unſtable go by Couples, 2 Pet. 3. 16. Where there is no knowledge of God to ballaſt, there is no ſecurity againſt the force of Winds and Waves. Thoſe that are unlearn'd in Heavenly Wiſdom, will be unſtable in Heavenly wayes. The want of root made the Temporaries wither: unleſs we know God, we cannot follow on to know him, Hoſ. 6. 3. 'Tis as natural for a ſaving Knowledge of God to preſs on farther, as it is for a counterfeit knowledg to draw back. But an experimental ſenſe will preſerve the ſoul from Apoſtacy, Joh. 4. 14. Whoſoever ſhall drink of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt, i. e. he ſhall never thirſt for any thing elſe; for this he cannot but Thirſt, till he comes to a full Fountain. 'Tis not a ſavory knowledge of Chriſt, if it be not attended with a Thirſt for more. Where there is only a ſenſitive Carnal Apprehenſion of God and his Truth, there may be ſome Reſolutions, ſome Pangs, but the fit will quickly ceaſe. The ſilly conceit of a Bread and Water from Heaven, that ſhould ſatisfie their hunger, and quench their thirſt, which might free them from Toyl and Sweat in the World, made ſome Jews with lively Affections cry out, Joh. 6. 34. Evermore give us this bread. Chriſt by bread meant himſelf; and by eating, he meant Faith; they underſtood it of Earthly Bread, and had Affections accordingly; but when they underſtood the Truth of the Caſe, they turned their backs upon him, ver. 66. How ſoon were their Affections extinguiſh'd, which had nothing but a Carnal Apprehenſion for a Foundation? 'Tis a full aſſurance of underſtanding to the acknowledgement of the Myſtery of God the Father and of Chriſt, that preſerves a Soul from ſeduction by enticing words, Col. 2. 2, 4.

3. No Comfort can be without the Knowledge of God and Chriſt. Peace as well as grace is multiplied by this, 2 Pet. 1. 2. Acquaintance with God is the Channel through which the bleſſings of Peace flow into our Souls, Job 22. 21, 22. &c. All joy in, or from God, preſuppoſeth a knowledge of him; for ſpiritual joy is ſeated in the Mind, not in the ſenſitive part of the Soul. All the pleaſure that Rational Creatures have, is by an Act of their Underſtanding. The light of Knowledge, begets the light of Joy and Peace in the Heart; as the light in the body of the Sun begets the light and ſhine in the Air. The Aſſurance of underſtanding doth ariſe from the acknowledgement of the Myſtery of God the Father and of Chriſt, Col. 2. 2. Becauſe the knowledge of thoſe is a means to beget aſſurance. In the light of God we enjoy the light of Comfort, Pſal. 36. 9. In thy light we ſhall ſee light. There may be a knowledge of God, and a Terror with it. The Devils knowledge renders them leſs at eaſe in themſelves, than an Ignorance would: tho' their knowledge of God be greater than others, yet it is more diſtaſtful to them: they have only a knowledge of God in his Juſtice to terrifie them, but no hopes of his Mercy to pacifie their troubles. Yet without it we can no more have any fruition of God, than a Man, whoſe ſenſes are bound up with ſleep, can rejoyce in the preſence of beautiful Pictures. As the operations of the Will, depend upon the touch of the Underſtanding; ſo the Comforts of the Soul, depend upon the clearneſs of the Underſtanding, Contemplating the Object. The beſt Good, tho' never ſo near us, cannot be comfortable to us while we are under the darkneſs of Ignorance. Nor can there be any Comfort without the knowledge of Chriſt. There was in Adam no neceſſity of the knowledge of Chriſt, becauſe there was no neceſſity of his knowledge of a Mediator in his innocent Eſtate. He knew God in his Nature and in his perſonal Relations, and his works of Creation: but what a Miſery are we in, without the knowledge of Chriſt, as well as God! What pleaſure can we have in the apprehenſions of an offended and injur'd God, unleſs we know him in the Methods of his Reconciliation, which cannot be underſtood but by the knowledge of Chriſt, becauſe no atonement is made by any but him? The more any knows of God without Chriſt, the more he knows of a deplorable contrariety to him. What ſpark of joy can he have, unleſs he can ſee a way of bringing God down to him, or of his aſcent to God, unleſs God would ſtrip himſelf of his nature to converſe with him, or he be uncloath'd of his corruption to be fit to converſe with God? He ſees terror as well as ſweetneſs, wrath as well as grace. The knowledge of Chriſt, as receiving the darts of Gods wrath upon himſelf to reflect upon the ſoul the beams of his grace, muſt ſtep in, before the thoughts of God can be comfortable any more to us than to Devils.

(1.) No comfort in this Life. Without godlineſs there can be no rational ſatisfaction, and ſenſitive comforts deſerve not the name of a rational contentment. Godlineſs and Contentment are coupled together by the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 6. 6. Godlineſs is nothing but the ſpiritual and practical knowledge of the Myſteries of God. Nothing can have any real comfort without anſwering and attaining the end of its being. The end of our Creation was not ſimply to enjoy the Creature, or ſatisfie our ſenſe, but to glorifie God, to obſerve the prints of Gods goodneſs, and return the praiſe to him. The World was made for the manifeſtation of Gods goodneſs, the Heavens declare the Glory of God materially, man is to give God the glory of it formally. Without this man hath not a pleaſure ſutable to the end of his Creation. What praiſe now can any one render to God, who knows not the excellency ſtampt upon his works, knows not his glory and goodneſs manifeſted in Redemption? All praiſe of God without underſtanding is not pleaſant to the offerer, and as unwelcome to God as the ſcraping of a lute by an ignorant hand is to a delicate ear. We are to praiſe God with underſtanding, Pſal. 47. 7. i. e. with a knowledge of his nature, his works, his excellencies in him. We loſe the comfort of our being by not anſwering the end of our Creation, and this we cannot do without a knowledge of God and Chriſt, and ſo loſe the pleaſure of thoſe raptures, and extaſies of joy, which an obſervation and praiſe of God fills the ſoul with in ſecret. What riſe is there for this, if we are unacquainted with the matter and object of this praiſe?

(2.) No pleaſure and comfort to one ignorant of God, if he were admitted into Heaven. The happineſs of Heaven conſiſts in a clear knowledge of God and a pure Affection to him. 'Tis as impoſſible for a man remaining ignorant of God to take any pleaſure in him, were he admitted into the local Heaven where God diſplays his glory, as for a blind man placed upon an high Tower to reliſh a delight in the beautiful proſpect, ſo long as he wants eyes to behold it. Such an one would want happineſs in the midſt of an Ocean of it, as a Milſtone in the midſt of the Sea wants moiſture in the Center, becauſe of the thickneſs and hardneſs of its parts. He that takes no pleaſure in enquiring after God and ſeeing him in the glaſs of the Goſpel would take as little or leſs in ſeeing him face to face. An unenlightned mind could have as little delight in Heaven by reaſon of its ignorance, as an unrenewed will could by reaſon of its impurity: A Swine that underſtands not the delicacies of a muſical Air, would rather run away affrighted at a loud Conſort, than diligently liſten, and take more ſatisfaction in a puddle or heap of garbiſh, things ſuted to his ſenſe and nature, then in thoſe objects he hath no conception of.

IV. What are the properties of this knowledge of God and Chriſt, whereby 'tis diſtinguiſht from that knowledge, which is not Saving and Eternal Life.

1. Negatively.

(1.) 'Tis not an immediate knowledge of God and Chriſt. As we are acquainted with a man face to face, when we ſee his perſon, and view his features; we have no ſuch knowledge of Angels, much leſs of God. Nay the things of the World which are viſible to us, are not known ſo much in their formal nature as by their operations, we do not immediately know the Sun ſo much as by his beams enlightning the Earth, and quickning and refreſhing the Spirits of all Creatures. 'Tis more eſpecially true of our knowledge of God who is not known immediately in his Nature, ſo much as by his excellent works of Creation, Providence, Redemption and the Revelation of inviſible Myſteries in his Word. The inviſible things of God are underſtood not by immediate ſpeculations about the Nature of them, but by the things that are made, Rom. 1. 20. * Thoſe things that are inviſible in God, and that cannot be known or ſeen with an immediate view, do ſhine forth in his works, both in the firſt forming them and the conſtant preſervation of them; wherein he diſcovers ſuch marks of an infinite power and unexpreſſible goodneſs, which is the glory of his Godhead, that if they were repreſented in a glaſs, they could not be more viſible. He is encircled with that Ocean of light through which no mortal eye ever did peirce, or can approach to 1 Tim. 6. 16. He dwells in light to which no man can approach, whom none hath ſeen or can ſee, it is uſed to expreſs the impoſſibility of an immediate knowledge of God; we ſee the created light of the Sun over powers the eyes of our body, how much more the glorious light of God the eyes of our ſouls, ſince he cloaths himſelf with light as with a garment? Pſal. 104. 2. As the Sun though it diſcovers other things to us by its light, yet by reaſon of the greatneſs of its light hinders us from an immediate ſight of it ſelf; ſo though God diſcovers himſelf in other things to us by his light, yet it is too immenſe for us to have an immediate Knowledge of God. In his appearance to the Iſraelites he was covered with a Cloud, to ſhow the weakneſs of our underſtandings about Divine things; and how eaſily is it dazled at his ineffable brightneſs?

(2.) Nor is it a comprehenſive knowledge. When the Pſalmiſt had flouds of precious thoughts of God in the day, the next morning he was as far from finding him out to perfection as before, Pſal. 139. 17, 18. verſe. When I awake, I am ſtill with thee. i. e. I am where I was, I have made no further progreſs, but am to begin again, ſo infinite are thy perfections. Moſes that was dignifyed with the greateſt familiarity with God, could arrive no higher than the ſight of his back parts. A beaſt by ſeeing our actions may better comprehend our nature than we comprehend the nature of God. To know comprehenſively is to contain, and the thing contain'd muſt be leſs than that which contains, and therefore if a Creature could comprehend the eſſence of God, he would be greater than God. 'Tis infinitely more difficult for any Creature to comprehend the nature and perfections of God, than it is eaſie upon the ſight of his works, to acknowledge there is ſuch an incomprehenſible being; he makes darkneſs his Pavilion and hiding place. The comprehenſive knowledge of himſelf is only within himſelf, and none can know God as he knows himſelf, unleſs he were God, his name is ſecret., Judg. 13. 18.

God is the higheſt in the rank of beings, the chiefeſt in the ſcale of good, the ſupream in the nature of intelligent, man is the loweſt of intelligent Creatures; how can he that is in the loweſt form of reaſonable Creatures mount up to the knowledge of the ſupream Author of all beings? We are not able to conceive of God as he is, becauſe our apprehenſions take their firſt riſe from ſenſe and ſenſible objects. There muſt needs then be an infinite diſtance between our conceptions of God and his nature, as the conception that a man that never ſaw the Sun hath of the Sun, by the light of a candle which he hath ſeen, is far inferiour to the glorious nature of that Luminary. Chriſt onely knows the Father, and he to whom the Son will reveal him; yet upon Chriſts Revelation no man can know God comprehenſively; not for any weakneſs of Revelation but incapability in the Creature. The Ocean hath water enough to fill the biggeſt veſſel, yet it can give no more to it than the veſſel is able to contain.

[1.] We cannot comprehend the Creatures that are near to us. Not to ſpeak of Angels that are Creatures of another ſphere, whoſe nature we are not able to meaſure, and whoſe appearances were formidable to the Believers under the old Teſtament, we find our reaſons twinkle at the ſight of a Star; though we behold its ſparklings, we cannot underſtand fully the nature and dimenſions of it. How are our reaſons blockt up by Clouds of matter from peircing into the nature of a ſtone we tread on? How are we puzled to know the ſoul of an Ant, the forms of Beaſts and Plants? Is not the acuteſt reaſon too blunt to peirce into their hidden natures? How are we then able to aſcend into the Cabinets of the Almighty Creator? How blind are we in the nature of our own Souls which we bear about in our bodies every day, and feel the operations of in every motion? How then can we by ſearching find out the Almighty unto perfection? If all the wit of World hath not been able to content the understanding of Man, in the reason of the Ebbs and Flouds of the Sea, the intervals of an Ague, the Nature of the Sun, the attractive Virtue of the Loadstone, and a thousand other things which Non-plus the Reason of Man. Is it possible to comprehend God? If we know not the Works of Nature, can we think to know the Author of Nature? Are we ignorant of the Nature of the Effects, and shall we think fully to understand the Cause of them, which infinitely surpasseth them? If we know not the World which is as a point, it cannot be thought that we can comprehend the Circumference it self.

[2.] In Heaven God shall not be comprehensively known. 'Tis true there will be a fuller perception of God, and a clearer Notion of him in Heaven; the Infinite Treasures of Wisdom and Goodness, which lye hid in God to be admir'd, will be then more clearly seen; yet God can never descend from his own infiniteness to be grasped by a created understanding. For in the highest pitch of Glory, the Soul is but finite; and therefore still too short to enclose an infinite Being in its Understanding, even to an endless Eternity. In Heaven, the glorified Soul is still but a Creature: Heaven glorifies our Natures, but doth not make our being Infinite; and till a Creature can mount to the pitch of a Creator, it can never understand the Nature of the Deity. When Moses desir'd to see Gods face, or Essence, Exod. 33. 18. that God might be known to him as the Person of a Man is known to another by the discovery of his face, God tells him not, thou shalt not see, or thou may'st not see; But canst not see my face, ver. 20. for there shall no man see my face and live, i. e. as the Jews expound it *; No created Understanding can attain this. That one perfection of his Love, which we are more sensible of, and are exhorted to know the length and breadth of; yet the Apostle tells us in the same breath, that it passeth knowledge, Eph. 3. 17, 18, 19. and the peace of God, which is an effect of his Love, passeth all understanding, Phil. 4. 7. And tho' it be said, 1 Joh. 3. 2. That we shall see him as he is; 'tis most convenient to understand it of the sight of Christ in his visible humane Nature, at the Day of judgment, and not of the Essence of God; for he speaks of the Appearance of God, understanding Christs Appearance, which the Scripture frequently speaks of. There will indeed in Heaven, be a wider enlarging the Faculty, and a fuller discovery of the Object, greater sparklings of Light and Glory, enough to satisfie; yet still the Perfections of God will be above our Comprehensions; the Understanding will be dilated and strengthened, a clear light put into it; which is not any species of God, but a spiritual Principle created by God, to perfect the Understanding for the Contemplation of him.

* Maimon de Fundam. legis cap. 1. Sect. 10. pag. 6, 7.

[3.] The Angels who have had the fullest Vision of God since their Creation, cannot know God perfectly. And that upon the same reason, because they are Creatures; there must be some proportion between the Faculty and the Object, but there is none between a finite Understanding, and an infinite Essence. They know God in a more excellent manner, than other Creatures can do in the World; they stand before his Face, they see the signs of his glorious Presence; but their contracted Understandings cannot comprehend the Essence of God, which hides it self in the secret place of Eternity. If God could be grasped by any finite Understanding, tho' Angelical, he were not Infinite. The Angels signifie as much by the covering their faces before the throne of the Divine Majesty, that the Majesty of God is too Mysterious for the most capacious Understanding, Isa. 6. 2. * And therefore it is generally said that the Humane Nature of Christ, tho' being straightly united to the Divine Nature, he did behold the Divine Essence, yet could not comprehend it, because the Humane Nature was finite and a Creature.

* Woleb. compend. lib. 1. c. 16. the humanity of Christ did see God ὅλον but not ὅλως.

Nor can we have a comprehensive knowledge of Christ; the Spirit doth take of Christs to show to the Believers, Joh. 16. 14, 15. But not all of Christs, for all the things of Christ cannot be shown to any Man; as his Divine Nature, being Infinite and Incomprehensible. We know God, as we know the Sea; we behold the vastness of its Waters, but we cannot measure the depths and abysses of it. Yet we may be said truly to see it, as we may touch a Mountain with our hands, but not grasp it in our Armes. We know God to be Omnipotent and Immense, but we cannot com-comprehend his Power and Immenſity. Nor can we know the Counſels of God; we may as well expect to ſpan the Heavens, and encloſe the Sea in a Nut-ſhell, as to underſtand thoſe Judgments which are paſt finding out, Rom. 11. 33. So that this is not the knowledge God requires of us, or that can be called our happineſs, but that we ſhould know what kind of God he is, Merciful, Juſt, Wiſe, Holy, True, and how thoſe Perfections are manifeſted in Chriſt. Yet becauſe we cannot comprehend him, the more we ought, and the more we ſhall admire him. Our Admirations of the brightneſs of the Sun are greater, by how much the leſs we can look upon the body of it, without winking and ſhielding our eyes from the onſet of his Beams: ſo ſhould they be of God.

(3.) Neither is it a perfect Knowledge of God in this Life, ſo far as 'tis poſſible for a Creature to know him, that is requir'd. Our knowledge of God in this life, is as the knowledge of him in a Glaſs, obſcure, and apt to be dimm'd by the ſteams and breath of our unworthy Affections, and Notions of him: we cannot arrive to great Meaſures, becauſe of the miſty cloud upon our Minds, the beam of Sin in our Eye; our Soul clogg'd with a fleſhly Clay, cannot aſcend to a perfect knowledge of God. We are like a man clos'd up in a room, where light comes in at ſome Crannies and Chinks of the ſhutters; and tho' the Sun ſhine never ſo clearly, he cannot behold the glory of it, while he remains thus cloſed up. While we are in this Dungeon of Fleſh, clouded with Sin, we cannot know the Glory of Chriſt, till we are freed from that darkneſs, by taking away the Shutts and Obſtacles. We have ſtill thick ſcales upon our Eyes, and too much of the vail upon our hearts. Paul that was ennobled with extraordinary Revelations, yet pretended to no higher a knowledge of him, than as in a glaſs, and that not clear but darkly, 1 Cor. 13. 12. The fuller knowledge is reſerved for another Life. We muſt know him here by his Name, not by his Face; by his Grace, not by his Glory. Who can ſee ſo well with ſore Eyes, as when the Organ is heal'd? Chriſt looks thro' the Lattice, Cant. 2. 9. Gives us an imperfect ſight of himſelf. God keeps back much of the knowledge of himſelf, to humble us for our firſt curioſity in Adam our common root, and to whet our Longings after another World, wherein we ſhall know Chriſt no more, by a ſtooping Faith, but an aſcending Viſion; when we ſhall, as it were, with Thomas, put our hands into his wounds. Yet a perfection in the knowledge of Chriſt, as well as in Grace, muſt be aimed at in this Life. So the Apoſtle did, Phil. 3. 12. He followed after, if he might apprehend; and all that are ſincere, are thus minded. He did not apprehend all of Chriſt, but laboured ſtill in enquiries after him, and took greater ſtrides in his Journey to him. Light of Knowledge is ſown here, but the harveſt is above. We can never totally ſhake off our Ignorance, till we ſurmount our Natural Corruption.

(4.) The knowledge of God and Chriſt which is ſaving, differs not from other knowledge in regard of the Object, but the manner of knowing and the effects of Knowledge. One knows by a natural Underſtanding, and knows God in the Scripture as he would know a thing written in any other book: the other knowledge is by an Underſtanding open'd to take in more fully what is preſented. The ſhutters which barr'd out the Light, are pull'd down, whereby the light breaks into the room more clearly, Luk. 24. 45. Then open'd he their underſtandings. Two may behold the ſame picture, the Object is the ſame; but one having a more piercing Eye, and exacter Judgment, will better diſcern the Lineaments and Beauty of the Work, which the other cannot perceive, tho he views the ſame Object. Suppoſe a beaſt that knows his Maſter and the Servants that gave him food, were chang'd into a Man, and endued with a Rational Soul, he would have the ſame Object of knowledge, but he would know them in another manner with an Underſtanding given; whereas he knew them before only by a cuſtomary ſight, a ſtrength of Imagination. And another kind of knowledge in the effects. A Child of a year old may know his Parents, his Father, Mother, and the Servants; but when he grows up, tho' there be no change of the Object, yet there is in the Effects of his knowledge. He knows them with more Reverence, with more Rational Affections, with expreſſi-ons of Duty. So the knowledge of God differs in a ſound Chriſtian from the knowledge others have under the Preaching of the Goſpel; he knows God and Chriſt in a clearer manner, with a ſpiritual Eye, and brings forth affectionate and practical fruits of that knowledge.

2. What this Knowledge of God is Affirmatively. The World pretends to know God, but Chriſt flatly denys it, and appeals to his Father for the Truth of it in his laſt Prayer, Joh. 17. 25. The world hath not known thee, but I have known thee, and thoſe have known that thou haſt ſent me. That part of the world that Chriſt had preached to, and declar'd the Meſſage from his Father, knew not God, they heard the report of him, they could not but know the Doctrine deliver'd, but they rejected it, refuſed the embracing of it, and therefore it was no knowledge of God. He that hath a true ſence of God, cannot but love him, truſt in him, humble himſelf before him, hope in him, reſign up himſelf to him, and bleſs and praiſe him for his manifeſtation.

The Difference therefore of this Knowledge from any other, is

1. In regard of the Effects.

1. In regard of the Effects.

(1.) 'Tis a transforming Knowledg. Such a Knowledge which doth neceſſarily include a Conformity to the Object. There is an external manifeſtation of God in the Goſpel to the Ear, an internal Manifeſtation in the Heart; the one is called a report, the other a Revelation, Iſa. 53. 1. the Common priviledge of the Goſpel is to be heard, the Special to be manifeſted to the Saints by a powerful Operation in the Heart, Col. 1. 26, 27. This Myſtery is made manifeſt to his Saints, to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this Myſtery among the Gentiles, which is Chriſt in you the hope of Glory. When Chriſt is made known In them the hope of Glory, as well as To them. When the Knowledge of God in his Grace, and the Hiſtory of Chriſt in his Nature, Offices, and Paſſion, is turn'd into an Image and Stamp, working the Heart into its own form. Such a Manifeſtation of God Spiritually, as men have of God Naturally, Rom. 1. 19. That which may be known of God, is manifeſt in them, as well as ſhown to them: ſhowed to them in the Creatures, manifeſt in their Conſciences; Notions of God riveted, that cannot be blotted out, though reſiſted by fleſh. In the ſaving knowledge, the Notions of God in his Goſpel diſcovery, and of Chriſt in his Mediation, are manifeſt in the Heart; inſinuating themſelves ſecretly into the inward parts of the Soul, and moulding the heart into the form of the Evangelical Doctrine. Such a Revelation of God and Chriſt in a Man, as changeth the whole Frame and Model of Counſels and Counſellors, which before were follow'd, Gal. 1. 16. when Chriſt was reveal'd in him; he conferr'd not with fleſh and bloud. The Hiſtorical knowledge of Chriſt, is a knowledge of Chriſt in the purity and miſery of his Fleſh; the other is a knowledge of Chriſt in the renewing of his Spirit. The one is a knowledge of the Truth as it is in the Doctrine; the other a knowledge of the Truth as it is in Jeſus; a tranſcribing the Copy in the Heart. The knowledge of the one, is like a mans ſight of a Star, he gazeth upon it, but is not turn'd into the Image and ſparkling Beauty of that Star; the other is like a Mans knowledge of a virtuous Perſon whoſe amiable endowments and carriage he admires, and from an admiration proceeds to imitation, and framing himſelf according to that pattern. When knowledge creates Love, Love delights to draw the picture of the beloved Perſon.

[1.] This change is the proper end of this knowledge, therefore it cannot be a right knowledge, till it doth attain the end. As the end of the Iſraelites looking upon the brazen Serpent, was to be chang'd from wounded, to ſound men; from dying to living: The end of the Angels moving the Waters in the Pool of Bethesda, was to enrich them with an healing Virtue, for the Cure of Bodily Diſtempers; the end of this Motion was not attained, unleſs ſome Cure were wrought. The forming of Chriſt in in the Head, changing the Notions in the Mind, is in order to a Chriſt formed in the Heart, changing the inclinations of the Will and the Temper of the Soul. A renewing in Knowledge is in order to the renewing the Image of God, Col. 3. 10. Renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created them; removing the Ignorance to remove the Deformity. 'Tis expreſt by opening the eyes, but with ſuch a Virtue lodged by it in the Heart, that attracts it from the Devil to God, Act. 26. 18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. The Motion of the Will, is the end of Light in the Underſtanding; when the eye is open'd to behold the Truth, the next ſtep is a change of falſe Notions of God and Religion to true; after that, a Converſion from Satan the Prince of darkneſs, to God the Father of Lights; then follows Juſtification, Sanctification, and the compleatneſs of happineſs. Not only the beginning of this change, but the progreſs of it, till it arrive to Perfection, depends upon our looking on Chriſt, 2 Cor. 3. 18. With open face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame Image from glory to glory, as by the ſpirit of the Lord. The Glory of God and Chriſt are beheld and known in the glaſs of the Goſpel, and a Divine Beauty convey'd, as was to Moſes, in his Converſe with God, by a reflection of his Beams; juſt as the riſing Sun changeth the Air into its own Likeneſs, and Transforms the World from the deformity of darkneſs to the beauty of Light; or Colours laid upon Canvaſs, aſſimilate it to the Object whoſe picture it is. There is a reflection from the Underſtanding to the Will, whereby this change is wrought; and it is by look after look, that it is perfected to a full reſemblance, according to the degrees of ſpiritual knowledg. When this knowledge is enlightning, it is the image of God in the Mind; when it is enlivening, it is the Image of God in the Heart; a picture of God and Chriſt, drawn in the Underſtanding, which enamours the Will, and aſſimilates the whole Soul to God. The Goſpel is this glaſs; which doth not only repreſent the Object, but alters the Complexion of the Soul. This Transformation is the End of the opening the Eye, that the Object may be view'd and the heart chang'd thereby. As Humane Knowledge is inſignificant, unleſs it attain the end of Knowledge; ſo is Divine, or the knowledge of God: The ſublimeſt knowledge of God therefore, which Centers not in this End, is to no purpoſe, unleſs to aggravate our ſin, and ſharpen our Miſery. This is not gain'd by a looſe knowledge, as a man knows the Sun by his beams; but he hath not the Image of the Sun in the Ball of his eye, unleſs he look upon the Body of it.

[2.] The change of the Soul to a perfect glory in Heaven, depends upon the perfect Knowledge of God and Chriſt. And therefore the Change here, depends upon this knowledge; this knowledge therefore cannot be a right knowledge, without this which is the proper effect of it. The viſion of Chriſt in his glorious State, ſhall then cauſe Likeneſs to him, 1 Joh. 3. 2. We ſhall be like him, for we ſhall ſee him as he is. We ſhall ſee him in his Glory; we ſhall, by that view, be transform'd into the Image of his Glory, as by contemplating his Virtues, we are here chang'd into the Image of his Grace. The Devils and wicked Men, ſhall ſee him in his Glory at his Appearance, but not be happy by him; becauſe their knowledge of him doth not change their Deviliſh Complexion. As it is an uncomfortable knowledge of him then, which doth not change the Soul into the Image of his glory, ſo it is a Miſerable knowledge of him here that doth not alter us into the Image of his Grace. The true knowledge of God works the ſame effects here, according to its degrees, as it will hereafter; as a perfect ſight will draw the cleareſt and fulleſt Lineaments of God in the heart, ſo an imperfect knowledge of him here muſt cauſe ſome ſhadows, and imperfect draughts of him in the Soul. 'Tis not elſe a knowledge of the right ſtamp.

[3.] Such an effect of the knowledge of Chriſt is therefore neceſſary. Every Notion of God and Chriſt in the Mind, muſt ſpring up into a new Grace in the Will, and be as a root of Life in the heart; it will elſe be but as a Feather in the Cap, or flower in the hand, which will make a little ſhow and wither, and leave no prints behind it but thoſe of Condemnation. That knowledge of God which is not beautified fied with Grace, instead of making us amiable Christians, will render us deformed Devils.

Well then, Consider; Do we find Grace conformable to our knowledge of God and Christ? Doth the knowledge of Gods holiness in Christ render our Souls holy? Doth the consideration of his Majesty sink us into Humility? Doth the thoughts of his condescension lay the Soul at his feet? Doth the knowledge of his power subdue our Pride, the knowledge of his love transform us into Love and Affection? Doth Grace in our hearts bud forth from the Notions of our head? 'Tis then such a knowledge of God as secures our happiness. Do we see Christ in the brightness of his Divine Nature, and the vail of his Humane, to admire his condescending kindness? Do we know him travelling to mount Calvary in the greatness of his strength to spring up sorrow for our Sins? Do we see him wrestling with Devils, to pull the prey of precious Souls out of his hand, to rest upon his power? Do we know him offering up to the justice of God, the full satisfaction of Bloud, and paying the demanded debt to a farthing, to accept of him as a propitiation? Do we know him weilding a Royal Scepter by the will of his Father, to obey his Authority? Do we know him peirc'd, and know him rais'd? know him on the Cross, and on the Throne? in the reproaches of Men, and the Glory of his Father? to be assimilated to him in the likeness of his Death, and the quickenings of his Resurrection? 'Tis then a living knowledge, such a knowledge as now budds and blossoms, and will ripen up to Eternal Life.

[2.] 'Tis an Affective Knowledge. All saving knowledge is full of sense. The Beams of Truth in the Mind, beget a kindly heat in the Will. The Understanding forms Motives of Fear and Love of God, and offers them to the Will to be pursued; the Soul desires to know him more, that it may love him. Some therefore define Divinity to be Affective *. All men have some knowledge of God objectively, but it is not formally a Divine Knowledge, without the Affections of Love to him, and delight in him. This saving knowledge is a knowledge of a reality in God and Christ; another may have clearer Notions, know Truths in their Connexions, but a Christian knows with a more Excellent Knowledge, because more Affective, with a heat as well as Light: what shines upon the Head, kindles Love in the Heart. Others have the same Object of knowledge, but it appears not in that Amiableness to them; there is a difference between a Rational and Spiritual Knowledge, as there is between the Spirit, the Author of the one, and Reason, the spring of the other. Natural knowledge lies sleeping in the Head, without jogging the Affections; Spiritual Light, cannot be without Spiritual heat, Luk. 24. 31, 32. Their eyes were open'd, and their hearts burn'd; the one hath light like that of a Torch, the other influence, as well as light, like that of the Sun. 'Tis the property of Light, not only to enlighten, but heat: Some therefore make Fire to be nothing else but condens'd Light, and Light to be rarified fire. The true Light of God is always accompanied with a flame of Love, which clasps about the Object. The Divine Philosopher could say, That Souls, first by a view, and then a Love of the Divine Beauty, recover their Wings and fly up to their Heavenly Country. Have we therefore not only a shine in our Heads, but a warmth in our Hearts? not only a beam in our Minds but a spark in our Affections? 'Tis then a saving Knowledge of God. Both must go together, Knowledge without Affections is stupid, and Affections without Knowledge are Childish. The Diviner the Light in the Mind, the warmer will Love be in the Soul. The clearer and stronger the beams upon the Wall, the stronger will be the reflexion. In knowledge we are passive in the reception of the Divine Beams, by Affection we are active and give our selves to God.

* Alex.

To prove this, consider that

(1.) All the Knowledge we have of God, is insignificant to happiness without suitable Affections. Gods End is not so much to be known by us, as to be loved by us, and the discovery of himself is in order to a return of Affections from us, Joh. 14. 21. He that loves me, shall be loved of my Father; not he that only knows me. We cannot ſuppoſe, that in heaven the Bleſſed are enrich'd with a greater Light, but that they may be ſpirited with a greater Love. Love and Holineſs are the perfection of the Soul there, and contemplation but a means to bring in the heart to him. 'Tis more glorious to love, than barely to know. Thoſe that diſtinguiſh the Orders of Angels, place the Seraphims above the Cherubims, becauſe they have a more ardent love, as well as the clearer knowledge. If we want love to others, the Apoſtle Accounts us ignorant of God, becauſe God is love, 1 Joh. 4. 8. He that loves not, knows not God, for God is love. Much more is he ignorant of God, that is empty of Affection to him, who is more amiable than any Creature. 'Tis one thing to know God, and another to retain God in our knowledge; one may be ſaid to know God, who can diſcourſe rationally of God, as thoſe Philoſophers could, Rom. 1. 28. but they retain God in their knowledge, that are enflam'd with affection to him, and ſcorn all things in compariſon of him. Tho' we may ſeem to have a clear knowledge, it cannot be thriving without this, nor continuing; when any thing is loved equally with him, there may ſoon be a forſaking of him. All the knowledge a Natural Man hath of God, is ſuch a ſight of the Excellency of God and Chriſt, and his Truths, as a Beaſt hath of a Diamond; he ſeeth it ſparkling, but knows not its real worth, and therefore hath no ſatisfaction in it, nor Affection to it.

(1) Since this Knowledge is transforming, it cannot be ſo without Affection. Without Knowledge of him, we can never affect him; and without affections we can never be like him. We are not chang'd into his Image, till we behold his beauty ſo as to love and adore him. 'Tis not only a beam of his Lovelineſs, but a ray of his Love, that changeth the temper of the Soul. * Though the light of the fire attends the heat of it, yet it is not the light, but the heat transforms Combuſtible matter into fire. It was not Chriſts knowledge of us, but love to us, ſtoop'd the Divine Nature to aſſume ours; nor our Knowledge, but Faith and Love that elevate us to the Divine. As Chriſt is a Sun of righteouſneſs, not only ſhining but warming; if we be like him, there muſt not only be light in our Minds, but warmth in our Affections.

(2.) It could be no better than the Knowledge of a Devil. If we had as high a knowledge of God as an Angel hath, without Affections ſuitable to the Angelical State, it would be our Torment, not our Happineſs. This ſaving knowledge differs from the other, as the knowledge of Angels doth from that of Devils. The light in their Minds, hath ſprung out into a conſtant affection ever ſince their Creation, and could never ſee a ſpark in any thing elſe to draw them to any diſlike of God. The Devils have a knowledge of God, but are as much empty of Affection to him as the Angels are of any hatred of him. The knowledge of the good Angels would be their Torment as well as the knowledge of the Devils, if they had not flames of Love, as well as beams of Light. That only is true knowledge that acts us to a conjunction with God.

(3) The Knowledge of any Object is to little purpoſe without a ſutable Affection. As a man hath not a right knowledge of ſin, unleſs he feel the dreadful weight of it, ſo as to loath it, Ezek. 36. 31. Then ſhall you remember your own evil wayes, and ſhall loath your ſelves for your iniquity. Nor a right knowledge of the word, unleſs he doth believe it; nor a right apprehenſion of the World, unleſs he counts it contemptible; ſo no man knows God aright, unleſs his heart be ſet upon him, according to the worth of the Object known, and the ſavour of the Ointments of Chriſt. 'Tis impoſſible a man can have an intellectual ſpiritual view of God, but he muſt See him amiable and worthy of his choiceſt affections; and he cannot be ſo injurious to himſelf, and his own ſentiments, as not to give his own Apprehenſions their due by giving Gods Amiableneſs his. He cannot be ſaid therefore to have any Sound apprehenſion of God, who hath not a choice Affection to him, and delight in him. He that doth not praiſe the skill of an Artiſt in his Workmanſhip, diſcovers either his Ignorance or his Envy. As a Faith without Works, hath no better a Title from the Apoſtle than a dead Faith; Jam. 2. 20. So a knowledge without love, is no better than a dead ſtupid knowledge; a knowledge buried in the grave of earthly affections. No man can be ſo ſtript of affection to himſelf, as to neglect that good which he doth really know. No man can imagine that another apprehends that as excellent, with which there is not a full cloſure of his affections. If Moſes had not ſlighted the Treaſures of Ægypt for the reproach of Chriſt, he had not teſtified any true knowledge and eſteem of him, Heb. 11. 26.

Well then, can that man be ſaid to know God to be cloth'd with Majeſty, before whom Angels cover their faces, and Mountains tremble, who hath no fear to offend him? Doth he know God to be a conſuming fire and himſelf but ſtubble, that hath no dread of God? Doth he know the mercy of God, who hath no care to pleaſe him, but preſumes upon his goodneſs? Can he be ſaid to know Gods holineſs, that hath no ſenſe of his own uncleanneſs? Doth that man know Chriſt to be a bleſſed Redeemer, who doth not fall at his feet? Doth he know him groaning upon the croſs for ſin, and bruiſed for it, who lets that ſin live with welcome in his ſoul, which griev'd and bruis'd him? If knowledge in the head doth not work ſpiritual affections in the Heart, it can never be put upon the account of a ſaving knowledge, 'tis not really knowledge but only a pretence to it.

[2.] Without affection we anſwer not the end of the knowledge of God. The Revelation of God is made to us for our imitation, he is diſcovered as the chiefeſt good and the exacteſt pattern. The ſumm of the Law conſiſts in Love, and the end of the Goſpel manifeſtation is to engage our Love. Chriſt is not repreſented only as a dying man, but as God-man dying for the ſins of the World, ſuffering in our ſtead, and therefore to raiſe our affections, not to content our curioſity. Faith and Love muſt joyn hands, 1 Tim. 1. 14. The Goſpel which is a repreſentation of God in Chriſt, is ſaid to be worthy not of obſervation but of acceptation, verſe 15. and worthy of obſervation in order to acceptation. The knowledge of a Law is to raiſe a Love to it, Pſal. 119. 97. the knowledge of the Law-giver ought not to do leſs. As we know not Righteouſneſs till the Law be in our Hearts (Iſaiah 51. 7. Ye that know Righteouſneſs, the people in whoſe heart is my Law.) So we know not God till he be in our affections.

[3.] Our knowledge of God ought to be conformable to his knowledge of us. Gods knowledge of his people is attended with affection. He is not ſaid in Scripture Language to know, unleſs he Love, Amos 3. 2. You only have I known of all the Families of the Earth. There is a great difference between Gods knowledge of omniſcience, and his knowledge of affection: With the firſt he knows all Creatures, with the other his people; as God is not ſaid to know us without teſtimonies of his affection to us, ſo we cannot be ſaid to know God without leaps of our affections to him.

[4.] Application of our ſelves to the knowledge of God without affection, is not agreeable to the nature of our Souls. The choice of the will in all true knowledge treads upon the heel of the act of the underſtanding, and men naturally deſire the knowledge of that which is true, in order to the enjoyment of that which is good in it. The end of all the acts of the underſtanding is to cauſe a motion in the will and affections ſutable to the apprehenſion. God hath given us two faculties, underſtanding to know the goodneſs of a thing, and a will to embrace it. To content one faculty in contemplation, without contenting the other in embracing what we know, is to give a half ſatisfaction to the Soul. 'Tis to ſeparate thoſe two faculties of Underſtanding and Will which God hath joyn'd. Knowledge is the glory of the mind both in this and the other World, the object of that is Truth; but there is another faculty which muſt have its perfection, that is the Will, the object whereof is good, and the content of that faculty lies in embracing the good apprehended both in this Life and the next. This therefore muſt be gratified as well as the other, and each faculty muſt have a full reſt in a due object; the ſoul elſe cannot have an intire ſatisfaction according to the latitude and capaciouſneſs of its nature. Therefore all abſtracted notions of God without an influence upon the Will are barren, and not agreeable and ſatisfactory to the nature of the Soul.

It cannot be ſatisfied with contemplation without fruition, and ſuch an intimate fruition as may affect the whole nature. Now to have this enjoyment, is not only to know God or think of him, but to embrace him by love, to claſp about God with ſpiritual affections, to receive the touches of his goodneſs every moment. To give the Soul a full ſatisfaction according to the nature of it, is to have a ſtamp of the nature of God upon our underſtanding, and a ſtamp of the goodneſs of God upon our Wills.

(5.) Without affection our knowledge of God may have and will have baſe and corrupt ends. And therefore our knowledg cannot be ſaving without it. Men may deſire to know out of a natural itch, the reliques of Adam, or out of a deſire to enlarge the perfection of their underſtanding, (as the knowledge of Philoſophers did tend chiefly to ſuch an end) & may have no higher aims in endeavouring after the knowledg of God than endeavouring after the knowledge of other things either natural or moral. Perhaps this affecting the knowledge of God may ariſe from pride, and ambition; and a deſire of being eſteemed eminent in intellectuals and diſcourſe, may make the pulſe of their affections beat ſtrongly to this knowledg, it being natural to men to be diſpleaſed more with being counted fools, than being counted vitious, and to have more natural deſires after knowledge than after vertue, even as Adam had. Nay men may deſire to know God and the Truths of God as a ſtirrup to ſome luſt, and to foment ſome carnal deſign, as gain, which may be promoted by Religious diſcourſes. But certainly much of the knowledge of God which is pretended among us, though it may ariſe out of an affection to knowledge, yet may be without an affection to the object of it. As there is a knowledge of God when there is not a glorifying of him as God, Rom. 1. 21. So there may be a deſire to know God without any deſire to glorifie him. As a man may deſire to know ſin, to ſee a man when he is drunk and to obſerve his carriage, not out of any deſign he hath to loath that ſin, but to make his obſervations upon the carriage and diſpoſition of the perſon while he is under the power of that filthy act, which is but to ſatisfie his curioſity: Or he may deſire to ſee a man in the exerciſe of ſome virtue out of the ſame end, not out of a deſire to conform himſelf to that pattern. So a man may deſire to know God, and Chriſt, and the Truths of Chriſt, not with any intent to have his affections with an exact harmony center in them, but to ſatisfie that natural thirſt which he hath for knowledge. And a man may have a great delight in this knowledge of God, as Iſaiah 58. 2. they did delight to know Gods wayes, and delight in approaching to him. But (as their faſts were verſe 4.) for ſtrife and debate. And that delight may ariſe from a delight in the excellency of the object, as a man delights to contemplate the nature of the Sun and Stars more than the nature of a clod of earth, yet cannot be ſaid to love them, but loves his own act of contemplation and knowledge of them. Many thus know God and are inquiſitive after the knowledge of him, as a curious object of knowledge, not as a ſpiritual object of Love and Delight to beſtow the flower of their affections upon. Such often miſs of their intent, God obſcures himſelf when he is ſearched after with ſuch curioſity. And ſuch a knowledge will end in Apoſtacy as it began in corruption; the man will return as a Dog to lick up his vomit, or a Swine to wallow in the mire, as thoſe did who had eſcap'd the pollutions of the World through the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Pet. 2. 20. 21, 22. Which knowledge they did probably affect out of curioſity, becauſe of the novelty of it, the noiſe it made in the World, or ſome by end, which made them caſt it off when it ceaſed to ſerve their purpoſe, and ſo at laſt count Chriſt and his Croſs fooliſhneſs.

Well then,

Try your knowledge of God by your affections to him. What ſtrong deſires are there for the enjoyment of God and Chriſt, what delight in approaches to him, what propenſities of the Heart in ſpiritual duties? do they ſpring from affection, or move by the fears and jirks of Conſcience? Doth the knowledge of Chriſt in his Mediation, natures, offices as the only remedy for our loſt ſouls, kindle deſires, holy affections unexpreſſible Heart breakings for him? As we find Davids Heart often flying up upon this wing. Is there a love to God riſing out of a ſenſe of his love to loſt man? God cannot be known an an infinite and unbounded and outflowing goodneſs without a flight of our Affections to him. 'Tis as impoſſible that a good ſpiritually known ſhould not be beloved, as that any good ſhould be beloved that is not known. Every common witneſs of God in the works of Creation fills the Heart with gladneſs: Acts 14. 16, 17. much more every ſpiritual witneſs of God in the work of Redemption apprehended by the Soul. If created excellency inſinuates it ſelf into our Affections, the ſupereminent beauty of God muſt much more, when he is ſeen and known. The ſpiritual light which comes from God is for God. In other knowledge ſelf-love poiſeth the Heart, but a ſaving knowledge conducts the Heart to an admiration of God and affection to him. In Heaven a clear viſion renders the beholder full of the moſt glowing affections: the Angels alwayes behold the face of God, Matth. 18. 10. Alwayes, as not counting any thing elſe worthy of a glance, but in obedience to his order. Nothing can be called a ſaving knowledge of God which doth not rank all our affections in order to the object of it.

[3.] 'Tis an active and expreſſive knowledge. It expreſſeth in the Life what is in the Head and Heart; a change in the Heart engenders affection, and affection will break out in action; love will lay a conſtraint upon the Heart. We commonly ſay of a notoriouſly prophane man, though he may have excellent parts, and a great ſtock of knowledge, that he is a ſot, becauſe his knowledge is not operative in ways agreeable to it, he acts like the moſt ignorant perſon. He cannot be ſaid to know God to be Holy, and the goſpel to be a doctrine according to Godlineſs, who hath not a practiſe according to the rules of godlineſs. To be ſenſual is to have nothing of the Spirit, Jude 19. He hath nothing of the light of the Spirit who is under the conduct of a corrupted ſenſe. And the Apoſtle intimates it plainly, that unleſs men awake to Righteouſneſs and avoid ſin, they have not the knowledge of God, 1 Cor. 15. 34. A Bed-rid knowledge it is without affection proper for it, rather the torment than ornament of the Soul. All knowledge without an imitation of God is but a ſtupid ſleepy notion: We have then a full aſſurance of knowledge, when we are followers of God, 1 Theſſ. 1. 5, 6. The firſt principle which is taught by the manifeſtation of God is to deny ungodlineſs, Tit. 2. 12. 13. The grace of God teacheth us to deny ungodlineſs. As Gods knowing us is not a ſimple view but a provident care, ſo our Knowledge of God is not a ſimple ſpeculation but a Divine operation of the Soul as well as in the Soul. If he that commits ſin, hath not known God, 1 John 3. 6. Then he that hath known God, doth not commit ſin. He flatters not himſelf in any, arms himſelf againſt all, commenceth an irreconcileable War againſt the lighter troops as well as the main body, and ſtands upon his guard to prevent every invaſion. He that knows Chriſt, knows that he is worthy of all his ſervice, ſince he, and none but he was crucifyed for him. He that knows God, knows the neceſſity of enjoying him, and will therefore be guided in thoſe ways which tend to the enjoyment of him. If a man knows a medicine to be excellent for the cure of ſuch a diſeaſe which he labours under, and is ſenſible of the neceſſity of it, he will certainly apply it. As Chriſt diſcovered the knowledge of God in the World to diſſolve the works of the Devil in the World, ſo when the knowledge of Chriſt ſhines in the heart it diſſolves the works of darkneſs and luſt in the Soul, for it diſcovers right notions of ſin and vanity, and he that hath right notions of it, cannot affect it. When Noah knew God in his threatning juſtice, he obeys God in the building an Ark. When Abraham knew God in the Mercy and Truth of his promiſe, he obeys God in offering his Iſaac; the ones knowledg wrought againſt the reproaches of an unbelieving World, and the others againſt the Tyde of a natural affection. So powerful is this Divine knowledge where it ſeizeth upon the Heart, to bring forth the fruits of Fear and Holineſs. Let none of us therefore flatter our ſelves that we have a ſaving knowledge of God without imitation of him, that we underſtand Chriſt to be a ſufficient Saviour without relying on him. 'Tis a knowledge in the form and an ignorance in the power. Without an evangelical obedience a profeſſing Chriſtian knows no more ſavingly than a moral Heathen, becauſe he acts no better than ſuch an one.

(1.) This

(1.) This Knowledge is Life. 'Tis the Light of Life, John 8. 12. an active lively light, by an Hebraiſm. All lucid bodies in the Heavens are active in their own nature, and direct men in their ſeveral ſphears of activity in the World. When the Sun riſeth, men riſe to their dayly task, when the light of the knowledge of the glory of God ſhines forth in the face of Chriſt in the Heart, there is a Reſurrection to vital actions. 'Tis a well ſpring of Life unto him that hath it, Prov. 16. 22. If it hath a vitality in it to convey Life, it muſt needs riſe up in excellent operations according to the meaſure of it. Unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that a Divine principle in the mind ſhould produce nothing elſe but a dead ſleep in all the other parts of the Soul. Life it is, and Life is not without activity, Eternal Life it is, and that cannot be without a ſucceſſion of vital acts to Eternity.

(2.) The end of knowledge is not attained without actions ſutable to it. If we have been taught by him as the Truth is in Jeſus, there is a ſtripping off the raggs of the old Adam, a change of the former converſation which was according to deceitful luſts, Eph. 4. 21, 22. But you have not ſo learned Chriſt, &c. As the Word is an engrafted Word, ſo the knowledge of God, is an engrafted knowledge, which is inſerted in the ſtock to change the nature of it into that of the graft, and cauſing the production of fruits from it according to the nature of the ſlip joyned with it. The Scripture which is a diſcovery of God, is not only a Hiſtory but a Rule. God declares himſelf as our Lord and as our pattern; Chriſt is manifeſted as an image of conformity as well as a propitiatory offering. Where he is known as a propitiation for our comfort he is known as a pattern for our practice. The end of knowledge is to impreſs a ſound image of the goodneſs of an object as well as the Truth, the Truth to be eyed and the goodneſs to be imitated. * Diſtinct Conceptions of God, and rational Diſcourſes of Chriſt, glorifie him no more than a Painter doth the party whoſe picture he hath drawn. The glory of God conſiſts not in a lifeleſs notion of him but an active reſemblance of him. A natural man may have ſome pleaſure in knowing the nature of God, but he cares not for knowing the wayes of God, Job 21. 14. We deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes; he would know him to be merciful, but not know him to be holy: He is oppoſite to the Truths of God, becauſe they are repugnant to the delights and intereſts of the Fleſh. The Scotiſts defin'd Divinity well when they made it practica, better than Aquinas who made it ſpeculativa; every illumination of the mind is not to ſpeculate, but to work by; every notion of God is a direction to ſome ſphere of action. The end of Chriſts knowledge of his Father muſt be the end of our knowledge both of God and himſelf: He knows his Fathers ſecrets to reveal them, and he knows his Fathers will to perform it. As we are to pray that we may do the will of God as the Angels do, ſo we are to know that we may do the will of God as the Angels do it. The incarnation of Chriſt was for action, the Divine Nature had not attain'd its end in the buſineſs our of Redemption without union to the humane as neceſſary to Mediatory acts; nor doth our knowledge of God attain its end without union to the will as neceſſary to all Religious operations. The knowledge of Chriſt is like the former Propheſies of Chriſt, which would not have had their effect without his incarnation; nor hath knowledge its effect without (ſo to ſpeak) an incarnation of it in our Converſation. The end of knowledge is directive; the proper effect of knowledge is the obſervation of the direction, to write after the copy, to work according to the pattern, to do what is agreeable to the perfections of God, to honour what we ſee honourable in God, and to diſparage none of thoſe excellencies we profeſs to know.

* Jackſon Vol. 3. quar. cap. 8. p. 129.

(3.) All the knowledge of God and Chriſt without action correſpondent thereunto, is no better in the account of God than ignorance, unleſs it be accidentally to condemnation. Without Obedience we are truly ignorant, though our ſpeculations may be as ſublime as thoſe of Devils, 1 John 2. 4. He that ſaith he knows him and keeps not his Commandements, is a Liar. The true knowledge of God doth not only glitter in the underſtanding, or glimmer in a Profeſſion, but beams out in a vigorous Converſation, acting all things agreeable to the Will of God. That knowledge of God which doth not take root in the Heart, and grow up into Life and Spirit, is ignorance

rance in the account of God; thoſe Gentiles, Rom. 1. 21. that are ſaid to know God, are ver. 28. ſaid not to know him; they knew him as rational men, not as obedient men; they had a Notion of him without any affection to his ſervice, they had high ſpeculations of his excellency, but nothing of his Perfections and his Law writ in the Tables of their hearts. Such a knowledge as Geometricians may have by underſtanding the rules of a Science, not ſuch a knowledge as an Artificer may have by the practice of thoſe Rules. No doubt but Ely's Sons had a knowledge of God and his Law by Education, but becauſe it did not ſlide into their Converſation, they are ſaid not to know the Lord, 1 Sam. 2. 12. not to know God, and not to obey him are one and the ſame thing in the account of God at the day of Judgment, 2 Theſ. 1. 8. and it is called Ignorance, becauſe men with that knowledge act as if they were wholly ignorant of the Nature and Will of God. They behave themſelves, as men that never heard of God or Chriſt would be expected to do. They may be Chriſtians in knowledge, and Pagans in life. True Reaſon in every thing doth naturally tend to practice. He is of no uſe in a ſociety or common-wealth, who is ſwallow'd up in Contemplations, and lancheth not out into a uſeful activity. An idle knowledge is of no uſe for God, and the end of a mans Creation. 'Tis but a pretence, a meer puff of a fleſhly mind. There is as much difference between ſuch a dormant knowledge, and that which riſeth up in ſprightly Motions for God; as between the Sun in a Statue bravely guilded, and that in the Firmament diſperſing his influences into all the Corners of the World, and honouring his Creator by his dayly Race. We no more know any truth of God unleſs we digeſt it, than a man knows the Virtue of Bread, unleſs he concocts it, and feels the ſtrength of it in his Limbs. Practice is the evidence of Knowledge; It cannot be rationally concluded that he knows God to be omnipreſent, who neglects the duty in ſecret requir'd of him; or apprehends him to be juſt, who in a courſe of ſin denies it, and preſumes upon his Mercy. God puts an Emphaſis upon Joſiahs Obedience, as an Evidence of his Knowledge, Jer. 22. 16. He judged the cauſe of the poor and needy, was not this to know me? ſaith the Lord. More than ever God ſaid of Solomon, who had his brain better fill'd, and his heart more empty. Solomon could diſcourſe excellently of the Nature of God, and raviſh men with his Wiſdom; but God never ſaid of that, was not this to know me? Other knowledge may make us admir'd among men, This only makes us acceptable to God.

(4.) The leaſt ſaving Knowledge of God is of an active Nature. The Wiſe men had but a ſpark by the diſcovery of a Star, and that put them upon ſeeking the King of the Jews, Mat. 2. 1, 2. the leaſt ſtar in the Heavens, tho' it hath not ſo much light as another, has its influences and regular motions. Another may diſcourſe better of the Nature of God, ſpeak diſtinctly of the glory of his Attributes and Works, diſcourſe of the nature of Sin, give an hundred reaſons againſt it, yet obey not that God he ſpeaks of, and be a Slave to that Sin he diſputes againſt: whereas he that hath the leaſt ſpark of the ſpiritual knowledge of God and Chriſt, walks more according to the nature of God, and demeans himſelf with more honour to the perfections of God in his Life than the greateſt diſcourſer of him can with his tongue. He is continually enquiring what Purity, Fear, Love, Dependance, Obedience, Grief and Joy, the Holineſs, Majeſty, Goodneſs, Mercy, Faithfulneſs, Power and Righteouſneſs of God, calls for at his hands. Such an one hath a Martyr-all Knowledge; is content to part with any thing, with all, for the glory of that God he knows: the other that hath a flouriſhing Wit, a looſe unrooted floating Knowledge, would not part with the leaſt drop of bloud in his body, for the honour of that God he pretends to know; he would caſt all the knowledge of God and Chriſt at his heels, rather than part with any thing for him, when Chriſt and his life come to a conteſt. But the leaſt grain of the ſaving knowledge of God, renders a man an habitual Martyr.

Well then, Try your knowledge of God by this. As ſin is not known, unleſs it cauſe grief in the heart; ſo God is not known, unleſs the knowledge of him quicken an obedience to him. Where this Spiritual knowledge of God is implanted, and the ſweetneſs of Chriſt experimented, there will be a delight in thoſe ſervices which which are well-pleasing to him; a joy in all motives to him, and a swiftness in all motions for him; a delight, both in the service it self, and the Object of it.

4. 'Tis an humbling, self-abasing Knowledge.

* Dr. Preston. (1.) It humbleth us before God. * To know God without knowing our selves, is a fruitless Speculation: The knowledge of our selves and our own misery, without the knowledge of God and his Mercy, is a miserable vexation. The end of it is to pay God a glory due to him from his Creature. Pride debaseth the Deity, and snatcheth the Crown of Glory from God to set it upon the Creatures Head; But this saving Knowledge sinks man to the dust without sinking him to Hell; lays him flat on the Earth thereby to raise him to Heaven. True knowledge, and a melting heart, are inseparable Companions: Christ joyns hardness and ignorance together, Mar. 8. 17. 'Tis the nature of other knowledge to puff up, 1 Cor. 8. 1. of this, to pull down. The plumes of a proud spirit fall at the appearance of God. He regards himself as a worm, when he understands the excellency of his Creator. Without it, it is but a knowledge in conceit, not in reality; he knows nothing of God, though he thinks he doth, 1 Cor. 8. 2. Manasseh had some knowledge of God no question; by the Religious Education of his Father Hezekiah; but it went not for currant Coyn in Heaven, till he was in an humbled frame, 2 Chron. 33. 12, 13. Then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God. 'Tis not a Knowledge of God, till it make man shrink into a sense of his own baseness and nothingness. A bare dogmatical Knowledge of God, advanceth man without a proportionable advancement of God. 'Tis of the same nature with other knowledge; that which comes from our own Reason is our fondling, it brings forth the fruits of old Adam; that which is dropped in by the Spirit, brings forth the fruits of the Spirit, renders a man sensibly oblig'd not to his own Wit but Gods Grace. * A rational Revelation rather hardens the heart than melts it, as a Rational Conviction is light without heat. Other knowledge discovers other things, but not a mans self; Like a dark Lanthorn which shows us other persons and things, but obscures our selves from the sight of our selves; but the knowledge of God is such a light, whereby a man beholds himself as well as the way wherein he is to walk.

* Strong.

(1.) 'Tis such a knowledge as scatters the mist that is upon the heart, and thereby discovers its filth. The first beam shot into the heart by the Spirit, darts to the very Center, and discovers the nest of filth and poyson. As the beam is shot from God, it reveals his beauty, as shedding its light upon the Soul, it reveals its deformity. As the beam from the Sun that conquers the darkness of the Night, discovers the glory of the Sun, and the filth of a dunghill at the same time. The sensible discovery of the Holiness of God, and the sufferings of Christ in the very act, opens the sinfulness of sin. The Majesty of God shows him his vileness, the Purity of God his filthiness, the Justice of God his demerit, and the Power of God his impotence. If the Soul knows God in his glory, it sinks down with Isaiah at the very first ray of it, in a sense of its undone Condition, Isa. 6. 1, 5. Wo is me, for I am undone נִדְמֵיתִי I was silent Symm. ἐσίγησα, as if he had attempted to joyn with the Angels in the Praise of God at the sight of him, but was struck down with a sense of his own unworthiness, I am a man of polluted lips, i. e. I am not worthy to praise God: so powerful was one ray to affect his whole Soul with a sense of his sin, and his miserable estate by it, and stript him of all conceits of self-worth. When the Soul hears God in the Law, it trembles at the Thunder. When it sees Christ bowing upon the Cross, it cannot but bow down under a sense of that iniquity which caused it. To know Christ savingly in the first glance, is to know our selves to be Children of Wrath, under the Curse of the Law, and liable to the Justice of God. To know Christ as Mediator, implies our distance from God; to know him as Reconciler, our Enmity; to know him as Redeemer, our Slavery; to know him as a Prophet, our Ignorance; as a Priest, our Guilt and Weakness; as an Advocate, our inability to manage our own Cause. Every Notion of Christ, is a light that opens our eyes to advance Faith in God, and Humility in our selves. Every Rule is in- dex ſui & obliqui, It ſhows its own ſtraitneſs, and the crookedneſs of any thing applyed to it. All the glory of the ſtars, as well as the darkneſs of the Night, diſappears at the riſing of the Sun: at the ſhedding of this beam upon the heart, the natural glory of a mans own Righteouſneſs is obſcur'd, as well as his guilt and lothſomneſs manifeſted. When the Elders ſaw God in his glory, they fell upon their faces, Rev. 4. 10. When John Baptiſt ſaw Chriſt, he was ſenſible of his own filthineſs, and need of waſhing, Mat. 3. 14. I have need to be baptized of thee. An expreſſion not uſed before by him to any of the Multitude. How is a Soul, at the firſt breaking out of this light upon him, humbled at the Conſideration of his unworthy thoughts of God, unſutable to the Notions he is now poſſeſſed with? how doth he diſtaſte his own Temper, to be ſo little affected with a God, ſo Tranſcendently worthy of his higheſt love? Oh my ſoul, why wert thou ſo baſe, ſo vile in thy apprehenſions, and purſuits, as to caſt thy ſelf down to adore ſuch deſpicable Objects as ſin and vanity?

(2.) 'Tis a Knowledge that comes from God, and therefore muſt needs humble. 'Tis a beam from him; 'tis not therefore to nouriſh that Pride in the Creature, which he puniſhed upon the Fall with ſo long a Chain of Miſeries. 'Tis, he teacheth the meek his way, Pſal. 25. 9. he makes ſinners meek by his teaching, and when they are meek, they are ſubjects capable of more Knowledge, and Inſtructions from him. If the meek are the ſubjects of clearer Teachings, the effect of this diſcovery is not to exalt their Pride, but enlarge their Humility. Pride cannot naturally flow from any thing that is Divine. 'Tis none of Gods Offspring, but the Devils Brat. God who hath ſet us a pattern of Humility in his own condeſcenſions, and ſet us an example of Humility in the Perſon of his Son, can never be the Father of that which is ſo contrary to all his deſigns in the World. Pride is the Devils fly-blow in the Soul.

(3.) The Knowledge of God is always attended with a compariſon of the Soul with him, if it be ſaving: there cannot but be ſome reflexion. The Angels in their knowledge of Chriſt as their confirmer, cannot but reflect with humility upon their mutable ſtate by nature, which might have rendred them by their own folly as ſinful and miſerable as Devils, without the grace of God, and their confirmation in a happy ſtate by the Son of God. So in the knowledge of Gods Excellency, the Soul cannot but reflect upon its unſutableneſs to God. It ſees God, and falls out with it ſelf. It loves God, and is angry with it ſelf. It beholds God, and looks upon it ſelf with diſdain. Peter could not receive a look from his Maſter, without reflecting upon his unworthy carriage, and melting into Tears. When a man looks upon the Earth, and the things upon it, he is apt to believe he hath an acute eye; but when he looks upon the Sun, and finds himſelf confounded by the brightneſs of its light, he is ſenſible of the dulneſs of his eye in compariſon of that luſtre which glar'd upon it. So when we fix our eyes upon our ſelves, and dwell upon the thoughts of any Excellency, Righteouſneſs or Vertue in us, we turn ſelf-flatterers, and are apt to imagine that we are ſome great thing, above the Sphere of common nature, and the inſects of Mankind: But when we turn our eyes towards Heaven, and take a proſpect of the Holineſs, Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs of God, which ought to be our Copy to write after, our Pride is daſht out of Countenance, our holineſs appears ſordid, our Righteouſneſs matter of ſhame, our Virtue feeble, our Wiſdom folly, our Actions Madneſs, and all our Excellency a meer ſenſeleſs ſhadow. We are then humbled not only for our ſins, but our ſervices, when we find thoſe duties we are apt to boaſt of, bear no proportion to the holineſs of God. When Paul knew Chriſt, he was not only humble in himſelf, but rejected all confidence in the Religious props he reſted on before, Phil. 3. 8. He then beheld himſelf a dead man, and his ſervices dead ſervices, when he underſtood the righteouſneſs of God manifeſted in a Crucified and Raiſed Chriſt. One ſpark of the Divinity of Chriſt in a Miracle brought Peter upon his knees with a ſelf-reflexion; Lord depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, Luk. 5. 8. It will make men humble for the ſin of others. If we know God ſpiritually to be Great, Excellent, Holy, we cannot but with grief behold the Sons of men ſo careleſs of his honour, and travelling with a birth of perpetual injuries againſt ſo excellent a Majeſty; when we compare his Nature with their practices, and reflect how little he hath deſerved ſuch carriages, and how much he hath deſerv'd the contrary. The Angels having the moſt glittering heads have alſo the moſt affectionate hearts to the glory of that Majeſty which they adore, and therefore they rejoyce at the Converſion of a Sinner; by the ſame reaſon they have, if not their grief, yet their indignation at the abuſes God ſuffers in the world by wicked men, when they make this judicious compariſon.

(4) The more Knowledge any have ever had of God, the more humble they have been. When Peter grew in the apprehenſions of the ends of the death of Chriſt, he had no more thoſe aſpiring thoughts to think himſelf fit to reprove his Maſter, as when he had the firſt Revelation of him to be the Son of God, Mark 8. 29, 32. Mat. 16. 13. Young Scholars are moſt proud. * Duarenus uſed to ſay, thoſe that come to the Univerſity, the firſt year are Doctors in their own conceits; the ſecond year Licentiates, and the third year Students and Learners. Not an Apoſtle outſtript Paul in the Knowledge of God and Chriſt, nor came up to an equal meaſure with him; nor did any equal him in his humility, who ſets himſelf upon record to the World as the leaſt of Saints and the chiefeſt of Sinners. Chriſt who lay in the Boſom of his Father, became a worm rather than a Man, in making himſelf of no reputation. Phil. 2. 7. In conformity to him, the more clear the Revelations of God are to our Souls, the more voluntary diſannulments there are of our ſelves. The Angels that have the neareſt approach to the Deity, and the richeſt proſpect of his glory, cover their Faces with an Aw of his Majeſty, as if they did acknowledge the imperfection of their underſtandings, that they are not more knowing; and cover their feet too which are the Affections of ſpiritual Beings; as if they were aſham'd that their love, delight, and zeal were not more glowing. A great ſtock of natural knowledge debaſeth a man in his own eyes, becauſe he apprehends his own weakneſs to get to the top of that Mountain he would reach by his Enquiries. Socrates who was the moſt knowing man of his Age, was ſenſible that he knew nothing, becauſe the more a man knows, the more he finds his own ignorance, and his inability to ſhake it off; and that the things he is ignorant of, are more than thoſe which he ſeems to graſp in his underſtanding: much more doth a ſpiritual Chriſtian ſee, that what he knows of God and Chriſt, is inconceivably leſs, than what he is ignorant of. The more he knows thoſe Objects, the more he knows his own defects, and his want of Conformity to them. Agur was one of the Wiſeſt Men of his Age, whether he was Solomon, or ſome other in the time of Solomon (which is more probable) yet counts himſelf void of Wiſdom, more brutiſh than any man, and not having the underſtanding of a man, as if he were not ſo wiſe and knowing as the Vulgar ſort, as well as inferior to the more raiſed ſort of Mankind, as the words אָדָם אִישׁ ſignifie, Prov. 30. 2, 3. and he ſpeaks it in reference to the knowledge he had of God, as appears by ver. 4. The more any man ſees of God, the lower he falls in his own Eyes.

* Walæus de Sabbat. Orat. in fine 2. pag. 225.

(2.) As this knowledge of God makes us more humble before God, ſo it makes us more humble and meek to men. This was promiſed as a fruit of the knowledge of God in the goſpel. It was this ſhould turn ravenous Wolves into gentle Lambs and render their Natures as meek as before they were cruel, Iſaiah 11. 6, 7, 8, 9. The Wolf ſhall dwell with the Lamb, the Cow and the Bear ſhall feed together, their young ones ſhall ly down together, and the Lion ſhall eat ſtraw like the Oxe; for the Earth ſhall be full of the knowledge of the Lord. 'Tis ſuch a knowledge as quells the pride of man, and the Injuſtice and Oppreſſions and Furies engendred by that fruitful principle. The names whereby they are denominated are names, of meekneſs, Lambs, Kids, Calves. Cruelty ſhould grow mild, and inflexible tempers melt, Ravenous diſpoſitions be laid aſide, the nature of man towards God, and the nature of man towards his neighbour be changed. The knowledge of Chriſt in the goſpel pulls up ſuch baſe Affections by the roots, which would elſe grow in an ignorant untill'd Heart, as Weeds in an unmanur'd Field. If men therefore are ready to fall fall foul upon one another upon every occaſion, they have not advanced many ſteps in the knowledge of God. For this temper of humility is one effect of this Divine light, it being rendred by the Prophet as the cauſe of ſuch a miraculous change: Where there is not therefore ſuch a viſible effect, there is nothing of the cauſe. The knowledge of the Lord can no more be in the Soul without Humility, than the Sun can be in the Heavens without diſperſing its light on the Earth; nor the enlightning Spirit without Meekneſs a fruit of it, Galat. 5. 22. Wiſdom changeth the boldneſs of the face, Eccleſ. 8. 1. and ſpreads a modeſty in the Soul; he is thereby leſs apt to cenſure others, and more ſparing in his judging his brother. God hath a perfect knowledge of himſelf, and is the higheſt pattern of Humility: He humbles himſelf to behold the things done in Heaven and in Earth, Pſal. 113. 6. much more is it his Humiliation to ſollicite ſinners, to bear patiently their affronts. None knew the Father but the Son, who humbled himſelf to the Fleſh of man, and to death for him. The Angels alſo that excel in knowledge, as ſtanding before the face of God, excel alſo in condeſcending Miniſteries to men, who are more above the greateſt man in the dignity of their nature, than the greateſt man upon the Earth can be above the meaneſt perſon by his Education and Dignity.

Well then, If this be an humbling knowledge, let us try our ſelves by it, whether we are arriv'd to it or no. He that hath not a melting Heart, hath not been under the ſhinings of this Sun. The darkneſs of pride will be ſcattered by the ſtrength and vigor of this light. The ſaving knowledg of God and Chriſt crucifyed lays a man flat on the ground; and the knowledge of God reconcil'd, and Chriſt riſen, doth both humble and revive. A proud Divine knowledge is as great a contradiction, as to ſay, an humble diabolical malice.

(5.) 'Tis a weaning knowledge. It weans a mans Heart from all things below. Clear manifeſtations of God elevate the Soul to God, when ignorance of him depreſſeth the Heart to one Creature or other. The excellency of God dimms the beauty of the Creature, and the true knowledge of this excellency ſets the Creature below God in the Heart. It leaves no room for any thing elſe, as the eye that hath gaz'd upon the Sun admits not preſently any other image into it. This Divine knowledge diſparageth the value of any thing elſe, it repreſents ſin vile and the World empty. 'Tis ſuch an ineſtimable Treaſure that is not to be put in the ballance with any thing elſe. All other things which carnal men eſteem, are but thin and airy notions, to this knowledge; every thing that hath a tincture of Fleſh and Blood, humane Principles, fleſhly Councels expire, when this Wiſdom ſhines inupon the Soul, Gal. 1. 16. I conſulted not with Fleſh and Blood: Nor can any man that hath found this Mine of Gold, leave it for a mite of Braſs. When Chriſt and his ſweetneſs is diſcerned and taſted, Life is a torment, Death a pleaſure. Simeon upon his ſight of Chriſt deſires to depart, ſince his eyes had ſeen Gods Salvation, Luk. 2. 29, 30. Nothing in the World could be worth his deſires after a ſight of the Redeemer. And Paul, who both had and valued the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt, eſteems every thing in the World no better than dung, and longs to be diſſolv'd that he might be in his arms, Phil. 3. 8. and 1. 23. As when the Sun appears in the Heavens it doth not only diſcover it ſelf, but diſcloſeth all things on the Earth, ſo when God manifeſts himſelf to the Soul, he doth not only give the knowledge of himſelf, but ſhows to us the true nature of other things, that they can bear no proportion to the excellency of God and Chriſt, and beſtows ſuch a judgment and underſtanding upon, us that we look upon things under other notions, and conſiderations than before we did; as men have other apprehenſions of things in the light than they had in the darkneſs of the night. He doth not know God, that doth not apprehend him to be more excellent, than the withering flowers of any Creature whatſoever; as he doth not Love Chriſt that loves him not above all Creatures, and he doth not Worſhip God who worſhips the Creature equal with him *, ſo he doth not know God, that knows him not to be excellent above all Creatures, and eſteem him accordingly.

* Rom. 1. 25. ἐσεβάσθησαν, worſhipped the creature, juxta creatorem.

6. 'Tis a fiducial knowledge. A knowledge of Faith, Pſal. 9. 10. They that know thy name will truſt in thee, Faith and Truſt are the concomitants of this knowledge. Such will addreſs to God in all their ſtraits, and rely upon his Truth and Goodneſs. And the Spirit of Wiſdom is joyned with the acknowledgment of Chriſt, Eph. 1. 17. Faith is principally meant by knowledge in Scripture, ſome therefore interpret the Knowledge of Chriſt which is Eternal Life, in the Text, to be Faith. No knowledge indeed without Faith can be Eternal Life, or the next way to it, and by knowledge, Iſaiah 53. 11. (by his knowledge ſhall my Righteous ſervant juſtifie many) muſt be underſtood a believing knowledge, and cannot be underſtood otherwiſe. All that have a general knowledge of Chriſt, tho' never ſo high, are not juſtified, for that excellent ſtate the Scripture aſcribes only to Faith. His knowledge, objectively, the knowledge of him, Faith in him; and Faith is called knowledge, becauſe it is radically in the underſtanding as liberty is, but it is formally in the will. Not that the underſtanding is the proper and ſole ſeat of Faith, becauſe Faith is fiducia, Truſt or Relyance, which is not an act of the mind but of the will. But Faith is in the underſtanding in regard of diſpoſition, but in the will in regard of the fiducial apprehenſion *: for Faith is not one Simple vertue but compounded of two, Knowledge and Truſt: The common ſubject is the Heart, the ſpecial ſeat of each part is the underſtanding and will, (yet thoſe two parts cannot be ſeparated but the nature of Faith is deſtroyed) as original Righteouſneſs was both in the mind and the will; and the happineſs of Heaven which is but one entire happineſs conſiſts both in the acts of the underſtanding in Contemplation, and the acts of the will in the embracing the contemplated object. But by knowledge or ſight in Scripture is principally meant Faith. Abraham ſaw the day of Chriſt, John 8. 56. and with ſuch a ſight as ſprung up in joy; he ſaw it in the promiſe; he knew it by way of energy in the propitiation of Chriſt and vertue of his Spirit; he had the power of Chriſts death in the mortification of his unbelief, before the death was felt by the Son of God upon the croſs, and roſe to a new life by the virtue of Chriſts Reſurrection, before Chriſt laid his head in the grave. It was certainly a ſight of Faith; for the Jews to whom Chriſt ſpake this, ſaw him with their bodily eyes, beheld his day, they ſaw him perſonally face to face, and knew him in the fleſh, yet were wholly ignorant both of the excellency of his perſon and virtue of his offices. 'Tis one thing to know the nature of God, and another thing to know God in Covenant as our God. Of the Sidonians God ſaid, They ſhall know that I am the Lord, Ezek. 28. 22. In a way of juſtice, they ſhall know that I am of a Righteous Nature. But of his People Iſrael he ſaith, They ſhall know that I am the Lord their God, ver. 26. A God in Covenant with them, in whom they have an intereſt. 'Tis an intereſted knowledge. A relying upon God in his Covenant as theirs according as the Scripture propounds him. There is as great a difference between the common knowledge of God in an unbelieving Scholar and a believing Chriſtian, as between the knowledge that a Gardner hath of Plants and Flowers in his Maſters Garden, he knows how to dreſs them, knows the names and the nature of every particular Plant and Flower there: But though the knowledge of the owner of it doth not extend to all thoſe particularities, yet he knows it to be his conveyed to him and of right belonging to him. Another man delights in a beautiful Feild and Garden, pleaſeth himſelf with the variety of the Flowers and pleaſures of the Walks; the owner delights in it upon this account too, loves to conſider the nature of the Trees and Plants; but he hath a knowledge of it, and delight in it, above the others, becauſe of his propriety, he knows the poſſeſſion o' it, and the commodities ariſing from it, to be his. This knowledge is alwayes with ſome glimmerings of hopes that God and Chriſt are his according to the tenour of the Covenant. Tho' there be not a full aſſurance, the Title and evidence is not clear to him, and may ſeem to have ſome flaw in it, which he hath not yet overcome, yet all true Faith hath ſomething of comfort and hope with it, for it is wrought by the Spirit as a comforter convincing of the ſufficiency as well as the neceſſity of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, upon whichthe Soul in this ſaving knowledge flings it ſelf, and follows this glimmering till he comes to a greater light, whereby to read his own intereſt in Chriſt as Paul did *Gal.*2.20. who loved me and gave himſelf for me. Afterwards indeed there is a know-knowledge of feeling, 2 Tim. 1. 12. I know whom I have believed. I have known him by Faith, and I know him by feeling, I knew him to be good before, and therefore I truſted him. But ſince I knew whom I have truſted, and have a rich experience of him.

1. There is no ſaving knowledge without this fiducial act. It properly follows upon our eſpouſals with God: tis a knowledge after contract, Hoſ. 2. 20. I will betroth thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and thou ſhalt know the Lord; and therefore muſt be a knowledge of Faith. He that hath no lively motions hath no Life, he muſt have breath at leaſt; nor is there any lively knowledge of the grace of God in Chriſt without vehement deſires at leaſt after him, and unutterable believing groans. Can any man know God in his wrath, who doth not tremble at it, or any man know God in his grace, that doth not catch hold of it? He knows him not, that thinks him not excellent enough to be the ſole object of his confidence, and affiance. No man that diſparageth that which is truly excellent in it ſelf, can be ſaid to know the excellency of that thing. If I ſet up any thing in the World as the ground of my truſt more than God, 'tis evident that I acknowledge a greater vertue, ſtrength and power in that than in God and Chriſt whom I refuſe, and may well be ſaid not to know and underſtand the tranſcendent goodneſs of him that I reject. Lay not therefore any claim to a knowledge of God as Almighty, Infinite goodneſs, and tender Bowels, if you reſign not up your ſelves wholy to him, to his grace to pardon you, to his power to relieve you, to the death of Chriſt to mortifie ſin, and that in his own way the way of his precepts, not in ways of our own invention, and preſumption. But, alas! Do not many prop up themſelves in ſome Earthly thing, as if there were no God in Iſrael to be ſought unto, ſtrengthen themſelves in their own Righteouſneſs, as if there were no Mediator commiſſion'd and ſent into the World? Confidence in any other thing denies the being of God, or if not that, yet it denies the excellency of God, if not that, the goodneſs of God, and ſo implies that there is no knowledge of God as he is gracious, and glorious in himſelf, becauſe there is no truſt in him. I am ſore afraid, moſt of the knowledge of God and Chriſt we have in this age, is a meer notion of Faith without value, like a ring without the Diamond. He knows beſt, that hath concocted in his Heart, what he underſtood in his Head.

2. The higheſt rational knowledge of God cannot profit without this knowledge of Faith. The general and common knowledge of Chriſt is but a knowing after the fleſh, not in the power of his Spirit, and can no more advantage than the Jews knowing him, or Judas his living with him did them or him without believing. In the Scripture Chriſtians are not called knowing perſons, but Believers. 'Tis a pleaſure to a Phyſitian to conſider the nature of a Medicine and pierce into the quality of each ingredient in it; but if he be invaded by the diſeaſe for which that Medicine is proper, all his knowledge of it and delight in it will be no ſupport to his body, unleſs he takes it and joyns it in a cloſe conteſt with the diſtemper. All the pleaſure he hath had in the ſearch and contemplation of it, and the experience of the ſtrength of it upon his patients, will not check the malady of his vitals, or ſtop the rage of the humour, though his knowledge were as large as Solomons, without application of the remedy. Chriſt is the remedy for our ſpiritual diſeaſes, Faith is the application. A man is no more a Chriſtian by knowing the nature of God and Chriſt in a notional way, or being able to unfold the myſteries of Redemption in generous ſtrains, than a Philoſopher who can diſcourſe accurately of the nature of Mettals and Jewels, can be ſaid to be rich, when he hath never a penny in his Purſe. The knowledge entitles him to a natural Wiſdom, but the poſſeſſion to Wealth. If he were a ſlave in the Gallies, the riches of his knowledge would never ſtrike off the weight of his Chains: One jewel in poſſeſſion to pay for his Redemption would be of more value than all his Philoſophy. And juſt ſuch a perſon is he, that delights in the knowledge of his baggs and quantity of Gold, but makes not application of it to his preſent indigencies: It is as if he had none, but were the pooreſt beggar that craves an alms from door to door. There is as great a dif-

a difference between this notional and fiducial knowledge, as there is between the knowledge of an Angel who comes under the wing of Chriſt for his confirmation in his happy eſtate, and the knowledge of a Devil who rejected him as his head, which is thought by ſome to be the Devils ſin. 'Tis likely by Scripture it was pride, and probably it was pride of this nature, as I may have occaſion to ſhow in the proſecuting the doctrine of Unbelief. As the Angels knowledge of Chriſt being propoſed as their head, could not have advantag'd them, without an act of conſent to him, and acceptance of him anſwering to Faith in us, as well as a knowledge (they had not elſe come under his wing as rational Creatures, by an election and approbation of him) ſo neither can our knowledge of him, without an accepting of him.

3. The clearer a ſaving knowledge is, the ſtronger will be our Faith and Confidence in God and Chriſt, and the ſtronger our Faith the ſtronger our Knowledge. As the more knowledge a Phyſitian hath of the nature of ſimples, the more confidently will he apply them; and the more he finds their vertue in the application, the ſurer knowledge of them he arrives unto. The more we ſpiritually underſtand God, the more we ſhall truſt him on his own credit, and this is properly Faith. All the Attributes of God are the crutches of Faith, the bladders upon which Faith ſwims, when we know the ſtrength of them, and are ſenſible of the ſufficiency of them, and our own need, we ſhall with greater aſſurance rely upon them, as they are engaged in his promiſes; his Wiſdom in making promiſes that he can accompliſh, his Faithfulneſs in making promiſes that he will accompliſh, his Power in being able to make good every tittle of his Word. Not an Attribute of God but inſpires Faith with a freſh vigour. And ſo the more we ſpiritually and ſenſibly know the tenour of Chriſts Commiſſion, the ends of his Death, the cauſes and ends of his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, we ſhall the more willingly caſt our Souls upon that ſecurity, and draw ſweetneſs by Faith from every Flower in Gods Garden. The Angels adore the goodneſs of God more fervently than we can, and have a greater confidence in that goodneſs, becauſe their apprehenſions of it are clearer, and their taſt and experience of it hath been ſtronger. The brighteſt needles move quickeſt, and ſtick faſteſt to the Loadſtone. The clearer our knowledge, the cloſer our adherence. He that ſpiritually knows God and Chriſt, will reſt upon Gods bare Word with more ſtedfaſtneſs, than if he had the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of all the Princes in the World for a great Eſtate.

7. Tis a progreſſive knowledge, ſtill aiming at more knowledge and more improvements of it. Though the knowledge of God be at firſt infus'd into us by the inſpiration of the Spirit, yet neither that in the Head, nor grace in the Heart, have their full ſtrength at their firſt birth, but attain their ſtature gradually. Natural knowledge, which is a common work of God upon men, arrives not at its growth in a moment, but in tract of time. He that firſt found out the inclination of the Loadſtone to the Pole, did not preſently apprehend all the vertues of the Loadſtone, nor was able to ſail about the World by it, though this afterwards grew up from the firſt invention. We go up a Mountain ſtep by ſtep. Chriſt doth not perform all the parts of his Prophetical Office at once, there is a further declaration of the Name of God to ſucceed the firſt, John 17. 26. I have declared thy Name, and will declare it, that the love wherewith thou haſt loved me, may be in them. And the raviſhments by the vertue and influences of his ſecond, ſhall exceed thoſe of the firſt Revelation, for thoſe further declarations are accompanied with greater manifeſtations of Affection, and fuller Communications of Divine Love to the Soul. Some things are too bright for the Soul at the firſt opening of its weak eyes. Men at their firſt Converſion have but glimpſes of things, as the man Mark 8. 24. who ſaw men as Trees walking, till Chriſt put his hand upon his eyes, and made him ſee objects before him more diſtinctly. As the ſtone from our Hearts, ſo ſcales from our eyes, fall off by degrees. No Man is ſo wiſe but he may be wiſer.

alſo alluring to a further enquiry, Prov. 1. 5. A wiſe man will hear and will encreaſe Learning: he will ariſe to more ſublime thoughts and diſcoveries: He will be adding as in Arithmetick figure to figure, till he comes to a juſt ſum, deducing one rule from another, till he come to the utmoſt: As the branch grows from the body of the Tree, and one branch from another. 'Tis the nature of all true knowledge to ſharpen the mind for more. He that hath found a mine, will follow the vein till he maſters it. The Scholar that hath a taſt of any curious Learning, will not leave the purſuit till he hath pierced into the bowels of it, and by turning over Books and ſtretching his Thoughts hath increaſed his ſtock. Tis alſo the nature of Spiritual knowledge to put an edge upon the appetite, and open the underſtanding wider, that it may be filled with more. The voice of it is that of the grave, Give, Give. The times of the Goſpel were promiſed to be inquiſitive times, Dan. 12. 4. Many ſhall run to and fro, and Knowledge ſhall be encreaſed. A little knowledge of God doth not huſh our deſires, but awaken them. The Barbarous people by taſting the fruits of Italy were not at reſt, till they ſaw and conquered the Countrey. One taſt of God and Chriſt is to make us cry out, ever more Lord give us this bread: 'Tis to enlarge our appetite, not to dull and ſcantle it; To engage us to make further enquiries into the hope of his calling, and the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints, Eph. 1. 16. They had a Spirit of knowledge. But the Apoſtle prays for further perfection in the knowledge of Chriſt, and a fuller opening the eyes of their underſtandings, to get into his ſecret things, and behold more of his Glory. 'Tis as natural for a ſaving knowledge to preſs to further attainments, as it is for a counterfeit knowledge to flag in its purſuit.

(2.) Tis utterly impoſſible that any man can have a ſaving knowledge of God, who ſtands at a ſtay in what he has, without any deſires to make a further progreſs. As it is impoſſible Faith or a full aſſent or conſent to the doctrine of the Goſpel can be without unutterable groans for the full application of the good things promiſed in it, ſo it is impoſſible this ſaving knowledge can be without eager thirſting for a larger Communication. He that ſeeks not after more light, never had any ſaving glimmerings of any in his Heart, Prov. 15. 14. He that hath underſtanding, ſeeks knowledge, but the mouth of fools feed on fooliſhneſs. The ſeeking knowledge is a ſign of an underſtanding Heart, any mans feeding on fooliſhneſs is an evidence that he underſtands nothing of the ſweetneſs of a ſpiritual banquet. That Merchant that is ſenſible of gain, will encreaſe his venture, and deſire richer commodities: The underſtanding Heart will venture out for more ſpiritual knowledge. As no man hath true grace who doth not make additions, and riſe to the exerciſe of thoſe graces which are more ſpiritual, more the delight of God, and the beauty of the Soul: ſo neither hath he any taſt of God and Chriſt, who doth not aſpire and travel to more ſpiritual diſcoveries of his Glory. There is not only to be a knowledge, but a following on to know the Lord, Hoſ. 6. 3. A following hard after him, to ſee his Glory, Pſal. 63. 2, 8. he never taſted the ſweetneſs of it that is cloy'd with it, nor ever underſtood the beauty of the proſpect, that is not deſirous to get up to the top of the Hill to pleaſure his eyes with a full view. An acquieſcence in any degree is a ſign the knowledge pretended is but a Counterfeit, that God is not the delightful and eſtimable Object of his Mind, that there is no experimental acquaintance with him. Certainly, he that eſteems him, will deſire to lye at his feet to receive his inſtructions, and will implore Chriſt for the exerciſe of his prophetical Office, which is as truly exercis'd by his Spirit in the World, as it was in his Perſon in the dayes of his fleſh.

(1.) This Principle of ſaving Knowledge is an active Principle. If it be the light of Life, a living and lively light, it will by its activity proceed from ſtrength to ſtrength, from dawn to day-light, from day-light to Sun-riſe, and from that to the Meridian, Prov. 4. 18. The Sun in a Statue, will ſtand like a ſtock, but not the Sun in the Heavens. If through the darkneſs of the Underſtanding there is an alienation from the Life of God, Eph. 4. 18. then by an Enlightned Underſtanding, there is an approach to the Life of God. Can partakers of the Life of God, ſtand at a ſtay? Can we ever be like God by Ignorance, and ſmall meaſures of Knowledge? God cannot encreaſe in the knowledge of himſelf, becauſe the Knowledge of himſelf, is, as himſelf, infinite: But that Soul that is truly God-like, aſpires to as high a knowledge of him, as the Creature is capable of. He hath no deſire to take further ſteps in grace, who doth not deſire to thrive in the Knowledge of Chriſt which is as the dew of grace.

(2.) There is no conformity to Chriſt, without a thirſt after more knowledge of God. Our Saviour grew in Wiſdom as he did in Stature, Luk. 2. 52. Not that Chriſt had any ſinful Ignorance, but the Habits of Wiſdom and Knowledge infus'd into his humane Nature, grew up to maturity according to his natural growth. They are not his Members that grow not proportionably to the head; and being Rational Members, they muſt grow in knowledge as well as in ſtrength. The Image of God in the New Creature doth partly conſiſt in Knowledge, Col. 3. 10. Yet it is not neceſſary to this Conformity, that all ſhould have an equal degree of Knowledge. 'Tis probable, all in Heaven have not an equal Viſion of God, ſince there are different degrees of Glory; yet the leaſt degree of the Viſion of God there, is with a perfect Conformity, and without the mixture of the leaſt impurity. But there is no Conformity here to Chriſt, without ſome knowledge of him. Some grow according to means and meaſures, and an ardent thirſt for fuller manifeſtations of him. Some think that in heaven there will be a conſtant proficiency in the Knowledge of God *; and why not, ſince finite is capable of Additions, as Numbers are of more Units, which may be encreas'd by adding; yet none ſo great, but may be made greater by addition of more to them?

* Zanch. in Hoſ. 6. 3.

(3.) He can have no deſire to enjoy God, who doth not deſire a clearer knowledge of him. What deſires can he have of fruition, who doth not delight to know more of him, whom he pretends he is willing to enjoy? He hath no mind to ſet foot in Heaven, nor hath any Notions of the happineſs of that place, whoſe Affections are not enlarged to a further proſpect of him, who is the ſole Eſſential happineſs there. Whoſoever hath had any taſte of Heavenly pleaſure, will endeavour to beautifie his underſtanding with Divine Objects, ſince part of the happineſs of Heaven conſiſts in a perfection of that faculty of the Mind.

'Tis then certain that a knowing Soul cannot be idle, but inquiſitive: Spiritual Knowledge is no leſs attractive than natural. When we come to a little knowledge in thoſe lower things, we are ſtill aiming at more. As thoſe that found out new Countries, were ſtill making more Voyages to perfect their Enquiry. 'Tis impoſſible that any that have taſted the ſaving Knowledge of God, can reſt in low meaſures; but they will be attempting a full diſcovery.

This progreſſiveneſs conſiſts chiefly

(1,) In a clearer ſight of what was in part known. Not ſo much extenſively, in an increaſe of particular Objects; as intenſively, in a clearer view and more ſpiritual apprehenſion of what we knew before; As growth in Grace is not in new Graces (for they are all included in the habit of Grace firſt put into the Soul) but in a ſtrength of each particular Grace, and the actings of it. As a man that ſtudies the nature of ſome particular Creature, by his ſearch comes into a ſight, not of new Objects, but of more reaſons of things, and a clearer inſpection into that which was the object of his knowledge before. The knowledge in heaven conſiſts not ſo much in the knowing new Objects, as in knowing with an unexpreſſible clearneſs, God and Chriſt, whom we know but in a glaſs, and that darkly in the World: not in an addition of new Objects, but an acceſſion to the degrees of our knowledge.

(2.) 'Tis a growth in Eſtimation of the Object, and ſtrength of deſires for it. 'Tis a certain rule in ſpirituals, as it is in naturals; every thing when it moves regularly to its Center, moves more ſwiftly towards the end of its Motion; ſo will the motion of the Soul be in Longings and Thirſtings after a more full view of God and Chriſt, the the nearer it comes to Salvation; the Soul breaks for the longings it hath to the judgments of God, Pſal. 119. 20. the Methods of his Wiſdom; one deſire treads upon another; he deſires, and is covetous for more longings for him; he longs, and thinks he doth not long enough. It grows in Eſtimations of him, Pſal. 119. 72. The law of thy mouth is better to me than thouſands of Gold and Silver. He values it daily more and more, above all the Excrements of this Earth.

(3.) 'Tis not a growth or deſire terminating in a Notion of God, ſo much as the fruits and proper intendments of that notion. 'Tis a Myſtery of Faith and a Myſtery of Godlineſs; a Myſtery to be known, and a Myſtery to be practic'd; But the growth is in the Myſtery of Faith, in order to a growth in it as it is a Myſtery of Godlineſs; to know God for the Ends for which he is reveal'd, and Chriſt for the ends for which he was Commiſſion'd. Tis a deſire for the way of Gods precepts, Pſal. 119. 27, 33. not to indulge Carnal Affections, or an intellective Curioſity; but to direct his paths and ſtrengthen him in his Walk. A man in a journey deſires not ſo much the knowledge of the nature of the Soil, or of the Fruits of the Country, as the way of it, to attain his journeys end. David having a knowledge of God, and being Raviſh'd with it, deſires to be acquainted with the way to the fruition of that whereof he had ſome ſight. Hence he ſo often deſires God to open his eye, that he might behold him; and teach him the way that he might attain to him. He that hath a delightful proſpect of excellent Buildings, and fruitful Grounds which he may have the Poſſeſſion of, would have a more accurate ſurvey of them. The next ſtep naturally is, to deſire to know a way thither; Prov. 1. 5. A wiſe man will encreaſe in Learning, חַחְבּוּלוֹת, the word ſignifies properly the Mariners Art, or Pilots skil in ſteering a ſhip; or an acuteneſs in acting: a wiſe man will hear and encreaſe in learning, in order to improve what he knows for his direction and ſteerage in his Courſe in the World, which is as a ſtormy Sea, and needs care and skill.

2. As there is a difference in the effects of this knowledge, ſo alſo in the manner of it.

1. Saving Knowledge is diſtinct. Tho' grace be not perfect, yet there is an Habit of grace, and all the parts of grace in the Soul of a renewed man; ſo tho' this knowledge be not perfect, yet there is a diſtinct view of God and Chriſt in all the neceſſary parts of knowledge. Another may know the Attributes of God, but he ſees not the Glory of them ſhining into the heart, 2 Cor. 4. 6. To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt. Tis a diſtinct view of Gods Perfections, in their affecting Glory; of his Wiſdom, in contriving Redemption; his Juſtice, in puniſhing our ſurety; his Mercy, in beſtowing Pardon in his beloved one; and the beauty of his Holineſs in all; and of thoſe a Believer hath a diſtinct apprehenſion in his Mind, and a gracious and diſtinct impreſſion of them on his Heart; he knows the Nature of Chriſt, his Offices, the fruits of his Death, and Comforts of his Reſurrection, the Cordials of his Interceſſion ſo orderly, as to make uſe of them in his ſeveral exigencies, and have recourſe to each of them by Faith, in his diſtinct preſſures. 'Tis a ſhining into the heart, as the Sun upon the World at the Creation, whereby Adam had a diſtinct view of the Creatures then formed; and in the new Creation, this Divine Light breaks into the Soul, repairs the faculty whereby there may be a plain ſpiritual view of the glory of God, as figur'd in the appearance of Chriſt. An Owl ſees the light, but not diſtinctly that or any thing by it, not becauſe there is want of Light, but a want of a due diſpoſition and ſtrength in the eye to diſcern it. 'Tis a manifeſtation of Gods name, Joh. 17. 6. God was more diſtinctly known by his name Jehovah among the Iſraelites, than he had been in the World before, i. e. in the manifeſtations of his Truth and Power in performing the promiſe of deliverance to them; ſo he is known in Chriſt in fuller expreſſions, and more Letters of his name, than he was to the Iſraelites. The other Knowledge, is as the ſight of a man in his picture; this, as the knowledge of a man in his Perſon, whereby his lively diſpoſition and excellencies are diſcern'd. 'Tis a knowledge by inward Manifeſtation and irradiation of the Soul. The times of Ignorance are called night and darkneſs in Scripture; In the Night there is no evidence of the true Figures and Colours of things: The time of divine Diſcovery is called Day, and Light; and Believers, Light in the Lord; there is a plain appearance of the Object in its excellency manifeſt to them, whereby they diſcern things that differ; the difference between Chriſt and the World, Grace and Sin. It differs from the knowledge of others, as the ſight of a Ship by an unskilful eye from that of the Shipwright or Pilot, who underſtands all the parts of the workmans skill. Or the ſight of a picture by a Limner, and one ignorant of the Art; one ſees the hidden pieces of Art, the other the outward figure and Compoſure. The knowledge of the Chriſtian, is the work of the Spirit by ſpecial Grace, the other is the work of Education and Induſtry. A Divine work is more clear than an humane. 'Tis ſuch a knowledge as the Apoſtles had after the Holy Ghoſt came upon them, and had diſpelled their darkneſs, ſcatter'd their ſhadows, and refin'd their Minds, and made them ſee the Counſel of God in the ſufferings of Chriſt, and behold the bottom of it with a divine Light; whereas before, their knowledge was confus'd and feeble, they ſcarce knew before he was to dye; after his death they underſtood his ſufferings, but nothing of the true reaſon and deſign of them, till the Spirit deſcended upon them: And therefore Chriſt tells them in the time of his Life, that tho' he had been ſo long with them, they did not know him, Joh. 14. 9. Unleſs the knowledge of God and Chriſt be thus diſtinct, it may ſtuff the Head, but not improve the Soul.

2. 'Tis a certain Knowledge. Not a gueſs or imagination, but a real thing; As if the Soul had a perfect demonſtration. 'Tis ſurer than the knowledge of the firſt Principles or common Notions in Man; ſurer than the perceptions of Senſe, or concluſions of Reaſon. The knowledge of things we have by Experience, depends upon the deceivable ſenſe, which often needs the correction of Reaſon: the knowledge we have by reaſon is uncertain, becauſe the Mind of Man is often prepoſſeſt with crooked Notions, which cannot be the rule to meaſure ſtraight Truths by. Reaſon is full of uncertainty, and dubious; and the more we know by natural Reaſon, the more we doubt. But this knowledge is more Divine than any demonſtration *, becauſe it is not founded upon humane Reaſon, but divine and infallible Revelation; which can neither deceive nor be deceiv'd. 'Tis by an inward ſence and taſte, which renders a man more certainly intelligent of what he feels, than all Men in the World can be by a Rational Diſcourſe without a ſence. Truth is Inned, and inlayed in the Heart, there is a plerophory and full aſſurance of knowledge, Col. 2. 2. * Other knowledge doth fluctuate, and a man rather ſuſpects that he ſees, than ſee clearly; which is rather an opinion of God and Chriſt than knowledge; ſuch as the Philoſophers had of natural things, which they could not aſſure themſelves whether it was clear Science or Opinion. But ſaving knowledge is a ſolid and certain apprehenſion of the object known. Hence it is called a ſight of the glory of God with open face, 2 Cor. 3. 18. an intellectual ſpiritual ſight, the evidence of things not ſeen, Heb. 11. 1. ἔλεγχος. Such a conviction that brings a fulneſs of Light with it, to clear the thing, and make the heart fall down under the power of it, and non-pluſſeth all diſputes againſt it. As the Spirit ſo ſtrongly convinceth of Sin, as to arreſt all objections and pleas, baniſh them out of the heart of the Sinner; ſo he ſtrongly convinceth of the Truth of God and Chriſt, and chaſeth away all the Carnal Reaſonings, as the light of the Riſing Sun doth darkneſs before it. 'Tis ſuch an evidence, that brings ſubſtance along with it. The Subſtance of things hoped for. It evidenceth God and Chriſt, and the things of God and Chriſt to be ſubſtantial, ſolid things, and not imaginary Notions, and doubtful Opinions. This was promiſed in the times of the Goſpel, Iſa. 52. 6. My people ſhall know my name, they ſhall know in that day, that I am he that doth ſpeak, behold it is I. The repetition of a thing in the Hebrew Dialect, ſhows the certainty of the thing ſpoken of. They knew God by the Prophets, they ſhould more ſurely know him in the times of the Goſpel, in the greatneſs of the deliverance he would work for them. 'Tis clearer than the prophetick Viſions; for it is a ſight that is produc'd by the dawning of the day, and

* Θεώτερόν τι πάσης ἀποδείξεως Origen.

and the arising of the day-star in the heart, 2 Pet. 1. 19. which is meant of a knowledge of Christ in this World, for in Heaven the knowledge shall be by the light of the Sun. 'Tis a knowledge here which is the forerunner of a full knowledge in Heaven, as the day-star is of the rising Sun. And Christ himself affirms to God this certainty of knowledge, John 17. 8. They have surely known that I came out from thee, which is more than a loose opinion. And indeed, there is nothing more sure to an open'd understanding than a divine light, tho' to an eye sore with sin the light is as imperceptible as the light of the Sun to the eyes of an Owl.

1. The manner of this knowledge must bear some proportion to the object, and the manner of revealing it. As the object excells all other objects, so the manner of knowing must be different from all other manner of knowledge, and therefore more certain in what we know of it, by how much the objects God and Christ are more excellent and real, the living God and an Eternal Christ. 'Tis not coyn'd by Flesh and Bloud, nor depends upon the blindness of reason. But it is from the Father which is in Heaven, as well as of the Father which is in Heaven, Matth. 16. 17. A manifestation from Christ, John 17. 6. I have manifested thy name; a sure word whereby it is taught, 2 Pet. 1. 19. surer than all the maxims of the World. The object is most real. God, the author of all being, the fountain of Nature and Grace, Christ, the band of the whole Creation. The manner of revealing was most certain, the manner of knowing must be in some measure suitable to the object known, and the way of its manifestation; the principles of Faith are more certain than those of any Science.

2. 'Tis wrought by the enlightning vertue of the Holy Ghost, and therefore must be most certain. The knowledge of God as well as Faith is the gift of God, wrought in the Soul by inspiration. God gives not erroneous principles to the Creature. The debauchery of our reasons was not from God originally, but from the lasting invasion of sin, and permitted by God as a Judge to continue for our punishment. This teaching is by the Spirit of Truth, John 14. 17. 1 John 2. 27. who inwardly presents the excellency of God and Christ to the understanding as the word doth to the ear, and that not like a flash of Lightning that gives a vanishing Light, and after leaves us in a worse darkness than it found us: But he abides as a Spirit of Truth in all the darkness of this World, for he dwells with you and shall be in you. The instruction will be certain, till the Spirit prove an uncertain Teacher. 'Tis his demonstration, and therefore powerful, 1 Cor. 2. 4. and surer than any demonstration by reason, by how much the Spirit the Teacher of it is above all the Reason in the World; 'tis the Spirit that searcheth the deep things of God, 2 Cor. 2. 9, 10. Mysteries above the kenn of corrupted Reason, and hid in the secret place of the most High, which are therefore most precious and of the greatest reality and value. Since therefore this knowledge is a fruit of Divine Teaching, and from an infinitely wise and infallible Teacher, the Soul of a Believer is more assured of the reality of it than it is of its own Life and Being. He knows by Sense and Reason that he lives, but the knowledge he hath of God and Christ is by the Spirit, a principle infinitely superior to both the other.

3. Saving knowledge is such a knowledge for kind as Christ had of God. The words and declaration of God which God gave to him, he gave to his Disciples, John 17. 8. The knowledge Christ as man had of God is communicated to a Believer, in the kind, though not in the same measure. And herein doth consist partly our conformity to Christ; the Soul is conform'd to Christ in all the parts of it: It consists not in the repair of one faculty, for that would be but half a resemblance. It would be monstrous for the will to be conform'd to Christ, and the understanding to the Devil; the Will to be acted by Grace, and the Understanding possessed by Nature. It cannot indeed be supposed in the order of natural Operations, how the Will can have an Holy conformity to Christ, till the Understanding hath an intelligent conformity to him. As the Will is made like the Will of Christ, so the Mind is enlightned in a similitude to the Mind of Christ, that as Christ is in the Heart the ground of the hope of Glory, ſo he is in it the guide of the Mind, Phil. 2. 5. Let this mind be in you which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus. 1 Cor. 2. 16. But we have the mind of Chriſt. The Spiritual man judgeth all things, becauſe he underſtands the mind of Chriſt. Becauſe his Mind is inform'd and enlightned by that Spirit which illuminated the humane Mind of Chriſt. And needs muſt he judge as Chriſt did, who hath not only a knowledge of the doctrine of Chriſt, but a Mind acted by the ſame Spirit of Chriſt, and ſuted to the Mind of Chriſt, and hath ſuch notions and piercing inſight into the things of God for the kind as Chriſt had. I will not ſay that this is the ſenſe of the place, though ſomething of that nature ſeems to be included in the manner of the Apoſtles argument, or may be inferred from thence. We may be ſaid to know as Chriſt doth, as we are ſaid to be Holy as Chriſt is Holy, in regard of likeneſs, as the light of the Stars and the Sun are true light, have a likeneſs one to the other, and are of the ſame kind, Yet the light in the Sun is more full and clear than that in the Stars. As there will at the laſt day be a glory of the body like to the glorious body of Chriſt, Phil. 3. 21. And a glory of the Soul much more like to the Soul of Chriſt: So there is an initial likeneſs to Chriſt in each faculty in every renewed man. Now as Chriſts knowledge of God was certain and the knowledge of himſelf was certain, ſo this ſaving knowledge of God and Chriſt in a true Believer is as certain for the meaſure of it in this World. And though there be doubts and wavérings in the Hearts of Believers, yet they do not reſpect the object the nature of God and Chriſt and the ends of his death, but are in regard of the ſubject and an intereſt in thoſe glorious things. Now though this knowledg be imperfect, yet 'tis certain in every Believer. They know, though it be but in part, 1 Cor. 13. 12. and that which they know is certain. There is certainty in Star-light as well as in Sun-light, though the light be not ſo much. We ſee through a glaſs darkly. 'Tis a certain ſight, though not clear, becauſe the Organ is not fully fitted for it. Every true Beleiver can ſay as thoſe, John 6. 69. We Believe and are ſure that thou art that Chriſt the Son of the living God. Before the light of the knowledge of God broke in ſavingly upon him, he had doubtful notions of thoſe things, he counted them as ſhadows, diſcourſed of them becauſe the reſt of the World did, and becauſe he had been brought up that way, yet without any ſavour of them: He knew not whether he knew or no, as Paul, whether he was in or out of the body. But ſince, he beholds ſuch a clearneſs and reality in the myſteries of the goſpel, that he is more confirm'd in the certainty of them than of any thing in the World. There is a light ſhot in, which carries its own evidence with it, and is too bright to be nonpluſt by the darkneſs of reaſon. The things of God and Chriſt are diſcerned in the Head and realiz'd in the Heart.

3. Tis a firm Knowledge. Some have a floating knowledge of God: Truth in their Mind doth dance as the Image of the Sun or Starrs in a pail, according to the motion of the Water. Truth and Errour are like a pair of ſcales, ſometimes up and ſometimes down. But as true Faith, ſo ſaving knowledge, is ſtedfaſt like a needle ſticking to the Loadſtone without wavering, Coloſ. 2. 5. ſtedfaſtneſs of your Faith στήριγμα, firmamentum fidei, Firmament of Faith, as ſtable as the Heaven and Heavenly bodies keeping their conſtant ſtations and courſes, and admitting nothing heterogeneous into them: 'Tis but a ſhadow of knowledge which halts between two opinions. The knowledge of Chriſt being admitted upon the higheſt account frames the ſoul into an acquieſcence in it. 'Tis an unction from the Holy one, 1 John 2. 20. Which as it opens, ſo it fortifies the underſtanding. 'Tis an habit, Heb. 5. 14. who by reaſon of uſe, by reaſon of Habit in the Greek. The faculty is firm and can never be totally vitiated; though it may, as the natural taſt, be impair'd by ſome diſeas'd humour tincturing the palate, yet it returns again to its former temper. 'Tis ſuch a knowledge that keeps men in a way of Righteouſneſs and prevents them from returning to be Swine. It makes them ſee the mire to loath it, and the purity of God to love him. They that are taught of God depart not from his Truth, Pſal. 119. 102. I have not departed from thy judgments; for thou haſt taught me. The Pſalmiſt renders Gods teaching him as a reaſon why he did not depart from Gods judgments. Therefore that knowledge of God which is taught by God is an eſtabliſhing knowledge, not a volatile airy thing, ſuch as children have, which are carried away by every wind of Doctrine, Eph. 4. 14. toſt to and fro between one paſſion and another, rather than between one reaſon and another; But a ſettling ballaſt, ſuch as the Martyrs had who were ſlain for the Word of God, the Divine Life, and the Teſtimony they bore to his perſon and offices, which they held and held as an undoubted Truth, Revel. 5. 9. They held the tranſcript of God, and Chriſt imprinted on their Hearts firm, as a Marble doth the Letters engraven on it; the other ſort of knowledge is fading, as eaſily blotted out as Letters upon Sand with the next wind. In the one there is only a taſt of the powers of the World to come, of the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt, which are the powers of the age of the Meſſiah, which was called by the Jews the World to come. Heb. 6. 5. the other is as a conſtant ſight in the Heart, as firm as a graft in the ſtock which becomes one with it; Not only a light of Truth but a love of Truth, notions ſpring into the mind and Love ſtands ready to ſet and root them. If any man therefore pretends to a knowledge of God, and withdraws from him to the things of this World, and the miry wayes of ſin, he knew no more of God than a Swine doth of the cleanſing bath. He diſcovers a greater hatred of God; for whenſoever any good is forſaken after it is pretended to be known, it ſhows a greater deteſtation of it and deſire of diſunion from it. Whatſoever therefore the pretences of Apoſtates are, they never knew God, becauſe God is ſo lovely in all his perfections, that it is impoſſible for any Soul that knows him, not to love him and cleave to him.

4. This ſaving knowledge of God and Chriſt is in all the Affections, which attend it in the Soul, unexpreſſible. The Affections riſing from it are unexpreſſible by the Soul that feels it: All words are below the ſenſe, as a ſpark is below the brightneſs of a flame. In common things we find often a ſecret power excite a liking or diſlike in our mind which we cannot fully diſcover to others, either in the greatneſs of the pleaſure or abhorrency which is in our ſelves. The natural Affections we have to ſomething admit of no expreſſion, much leſs the ſpiritual Affections. A Friend that you know and love dearly, whoſe vertues you admire, you can never diſcover ſo exquiſitely in his endowments, as that another ſhould admire and love him with an Affection equal to what you bear to him. Who can imagine the depth of Davids ſenſe in his contemplations of God under thoſe ſpiritual ſtrains he cloaths himſelf with in his Pſalms, unleſs he felt the ſame inward tranſports as David did? Who can underſtand the exquiſite ſatisfaction our Saviour had in his thoughts of his Father, in his addreſſes to him, and obedience to his will, unleſs he could be equal to him in all thoſe? Tis the ſame thing in ſpiritual as in natural knowledge. No man can underſtand the delight a Scholar takes in his enquiries into ſome curious Learning, but he that hath had a taſt of the ſame pleaſure himſelf, no more than a man can underſtand the heat of fire that never felt it. Paul in his Revelations heard words unſpeakable in their own nature, as well as unlawful for him to utter, 2 Cor. 12. 4. Nor can any conceive the inward raviſhments of a Soul in the Meditations of God and Chriſt, who never had a ſpiritual view of the excellency of thoſe raviſhing objects.

1. See the inſufficiency of all other knowledge to Eternal happineſs. Other Sciences are ſhadows of Wiſdom, this a ſound Wiſdom, Prov. 3. 21. referring to the ſtudy of the Wiſdom of God. All other kind of knowledge delights a man at preſent, helps him to paſs his Life with ſome comfort, but gives not a drop of Balſom at the hour of Death for any ſpiritual wound, or the leaſt cordial dram for a drooping Soul; whereas this ſound Wiſdom is a Treaſure of things new and old, to ſupport under any calamity. It will keep us from being afraid of ſudden fear, or of the deſolation of the wicked when it comes; for the Lord, that is ſavingly known, ſhall be our confidence and keep our feet from being taken, Prov. 3. 24, 25, 26.

(1.) Skill in the affairs of the World and Arts uſeful to humane Societies firſt appear- ed in the ſeed of the Serpent, and the Idolatrous generation of the World. The Poſterity of Cain, the head of the unbelieving World, are upon Record in Scripture for ſuch inventions. When his generations are reckoned, there is Jabal who firſt invented the art of ordering Cattle, and Jubal his Brother the inventer of Muſick, and Tubal Cain the firſt Artificer in Braſs and Iron, Gen. 4. 20, 21, 22. No ſuch remark ſet upon the Children of Seth reckoned, Gen. 5. 21. 22. only Enochs walking with God, and Lamechs propheſie of Noah as if he had been the promiſed ſeed; their minds were taken up with that knowledge which fitted them for a better Life. The knowledge of the Greeks, whence the choiceſt Learning was tranſmitted to Europe, was deriv'd from Phœnicia to Ægypt, the one the Poſterity of Canaan, the other alſo of Cham, both eminent for Idolatry.

ed

(2.) Chriſt never directed men in the knowledge of any thing but of God. He never took Fleſh, nor laid it down to make us Philoſophers or Artificers, skilful in the Affairs of the World or knowing in Political concerns, but to purchaſe for us the knowledge of the Myſteries of Heaven, and ſanctifying grace; he was a Prophet to manifeſt the name of God, not the nature of Creatures. He came not to inſtruct us in the nature of the Elements, the Reaſon of Natural Motions, to inform us of the nature of the Stars and heavenly bodies, but the nature of God, the deſigns and methods of his grace. The teaching Worldly skill was too low for the grandeur of his Prophetical Office, and ſhould be too low for our choiceſt conſideration, but only in order to the enlarging our faculties for more clear apprehenſions or illuſtrations of Divine knowledge, to be foundations for ſpiritual Meditations, and more ſenſible perception of heavenly Truth. Our Saviour knew all the ſecrets of nature, the uſefulneſs of humane Arts to the comfort of the World, but never recommended any of them as ſufficient to happineſs. Nor after his Reſurrection in his diſcourſes with the Diſciples, did he acquaint them with the curioſities of Paradiſe or the orders of Angels: But with the Propheſies concerning himſelf and ends of his Death, and Reſurrection, and Glory in heaven, Luke 24. Had thoſe been ſufficient or neceſſary means the Scripture had been full of natural Demonſtrations, it had been a book of Nature inſtead of a book of Grace. It was not the deſign of it to render men Scholars, but Chriſtians; and though there be many excellent ſprinklings of natural Learning in Divine Writ, they are occaſionally ſet down to lead us to the underſtanding the Nature of God, and our own duty, the two ſtates of man, his miſery by ſin, and his happineſs by Grace. And therefore to reſt in that which God never reſted in, Chriſt never taught or admir'd, to reſt in that which Devils and Wicked men are well acquainted with, and are no Enemies unto, can never render a ſoul happy.

(3.) It can never of it ſelf help us to the knowledge of Divine things. A man with Treaſures of other knowledge in his head, may have, and often have, Hearts inſenſible of the beauty of God and excellency of Chriſt. It may make a man higher by Head and Shoulders than other men, but never make him like to God. The higheſt intellectuals without thoſe ſaving apprehenſions, are but Peacocks Feathers with black feet: They can no more purifie the Soul than the bloud of Bulls and Goats could atone our ſins. The underſtanding the intricacies of Nature, and the moſt ingenious Myſteries in the World, and a connexion of all the moſt uſeful worldly Sciences cannot advantage our Spiritual and Eternal Happineſs, becauſe the things themſelves which are the objects of that knowledge, cannot do it. The knowledge of a thing cannot do more than the thing known can do. If the bowels of Nature and Moral Truth were as open to any of us as they are to the higheſt Angel, only had we an underſtanding of all Divine as well as humane Myſteries without this affectionate knowledge, it would render us juſt nothing, 1 Cor. 13. 2. Though I have the gift of Propheſie, and underſtand all Myſteries, and all knowledge, and though I have all Faith, ſo that I could remove Mountains, and have no Charity, I am nothing. Of no account before God. A man may be Theologically knowing and ſpiritually ignorant. Nicodemus was none of the loweſt Sect, a Phariſee, nor of the loweſt form among them, a Ruler among them, had the knowledge of the Law above the Vulgar; yet was ignorant of the deſign of the Meſſiah, and the

Myſtery

Myſtery of the new birth. A man may be excellent in the Grammar of the Scripture, yet not underſtand the ſpiritual ſenſe of it. As a man may have ſo much Latin as to conſtrue a Phyſitians Bill, and tell the names of the Plants mentioned in it, yet underſtand nothing of the particular vertues of thoſe Plants, or have any pleaſure in the contemplation of them. So we may diſcourſe of God, and the perfections of God, and the intendments of the great things of Chriſt, without a ſenſe of them; though this be a good preparatory to a ſpiritual knowledge, yet it is inſufficient of it ſelf without ſome further addition. It doth not heal the Souls eye, nor chaſe away the ſpiritual darkneſs. In much wiſdom is much grief, Eccleſ. 1. 18. In this Wiſdom only there is the choiceſt pleaſure.

(4) It often hurts and hinders men from the ſaving knowledge of God and Chriſt. The wiſeſt men are not alwayes the Diſciples of Chriſt, but many times Enemies to him; the moſt ingenious men have often been the moſt malicious and ingenious Devils. Natural Wiſdom is moſt apt to count Divine Wiſdom fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. 1.21,23. a hatred of Chriſt often perks up under it. The greateſt Philoſophers in the primitive times were the ſharpeſt Enemies to Chriſtianity, and while they were intent upon humane Wiſdom, they counted Divine Revelation no better than a fable, and ſcorn'd to ſit at the feet of Divine Revelation, which agreed not with their own Idoliz'd principles. Unſanctifyed Wiſdom is the Devils greateſt tool. The Serpent was more ſubtle than any Beaſt of the Field, and this Creature is cull'd out by the Devil to be the inſtrument of the firſt ſeduction of mankind. The affectation of a knowledge not due to Adam brought a cloud upon Adam and his Poſterity, and ſeparated him from the knowledge of his Creator which was to be his ſole happineſs. The intent poring upon red hot Iron, or other Mettals, blinds the Eye and hinders it from ſeeing the Sun or any thing elſe by it. Too much intenſeneſs in carnal Wiſdom dims the eye to Spiritual objects. The common people knew Chriſt and thirſted for the knowledge of him, Mark 12. 37. when the intelligent Phariſees were as ſpiritually blind as Bats, and ſo wicked as to boaſt of their unbelieving ignorance, and ſet it as a pattern for the people, John 7. 48, 49. Have any of the Rulers, or of the Phariſees believed on him? But this people who know not the Law, are curſed. Upon which account it is remarkt by the Evangelical Hiſtorian as a matter of aſtoniſhment, that a great number of the Prieſts were obedient to the Faith, Acts 6. 7. 'Tis better to have a little of that knowledge which conducts to a Redeemer, than much of that which puffs up, and makes you ſwell too big for a Mediator.

Well then. Let not other knowledge ſwallow up your purſuits after this. Other knowledge is uſeful, a gift of God, but it is the hand-maid, not the Miſtreſs. It muſt not thruſt out that which is more noble; the light of a Candle equals not that of the Sun. The Angels are not ſaid to bend a look into natural things, though they exactly know the order of them. But it is their employment as well as their happineſs to ſtand before God, to view his face, to enquire into the things of Chriſt. That which Angels moſt affect, ſhould be the affecting object of our Souls: which differ in their ſpiritual nature but little from that of an Angel. Other knowledge will dye with our bodies, this will live with our Souls; that vaniſheth with our breath, and this is perfected in glory. That renders us not happy, it doth not ſatisfie our curioſity, 'tis ſtone in ſtead of bread, it ſtrikes not off one link from the chain of ſpiritual darkneſs in us, 'tis no Fortification againſt Death and Hell. But Divine knowledge ſatisfies our deſires, nouriſhes the Soul, is Bread to our hunger, light to our eyes, muſick to our ears, a cordial to our hearts, and the Womb of it is full of nothing but felicity. In ſhort, it is the light of Life Spiritual, Eternal, the other at beſt but the light of a natural and temporary Life. Let not therefore the itch of our curioſity wherewith Adam hath infected us, ſtop our ears againſt the inſtructions of God. Let none of us for a fading delight loſe that which is ſolid and ſubſtantial. We ſhall be like that perſon, that while he was buſie in contemplating heavenly Bodies, tumbled into a Ditch; and we, while we aim only at skill in other things, fall into an Eternal ignorance of the moſt lovely and neceſſary objects.

II. Information. We ſee here the order of Gods working, If knowledge be a neceſſary ceſſary means. Firſt knowledge, then Grace; firſt knowledge, then that life which is Eternal. No houſe can poſſibly be built without a Foundation; the groundwork firſt, then the ſuperſtructure. Illumination leads the way, and the Inclinations of the Will follow. God doth not Croſs the Natural order of the Faculties in his Operations, tho he doth their Corruption. He leads men by the Cords of a Man, by thoſe Natural Obligations on him, he makes uſe of in his way of working. Expels darkneſs, to make room for Light; opens the Underſtanding, thereby to encline the will; rectifies the prejudicate opinions of God and Chriſt, his ways and Methods. None can be a Prieſt to offer ſpiritual ſacrifices to God, till he be a Prophet to diſcern what is fit to offer to him. An approbation of things that are excellent, and ſincerity in the practice, is founded upon knowledge and judgment, Phil. 1. 9, 10. The new Nature is conveyed by the knowledge of God and Chriſt, Col. 3. 10. As ignorance and error were the Deformity of the old Man, ſo Wiſdom and knowledge are the firſt line in the Beauty of the New. The firſt draught of God is in the mind, and thence terminates in the Will. Nathanael had a falſe notion of Chriſt, he was poſſeſſed with the opinion of the Scribes, the Doctors of the Law, that no Prophet could come out of Nazareth, Joh. 1. 46. That the people of that place were contemptible in the eye of God, becauſe no prophet had riſen from thence, ſince Propheſie was firſt in the Church. But Chriſt acquaints him with ſomething Divine in himſelf by telling him his Motions, what he did under the fig-tree, ver. 48. convinc'd him of the folly of his former Notions, diſcovered to him the Truth of his Prophetical Office, acquaints him with undeniable arguments for his Information; then his Will, and Acknowledgments orderly follow; Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael, ver. 49. None are enlivened, till they be firſt enlightned by Chriſt. He is not life to any without being light in the Mind, Joh. 1. 4. The life was the light of men.

III. Information. The excellency of a true Chriſtian. The beſt Chriſtian is the beſt Scholar: he hath a knowledge in the iſſue, equal to that of Angels, Superior to to that of Devils, more effectual than that of the greateſt Philoſopher, Prov. 17. 27. A man of underſtanding is of an excellent Spirit. The Spirit of the Holy God is in him, and light and excellent Wiſdom. As was ſpoken of Daniel. Dan. 5. 11, 14. 'Tis a light flowing from the fountain of light, a fruit of Divine teaching, and Divine touch; a true light, Joh. 1. 9. More valuable than all the trifling Sceptical knowledge in the World. The meaneſt Believer knows, if not more, yet better than the brighteſt ſtar that fell from Heaven. What others ſee by Candle-light, he ſees by the light of the Sun; what is hidden to others, is open to him; what others have a natural underſtanding of, he hath a ſpiritual, Col. 1. 9. σύνεσι πνευματική. The Publicans who heard the excellent diſcourſes of Chriſt concerning the nature of the Father, and the deſign of his coming into the World, were more excellent than the Phariſees who knew the ſame Divine Revelation, but had no Affection ſtirred in them but that of anger againſt the Publiſher. The ſpiritually knowing Chriſtian can diſcern God in his Word, better than others can in all his Creatures. He practiſeth what he knows. The excellency of a drug lyes not ſo much in its quality, as in the operation of that quality. We meaſure the excellency of things, not by the outward appearance, but the nobleneſs and uſefulneſs of their effects. The Meanneſs of a Chriſtian doth not ſo much diſparage him, as the excellency of Divine knowledge ennobles him. He hath a Soul truly God-like, that knows God with a Conformity to him. The Sun ſhining upon a body, and the body reflecting the beams of the Sun render it lovely, tho' low in it ſelf. The knowledge of a Chriſtian is by inward and cloſe Revelation attended with ſtrong and high reflections. Others know the matter of the Goſpel, a Chriſtian knows the Myſtery of the Goſpel. The ſtrongeſt natural knowledge is not proportionable to Divine things, and therefore renders not the ſoul as excellent as the ſpiritual knowledge of God: the one fits men for converſe with man; the other for Communion with God in this and another World.

IV. Information. How ſad is it for men to abuſe to wrong ends the means of Knowledge, ledge which in it self is Eternal Life. As men turn Grace into wantonness, so they turn Knowledge into Rebellion; as men will run many scores in debt because Grace is free, so some will run more eagerly to sin because they know God is merciful in Christ, and use their knowledge for an encouragement to sin. This is a Monster composed of a Christians head, and a Swines heart; an Angels wings, and a Serpents body. This is like Belshazzar, to quaff Healths in the Vessels of the Temple. To use it well for gracious Ends, is like Solomon, to melt down the Gold of Ophir for the Service of God, and work it into Vessels for the Sanctuary. How many are there that are angry with the knowledge they have, and the means to get more, because they cannot be at ease in their sins? their Lusts are enrag'd, while their Consciences are enlightned. The Devils knowledge is so far from asswaging his Malice, that it encreaseth his Fury. They know God as a Judge, but regard him not as amiable and worthy to be imitated. The knowledge many Philosophers had in the times of the Gospels shine, was so far from enabling them, because of their Corruptions, to see the beauty of those discoveries, that they were rather excited to oppose the Gospel Principles with more stoutness of heart; that it might be truly said of them, as Isa. 47. 10. Their wisdom and their knowledge perverted them. 'Tis base to turn the means of the knowledge of God, into the service of the Devil. 'Tis good when we use them to check us in sin, to wean us from it, and render God more lovely and desirable to our Souls. Gods discoveries of himself are not that he may be abused, but that he may be loved. He shows himself in his Goodness which is his Glory; the end of goodness is to attract our Affections, not to excite our Enmity.

5. Information. If the knowledge of God and Christ be the necessary means to Eternal Life, how deplorable is that want of this necessary knowledge of God, which is among us! How lamentable are the Cataracts bred in the eye of our Understanding by the power of the flesh! * Nicodemus could not understand the first Principles of Christianity, tho' he had been educated in the Church, studied the Law, had an honourable notion of Christ, was affected with his Miracles, and was instructed in the Principles of Christianity by the mouth of Truth it self. How great is our blindness in the things of the Kingdom of God! The knowledge many men have of Christ, is a knowledge of his outside, not of his spiritual Nature and Excellency, so as to relish him. The Notions of the goodness of God, and Salvation by Christ, are transporting Doctrines; men are pleased with them, as Children are with the pictures in a Philosophers book, without studying or knowing any thing of the inward sweetness and learning in it; without prying into, and being savourily affected with the Mysteries of the Gospel. They have a knowledge of God and Christ by report, as Men have of a famous Prince, without any acquaintance, and happy familiarity with him. As defective in this true Knowledge, as a plowman is in the Principles of Astronomy. Most mens lives are a Dream; they profess Religion, account themselves happy in that profession, content themselves with some self-pleasing Fancies and Notions, without distinct enquiries into the Truths of Heaven. How sad is it to have Eyes, and not know the Sun; to have Understandings, and not know that which is only worthy to be known; and not see God, who is as visible by his word and works, as the Sun by its Light! The irrational Creatures outstrip us in the sense of what concerns the good of their Nature; the Crane and swallow, the Ox and Ass are better proficients in the good belonging to their Nature, than corrupted man in what is necessary for his happiness, Jer. 8. 7. Isa. 1. 3.

* Daille sur 3. Jean.

(1.) This ignorance is natural. It was the glory of man in his Creation to have the knowledge of God. The goodness of the Creatures, which God beheld in them after they were formed by him, consisted in their natures and qualities sutable to them. If other Creatures had qualities sutable to their Natures, the noblest Creature could not be defective. If man had been Created with an Ignorance of God, he could not have been good under that which is the Deformity of a Rational nature. But since the Crack by the Fall, there is not a man that by nature understands God or knows him to ſeek him. God in his exact ſearch in the World after its pollution, found not a man but was as ignorant as he was corrupt, Pſal 14. 2, 3. The Lord looked down from heaven upon the Children of Men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand, and ſeek God; and the reſult is, that they were all gone aſide, they were altogether become filthy, not a man that doth good, no not one; not a man without blindneſs in his Underſtanding, as well as filthineſs in his will and practice; which leaſt it ſhould be thought to be meant only of a particular deluge of Corruption peculiar to that age, the Apoſtle expounds it as a charge againſt the whole World, comprehended in Jews and Gentiles, Rom. 3. 9, 10, 11. We are no more born with a ſaving knowledge of God in our heads and hearts, than with a skill in Philoſophy and Mathematicks; no nor ſo much, for we bring into the World a faculty capable of them by ordinary inſtruction, but uncapable of the other without ſpecial Illumination. The eye is born quite blind to ſpiritual, but purblind only to natural Knowledge. 'Tis as poſſible to read the Law in Tables of Stone after they are pounded to duſt, as to read true Notions of God and Chriſt in lapſed nature. This is excellently deſcrib'd by the Apoſtle, Eph. 4. 17, 18. Vanity of the mind, darkneſs in the underſtanding, and blindneſs of the heart: The Eſſential Faculties of the Rational Soul: The Mind, the repoſitory of Principles, the faculty whereby we ſhould judge of things honeſt or diſhoneſt: The Underſtanding, the diſcurſive Faculty and the reducer of thoſe Principles into practical Dictates; that part whereby we reaſon and Collect one thing from another, framing concluſions from the Principles in the Mind: The Heart, i. e. the Will, Conſcience, Affections, which were to apply thoſe Principles, draw out thoſe Reaſonings upon the ſtage of the Life; all corrupted; one vain, the other dark, and the third ſtark blind. * And the moſt ingenious Nations for natural Knowledge and Civil Prudence verifie the Apoſtles Character in their brutiſh actions. The Egyptians, that were men famed for their knowledge, and deriv'd the Sciences to the other parts of the world, were worſe than beaſts in their Worſhip. The Greeks, who counted their Athens the Eye of the World, were not more refin'd, when they ador'd thirty thouſand Gods, and ſome of them infamous for Murder and Adultery, and had three hundred twenty four ſeveral opinions about the chief good. And the Romans, eminent for Civil Prudence, were not much behind them, when they worſhipped a Feaver, and dignified a Strumpet with the Title of the Goddeſs of Flowers. A great Philoſopher among them takes notice of this ignorance of God in the various notions they have of him *. If you ask an Artificer, a Poet, a Philoſopher, a Scythian, a Perſian what God is, you will not find them all of the ſame opinion. Even thoſe among the Heathens, who for Acts of Juſtice and Temperance might put men under the Goſpel to the bluſh, have had a thick darkneſs upon them in regard of God. They ſaw not the bright light which is in the clouds, Job 37. 21. The knowledge of God hath been as much out of their Kenn, as thoſe Moral Virtues were in their practice. And the proneneſs of men to Idolatry in former Ages, while the moſt intelligent Perſons in the Nature and wayes of God were living among them, diſcovers the greatneſs of mens Natural ignorance. The Poſterity of Noah in the world were over-ſpread with it, while Noah, Sem, and Heber the Father of the Hebrews were living among them, from whom they heard other inſtructions. For Noah died in the fifty ſeventh year of Abraham; Sem, and Heber, after Abrahams death; the one thirty five, and the other fifty four years after, as is gathered from Scripture Chronology *, This natural ignorance is in all men by nature. So that Paul had good reaſon to ſay, that the natural man (which ſtate we are all in as we are born) receives not the things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Every Man is born with a Vail upon his heart, and ſpiritual things cannot be diſcern'd by a Faculty ſpiritually deprav'd. This is partial in good Men; they have a light in their Minds, but obſcure. They know but little of God, nor can ever know him to the utmoſt, nor ſearch him out unto perfection, becauſe he is infinite. And this is in ſome more, in ſome leſs, according to the acuteneſs or dulneſs of their natural Capacities, their various diverting Employments and Conditions in the World, or according to the variety of the means of Knowledge, which may be in one place more than in another. Some parts of the World have not the Sun in that beauty and ſtrength, as it is in others. The beſt beſt Chriſtian heart, in compariſon of what it ſhould be, is a land of Darkneſs, not a fully enlightned Goſhen. Since original ſin hath dealt with us, as the Philiſtines with Sampſon, put out our eyes, they are cur'd but partially in this World, the perfection is reſerv'd for another.

(2.) This natural Ignorance among men under the Goſpel, is wilful. Many have no deſire to know what they ought to know of God, that their Conſciences may not preſs them to do what they know. They Hoodwink themſelves, and cloſe their eyes againſt the Light of the Glory of God, that they might not ſee the filthy puddle and hideous deformity of their own hearts. That knowledge which is the ornament of the Soul, they account the Torment of their Conſcience; are wilfully ignorant, that they may be deſtroyed more pleaſantly and with leſs fear. How Epidemick is this? The light ſhines upon the head, yet ſhines into few hearts; is no more regarded by men than Pearl by a Swine. Tis a diſparagement to be ignorant in a mans proper Art; not counted ſo to be defective in this, which is of abſolute neceſſity. Other ignorance is condemn'd, and this affected. The world by wiſdom knew not God, 1 Cor. 1. 21. The Underſtanding and natural Wiſdom is employed in any vile ſervice, rather than enquiries after God; and with more delight entertains a natural diſcovery than a Divine Revelation.

[1.] Men are commonly contrary to it. The imaginations which lift up themſelves againſt the knowledg of Chriſt, are the darlings; a mighty unwillingneſs to have them pull'd down, and raz'd to the ground; 2 Cor. 10. 5, 6. We have not only an ignorance at our birth, but a ſtubbornneſs joyn'd with it; a wild aſſes Colt is the beſt term the Scripture gives us, Job 11. 12. the wild Aſs, is the moſt untam'd and unteachable Creature *. No Beaſt is more brutiſh and ignorant, than a Child at its Birth; nor any wild Creature kicks more againſt the Tamer, than man againſt the Inſtructions of his Creator. The natural notions of God men are not willing naturally to Cheriſh; they would raze out the engraven letters; but ſince they are ſo deeply impreſt, as not to be obliterated, they fill the Characters with dirt, keep them by unrighteouſneſs from being legible; that they may be ſecure in the practice of their unworthy Principles, Rom. 1. 28. They like not to retain God in their knowledge; the beams of an heavenly light are offenſive to men; like wild Beaſts which run from the riſing Sun into their dark dens; a deaf Ear and a ſtout Heart are evident Teſtimonies of an Affection to darkneſs and diſaffection to Light, Joh. 3. 19. There is a natural love to a lye, 2 Theſ. 2. 11. For this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions that they ſhall believe a lye. When God gives men up to a lye, he makes no impreſſion of a lye upon them, as he doth of Truth and Divine knowledge in the illumination of the Spirit; but gives up a man to himſelf, withdraws his light, the natural Conſequence whereof is to run the road of nature, and believe a lye rather than Truth. Since Adam's credulity is the inheritance of his Poſterity, they take God for a Serpent, and the Serpent for a God, and are as unwilling to receive the Sparks of the one, as they are deſirous to entertain the Deceits of the other. Whoſoever hath unworthy and deſpicable thoughts of God, is averſe to any beam that diſcovers him; no man can affect to know that which he doth not value.

* Mercer.

[2.] Men are naturally conceited that they know enough of God. Theſe are two deplorable qualities in man.

(1.) An incapacity to underſtand the Myſteries of God, by reaſon of the dulneſs of the Fleſh.

(2.) An unwillingneſs to confeſs his ignorance, by reaſon of Pride and Conceitedneſs. Man by Birth, is an headſtrong Creature; yet as vain as he is, he would be counted Wiſe, Job 11. 12. Vain man would be wiſe; and that in the things of heaven. Thoſe that know leaſt of God, are tranſported with an overweening conceit that they know moſt, that they know enough and more than enough. As in the ſight of Gods Majeſty we think our ſelves nothing, ſo in the Ignorance of him we think our ſelves more than we are. When ſick men conceit themſelves ſound, they will wilfully refuſe any remedy which may convey health, Joh. 9. 41. Now you ſay, we ſee, therefore your ſin remains. The opinion they had of their knowledge made them wilfully refuſe the Cure of their Ignorance.

[3.] Men are commonly negligent of Knowledge. If there be not a ſenſible contrariety to it, or a fooliſh conceit that they have no need of it; though there be a ſence of the want of it, yet there is a common negligence in ſeeking it, and making due enquiries after God. There is a ſleep and a pleaſure in ſleeping; Men love to ſlumber, Iſa. 56. 10. Thoſe who cannot endure a darkneſs in other things, nor acquieſce in a confus'd knowledge of them without ſearching into their Cauſes, and Reaſons or Effects, are well contented with a weak and languiſhing knowledge of God, quickly tired in their purſuits of him; they look up to the Sun, and preſently take their eyes off again; glance at Spirituals, and fix to Naturals. Where is the man who hath intent thoughts upon his Maker and Redeemer? How little or no time is it that we ſpend daily in viewing his Glories by Meditation? How many riſe, and lye down, without any reflection upon the Author of their lives and motions; and upon the Mediator, who purchas'd thoſe for them after a forfeiture? Are not the ſtupendious works of Creation viſible? the amazing works of Redemption legible? Do not ſparks of his Wiſdom ruſh out of every Creature flying round about us? and yet we are lazy in the improvement of them to attain a further ſight of that God who is the Author of them. Have we not the Sun in the firmament of the Goſpel? but do we caſt our eyes often upon it? Do not little fancies pleaſe us more than ſubſtance? A prodigious ſottiſhneſs poſſeſſes men, under multiplied motives to endeavour after the knowledge of God. How many are there in the World, and in Congregations, that never improve one Sermon to advance in the ſpiritual knowledge of God?

(3.) This wilful Ignorance partly from Contrariety, Conceitedneſs and Negligence is frequent among us. There is among us a common knowledge of God, which prevents the World from being a ſhambles, and preſerves the ſecurity of his people. 'Tis a guard to the true ſeed in the World, as the ſtraw and chaff is to the grain of corn. Abimelechs natural knowledge of God, reſtrain'd his hands from offering violence to Abraham: but ſaving knowledge is a fruit not to be found in every Hedge. The Levity of men in the ways of God is an evidence of it: Like children carried about with every wind of doctrine. As want of ſtrength makes the Bodies, ſo want of Knowledge makes the Minds of Children capable of being moulded into any form. The aſſent is not fully given to Divine Revelations. They may have ſome of the ſeed of the Word in their Affections, when they have little in their judgments. If there were a ſpiritual knowledge of God and Chriſt, why ſhould men be ſo ſoon inveigled with error, and fling off the acknowledgment of thoſe Truths whence they have confeſt they have reaped a Harveſt of Comfort? What is the reaſon evil is ſo often choſen, ſince our Wills naturally are determin'd to nothing but under the notion of good, but the Blindneſs of our Mind? We never chooſe Evil becauſe it is Evil, but becauſe we apprehend it to be Good. Where the Heart is not won to God, the Mind is not enlightned by him. Our little love to him, delight in him, zeal for him, thoughts of him, teſtifie too many dark Clouds between him and our Underſtandings. We have no ſound ſence of his Juſtice, if we tremble not at it; no ſavour of his Holineſs, if we do not ſtrive to imitate it. What tho' we may have a notion of Chriſt Crucified, Riſen, and Aſcended? The Myſtery of Chriſt is vail'd to our eye, if our hearts be ſunk into the World and Luſt: Our darkneſs comprehends not the ſhining light, Joh. 1. 5. It rather ſtifles the notions of God than is diſpers'd by them. How ſoon do we forget what we ſeem'd to know? Our Saviour labour'd to inſtruct his Diſciples during the time of his Life, in the Doctrine of his Death; It leak't out of their Minds, as if they believ'd nothing of his former Declarations, till the appearance of his Perſon was an irrefragable teſtimony of the Truth of his Words. If our knowledge of God were more ſpiritual, the operations of our Souls would be more heavenly. Whoſoever knows him, is ſtill flying towards him; creeping Earth-worms, Lukewarm Laodiceans, Careleſs Gallioes, conceited Phariſees know know little, underſtand leſs, and ſavour nothing of God and Chriſt. Our ignorance of God is too great becauſe our eſtimations of God are too little.

To awaken us againſt a wilful and negligent Ignorance. Conſider,

[1.] 'Tis inconſiſtent with Chriſtianity. He deſerves not the name of a Chriſtian, who wants the neceſſary knowledge of a Chriſtian: He deſerves not the name of a rational and intelligent Creature, who neglects the employment of his Mind about the moſt worthy object. Spiritual ignorance doth as much unchriſtian a man that hath the name of a Chriſtian, as natural folly unmans a perſon that hath the ſhape of a reaſonable Creature. Should we call this a World, if there were no Sun, or a man a man that hath no Eyes in his Head, nor Reaſon in his Mind? It would be a ſhadow of the World, the Ghoſt of a Man. Chriſtianity without knowledge is an appearance and nothing elſe, like the picture of a Man without Reaſon. A true Chriſtian bewails Adams loſs, endeavours to repair it, to get a light reſtor'd to his mind, and a beauty to his Soul. He approves of Adams Sin, that ſits contented in that darkneſs Adam brought upon himſelf and his Poſterity. Can that man be counted a follower of Chriſt, that is pleaſed with the plague of nature, which the light of the Sun comes to ſcatter by his beams? Was any poor Ægyptian at eaſe in the judicial darkneſs, were his groans ſilent, or his deſires weak for the removal of it? Yet how many ſouls capable of an inheritance of light, ſport themſelves in the thick fogs of ſpiritual ignorance? He hath a Pagan Heart under a Chriſtian name, that can talk of the deſign of the new Adam, and yet be pleaſed with the predominant darkneſs and nature of the old. 'Tis againſt the end of the Goſpel; the promiſe concerning the Goſpel times is, That the Earth ſhall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, Iſaiah 11. 9. not full of the ignorance of God. Light, not Darkneſs is the Glory of a Goſpel ſtate. The ignorance of the Apoſtles in the time of Chriſt concerning the nature of his Mediation, the deſign and end of his Death, is intolerable now in any that bear the name of Chriſtians. That was before the Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt, ours after the clear manifeſtation of that which in the time of his Life was obſcure to his Diſciples.

[2.] Ignorance is Satans tool, and chain, whereby he acts men and keeps them in captivity. He obſtructs knowledge, and guides us in Rebellion by ignorance. The knowledge of God opens the ſecrets of Satans Kingdom, and reveals the myſterie of his Government. 'Tis the breaking out of the light of the glory of God in the Goſpel, that makes him fall from Heaven like Lightning, Luke 10. 18. None gratifie Satan ſo much as ignorant perſons. While this chain is upon the greateſt meer Moraliſt, he is as ſure under the conduct of the Devil, as the prophaneſt wretch. He can be content to let men pleaſe themſelves with the ſhadows of vertue, while he can hold them ſure by the chain of darkneſs. He knows he can lead any where thoſe that want eyes to ſee their way. The darkneſs of the mind and the power of Satan are the ſame thing, Act. 26. 18. To turn men from darkneſs to light and from the power of Satan unto God. Whoſoever is poſſeſſed by the one, is not free from the command of the other. Darkneſs chains Satan to puniſhment, and darkneſs chains us to Satan. 'Tis the Devils tool whereby he works in us: He makes a vaſt uſe of it in his motions in the World, and his aſſaults of the Soul, Eph. 6. 12. He is called the Ruler of the darkneſs of this World, of the dark ignorant principles of this World. The darkneſs in the Heart whether total or partial, is the handle to every operation of his upon us, and the thicker that is, the ſtronger ſecond he hath to take his part in all his conteſts againſt our ſpiritual welfare. By our fooliſh principles he makes work in our fiery Paſſions. The more we underſtand of Gods nature and Chriſts Offices, the more we ſhall be able to diſcern his ſubtlety, and prevent or withſtand his attempts, Eph. 6. 14, 15, 17.

[3.] Ignorance of God is the cauſe of all ſin in the World. This is the Fountain of all the ſin that ever was; of the firſt ſin, 2 Cor. 11. 3. Thoſe ſins which are againſt knowledge of a particular precept, are grounded upon an ignorance of the nature of the Law-

Law-giver. Sin springs from an error of imperfection in the understanding. If a false judgment be erected, false orders will be issued, innumerable evils, determinations in the Will and Errors in practise will be the consequents: Wrong notions of God will give birth to foul Evils; a Vertigo or Megrim in the Head causeth irregular and unsteady motions in the Members. Hence it is that the Scripture gives the name of folly to sin, and fools to sinners; to forget God is the character of all wicked men, Psal. 50. 22. Consider this ye that forget God. Sin grows from the root of folly. Why do men give themselves over to commit Lasciviousness with greediness? Because of the blindness of their Hearts, Eph. 4. 18, 19. Why did not the Sadducees Believe the Resurrection? Because they knew not the Scriptures and the power of God, Matth. 22. 29. Why are men corrupt in their wayes? Because they say in their hearts there is no God, Psal. 14. 1. Why did the ungrateful Israelites provoke God in the Wilderness forty years of Mercy together? Because they did err in their Hearts and did not know his ways, Psal. 95. 10. Ignorance of the Glory of God, the nature of sin, and the necessity of proper wayes of expiation, was the cause of the greatest wickedness, that ever was committed in the face of the Sun. The Jews had fram'd a false notion of a carnally victorious and triumphant Messiah, that would make them Conquerours of the World, and therefore Crucifyed the Lord of Glory. This fashions men to Lust, 1 Pet. 1. 14. all wickedness flows out like a Torrent, Hos. 4. 1, 2. (He that doth evil hath not seen God, 3 John 11.) where there are false Conceptions of God, or true notions of him misapplied. The motion will be irregular, when men imagine a careless God or an impure God, that he doth not regard our wayes, is patient without Anger, threatens only to scare, will not damn men to Everlasting Torment for a small crime, his Anger endures not for ever; what will not a man do by those encouragements upon the invitation of a Temptation? When the Gentiles imaginations of God became vain, their practises quickly became abominable, Rom. 1. 21, 24. Mistakes of God and impudence in sin hold one another by the hand. When the mind is corrupt and destitute of the Truth, then break out strife, and envy, and railings, and all the black Regiment of Hell, 1 Tim. 6. 4, 5. No foundation in blindness for any regular walking; hence it is that sins are called works of darkness, but (as some think) never darkness it self, for by that word in Scripture is signified error and ignorance. That which hath no being, can have no operation, that which is not known, can never move the Conscience. If it be not known it is so far a non-entity, a thing of no existence; a man can have no gracious operation, because without knowledge of God he can have no gracious being. 'Tis not so much the pleasure of sin as the ignorance of God, that preserves mens Affections to vile lusts; were the pleasures of sin, like Nebuchadnezzars Furnace seven times hotter, and more sparkling than they are, they could not detain them by their charms, if they had a prospect of the goodness, sweetness, and kindness of God. The beauty of this object would leave in them no Spirit for the other. For when the Soul knows God to be the chief good, and clearly apprehends him under that notion, all the chains of Sin and Satan cannot draw him, nor the allurements of them woo him totally from him. But you may as soon cause an Ass with his heavy limbs to run a race as swiftly as a Stagg, as cause an ignorant person to Repent and come to Christ. You may as well find Reason in a Bat, as Repentance and Faith and spiritual Thirst in an ignorant person. As this is the cause of all sin in the World, so the remainders of it is the cause of all the slips in the best of Gods people, which cost them so many sad groans. As a total blindness endangers a fall into precipices, so a partial blindness exposeth to many stumblings in the way.

[4.] Willful ignorance of God is damning. If the knowledge of God be Eternal Life, Ignorance of God must be Eternal Death. Meer ignorance destroyes as well as disobedience. Vengeance will be render'd on them that know not God, on Heathens that had not a beam of the Gospel, as well as on them that obey not the Gospel revealed to them, 2 Thess. 1. 7, 8. If God hides his Gospel from a man, 'tis a sign of a lost Estate, 2 Cor. 4. 4. If the Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost. Much more when a man hides the Gospel from himself, which is not only a neglect of God but a contempt of Grace. He affects his own damnation, as he affects darkneſs that ſhuts his eyes againſt the Sun, and refuſeth the benefit of the light. If it be damning where the true notions of God and Chriſt are not revealed, 'tis much more when the Revelation of him is rejected or abuſed. There is ſo much of God manifeſted in his works, as renders him in ſome meaſure intelligible, and God hath given them a faculty to know ſomething of him, whereby their neglect renders them alſo inexcuſable. How could a man be inexcuſable that did not ſee the Sun, if he had a negative inability to ſee it? God hath given as much light to men in his works as is due to an intellectual nature, and to this end that men might be inexcuſable, (for ſo thoſe words, Rom. 1. 20. So that they are without excuſe might be more to the deſign of the Apoſtle rendred,) that they might be without excuſe, not noting the event of their neglect, but the deſign of Gods manifeſtation, that if they did neglect it, they ſhould have no ground for an Apology. But where God hath over and above added out of Grace a ſcriptural light, and made the glorious manifeſtation therein plain, and when the Revelation is clearer than that in the Creatures, clearer than that in the Law, which was called night in compariſon of the knowledge in the Goſpel which is called day. (Not that the one was abſolutely dark but in compariſon of the other, as the night is not abſolutely dark becauſe there is a Star-light, or ſome light in the ſky, but much ſhort of the light of the day.) Willful ignorance under ſuch opportunities of knowledge renders men more deplorable than Heathens. Inexcuſable is he that hath ſeen God riding in the Chariot of the Goſpel, and the ſun of Righteouſneſs moving in the Hemiſphere of the Word, and will not behold that ſun by whoſe light he walks upon the Earth and performs his dayly affairs. What can be anſwered when the queſtion ſhall be put, how came you to be ignorant of thoſe things, which have ſo often been inculcated to you? Ignorant of that God in whom you live and move? Ignorant of that God that ſhines in every Plant, evety motion of the Heavens, and clothes himſelf with robes of yet greater glory in his Word? There lies as much an obligation upon us to the knowledge of God, as to univerſal obedience to God. We are bound to enquire after him what he is, what we muſt do to pleaſe him, and how he will be worſhipped. He therefore that is willfully defective in enquiring after God and ſearching into his will, hath no intent univerſally to obey him: If he had, he would take pains to know him and what would pleaſe him, which is neceſſary to a ſtate of Salvation. We know what the fate of thoſe is that have no intention of univerſal obedience: It ſpeaks the heart ſet upon ſin, and a fear of coming to be acquainted with any thing that may hinder them from committing it. A man ignorant of God and Chriſt can no more recover out of his mortal diſeaſe, than a ſick man can without the knowledge of an able Phyſician, and the application of a Sovereign remedy. 'Tis only by the knowledge of Chriſt that we have juſtification from our guilt, Iſaiah 53. 11. No man can be freed from guilt by ignorance; to think to be ſaved by ignorance is the ſame as to imagine to live without a knowledge of Food, and to be happy without acquaintance with the neceſſary means of happineſs. That which is our ſin, can never be our Apology; and being a groſs ſin, is ſo far from excuſing, that it renders it ſelf more grievous, and the condemnation more terrible. And though it be ſaid that Paul obtained mercy, becauſe he did it ignorantly in unbelief, 1 Tim. 1. 13. it will give no comfort to thoſe that are wilfully ignorant, unleſs they can prove that Paul was one of that rank; he did what he did ignorantly, becauſe the Goſpel was never revealed to him till Chriſt reveal'd it from Heaven. 'Tis likely he was furious againſt the Chriſtians by an implicite Faith in the Phariſees determinations, as well as out of a zeal of the Law. By the ſame reaſon that any would palliate their ignorance by this, and imagine a Salvation becauſe of that, they may fancy unbelief alſo to be a cauſe of obtaining mercy, which no man that, owns the Scripture can have any pretence to. To conclude, wilful ignorance of God and Chriſt under the Goſpel doth not procure a ſingle damnation, but one with the moſt terrible circumſtances, a condemning ſentence with Gods mock and laughter, turning his delight and compaſſions to a pleaſure in his vengeance, Prov. 1. 23. &c. Turn you at my Reproof, behold I will pour out my ſpirit upon you, I will make known my words unto you. Becauſe I have called and you refuſed, I have ſtretched out my hand and no man regard-

ed,

II. USE.

Is Comfort of to those who have this saving knowledge of God. Is it not an high satisfaction to be in the light, while many others are in darkness, to have an acquaintance with the Creator and Redeemer, while others have a familiarity only with the Devil? As he that is ignorant of God, is miserable, though skil'd in all natural and moral knowledge, so he is transcendently happy, who knows his Creator, though blockish in all the Arts in the World. If he were possessed with as great a Wisdom as Solomon, he could have no addition to his essential happiness. As the fruition of God in the end is the sole blessedness of a Creature, so the knowledge of God is the sole means to blessedness without any thing else to piece it out. Christ in the Text mentions nothing else in concomitancy with it, This is Life Eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent, this and nothing else, this without any thing besides. Such an one is in union with the highest Truth, he hath a spring of spiritual Life within him, a divine Manna that nourisheth his Soul to Everlasting Life. 'Tis a comfort that God hath fixed the fitness of the Soul to enjoy him, not in a natural strength of the understanding, but in an affectionate knowledge of him, a qualification all are capable of. If only wise men and men eminent for speculation were capacitated for Eternal Life, how few would God have to know him or enjoy him? But the meanest man that hath neither opportunity nor capacity for an elevated Contemplation of God, may attain this spiritual knowledge and an elevation of affection to him.

(1.) Such an one knows more than all the carnal World besides. What the World knows of God is by a common illumination, as Christ is the light which enlightneth every man that comes into the World, and by the largeness of a natural capacity; but what a Christian knows of God is by a Divine infusion, strait union, by a particular act of God, making Christ Wisdom to him, 1 Cor. 1. 30. He knows him not only by a natural instinct as the World doth, and as beasts know their proper food and what is convenient for them, but by a special Revelation, an inshining, a choice favour not indulged to every one, to you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven, but to them it is not given, Matth. 13. 11. a gift out of his secret Cabinet, not out of his common Exchequer. How comfortable was it to the Shepherds to have the Revelation of the birth of Christ, which was concealed from the Pharisees and Grandees of the Jews! God darts out a Divine light upon whom he pleaseth, he refresheth babes with his beams, while he leaves the wise and prudent with their blind Eyes in the dark. Poor Fishermen had this privilege, which was denyed to the towring Philosophers of the World. And almost all the Revelations of Christ there were among the Heathens, were communicated to the weaker Sex, some Women called Sybills who had a Prophetick spirit of those things; some of their Propheſies are true, though not all true which is inserted in their Oracles; they knew more than all the rest of the World. The eye is a little member, but it views at once the whole surface of Heaven within its reach; a little saving light from God gives a man a prospect of such glorious things, which reason cannot reach, a little spiritual light with the constant assistance of the Spirit, shall behold more of God than the biggest intellect without it, as a little eye with a multitude of sparkling spirits shall see further and clearer than a greater without that assistance. Many men of the deepest insight and quickest parts are furthest from the knowledge of God.

(2.) Tis an evidence of Grace to have a transforming, affectionate knowledge of God and Christ. No wicked man doth understand, Dan. 12. 10. i. e. experimentally, affectionately, transformingly. Ignorance is a sign of gracelessness, spiritual knowledge is a fruit of the spirit, and a sign of all the other fruits of it; for it is a Covenant Mercy, and flows from Gods being our God, and it is a fruit of the Grace of God given us in Christ to be inricht with it, 1 Cor. 1. 4, 5. The clearness of the Churches eyes, like the Fish pools of Heshbon, in the apprehension of spiritual mysteries

Myſteries, is part of her beauty in the ſummary deſcription of it, Cant. 7. 4. The eyes are the Organs of ſight, and the inſtruments of knowledge which convey objects to the Underſtanding, 'Tis a ſign of a mans being in Covenant with God, to have an Heart to know him, Jer. 24. 7. Heb. 8. 11. I will give them an heart to know me, and they ſhall be my people, and I will be their God, I will put my law into their Mind. The great promiſe of the new Covenant was, that they ſhould know God better than under all the rudiments of the Law; a knowing God by a law in the Heart, as well as by a notion in the Head; for the Law written in the Heart, is a reaſon rendred why they ſhould know God. He ſpeaks not of a knowledge that lyes in the common field, but a knowledge hedged in, and peculiar to the Covenant Children of God, the Heirs of Heaven, and brethren of one Family, not to all that bear the Name of Chriſtians; for 'tis ſuch a knowledge as is accompanied with Sanctification of the Heart, Heb. 8. 10. and Juſtification of the Perſon, ver. 12. For I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins and iniquities I will remember no more. Where this Knowledge is, it is a ſign of the ſpecial favour of God, ſince it is a gift only in his own power, (God doth not uſe ſo ſolemnly to promiſe that, which is within our common reach) and is convey'd by a ſpecial act of the Spirit. It being a Covenant Mercy, it is a Cabinet Mercy. Men without it are in the Chains of Darkneſs and the Devil; thoſe that have it, are freed from the Devils Yoke. What a Comfortable thing is it, to be within the Arms of the Everlaſting Covenant? Where Covenant Graces are beſtowed, all Covenant Bleſſings will of right follow.

(3.) What Comfort may ſuch have in all kind of Afflictions? This, like Musk, will perfume the moſt lothſom dungeon. We have enough if we have this ſpiritual knowledge of God, though we want all things elſe. Death cannot be dreadful, when Chriſt is known and felt in the power of his Grace. The view of Chriſt rais'd the heart of Stephen above fears and anguiſh, when ſtones were ready to break in pieces the caſe of his Body, Act. 7. 55. 56. He ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God. This knowledge is the ſtrongeſt Cordial: the ſweetneſs of this ſurmounts the bitterneſs of the other. When the Sun is clearly ſeen, the high Winds do rarely trouble the Mariner. In death we need the greateſt ſupports, and what greater than to conſider you are going to one you know? Though you change your place, yet not your acquaintance; you paſs to a ſtrange Country, but not to new Company. And indeed Afflictions are ſo far from being ground of diſcomforts, that they are rather Cordials in the iſſue, becauſe they advance us more degrees in this knowledge which is the means of Eternal Life. We often learn more of God under the Rod that ſtrikes us, than under the ſtaff that comforts us, Pſal. 119. 71. 'Tis good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy Statutes; the law of thy mouth is better unto me than thouſands of Gold and Silver. If the Sun ſhould perpetually ſhine in our Hemiſphere, how could we underſtand Gods work-manſhip in thoſe little ſpangles of the Heavens? Though the Night hide from us the beauty of the Sun, yet it diſcovers the brightneſs and motions of the Stars. God had not been at all diſcover'd to us without the bleeding Afflictions of Chriſt; nor is not fully learned of us without our own. Daniel was in Captivity, when he had the moſt perſpicuous viſions of Chriſt. John in Exile in Patmos, when he had the Revelation of Chriſt's Walk among the Candleſticks, and the Methods of God in the Affairs of the Church: And Paul mounts up in choicer apprehenſions of Spiritual Objects, as upon Eagles wings in his Epiſtles to the Epheſians, Philippians, Coloſſians, which were writ when he was in Bonds at Rome for Chriſt, wherein appears an higher flight, a ſtronger Ardor, a more Divine Efficacy of Spirit in him. This ſpiritual knowledge of God and Chriſt, prepares us for Afflictions, Comforts us in them, and is enlarg'd by them.

(4.) Comfort in the meaſures and degrees of knowledge. 'Tis Eternal life to know God and Jeſus Chriſt; Chriſt regards the quality, not the quantity. The Diſciples who were preſent with Chriſt in this prayer, and of whom he acquaints his Father that they had known him, had but little knowledge, yet it was true and ſound, though not in ſuch great meaſures as afterwards. Not that this ſhould be encouragement to lazyneſs; for the ſmall meaſures in them before the death of Chriſt, are inexcuſable now under greater means than they had before the coming of the Spirit upon them after the Redeemers Death and Reſurrection. All believers have not the ſame meaſure of Knowledge, yet all have the Truth of it; there are degrees of Knowledge, as there are of Grace; God diſtributes the knowledge of himſelf according to the nature of the ſeveral ſubjects, as the Sun doth light to the ſtars according to their ſeveral Capacities. All the Apoſtles in the time of Chriſts being in the World, had not the ſame meaſure, and clearneſs of inſight. Peter confeſſeth him to be the Son of God, when the reſt were ſilent; and none after ſeems to have the knowledge of Chriſt and his Myſteries, in the ſame elevation with Paul; yet all had a ſufficiency of knowledge both for themſelves and others. Nay, believers themſelves have not at all times the ſame ſparkling meaſures of light; As the Sun ſhines clearer in ſome parts of the day than in others, yet in every part of the day there is Light enough for men to perform their affairs by. Look to the quality of your Knowledge, that it be Sound, Spiritual, Transforming, as well as to the quantity. See what ſavour attends it, what affections it engenders; not what ſpeculations it raiſeth. A great heat with a little light, is better than a clear light with an hard Froſt, and benummed limbs. The ſpiritual eye, as well as the natural, is open'd by degrees. Bleſs God for what you find; reſt not in twilight, but long for ſtronger beams. Look to God for light, Pſal. 34. 5. They looked to him and were lightned. Look not to Moſes and the Prophets, but as the means; Look to Chriſt, who is the Light that enlightens every man that comes into the World. The more caſts of our Eye upon him by Faith, the fuller of beams ſhall we take them off. A look towards him attracts light from him, a look towards the Sun clears all things about us.

(5.) And let me add, That 'tis the office of Chriſt in heaven to pity us, and relieve us in our bewail'd ignorance. He that prayed thus, and aſſerts the Knowledge of God and of himſelf to be Eternal Life, is ordain'd by God an high Prieſt, to have compaſſion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way, Heb. 5. 1, 2. As he pities his people under the remainders of ſin, ſo under the remainders of darkneſs the Cauſe of the other. 'Tis one of the greateſt troubles of a gracious Soul, that he knows no clearer; and the Mediators ſtrongeſt compaſſions are exercis'd about that which is his peoples urgent diſtreſs. What hath Chriſt Compaſſions for, but to exert upon their greateſt perplexity? What uſe were they for, if the proper object of them be neglected? He hath all his Offices to remove the fruits of our Fall. The darkneſs of the Mind was the firſt, and the cauſe of all the Miſchiefs ſince. If the craz'd underſtanding be not cur'd, no ſaving work can have its full effect. This being the root of our miſery, is the firſt proper object of our Saviours Compaſſions. His Compaſſions are his qualification for every Office: were he not compaſſionate, his Royalty would rather be a Tyranny, his Prieſthood an empty Title, his Prophetical Office an idle name. As he pleads againſt the guilt of ſin, which as a Prieſt he hath expiated; as he pleads againſt the power of ſin, which as a King he hath broken; ſo he pleads againſt the remaining ignorance of the Soul, which as a Prophet he is expelling. As it was his buſineſs at the firſt to declare God, ſo it is ſtill his employment more fully to diſcover him. As he owns the gift of his Fathers power in the Text, to ſpread this knowledge; ſo he promiſeth in the ſame prayer to be faithful in his Office, Joh. 17. 26. I have declared thy name and will declare it. He was the light of men, not only at his incarnation, but before; no age or period of time was there, wherein he ſcatter'd not ſome illumination in the World. He was the light of men, Joh. 1. 4. and lighted every man that came into the world, Joh. 1. 9. Nor is leſs pitiful to mens Ignorance, and induſtrious to remove the continuing ſhadows in the hearts of his people, than he was before. As he is the Author of their knowledge, as well as their Faith; ſo he will be the finiſher of the one, as well as the other. He is a Sun of Righteouſneſs, and is to do ſpiritually, what the Sun doth naturally, ſend forth his light to diſperſe the darkneſs, and his influence to heal the barrenneſs of the Soul. The natural Sun indeed pierceth by its influence the obſcure bowels of the Earth, which by reaſon of their thickneſs, obſtruct the entrance of his beams: But the Sun of Righteouſneſs beſtows not his influence without his Light. He is firſt a Prophet to enlighten, before he is a Spirit to quicken, in the firſt work. He is the ſame in the progreſs; as we cannot have ſpiritual Life before Light, ſo we cannot have an encreaſe of ſpiritual Life, without an encreaſe of ſpiritual Light; and to this purpoſe he took our Nature, that he might pity and remove our darkneſs. Is not this a Comfort to have the glaſs of his Word below, wherein to ſee him; a Spirit within, to wipe and clear our eyes; and an High Prieſt above, to exerciſe his Compaſſions towards us upon this very Account?

(6.) The ſaving knowledge of God any have, is an evidence of a future ſtate, of a happy viſion, and an earneſt of their arrival to it. Since it is the means of Eternal life, there muſt be an Eternal Life, the iſſue of this knowledge. Of what uſe are means that are without an end? ſince nothing can ſatisfie the ſoul here, nor can our Souls with a perfect contentment know God, through the Grates and Lattices of a dark body, with the ſcales and ſhades upon the Mind; there muſt be a time wherein a glorious Liberty from Priſon ſhall be conferr'd, Rom. 8. 21. the ſhadows fly away and a contenting Viſion be beſtow'd upon a longing Heart, otherwiſe the Soul could not have an happy and ſatisfactory Eternal Life. Not to have ſuch a knowledge as to ſatisfie the full deſires, would be half an Eternal Death; not anſwering the vaſtneſs of the power the Father beſtowed upon the Son for the conferring it, nor anſwering the Compaſſions of the Son to the ignorant in removing the hinderances. Beſides, the more knowledge there is here, the hotter the thirſt for more. As God is the Author of thoſe ſparks we have, ſo he is the Author of that heat which ariſeth in the Soul by thoſe ſparks. It cannot be ſuppos'd that a God of Infinite Goodneſs, who created Man for the fruition of himſelf, and after he was dead in ſin reviv'd him, and planted in him quick and ardent deſires for himſelf, ſhould do this without deſigning a full ſatisfaction to him, which never any of the choiceſt ſpirits had in this World, and therefore muſt be in another. Where do you find any bleſſed Soul at reſt here? David is ſtill upon purſuit after a ſight of the glory of God; Paul ſtill reacheth forward to the things before, and breathes after a full apprehenſion, putting up Petitions for all whom he had the Care of, and Affection to, that they might be enricht with all knowledge, underſtand the riches of Glory, be filled with all Wiſdom. Doth it conſiſt with ſuch a watchful, ſincere, and unſpotted Goodneſs of God, to raiſe and continue ſuch inclinations in his Creatures, to encourage and influence them, and never to render them compleatly ſatisfied? Shall God thus let any Soul that hath had a glimpſe of him, lye groveling, and panting, without reaching out his hand to lift him up, and unvailing his face in time to him to behold his Glory? Annihilation had been better than boundleſs deſires, Eternally unſatisfied, and Eternally languiſhing. The Underſtanding, the nobleſt Faculty, firſt ſeiz'd upon by God, will not always want the nobleſt contentment in the view of its proper Object. The Sun communicates not it ſelf to the Air, but by the enlightning of it. God is the Father of Glory, as well as of Grace; and is a Father of Grace, in order to his being a Father of Glory. God doth not deſign to mock his Creatures, or to defeat the deſires of his own exciting. Tis in point of Knowledge, as well as other things, that God is our God, Jer. 24. 7. He will one day be our God in the higheſt perfection of all the fruits of the Covenant, ſo that ignorance as well as ſin and infirmity ſhall be chas'd far from us. The Covenant will want its full accompliſhment, till the dimm knowledge of God be drown'd in a perfect and clear Viſion: and ſince the ſhadowy light we have, is ſo delightful, how raviſhing muſt that be, which ſhall diſcover God in his full Glory! If the Earneſt be ſo pleaſing, how delightful ſhall be the full payment, ſince an Earneſt is the leaſt part of the ſum contracted for!

(7.) Where God doth communicate the knowledge of himſelf, and his Son, he will not hide from gracious Souls any other knowledge neceſſary for them in the World. The giving the greater, is an aſſurance the leſs ſhall not be with-held which may further them in that which is the principal End. Yea he ſometimes reveals his ſecret purpoſes to them concerning his tranſactions in the World. God would not conceal from Abraham his determination concerning Sodom, becauſe he had been acquainted with the grand ſecret of his Mercy in the Meſſiah, Gen. 18. 17, 18. Shall I hide from Abraham the thing which I do, ſeeing that all the Nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed in him? Have I manifeſted my gracious purpoſe to reſtore Mankind to my favour, and the means how I will do it, which the heart of man could never think of, and ſo many hundred years are to run out before it be accompliſht, and ſhall I make a difficulty to acquaint him with my intended judgment upon Sodom? God often gives thoſe that know him, a ſenſe and ſight of judgments he intends to bring upon a people. Who is wiſe and he ſhall underſtand thoſe things? Hoſ. 14. 9. Both the threatnings and promiſes contain'd in that propheſie.

III. USE. Of Exhortation.

1. Try your ſelves whether you have the knowledge of God or no; Try it not ſo much by the Notions you have of God and his Truth, as by the Operations of it, and the draught of the Perfections of God in your own Souls. The greateſt Heads have often had the worſt hearts. Chriſt had not more deſperate Enemies in the whole World than the intelligent Phariſees, the Jewiſh Doctors who had the law at their fingers ends. See whether we have a tranſcript of God and Chriſt in our own Souls. When we caſt our eyes upon God, let us reflect upon our ſelves, and ſee whether the Temper of our hearts, anſwer the notions in our heads. Can any man ſay, I know God to be Merciful, and I have an imitation of it; God is Holy, and I have a draught of it; God is Omniſcient, and I have a deep ſenſe of it in my actions; God hath a Soveraign Dominion, and I have an obedient frame; God is true in his Word, and I have a ſincerity anſwering to Divine Truth; a Faith in his Promiſes, a fear of his Threatnings; there are ſome Lineaments in my heart, anſwering in ſome meaſure to the Perfections of my Creator? And can any man conſider Chriſt as obedient to the Will of God, and ſee a Conformity in himſelf to that Heavenly Image? I know Chriſt felt the ſting of death for ſin, and I feel the power of that death breaking my ſin, and ſinful heart; Chriſt had an happy Reſurrection, and I feel the bleſſed fruit and influence of it, in raiſing my Soul to a newneſs of life; this is only the true knowledge of God and Chriſt which ſinks down in Affection, and expreſſeth it ſelf in imitation. Conclude not of your ſelves by ſome fleſhly apprehenſions of ſome pleaſing Doctrine of Chriſtianity, as notions of the Mercy of God, juſtification by Chriſt, freeneſs of Grace. An intent ſpeculation of ſuch things may force men into a Rapture by the ſtrength of a ſprightly imagination, without the inward living ſpirit of him in the heart. This is ſuch a knowledge, as the craz'd fancy of a Mad man may have of Wealth and Palaces, who hath neither a peny in his purſe, nor a houſe for his head. The Trial of our ſelves is by a thirſt for the performing of the will of God, a motion in his Wayes, ſenſe of his Greatneſs, Embraces of his Grace and Dictates, and ſpiritual Affections to himſelf and his Laws. There is as vaſt a difference between the knowledge of God in the Letter, and that in the Spirit, as there is between the Statue of an Angel with his Wings, and a real Angel in Heaven. A knowledge in the Head is as mony in the Purſe, a knowledge in the heart is as mony for our uſe. Nor let us conclude by the delight we have in ſpeculations; there is a ſecret joy in the Contemplation of any truth of a lower ſize, much more in the ſpeculation of the higheſt, nobleſt and firmeſt Truth: The notion may be delightful, when a conformity is unpleaſant. We may affect the accompliſhment of our Minds, without any endeavouring to better our hearts. Speculation is an employment of Wit, but the ſpiritual knowledge is a conjunction of heart to God and Chriſt. We may value a Meditation of him, when the conformity to him may be of as little eſteem with us as the ſtraw and dirt we tread under our feet. The Underſtanding and Will are two diſtinct faculties; have diſtinct operations; the acting of the one, doth not alwayes infer the acting of the other; we may delight to look upon that we would not feed on. Yet true knowledge is alwayes attended with a delight; When wiſdom enters into thy heart and knowledge is pleaſant to thy Soul, Prov. 2. 10.

the more innate light there is in the eye, the more the eye delights in the beams which from without ſtrike upon it: the more darkneſs in the eye, the leſs pleaſure in the Sun-ſhine. He that loves his luſts, hates the light which diſcovers their ugline ſs, he that loves, God loves the light which diſcovers his beauty. True knowledge is always accompanied with more ardent deſires to know. One ignorant of God deſires not to know him, that he may ſin with the leſs rebuke and periſh with the leſs fear. 'Tis a ſign the Soul hath taſted of Divine ſweetneſs, when it longs for greater communications; 'tis ſo far from aſſwaging, that it quickens the appetite. Moſes was Maſter of the Ægyptian Learning, but ſet not up his reſt in that. He had more acquaintance with God than any man in the World, yet after he had been diſcourſing with God in the Mount, he is an earneſt Petitioner for more diſcoveries, Exod. 33. 13. I beſeech thee ſhow me thy Glory. That is no true knowledg of God that ſurfets and clogs the Soul. Thoſe heavy Spirits that are ſcarce Maſters of a groan for it, never underſtood the excellency of it. Not to deſire to know him is to contemn him, and he that undervalues him, never had any underſtanding of him.

2. Reſt not in a diſcurſive underſtanding of God. The underſtanding in a ſtate of innocency with its full ſtock did not preſerve the will from a deſtructive obedience to the ſenſitive appetite, when it was wholly freed from thoſe ill byaſſes which make its motions irregular now: meer knowledge now cannot be forcible enough to prevail with the will under the power of thoſe ill habits, which imperiouſly Tyrannize over it. The Eye and Hand of a man can never caſt a boul right, which hath a falſe byas diſproportioned to the aim of him that uſeth it; the reaſon of the caſter cannot make it move, but according to its falſe byas. Till the wrong inclination of the Will be diſplac'd, it will not come under the guidance of the underſtanding, though it were as ſtrongly enlightned as the higheſt Angel. It will move according to its natural impetus and habit, notwithſtanding all that light in the mind, as ſelf-will acts the Devil againſt God contrary to all the light in his underſtanding. No intellectual act, abſtractedly conſider'd, can be a gracious action; all acts in the underſtanding receive their gracefulneſs and beauty by the termination of them in a God-like act of the will, which is the proper ſeat of Grace. We come to enjoy God not only by an act of our underſtanding but by an act of our will. A glorified Saint, no nor the humane nature of Chriſt, is not happy ſo much by a proſpect of God, as by an intenſe affection to him. God ſtands not ſo much upon our knowledge of him, as our delight in him, and it is no ſign of our union with God, unleſs affection to him be joyned with it. All rational Creatures affect knowledge in order to ſome good; the deſires of good are more ſettled, and are more the fruits of a natural inſtinct than deſires for knowledg: This therefore cannot give a compleat ſatisfaction without a taſt of his goodneſs. If we deſire knowledg only for the ſake of knowledge, we thwart the nature and natural motions of our Souls. 'Tis not the perfection of the underſtanding without the purity of the Heart, which brings us to enjoy God, Mat. 5. 8. Impure Creatures with the higheſt intellectuals cannot look upon him. The Glory of Chriſt was to do the will of God, his knowledge of him was in order to obey him. Get a freſher experience therefore of every Truth of God which you know; this is the ballaſt of the Soul; the other is but a vaniſhing ſound. Improve your knowledge. * In knowing God we receive only from him, in loving him we give our ſelves and all that we have to him, and God beſtows himſelf rather upon them that love him, than upon thoſe that only know him; as it is worſe to hate God than to be ignorant of him, ſo it is better to love God than meerly to underſtand him. We may uſe our ſpeculations to pride, but we cannot make ill uſe of our Holy affections. By loving we make a larger progreſs in a little time, love doth more firmly knit us to God than knowledge, for the ſtrength of knowledge conſiſts in diſcerning, the ſtrength of love in union. By contemplating God we contract, as it were, his infiniteneſs according to the capacity of our Conceptions, by loving him we enlarge our minds to the immenſe latitude of his Divine goodneſs. By knowing him we do as it were bring him down to us, by loving him we lift up our ſelves to him. We know only ſo much as we can can receive and are capable of, but we love not only what we ſee, but what we imagine there is of goodneſs beyond our ſight. We ſee the Divine excellency obſcurely, but we may love it intenſly, we ſee little,but we may love much. Knowledge gives us a ſight and love gives us a poſſeſſion, we find him by knowledge but we enjoy him by love. Let us improve our knowledge of him for enflaming our affections to him, that we may be prepar'd for the Glory of our Eternal Life. The underſtanding is but the door of the Heart; to let God and Chriſt ſtick there, and not bring them into the Heart, is to give a cold entertainment to that which deſerves the beſt.

3. Prepare and wait and long for Heaven. We have but a glimpſe here of the excellency of God and Beauty of Chriſt. The Churches Eyes though clear as Doves, are within her locks, Cant. 4. 1. a fair Eye of Faith, but ſtill ſome obſtructions to a full ſight. The light now ſhines in a dark place, it ſhall ſhine there without a ſpot of darkneſs; that which is in part ſhall give place to that which is perfect; the light of God ſhall dart immediately upon the Soul without reflection from a glaſs, all ſhall meet in the unity of the knowledge of the Son of God, as well as in the unity of Faith, Eph. 4. 13. The motions of the body ſhall not obſtruct the operations of the Soul: there will be light without darkneſs, knowledge without ignorance, clearneſs without dimneſs; No turbulent affections ſhall confound the eye,nor diſtractions divert the Soul. We ſhall know as we are known, 1 Cor. 13. 12. Every gracious Soul is perfectly known by God here, i. e. accepted by him, but is not fully illuminated by him; but there will be as perfect an illumination from him, as there is an acceptation with him. The thick ſcales ſhall for ever fall off from the eye,and the dark vail from the Heart,that it may behold without weakneſs and winking. As the moſt excellent object ſhall be preſented,ſo it ſhall be beheld in the moſt excellent manner, the ſpiritual eye ſhall be fortified, and the divine Glory ſhall be unclouded, and the pleaſure of ſeeing ſhall be as great as that of enjoying. The cleareſt knowledge here is unconceivably ſhort of that above, as the ſight of a ſore eye is of that of an Eagle. The chains of ſpiritual ſloth ſhall be knockt off, the diverſions of Worldly objects ſhall have an Eternal remove. Ignorance within ſhall periſh, and darkneſs without ſhall vaniſh. Here the Soul ſees what God is not, there it ſhall ſee him as he is to be ſeen. Surely thoſe that thirſt not for this ſtate, that prepare not themſelves for it, that long not for the paſſing away of thoſe gloomy ſhades, that they may ſatisfie themſelves with full viſions and full affections, and according to their meaſures prepare themſelves by diligent enquiries, and affectionate motions, never yet had any taſt of the moſt deſirable object.

4. Therefore dayly endeavour to encreaſe in the knowledge of God. Our main work in the World is to encreaſe in the knowledge of ſin, that we may more vehemently deteſt it; and the knowledge of God, that we may more cloſely embrace him and reſign up our ſelves to him. Paul who was advanc'd to a higher ſtep in this than any in the World, had taken up a ſettled reſolution to know nothing but Chriſt and him Crucifyed, as the moſt excellent knowledge he could buſie himſelf in, 1 Cor. 2. 2. and would neglect no means to grow up in the apprehenſions of him of whom he was apprehended, Phil. 3. 12, 'Tis not ſaid we muſt follow on to know for ſuch a time, Hoſ. 6. 3. No time is fixed and therefore it muſt be continually. We ſhould quicken any Divine ſpark in our Souls *. If the firſt beams of ſpiritual light give life, the further encreaſe more abundantly increaſeth that Life; it being Eternal Life, we are neareſt to Life when we riſe higheſt in knowledge. If the mind be opened, it can no more take pleaſure in a little knowledge, than the eye of the body can in a little Light, by which it delights it ſelf in any viſible object. It can take no pleaſure in a little, but as it is a preſage of more approaching. He therefore that ſaith he knows as much of God and Chriſt as can be known, never underſtood the depth of his own natural ignorance, the immenſity of God, the dimenſions of the love of Chriſt, and the nature and unweariedneſs of the Spirits teaching. Should all men in the World engage in no other ſtudy but this of God and Chriſt to the Worlds end, they would confeſs that that which they know know, is unconceiveably short of that which they are ignorant of. It cannot be so great but it is still capable of a further encrease, like a River that is not so big but it may swell higher, and larger, by the admission of lesser Rivulets. There is a ripe age, a manly stature in understanding which we must aim at, 1 Cor. 14. 20. Be not Children in understanding. The Apostle who had the fullest insight into the nature of God and Offices of Christ, puts himself into the number of them that knew but in part, 1 Cor. 13. 12. I know but in part. And therefore as we desire to be as Angels in Glory, we should endeavour to imitate the Angels in their acute search into the mysteries of Christ, and Wisdom of God in him; * they know much yet desire to know more, 1 Pet. 1. 12. The Truth is, as Adam offended in endeavouring to know more than he should, we offend in neglecting to know so much as we may: Our first Parents would know too much, and their Children too little, though there be unsearchable Riches of Christ to be searched into, Eph. 3. 8.

* Eph. 3. 10. ἵνα νῦν γνωρισθῇ ταῖς ἀρχαῖς τῆς θείας γνώσεως. Clem. Alexandr. Barlow on Tim. part. 2. p. 51.

(1.) There can be no growth in Grace without an encrease in the knowledge of God. God is the object of Grace, the object must be known before any act about it can be exercised, and as the object is cleared, the acts about it are more vigorous. There may be indeed a knowledg without Grace; but there can be no encrease of Grace without an increase of knowledge, as the heat of the Fire cannot be made more intense without a supply of Fuel. There may be slight Affections up and down, rovings, like those of a Ship without ballast tost by the Waves, but making no way. Knowledge hath Faith in its root, and all other Graces for its Fruit, 2 Pet. 1. 5, 6, 7. Add to your Faith vertue, and to vertue knowledge, then follows Temperance, Patience, Godliness, Charity. As the root is strengthned, the branch spreads it self, and the Fruits grow thicker. The knowledge of the Word is the entrance of Life, the means of begetting is the means of nourishing the Soul to Eternal Life. If the stock decays, the Fruits which grow from it cannot flourish. The encrease of it was as much the subject of the Apostles prayer for the Colossians, as the first fulness of it in them, and that with respect to their fruitfulness which depended on it, Col. 1. 9, 10. We cease not to pray for you, and to desire that you may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all Wisdom and Spiritual understanding, That you might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work; and as a means to it he adds, increasing in the knowledge of God.

(2.) 'Tis not likely there can be any other fruit than that of Apostacy, without increasing in the knowledge of God. If knowledge be not improv'd, it will decay. Evil men wax worse and worse, 2 Tim. 3. 13. As some lust is the cause why men desire not the rudiments of knowledge, so some lust is the cause why men desire not the improvement of knowledge, and this will be like a Thief in the candle of the Lord, making it sweal away, like a deluge of water extinguishing the Fire; If God opens the floudgate of corrupt affections, the floud will quench those sparks which seem'd to be spiritual, as well as it did those natural sparks in those the Apostle speaks of, Rom. 1. 26. The ground that is bad of it self, when overflowed with salt waters is much worse, and cannot bring forth what it did before. A stop in knowledg, though a man be acquainted with the first principles, is the first inlet to Apostacy according to the Apostles intimation, Heb. 6, 1, 2. After he had checked them in the former chapter for sticking in the first principles of Christianity, and exhorted them in this chapter to proceed further in the knowledge of the mysteries of Religion, he immediately subjoyns the Doctrine of Apostacy, For it is impossible for those that were once enlightned, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, v. 4. &c. If you grow not to a greater maturity in knowledge, you are in danger of returning, not only to your former ignorance, but more corrupt affections. If they took up their station in the first principles, they could not pass on to perfection, and this is an evidence that they were going back, and distasting those first Rudiments which they had learn'd and embrac'd. This is evident in Natural and Civil Affairs; the Tree that doth not thrive will soon rot, and the Tradesman that doth not encrease his stock will soon be out at heels, and he that doth not improve his knowledge will prove a spiritual bankrupt. And such a wilful darkness which men bring upon themselves by their perversity, is but one step from destruction. The Plague of darkness upon the the Ægyptians did immediately preceede the ſlaying of their firſt born, and the deſtruction of the flower of their Militia in the Red Sea. Increaſe therefore in the knowledge of God is the way to prevent backſlidings. Weak bodies ſoon ſtumble, when ſtrong bodies walk and do not faint, but hold out to the laſt. To increaſe in Affections is to increaſe in heat and vigor, to increaſe in ſpiritual underſtanding is to increaſe in ſtrength, which conſiſts in a compactneſs and cloſeneſs of the joynts, which is the ſtrength, health, and ſtability of the body. A River enlarged by the entertainment of many little ſtreams is not dryed up ſo ſoon as a ſmall ſtream.

(3.) Every degree of increaſed knowledge will be more ſatisfying and raviſhing. As it was in the Feaſt where Chriſt was, the beſt Wine was reſerv'd for the end of it; the knowledge of God behind is to that which we have, as a full draught of precious liquor is to a taſt or ſip. The clearer our light, the ſtronger our Comfort. All doubts ariſe from the weakneſs of judgment, ignorance of the nature of God, the Offices of Chriſt, and tenure of the Covenant. This is promiſed Hoſ. 6. 3. We ſhall know, we ſhall follow on to know the Lord. i. e. according to the Hebrew Idiom, we ſhall knowingly follow on after the knowledge of God, or go from knowledge to knowledge. We ſhall have his aſſiſtance, who is prepar'd and ready to break out upon us as a morning light refreſhing and growing ſtronger every hour, with new manifeſtations and a lively heat, and like a former and latter Rain, as freſh ſhowers in the ſpring to draw out the flowers and beauty of the Earth, and the latter Rain in Autumn to ripen to an Harveſt. By Rain in Scripture is ſignifyed knowledge, Deut. 32. 2. My Doctrine ſhall drop as the Rain. The firſt beam is admirable, 'tis a marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9. It diſcovers things worthy the ſearch, and is more ſurprizing upon every enquiry. God and Chriſt are infinite Treaſures, inexhauſtible Fountains, a Mine which upon every ſearch preſents with new Riches. God alwayes remains intelligible, and upon a faithful ſearch will every day tear off part of the vail from the Heart, and part of the vail from his own face, and ſend forth richer influences of Life and Joy.

Well then let us increaſe in this knowledge.

[1.] Let us endeavour to enlarge our faculty. Eye ſalve is to be procured to make us quick ſighted, Revel. 3. 18. The mouth opened wide is filled with nouriſhing food: The eyes opened are filled with viſible objects, Pſal. 119. 18. Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wonderous things out of thy Law. He hath an enlightned underſtanding, but ſenſible of his imperfection, longeth for a greater enlargedneſs that he might ſee more raviſhing wonders in Gods Law. Much more ſurpriſing wonders are there in God the Law-maker, and Chriſt the Law-repairer.

[2.] Let us not be puffi up with a vain conceit that we have knowledge enough. Let us rather bewail our ignorance than boaſt of our underſtanding. Senſe of indigence is the firſt ſtep to fulneſs, empty Souls are capable of being fill'd. What we know of God and Chriſt is infinitely below what is to be known of them.

[3.] Let us riſe to more ſpiritual apprehenſions. 'Tis hard for us to have elevated thoughts, carnal notions are moſt apt to poſſeſs our minds, and naturally our thoughts of God and Chriſt are no better in their kind than Nicodemus's of Regeneration, imagining it to be a re-entry into his Mothers Womb, John 3. 4. Or the Samaritan Woman, who fram'd no higher Conceptions of the fountain of living-waters than thoſe ſhe had of her Father Jacobs Well, John 4. 12. There is a knowledg of Chriſt after the fleſh, 2 Cor. 5. 16. carnal Conceptions of Divine Glories; and there is a knowledge of Chriſt after the Spirit, in his ſpiritual appearances, his ſpiritual works, a knowledge of Chriſt not ſo much as he was converſant upon Earth, but as Reigning in Heaven, Glorious and prevalent in his interceſſion. This was the end of his death, and this ſhould be the aim of our knowledge. As Chriſt roſe from a low and infirm ſtate to an heavenly Glory, to a more ſpiritual diſcovery of himſelf, ſo ſhould we keep time with his ſeveral ſtates in our knowledge of him.

There

There is a knowledge of the Hiſtory of Chriſt, and there is a knowledge of the Myſtery of Chriſt; this latter we ſhould grow in, which is the true Manna of the Soul. Riſe from dull notions, to ſprightly and more affecting apprehenſions of God and Chriſt.

[4.] Let us increaſe in the knowledge of whole God, and whole Chriſt. View all the Perfections of God; be not only intent upon ſome of the firſt magnitude, but on thoſe that ſeem the leſſer ſparks, which have an influence one time or other upon the ſouls and lives of men. He is not worthy of the name of an Aſtronomer, who gazeth only upon one or two Planets, with a neglect of the reſt, which have their particular excellency as well as the other heavenly Bodies. As there is nothing in the Heavens, ſo there is nothing in God and Chriſt, but is worthy of our underſtanding and conſideration, and affords matter of inſtruction, and matter of conſolation one time or other. Let us not ſatisfie our ſelves with a knowledge of God in the maſs; a glance upon a Picture never directs you to the diſcerning the worth and art of it.

[5.] Let us fetch the increaſe of this knowledge from the true Principle, from the Word. By the Spirit in the Word it was firſt imprinted; by the Spirit in the Word it is further enlarged. The improvement of a man in any ſcience, muſt be fetcht from the Principles of that Science, not from the Principles of another; no one would ſtudy the Art of Painting to improve himſelf in the skill of Phyſick and Medicines. Studying the Word of God, is the way to increaſe in the knowledge of Gods Nature, Chriſts Offices, and more Spiritual Apprehenſions of them.

5. Exhortation. To thoſe who are void of the ſpiritual knowledge of God. Labour for it. What need there be more urged, than the Title of it in the Text; 'Tis eternal Life? therefore worthy of the moſt exact diligence. As the deception which had ſeiz'd upon the Underſtanding of the firſt man was the cauſe of Death, ſo the light of underſtanding our Creator, and his immenſe love in Chriſt is the cauſe of Life. Other Sciences may be a Tree of Knowledge, this is a Tree of Life. 'Tis a doleful conſideration to ſee men impertinently ſpending their time, and conſuming their ſtrength in the ſtudy of Creatures, (with a neglect of this) a knowledge wherewith they may deſcend to Hell with ſorrow, rather than that whereby they may aſcend to heaven with joy. This knowledge, as it advanceth our ſtates, ſo it elevates our natures; A man that underſtands not, is like the beaſts that periſh, Pſal. 49. 20. Divine knowledge is above all the Wiſdom of corrupted Nature, and renders a man Superior to a meer Son of Adam; all other knowledge though commendable in its kind, if it be not improved for this end, will degenerate into ſenſual, if not deviliſh, Jam. 3. 15. it will either reſt in a more refin'd ſenſuality, a life of depraved Reaſon, or fit a man to be a malitious Devil againſt the Intereſt of Chriſt. Shall not then Eternal Death ſcare us from our ſlothful and beloved ignorance? Shall not Eternal Life allure us to Divine Wiſdom? Was it the miſery of the World ever ſince Adam, to have a blindneſs of Mind? And ſhall any of us reſt contented in that miſery, and reſolve to be no wiſer and happier than the Gentiles, that were alienated from the Life of God through the blindneſs of their Minds? God ſaid of light at the Creation it was good, he was the Author of it; It entred into the compoſition of all Creatures; he doth not ſay ſo of darkneſs; that is not his Creature, but a privation of light. God never ſaid of ignorance, or of any thing underſtood by darkneſs, 'Tis Good. Shall any of us reſolve to perſiſt in that, which hath not the leaſt ſpark of Goodneſs in it, that hath not the leaſt ſyllable of Gods approbation, that is the Foundation of all the contempt of God in the World? Who ever knew him, but bleſſed themſelves in that knowledge, were loth to part with it, valued it above the World? Who ever knew God clearly, but lov'd him ardently, ſtuck to him cloſely, fell before him humbly, found reſt and ſatisfaction in him? and ſhall not the experiences of thoſe vaſt numbers, who have had a ſaving glimpſe of him, give us one lift from our heavy ignorance? Paul was no blockhead, being brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, a learned Phariſee. Nor would the High Prieſt and his Companions have appointed a dull Perſon Commiſſioner againſt the Chriſtians; yet all the knowledge he had before his acquaintance with Chriſt, and all the time and pains he had ſpent in it, he counts but loſs in compariſon of this, Phil. 3. 8. And the beſt Petition he thought he could put up for the Epheſians was, that they might have the ſpirit of wiſdom in the knowledge of him, Eph. 1. 17.

Motives.

(1.) Is not the Object Excellent? Pſal. 8. 1. How excellent is thy name in all the earth, who haſt ſet thy glory above the Heavens! Do we conceive God full of Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Righteouſneſs, Tenderneſs and Compaſſion; Can we imagine ſuch a being cloath'd with thoſe unchangeable Perfections, the original of all that goodneſs which is in any Creature, the Author of the Beauty of the World; Can we I ſay, pretend to believe there is ſuch a Being, and ſit at reſt in our ignorance of him? Shall we pretend to believe there is a Redeemer, who deſcended from the Throne of Majeſty to the Vale of miſery, took our fleſh when he had no need of it, ſtoop'd to the infirmities of our Nature, and was full of no other deſign than a thirſt for our welfare; carried himſelf with all ſweetneſs and tenderneſs in the World was the exact image of his Father, and have no deſire to make more exact enquiries after him, that we may underſtand what he is? Is not God the Father of Lights, the Supream Truth, the moſt delectable object both of the Humane Nature of Chriſt, the happy Angels and glorified Saints? Is he not light without darkneſs, love without unkindneſs, goodneſs without evil, purity without filth; all Excellency to pleaſe, without a ſpot to diſtaſt? Are not all other things infinitely ſhort of him, more below him, than a cab of Dung is below the glory of the Sun? and is it not a Sacriledge to ſteal our Underſtandings from ſo excellent an Object, as the true God and Jeſus Chriſt whom he hath ſent? Shall we know Creatures and not our Creator? Shall we be inquiſitive after the nature of Plants, Beaſts, Worms and Flies, and not be acquainted with the excellent Author of our Souls, who gave us our knowing Faculties? In whoſe ſervice ſhould our rational powers be employ'd, but in the diſcovery of the Author of them? If the object be more glorious than the whole Scheme of Nature, the knowledge of this object muſt be alſo excellent; for as actions, ſo knowledge is ſpecified from the Object.

(2.) Are not the great works God and Chriſt have done for us, ſufficient allurements? Are we not his Creatures, and ſhall we not know our Creator? Are we not his offending Creatures, and ſhall we not know our forbearer? May we not be his repaired Creatures from the Ruins of our Fall, and ſhall we not know our Redeemer? Shall we not know that God, whoſe Image we bear, whoſe Mercy we enjoy, in whom we live, move, and retain our beings? Shall we not know him by whoſe death we may live, by whoſe bloud we may be beautified, by whoſe Reſurrection and Aſcenſion we may be dignified? Shall we be in a capacity to enjoy all thoſe Benefits, and be willingly ignorant of our Benefactor? Without a knowledge of him who hath aton'd our ſins, and purchas'd that heaven we had forfeited, inſtead of that Hell we had a thouſand times deſerv'd, how can we be thankful to him for what he hath done? What ſhame ſhould cover our faces, what anguiſh ſhould gnaw our ſouls for our ſpiritual ſloth and ingratitude! Is not God love? Love in all his ways and methods? And are our hearts ſo out of love with him, as to neglect enquiries after him? To what end doth he extend his open hands, but that we might ſeek the Lord, Act. 17. 25, 27. and is an unthankful ignorance of him a worthy requital? 'Tis not enough that we know there is a God and a Redeemer, but we muſt know what they are, what they have done; what glories there are in their Natures, in their Actions, that is the import of the Text, to know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent. Not onely to know thy Being, but thy Excellency; not onely to know that Chriſt is ſent, but to know what that Chriſt is who is ſent. Redemption was not for the bleſſed Angels, yet they earneſtly deſire to look into thoſe things, 1 Pet. 1. 12. Chriſt is more a Benefactor to us than to them, in regard of Redemption; why then ſhould their induſtry in ſearching be more than ours?

'Tis

'Tis not commendable, 'tis not lawful to be ignorant of him, who darts his heavenly beams upon our ſenſes in the works of Nature, and upon our ſouls in the works of Grace; no greater injuſtice, no greater impiety, than to contemn or neglect the knowledge of that God whoſe Image we are.

(3.) Hereby only we can ſatisfie our natural thirſt for knowledge. The deſire for knowledge is the peculiar property of man. His being rational differenceth him from all creatures; no creature ſeeks a Redemption from ignorance but Man. Brute Animals reſt contented in their Ignorance, and for man to reſt contented in his, is to be as bad or worſe than a beaſt; to neglect the proper Object of knowledge to know thoſe things which are as good as nothing. 'Tis more ſutable to the nature of man to take pleaſure in the ſearch after Truth, than for mighty men to Triumph in the Conqueſts of Countries. There is in man a greater Ambition for knowledge, than for any thing elſe; no Reproach doth more perplex him, than to be counted Fooliſh. Nor doth any man with any pleaſure confeſs his Ignorance, becauſe Ignorance belongs not to the original Nature of Man. As the nature of the Will, by the Law of Creation, cannot be ſatisfied with a flaſhy and droſſy good, till it mount to that which is pure and refin'd, and after the enjoyment of an inferior good, is ſtill putting the queſtion who will ſhow us any good? Pſal, 4. 6. ſo the nature of the Underſtanding purſues after the Cauſes of things, and cannot reſt till it come to the Fountain-Cauſe of all the reſt, that hath no Cauſe of it ſelf. When any good is preſented to the Will, the next queſtion naturally is, Is there no higher Good than this? So when a Truth is preſented to the Underſtanding, the next queſtion is, Is there no higher Truth than this? The Will can onely be ſatisfied with that Good, which is not exceeded by any other; and the Underſtanding with that Truth, which is not excelled by any other. By this knowledge we are ſpeaking of, our natural Thirſt is delightfully ſatisfied and increas'd; the Soul is pleas'd with what it attains and enlarg'd for what it wants. There is an uncertainty and doubtfulneſs in all other knowledge but this. Is there any thing we think we know, but may be battered by others Contradictions? Have we not often doubtful thoughts of that one day, which we thought we clearly knew the day before? Do we not often quarrel with our ſelves, and call that our dotage which a few dayes before we thought our Glory; and queſtion thoſe ſentiments which a few Hours before we thought unqueſtionable, and as certain, as the daily Motions of the Sun in the Heavens? But here the Foundation is unſhaken; a God there is, and a God of Infinite Perfections; a Redeemer there is, and one of Infinite Tenderneſs. The knowledge of him by the Word is certain, like the knowledge by a Sun-beam. Here we may drink full draughts, to quench our natural thirſt after knowledge, ſince all things are beſt and ſureſt known in their Principle; and the Mind of Man is reſtleſs, like the Needle in the Compaſs; not to be eſtabliſhed without a look to the higheſt Truth. We are here ſure of a Mine, and the fruit of attaining will recompence the pains of enquiring. Let us therefore be ſo Generous, as to believe this natural Thirſt cannot be better ſatisfied, than by knowing God and Chriſt, the moſt amiable Objects; and let us never continue in that Ignorance, which, if we obſerve our natural deſires, we ſhould account our ſhame; for if there be any ſatisfaction to the Soul, (which of all creatures under heaven, approacheth in its nature neareſt to the Nature of God, and ſeems to be boundleſs in its operations) it muſt be in the underſtanding that which is Infinite; and that it is neither Heaven, nor the company of Angels, but God and Chriſt, who have an infiniteneſs to anſwer the pantings of the Soul, and make a full reply to all its cravings. The ſatisfaction alſo conſiſts in the certainty of the Object of this knowledge, there being more ſound and convincing Reaſons for the Being of a God, his Goodneſs, Omnipreſence, neceſſity of Redemption, a future ſtate of Happineſs and Miſery, than for any affairs of this World.

(4.) All are bound by the law of Nature to know God. There is not an Obligation by the Law of Nature to know Chriſt, unleſs it be as Rational Creatures are oblig'd to know, and believe whatſoever God ſhould reveal unto them; but there is a formal obligation upon man as a rational creature, to know his Creator. * For ſince all know that there is a God, by whoſe Care and Providence, all things in this World are Ruled; they are oblig'd by the ſame Law of Nature to enquire after this God, and to endeavour to arrive to the knowledge of him. What Nation was there, though never ſo barbarous, that did not own even in their Idolatry the worſhip of a God? For they naturally knowing that there was a God, did naturally know that that God was to be worſhipped. Since therefore the law of Nature obligeth us to enquire after God, he that neglects the knowledge of God, ſins againſt the law of Nature. The wrath of God is threatned to be pour'd out upon them that know not God, Pſal. 79. 6. but the wrath of God is not manifeſted againſt any, but thoſe that are Tranſgreſſors of the Law.

* Zanch. Tom. 2. 4. Li. pag. 249, 250.

(5.) This knowledge is only the perfection of the Soul. The more excellent the Object is, the more it doth perfect and ſtrengthen, as well as gratifie the Faculties of the Soul, Prov. 1. 9. 'Tis an ornament of grace to the head, a greater ornament to the ſoul, than a Diadem can be to the Head of a Prince. The ſoul of man being enricht with two faculties, whereby he is diſtinguiſh'd from all other Creatures on Earth, viz. Underſtanding and Will, his Happineſs muſt be placed in the exerciſe of thoſe two about their proper Object; the Underſtanding in knowing God as the Object of Happineſs, and the Will in willing to Love him. Truth is the perfection of a rational Underſtanding; the higheſt Truth muſt then be the higheſt perfection of it. The Mind of Man, was not created to terminate it ſelf in the contemplation of the lower things of this World. The ſight of the beauty of God, is the End of the Soul; and what is the End of a thing, is the Perfection of it. The End of God in the Creation was to communicate his Goodneſs; the perfection of a Soul then, conſiſts in the higheſt participation of that Goodneſs, according to its capacity. The image of God conſiſts in this knowledge, Col. 3. 10. Every Image is a participation of beams from the Original. As darkneſs is the deformity of the World, and light the beauty of it, whereby the beauty of every thing elſe is diſcover'd; ſo knowledge is the beauty of the Underſtanding, as Ignorance is the Deformity. If the knowledge of every thing had been the perfection of mans ſoul, there would have been implanted notions of thoſe things in the Soul at her original, or they would have been the matter of Divine Revelation; but there is neither of thoſe; there are not notions implanted, the Soul could not then be ſo ignorant of the frame and motion of the body ſhe dwells in. She knows not by natural, but acquir'd notions, the ſeveral rooms of the houſe wherein ſhe reſides. How many ages was man ignorant of the circulation of the bloud, the diſtribution of the Chyle through the venæ lacteæ? nor are thoſe things the matter of Divine Revelation in the Word. Chriſt diſcover'd not a ſublimity of natural knowledge, he ſpake not a ſyllable of thoſe things, but of the diſcovery of his Father and himſelf. The Son of God had not employ'd himſelf in divine diſcoveries, had not the knowledge and embracing of him, been the ornament and happineſs of a reaſonable Creature. The moſt natural notions men bring with them into the World, and which are moſt obvious to their firſt notice, are that of a God and deſires for happineſs; and the diſcovery of this, and directions in our aſpiring to and preparations for another ſtate of life after this, was the ſubject of the Revelation made by Chriſt. Again, As it is the happineſs of God, to know and love himſelf, becauſe he is the higheſt Truth and Goodneſs; ſo it is upon the ſame account, the happineſs of a Creature to know and love God. If we could poſſibly ſuppoſe any Goodneſs ſuperiour to God, it would be the Felicity of God to know and love that Goodneſs; he could not ſettle himſelf upon his own Perfections, but run out in enquiries after, and Affections to that Goodneſs Superior to his. Certainly the Mind of Man being nobler than the Body, ought to be nouriſht with the choiceſt Food; the perfection of it cannot be attain'd but by that object which is moſt perfect in it ſelf, and moſt capable to convey perfection to it. God only as he is the Reſt of the Will, ſo he is the only Banquet of the Mind; the Soul being of a Divine Original, It being given by God, Eccl. 12. 7. can only be nouriſhed by divine Dainties and Converſes, as the Body doth attain its perfection by things of the ſame nature with its own Compoſition. Let us therefore out of love to the perfection of our Minds purſue after this know-knowledge. The mind is an active thing: It will be busie about something or other; pitch it therefore upon the most excellent and most satisfying object, employ it not in the picking of straws, but gathering of Pearls. When we employ it about things lower than God and Christ without any regard to the adoration and admiration of them, we degrade our understanding, deprive it of its true end, and thrust it from that worthy employment allotted to it, which was to survey the works of God, read his hand writing, and from thence arise to a further knowledg and admiration of our Creator himself.

(6.) This knowledge is highly delightful. All knowledge is pleasant to the Soul, Prov. 2. 10. The natural desires for knowledge are strongest, therefore when attained the delight is sweetest. The more reality any object hath, the more pleasure is in it; spiritual things are most real and therefore the delightfulest. Natural knowledge is pleasant. What a sweetness is there in knowing the secrets of Nature, and the Phænomena in the World? The knowledge men have of them, though upon erroneous principles, is delightful, much more would it be so if the knowledge were exact and grounded upon certain principles of Truth. The delights of learning surpass the delights of sense, and the pleasure of a Scholar the pleasure of a Swine. The Heathen Philosophers were so ravisht with their chips of natural knowledge, that they sometimes neglected those things which were necessary for the sustaining their bodies. Now if the views of God in the dark disguise of his Creatures cast the Soul into pleasing raptures, the views of God in the clear glass of Christ must snatch the Soul into the third Heavens. The pleasure of carnal knowledge is to that of Divine, as the delight of sucking the ivy bush, is to that of drinking a sprightly Wine. The pleasure is always answerable to the excellency of the object delighted in; if therefore a clear demonstration of Nature resolves a man into a rapture, much more must a clear demonstration of God, because, as all Righteousness is from God as the original, so all Truth is by derivation from God. If therefore Truth in the streams be a delightful prospect, the bubblings of Truth in the Fountain must much more put the Soul into a spiritual extasy. As it is with a man born blind whose eyes were opened, how would he bless himself to see a burning Lamp guilding the room where it is? But the sight of the Moon walking in its brightness would enhance his joy, and the sight of the Sun in his noon day glory, obscuring all the lesser lights would much more pleasure and astonish him. All light is sweet, but it is a pleasant thing to behold the Sun, Eccles. 11. 7. 'Tis more pleasant to behold the Sun, than all the Diamonds in the World in conjunction; so the knowledge of God and Christ must be much more delicious than the knowledge of all Creatures, by how much they are unconceivably more above them. If there be a gladness upon the sight of a beam emitted from the Sun, what must there be in the views of the Sun it self in its brightest beauty? Our very Meditations of God are sweet, and resolve in a Divine joy, Psal. 104. 34. My Meditations of him shall be sweet, I will be glad in the Lord. The greater degrees of knowledge will bestow a stronger influence of delight upon the Soul. There is a rich perfume in the knowledge of Christ, a savour 2 Cor. 2. 14. The savour of his knowledge ver. 16. A savour of Life to Life, vital to all the parts of the Soul; and the more lively the knowledge, the more of pleasure. That which doth most encrease strength, is most cordial to the vital parts of the body.

Intellectio est quies intellectus.

[1.] 'Tis a pure delight. All other things have their spots, which allay the sweetness in the knowledge of them. God is purity without spot, light without darkness, all excellency to create delight, without any imperfection to raise disgust. As ignorance and forgetfulness of God will render men at last absolutely sad, without any mixture of joy; so the knowledge of him will render men, according to its degrees, as chearful, as in the highest degree it will hereafter render them happy: It affords a pleasure without froth or scumm.

[2.] 'Tis a full pleasure. Others are but drops, this fills the Soul to the brim, and leaves little or no room for any intruders. The Angels that have the vision of God

God, hanker not after any thing the World calls ſweetneſs. The ſatisfaction of the mind is proportionable to the excellency of the object known. God being therefore the fulleſt object affords the fulleſt joy.

[3.] 'Tis a durable delight, when all others will wither; other knowledge is as a Rain-bow pleaſant to behold, but quickly vaniſhing; like the ſound of Muſick in the Ear, which pleaſeth and expires. The departure of an object ſtrips the admirer of his real pleaſure. Jonahs joy withered with the Gourd wherein it was placed, but the knowledge of God and Chriſt is attended with a perpetual delight, ſince they are objects as durable as they are excellent; for where there is a ſaving knowledge, there is an Eternal knot made between the underſtanding, and the ſpiritual object which cannot be diſſolved.

[4.] 'Tis a pleaſure like to that which God has, which conſiſts in reflections upon, and affections to his own nature. God cannot have an infinite ſatisfaction in any thing beſides himſelf, becauſe nothing is infinite but himſelf. Upon this account let us purſue after this Wiſdom. The loweſt degree is pleaſant, joy is fulfilled in the Soul upon the manifeſtations of God by Chriſt, John 17. 13. which mounts to a greater height as we riſe in higher degrees, upon every freſh diſcovery new joyes diſcloſe themſelves. The ſearch after God is a greater happineſs than the fruition of any thing in the World can be. But when the underſtanding the higheſt faculty, and God the chief Truth and Good meet together, an unexpreſſible ſatisfaction muſt be the reſult of ſuch a meeting. God being infinitely better than all Creatures, the knowledge of him muſt be infinitely more delightful than the knowledge of all things beſides. And though he cannot be perfectly known, yet this doth not blaſt the pleaſure, as the Heavens are too boundleſs for our eye, and the Stars too numerous for our account, yet it is pleaſant to behold the one and view the other.

(7.) If we do not labour to know God, we endeavour, as much as in us lies, to make God loſe all the Glory of his Creation and Revelation. Becauſe no Creature under the Heavens is a capable ſubject of this but man. All other Creatures that have ſenſe without underſtanding, can only perceive thoſe things which are objects of ſenſe, as colours, odours, &c. but God being a Spirit, falls not within the limits of ſenſe. Man only was made with an underſtanding to know the inviſible God. The contempt of this knowledge, or the neglect of it, with a preferring the knowledge of every thing elſe before him, is to deprive him of the Glory of his Work. All our natural gifts will not make us immediately ſerviceable to God without a ſpiritual eye. This knowledge, though in one ignorant of the World, renders him more capable to pay immediately the Glory due to God, than the greateſt Scholar with his Philoſophical wick of Oyl. A Sun beam reflected from the wall gives more heat and warmth than a thouſand Lamps. It makes God a loſer in the Glory of his Goſpel Revelation. Knowledge is the baſis of all our motions and affections to God, which the Goſpel enjoyns. The wheels were full of eyes, which ſome think, refers to the great meaſure of Knowledge God would afford in the time of the Goſpel, Ezek. 1. 18. When God ſhould dwell in the World in glorious and majeſtick repreſentations, the wheels, the people ſhould be full of eyes. If we neglect then the knowledge of God, we hinder him (as to us) both of the end of Creation, wherein he hath made himſelf Legible, and the end of his Goſpel diſpenſation, wherein he hath made himſelf evident in his Son.

* Lightfoot Temple Chap. 38. p. 253.

(8.) 'Tis eaſie to have a knowledge of God and Chriſt. What difficulty there is in it, lies not in God or in the means of Revelation, but in our ſelves. As the Law might be obſerved, but for the corruption of our Fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. The Law was weak through the Fleſh, ſo God might be ſpiritually ſeen, but for the ſoreneſs of our eyes. It lies not in the object, but in our indiſpoſition, in regard of the enmity of our Nature, and the unworthy notions we have naturally of God. No Wiſdom is leſs admir'd and leſs affected, men hate Wiſdom and thereby love death, Prov.

Prov. 8. 36. there being a diſſimilitude between the Nature of God, and the corrupt Nature of Man. Nothing ſo eaſie to be known as God, though nothing ſo hard to be ſearcht out unto perfection. The Sun doth viſibly offer its beams to every eye that will open its ſelf, and let him ſhine upon it: Nothing more eaſie to be ſeen than the Sun, yet nothing more hard to be piere'd into and fully underſtood. If we do not know God, 'tis not for want of light in him, but for want of will in us. He hath not ſo clouded himſelf in thick darkneſs, that it is impoſſible to have ſome proſpect of him. He hath ſet his footſteps in the Creatures, and unvail'd his face in the Scriptures, he hath made himſelf intelligible in his works, and in his word, and breaks out upon our underſtandings in both. What is knowable of God in order to practice, is not clos'd up from our ſight, we have rich diſcoveries of his holineſs and excellency in his word, which informs us what our behaviour ſhould be towards him. * We muſt not apprehend God to be ſo mean a being as that we can eaſily ſatisfie all our curioſities about him. Know him perfectly we cannot, unleſs we had an underſtanding as infinite as his own; and indeed we might well be aſham'd of that God, that were ſo little as to be meaſured by our finite capacities. Yet ſo far as doth conduce to our practice and comfort, God is as intelligible as any thing in this World, and more; we may know more of his original Goodneſs than of the derivative goodneſs of any Creature; his Attributes are as evident to us as the quality of any thing we ſee; we may as ſoon know that God is good, and excellent, and holy, as we may know that the wall is white or no. We have higher principles of the knowledge of him: We have ſenſe to view the effects of his Goodneſs, we have reaſon to draw concluſions from the excellency of Creatures, to inform us of the tranſcendent excellency of God; and we have Revelation, which ſurmounts the other two principles of Senſe and Reaſon. What though we cannot know his eſſence? Do we know the eſſence of any one thing in the World, or can we ſatisfie our ſelves in all our enquiries about it? His perfections are unfathomable by us, yet he is obvious to our minds, if we will not cloſe our Eyes. We can as eaſily ſee the Sea when we ſtand upon the ſhore, as it is impoſſible for us to reach with our eyes the bounds of it. But ſuppoſe the knowledge of the God we ſpeak of were very hard, ſhall the difficulty which whets us in other things, take off our edge in this? Who can boaſt of the knowledge of any one Creature? Yet ſince the World began men have been peering into the ſecrets of them. Multitudes have been buſie in the ſearch of natural things, and the difficulty is leſs affrighting now than it was before; ſhall then the ſeeming difficulty of the moſt ſatisfying objects cloſe up our deſires and endeavours in the ſearch of them? It ſhould rather add ſpurrs to our diligence. Pauls foreſight of what was out of his reach, ſlackned not his deſires and endeavours of attaining, Phil. 3. 12, 13. The knowledge of Chriſt is eaſie, had it not been ſo, he would not have ſo ſharply rebuked his Diſciples for their ignorance, Matth. 15. 16. Are ye yet without underſtanding? Is he not the ſubject of the whole Scripture, and like a golden Ore runs through every vein in the Mine. He is the Center wherein all the Lines of the Scripture meet, we can open no part of it, but ſomething of Chriſt ſtrikes upon our minds, as light in the day upon the opening of our eyes. In the volume of the book it is written of him, in the firſt promiſe and in the laſt line of the Scripture. He is the Alpha and Omega of all Revelations and Diſcoveries; 'tis therefore our own fault, if we will be in darkneſs under a noon day Sun. God deſires we ſhould know him, why doth he elſe compare himſelf to ſo many objects in the viſible World, but that we may have frequent remembrances of his excellency; and aſcribe to his incorporeal nature the members of a man, as Arms, Ears, &c. which are incompatible with a ſpiritual being, but that knowing our ſelves and our own frame, we may riſe up to a knowledge of him?

(9.) Conſider, Is not our time ſpent unprofitably in every thing elſe, when we neglect this? All other Wiſdom is periſhing, this heavenly Wiſdom only endures for ever. Will the skill in Trades remain with any man, and be an advantage to him in another World? Not but that there muſt be time ſpent in Learning, and improving your callings for the good of your ſelves, Families, and the Community; but but not ſo much as to ſwallow up the time due to the other. There is a ſatisfaction in natural Learning; but what advantage is that in another World, where worldly Wiſdom and Learned ſubtleties ſhall take no place? There will be no uſe of them in Eternity whither we are travelling. 'Tis the knowledge of God and Chriſt we ſhall there be examin'd about; we may have the greateſt Wiſdom of the World, and be without this ſaving knowledge at the laſt day, and receive the puniſhment of Devils inſtead of the happineſs of Chriſtians. Chriſt never put up a Thankſgiving to his Father for the Learning of the Phariſee, or the Wiſdom of Statesmen, but for the Revelation of himſelf to the Babes of the World, Matth. 11. 25. The Knowledg of a good man only is underſtanding, Prov. 9. 10. 'Tis a dreadful place againſt the wiſe as well as the mighty men of the Earth, 1 Cor. 1. 26. Not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty. Prudence and Power abſtracted from divine knowledge are contemptible in the Eyes of God. Here and there one wiſe and mighty man markt out for an happy Eternity, but not many. All knowledge below this is but the knowledge of trifles. In other things we loſe our time for the moſt part, by this we gain an happy Eternity: Other knowledge will not prevent the loſs of our ſelves, in this we find God and our ſelves too. Let us not therefore ſell our underſtandings for nought, as God complains they did his people, Iſaiah 52. 3. Other getings are inconſiderable to the gain of underſtanding, Prov. 4. 7. Oh that we could take as much pains to get this which is Eternal Life, as the Heathens have taken for humane Sciences which could not ſecure them from Eternal Death, and ſeek for it with as much induſtry and as high a value of it, as we would for Silver and hidden Treaſures! Prov. 2. 4, 5.

There are Hindrances of this knowledge, and Helps to it.

[1.] Hinderances.

(1.) Corrupt Affections. When the Apoſtle had exhorted the Epheſians to be renewed in the Spirit of their Minds, Eph. 4. 23. he ſeems to add directions to his Exhortation, and one is ver. 26. To be watchful over their paſſions. Let not the Sun go down upon your wrath. Elſe they would give place to the Devil, who is the great Enemy of Divine Light, and the Ruler of the darkneſs of this World. Paſſions are the fumes of Hell to cloud and obſtruct the beams of Chriſt from ſhining upon the mind; theſe diſtract the native force of the Soul, and choak all beginnings of Divine Meditation. Who can Learn any thing in the midſt of a ſtorm? A ſerenity of mind is a way to know God, Pſal. 46. 10. Be ſtill and know that I am God. A turbulent Spirit is a bar to it. The Soul overcaſt with unworthy paſſions is no more fit for this Light, than the sky throng'd with Clouds is for the Light of the Sun, or a foul glaſs to reflect an image. Light and inconſtant Spirits have not the knowledge of God any more than running water can receive the force of a Sun beam, which glides away from one after another, and remains under the power and force of none. You can never ſet a ſtamp upon a floating Cork, till you take it out of the Water. Corrupt Affections warp the underſtanding to irregular operations.

(2.) Senſuality. Senſuality, and a want of the Spirit, the great enlightner, are inſeparable Companions, Jude 19. Senſual, having not the Spirit. A generous knowledg can never grow up in a ſenſual Spirit, any more than a generous plant can in a mariſh always covered with Salt water. An Atheiſt may be ſaid to know God, as well as one ſteept in ſenſuality, which is practical Atheiſm. Thoſe that deny God in their works, never underſtood him in their mind, 1 Sam. 2. 12. The ſons of Eli were ſons of Belial, and therefore knew not the Lord. This being a familiarity with Hell can never be a means of acquaintance with God. The way to be heavenly wiſe, is not to be brutiſh. Laughter is mad, and ſenſualiſts mad men, who can as well underſtand God as Bedlams can underſtand ſobriety. The more the Soul is ſunk in bodily pleaſures, the more feeble and unactive it is, the more languiſhing and ſickly; the more it ſoars above them, the more lively and freſh it appears. The Heathen Philoſophers could therefore preſcribe the Souls abſtraction from the body to be neceſſary to Divine knowledge and Meditation. So great a priviledge as this is not becoming one that that is in a profeſt ſlavery to the fleſh. The Jews ſay, that the ſenſuality of the ſeventy that were with Moſes, when they ſaw the Viſion of God, was the cauſe they had not a more perfect ſight; from Exod. 24. 11. They ſaw God and did eat and drink; underſtanding it not of the actions afterwards, but of the reaſon why God gave them not ſuch a meaſure of the Spirit as Moſes, which is ſignified by laying on his hand, becauſe they were ſoakt much in ſenſual delights. Who can ſee the glory of the Sun, where all the Windows and Gaps, through which the light ſhould peep, are daub'd and ſtopt with a thick Clay? While we are clogg'd with the thick and filthy Mire of baſe luſts, we cannot behold the Glory of God and Chriſt.

(3.) Carnal conceptions of God. We are naturally apt to frame a notion of God according to the complexion of worldly things, or our own Paſſions; to think God ſuch an one as our ſelves, Pſal. 50. 21. hereby erecting an Earthly and Vitious Deity. The Heathens had at firſt the knowledge of God, Rom. 1. 19. God hath ſhewed it to them, and they are ſaid to know God: the true God diſcover'd himſelf; God would not have diſcover'd a falſe God to them. But they not only neglected the improvement of this knowledge, but mixed the carnal brood of their own opinions and reſemblances with it: And by this mixture of the natural knowledge they had of God, and the corrupt notions they entertain'd of what this God was; by this unnatural mixture, I ſay, was produc'd a monſtruous and miſhapen Image of God in their Minds, and in the World, unworthy of God and unworthy of a rational Soul; as when ſome genuine and true principle mixeth with ſome foul and carnal Conception, the iſſue is monſtruous. Men ſtudy to frame ſuch notions of God as may maintain their Pride and Wantonneſs, and feed their luſts, not ſatisfie their Underſtandings. Such Errors in the head hinder us from a ſpiritual ſight of God, as a maſs of congeal'd vapours in the head, darkens or tinctures the eye that it cannot rightly diſcern objects before it. The head muſt be purg'd of that flux of Humours, which diſcharge themſelves to that Organ, before the blemiſh, it hath occaſion'd, be cured. Erroneous prepoſſeſſions muſt be diſplac'd, before good principles can take root in the Underſtanding: the mind muſt be unclouded of thoſe miſts, before it can diſcern the moſt excellent Objects.

(4.) Earthlineſs. A ſoul ſteep'd in Earth cannot attain divine things. Clogg'd wings cannot mount into the Air. The mud of the Earth is a skreen between the Beams of God, and the eye of the Soul. When the Mind is covered with thick Clay, it cannot behold the admirable things of the Goſpel, or receive any impreſſions of the Spirit on it, any more than thoſe that work all the day in deep Mines under ground can behold the Sun. A little of the World delighted in, will hinder the ſight of God. Though the Sun be vaſt, the Heavens large, and the Sun dart his beams round about the World, yet if a ſmall braſs Farthing be laid upon the eye it cannot ſee the Sun, or the Beams of it, which ſhine round about it, Joh. 5. 44. How can you believe that receive honour one of another? Ambitious and Covetous men are ſo poſſeſſed with their immoderate deſires after honours, and riches, that they cannot much mind natural knowledge, more proportion'd to the Genius and guſt of their Souls, and much leſs Divine. The Mind of man cannot at one and the ſame time attend ſeveral charges: When the ſtrength is ſpent one way, it is languiſhing another. Earthlineſs hinders the knowledge of Chriſt, and bars out a right eſtimation of the things of Heaven. A man brought up in a Dungeon, cannot know the Excellency of Superior Bodies. A worm that dwells always under the Earth, may as well ſee the Sun, as a man whoſe eyes and mind are in the Center of the Earth underſtand and ſee God. Worldly Spirits have more of the Earthworm than the man. We muſt therefore do as Chriſt bids the blindman, waſh the Clay off our eyes in the Pool of Siloam. The more of Earth we have, the leſs capable we are of the Illuminations of Heaven: the Center of the Earth is dark and obſcure, and is not penetrated by the light of the Sun.

(5.) Pride of Reaſon. When we lean to our own underſtanding, we acknowledge not God, Prov. 3. 5, 6. The Phariſees were the proudeſt of all the People, (Joh. 7. 49. have any of the Phariſees believed on him?) And they were the moſt ignorant of Goſpel Truths: they would have their own opinions a Rule to all the People. Pride being the Devils ſin, cannot be pleaſing to God. He that looks upon himſelf too much, is like to look up to Heaven too little: We cannot behold our ſelves and Heaven together at the ſame inſtant. If God hide ſpiritual Revelations from any, it is from the wiſe and prudent, Mat. 11. 25, 30. i. e. from thoſe that think themſelves wiſe enough; and it is dreadful to conſider, that it is Gods pleaſure, and he hath Chriſts thanks for it; they both concur againſt Pride; God will not open the Vail to ſuch, and Chriſt applauds his Fathers proceeding. The firſt leſſon Chriſt teacheth in his School, being the Doctrine of ſelf-denial, as a foundation of all his other Learning, is point-blank againſt this. We enjoy moſt of Chriſt when we feel our ſelves empty, and we are like to know moſt of Chriſt when we acknowledge our ſelves ignorant. The Laodicean Church conceited ſhe had clear eyes, and therefore knew not her blindneſs, and deſir'd no eye-ſalve, Rev. 3. 17, 18. Such will be contrary to the Apoſtles Rule, Jam. 1. 19. &c. Quick to ſpeak, and ſlow to hear, and God never ſets ſuch a divine plant as this in ſuch rocky ground; they are heights and fortifications, which hinder us from the knowledge of Chriſt, ὑψώματα καὶ ὀχυρώματα, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.

(6.) Curioſity. Either deſiring to know, only that we may know, not that we may obey; or prying into things too high. Curious enquiries about things which are not reveal'd, hinder that knowledge which is ſaving from making any great impreſſion. When God diſcover'd his glory to the Iſraelites, in giving the Law, he ſet bounds to the people, Exod. 19. 12, 21. that they might not be too buſily inquiſitive. The Goſpel, though more open and large, hath ſtill its limits; 'Tis not for you to know the times and the ſeaſons, which the father hath put in his own power, Act. 1. 7. To deſire to know more than God would have us know, is to come ſhort of that, which otherwiſe we might be capable of knowing. When Adam would aſpire to a greater meaſure of knowledge than God would allow him, he fell thereby into a brutiſh ſtate. God is to be judge of what is fit to be reveal'd, and if we would go further, we intrench upon his Wiſdom and Soveraignty. There is a wiſdom to ſobriety, Rom. 12. 3. Curious diſputes are the ſame in ſpirituals with the extravagancies of Bedlams; while men think to ſtrengthen, they crack their Brains, as the fooliſh fly approaching too near the Candle, loſeth both its eyes and wings. God makes fooliſh the wiſdom of this World, turns ſuch aſpiring Wiſdom back into Folly. The Wiſe Man compares knowledge to Honey, Prov. 25. 16. which if eaten in too great a quantity, provokes vomiting. Inſtead of pleaſing, it weakens and hurts the Stomach. Superfluous enquiries after God are the diſeaſe of the Soul *, and are ſo far from drawing the Vail, or making it thinner, and more penetrable, that it thickens it, and makes it more obſcure.

* τῆς ψυχῆς νόσημα ἐστὶ τὸ ἀκριβὴς καὶ περιεργῶς ζητεῖν περὶ θεοῦ Basil.

(7.) Enquiring no further than what hath been imprinted on us by Education. Or to take Truth upon truſt from man. To have the faith of Chriſt in reſpect of Perſons, Jam. 2. 1. Though we may know a ſpiritual Truth, yet it is not in a ſpiritual manner; the object of knowledge is good, and the manner of knowledge lame, and wants its due rectitude. When we receive any Truth from a humane Authority, or in reſpect to a perſon, we receive it upon no better an account than we ſhould a Fable deliver'd by the ſame hand *. Cuſtom, Tradition, and the Examples of others, are the riſe of the knowledge many men have of God and Chriſt. 'Tis true indeed, we come to know a ſtar by anothers pointing us to it; but afterwards we come to know it by its own light.

Directions, Both for the Attainment and Improvement of Divine Knowledge.

1. Prayer. This is a general means for every thing we want, but ought to be more preſſed than any, both becauſe of its Univerſal influence, and the common deplorable deplorable neglect or ſlight performance of it. The knowledge of God ſprings not from a natural, but a Divine Light, 'tis not an extract of nature, a branch growing up from the root of our own Abilities, but of a Divine Original wrought by the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, Eph. 1. 17. 'tis not the prize of a quick imagination, but a bended knee; the Apoſtle elſe had not been ſo earneſt a ſuppliant in this behalf for the Epheſians. * 'Tis not the proper Act of our own underſtanding, but a reception of illapſes and dartings from God. An hour therefore of ſincere prayer may do more in this caſe, than the prayerleſs enquiries of a life longer extended than Methuſalems. If therefore we are to emplore the aſſiſtance of God in the works of our daily Callings, much more ought we to ſeek to him for this Treaſure, the keys whereof he keeps in his own hands. Now there is a double act of God in this, which makes prayer more neceſſary than in any other Caſe, that is not of the like concern. There is to be the unvailing his Face, and the unſealing our eyes; the removing the Clouds from his Majeſty, and the darkneſs from our Minds; a clearing the Object, and diſcharging the faculty of its blindneſs. The Heathens conſider'd this, when they apprehended God to be the intellectus agens, purifying the phantaſmata for our underſtanding. A humane underſtanding, without outward Revelation, and inward eye-ſalve, is, and will be, a miſerable blind Creature.

* Fucin. in Dionys. de div. nomin. cap. 20.

(1.) God only can open the Mind. A loſt Eye can never be reſtor'd by a created Power, nor the blind underſtanding open'd, but by Chriſts touch, Luk. 4. 18. The firſt Adams Sin put out the Candle, the ſecond Adams Grace relights it. There is a faculty, a ſpirit in man, in miſerable fallen Man, but the inſpiration of the Almighty gives underſtanding, Job 32.8. Since our underſtanding is corrupted by ſin, and filled with error, 'tis not ſufficient to underſtand the things of God, without an internal Illumination, as well as an external Revelation. All our ſufficiency for intellection, as well as action, is of God; we are not ſufficient of our ſelves to think a good thought, 2 Cor. 3. 5. Can we then have quickening apprehenſions and lively thoughts of God, without God? We can no more underſtand the Goſpel without Grace, than we can underſtand God without the Goſpel; for thoſe things in the Goſpel which may conduct us to him, are fooliſhneſs in the judgment of the moſt elevated corrupt Nature, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Why were the Iſraelites, that had ſeen more miraculous Providences of God, ignorant of him, but becauſe God gave them not an heart to perceive, Deut. 29. 4. We may indeed by ſtudy find a propoſition ſo clear as to engage our aſſent, but not without ſupernatural influence have ſuch a knowledge of God, as to change our ſouls. We cannot aſcend to that which is infinite, without the power of that infinite; nor make our ſelves like to an infinite Being, without the communication of that infinite ſtrength. If Chriſt as God had not open'd the diſciples underſtanding, his teaching them as man, would have been labour in vain, and made as little entrance into their hearts, as into thoſe of the obſtinate Phariſees, Luk. 24. 45. He diſcours'd to them the true ſenſe of Scripture as Man, but imprinted the power of it upon their hearts as God. There muſt be an inward light in the Eye, the inſtrument of ſight, as well as in the air the medium of Viſion; and inward air in the Ear, to hear the Sound, as well as outward Air to produce, and convey the ſound. God is not known by us without an operation of God in us. David evinceth this, who though he had an enlightned Mind, pretends not a power of further enlarging it, but calls upon God for a ſupernatural virtue; open my eyes, that I may behold wondrous things.

(2.) God only can reveal the Object. God only can make himſelf known. We ſee not the Sun but by the Sun; we ſee other things by the Sun, but we ſee not the Sun by any other light than its own. True notions of God ſpring from Grace upon the Soul, as light from the Sun upon the Eyes. And as the Sun, ſo God and Chriſt appear moſt raviſhing in their own light. As none can know God perfectly but himſelf, ſo none can make him known to us but himſelf. The diſcovery of of himſelf is his own free Act and Motion. What Creature is able to force the Vail from before his face againſt his mind? The firſt ſpark, and the ſucceeding additions are from him. Moſes had the firſt Revelation of God from God, and when his heart breath'd after more, he hath recourſe to God for ſatisfaction, Exod. 33. 18. I beſeech thee ſhew me thy glory. Chriſt appropriates this to the Father, Mat. 11. 25. Father, thou haſt revealed them. The title of Father of lights belongs only to him. What the Sun is in regard of natural, that is God in regard of ſpiritual light. The Diſciples own Chriſt the Author of his own manifeſtation, in that queſtion wherein they admire the Riches of his Grace, Joh. 14. 22. How is it that thou wilt manifeſt thy ſelf to us, and not to the World! Light cannot break out without his pleaſure, and none can ſtop it when he is pleas'd to dart it. Indeed all knowledge, under what Title ſoever, is from God, as well as our Being, and the Beings of all Creatures. As our Faculties are the products of his Power, ſo every endowment of them is the fruit of his bounty. Other knowledge is from him as an indulgent Creator, this from him as a Mereiful Redeemer; that, by the Spirit brooding over the world by a common work of inſpiration, (as he brought the creatures at the firſt Creation into form and beauty) this by a more particular Energy, as a ſpecial gift upon the Mediators account, teaching all things neceſſary to be known of God, and breathing immediately upon the Spirit of Man.

If it be then Gods gift upon both accounts, it muſt be ſought at his hands. Holy men have alwayes done ſo. David got moſt of his Divine Learning upon his knees. How often do you find him with his bended knee, elevated eyes, and ſtrong cries, Pſal. 119. Teach me thy ſtatutes, open mine eyes, give me underſtanding, teach me thy judgments and knowledge; make thy face to ſhine upon thy ſervant, &c. Wiſdom is attained by asking, Jam. 1. 5. This courſe will not want ſucceſs: God is near to all that call upon him, Pſal. 145. 18. near them in his favour clearing up their apprehenſions of him, new ſtamping their Minds and Hearts. They ſee moſt of a thing, who are neareſt to it; Prayer brings us before God upon his Throne of Grace in his Majeſty and Mercy. 'Tis a leaning upon Chriſts boſom; and the Diſciple who enjoy'd that Familiarity with our Saviour on Earth, knew moſt of his Mind. Prayer will as it were bring down God to be our Inſtructor, and one hour of Gods teaching will be more fruitful than thouſands of years of our own ſtudy. One appearance of the Sun is better than a World full of Torches. How ſoon can he flaſh a ſtrong light upon our Minds, command the ſcales from our Eyes, as ſoon as he did darkneſs from the Chaos; and as eaſily by a word, create a new Eye, as well as a mighty Sun? He is a Non-ſuch for Inſtruction, Job 36. 22. Who teacheth like him? docet & imperat *. None ſo clearly, none ſo pleaſantly, none ſo ſpeedily. But we muſt earneſtly beg it, there muſt be a Cry, a lifting up the voice, Prov. 2. 3, 5, 6. then ſhall we find the knowledge of God, for out of his mouth comes underſtanding. Our earneſtneſs in deſiring it, cannot come near the pleaſure of God in beſtowing it, when he finds it long'd for. And why ſhould not the natural deſire for knowledge, when terminated upon a right Object, break forth into as ſtrong prayer, as our natural deſire for happineſs; both Appetites ſeeming to be with an equal force implanted in Man; deſire of Felicity as the End, and deſire of knowledge as the means to it? As our Happineſs, which is naturally deſir'd, cannot be attained but from God; ſo the knowledge, which is the way to it, cannot come from any ſpring but the Grace of God, who ought upon this account to be ſolicited by us. And truly, I think, the great reaſon why men come ſo ſhort in this knowledge, is becauſe they are negligent in this Means; and depend upon their own enquiries and ſearch, more than upon Gods Inſpirations.

* Caſtalio.

2. Study the Scripture much. He that would gain knowledge, would pick out the choiceſt Authors and turn over the beſt books. The Subject of the Goſpel is God, and God manifeſted in the fleſh. The Scriptures teſtifie of Chriſt, Joh. 5. 39. they are the ſwadling Bands wherein he hath been wrapt up ſince his firſt Incarnation, as the ſeed of the Woman in the Promiſe. Other Books may dart ſome light of humane knowledge, but this a beam of Divine. It acquaints us with the moſt excellent Truth, which makes us both wiſe and happy. 'Tis the record of our Saviours declarations of the Name of God, which was a prineiple intent of his coming. Therein are diſcover'd the Treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge, and a Wiſdom which none of the Princes of this World knew, none of the great Conquerours or Learned Philoſophers. All ſpiritual diſcoveries drawn from thence, have the Seal and ſtamp of God upon them, and none elſe. God hath, as it were, ſhut up his Spirit in the Goſpel; 'Tis the miniſtration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 3. 8. i. e. whereby the Spirit, who is to teach us all things, is conveyed to the Soul. Knowledge built upon any other Principle, is nothing but a frame of deluſions. 'Tis a dangerous thing to think thoſe things of God which are true, unleſs we are certain of the truth of them; and where can we have a convincing Evidence, but from his own Revelation? The Goſpel is called the Face of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6. To give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, i. e. as ſome interpret it, in the Goſpel. Indeed he hath imprinted his own Features, and the repreſentations of God in the Goſpel; that as in the old Teſtament we may behold his glorious out-goings in Creation and Providence, the deliverances of his People, and puniſhing his Enemies; ſo in the New we may view his glorious Counſels of redeeming goodneſs. As the looking upon the picture of a Friend preſerves the memory of his features, and recalls to mind the memorable actions done by him, and preſerves, if not encreaſeth the knowledge of him. The word is a glaſs wherein we behold the reflections of God, James 1. 23. and it is perfect, Pſal. 19. 7. It diſcovers as much of the Nature and amiableneſs of God as can be drawn in Lines and Letters, and preſents the Soul with ſuch attractives in him, as turns it fully to him, as it follows, Converting the ſimple. If the beauty of the Lord was ſeen in the legal Sanctuary, Pſal. 27. 4. much more in the Evangelical tranſcript, ſo plain, that he that is a ſtudent in it, when tranſlated to Heaven, may know God and Chriſt by what knowledge he had of their lineaments in the word, as the remembrance of the features in a picture will direct us to know the perſon when we meet him. The Angels themſelves ſeem to be put off to gather their knowledge of Chriſt, from the flowers of the word as delivered to the Church, and in the Church, Eph. 3. 10. The Wiſdom of God is made known by the Church to the principalities in heavenly places. 'Tis made known to the Church by the Word: To Angels by the Church, ſo that the knowledge of the Angels is ultimately reſolved into the word as the medium of it. As it is a means to gain it, ſo it is a means to encreaſe it, there are new amazing wonders to be ſeen in it. Though many Diamonds have been cut out of a Rock, yet there are more ſtill for the workmans skill and induſtry. While the powers in Heaven are inſtructed by it, the moſt elevated underſtanding on Earth cannot be above it. He that looks often into it, will view more by an Eye of faith, than all the World can by their Eyes of Reaſon in conjunction. By this inſtrument we ſhall behold the Greatneſs, Majeſty, Lovelineſs and Love of God, more than any rational diſcoveries can preſent to us. As a man by an inſtrument ſees the magnitude and Glory of the Stars, which an ignorant man thinks to be little ſparks of Light like thoſe in his Chimney. The ignorance among us may be charged upon the neglect of ſtudying this, or the ſlight reading of it. Some will plead the intricacy of it for their neglect. Not to ſay that as to the main deſign of it is plain in it ſelf; Let ſuch that excuſe themſelves upon this account conſider, whether they are not conſcious to themſelves that they never ſpent the tenth part, nay perhaps not a dram of that induſtry, zeal and deſire in the ſearching that hidden Mine of ſpiritual Treaſures, as they have ſpent in heaping up the periſhing trifles of this World. I will appeal to thoſe that do make it their buſineſs to enquire into the Word, whether they find not themſelves to have more lively apprehenſions of God, and feel, and taſt Divine Truths in another kind of manner than they experiment in other books. Let the experiences of others move thoſe that neglect it. Manna dropt from Heaven was more reliſhing in it ſelf, than all the meat of the Iſraelites Cooking, it was Angels food. And for the manner of converſing with it, the laying down rules would be too copious. Conſider well what you Read: Stay upon the deſcriptions you find of God and Chriſt, digg into them as into a Mine, reſt not till you find the ſatisfying importance of them, till you feel your Hearts ſtir, and riſe up in an adoration of him. The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him, Pſal. 25. 14. And he will ſhow them his Covenant. Conſider the inward vertue, and efficacy of it, as a wiſe man will the vertue of the Flowers, and Plants, as well as their beauty and gay clothing. And while you ſtudy the Hiſtory of the Goſpel, pray for the Revelation of the Father. Fleſh and Bloud may Read it, but the Father ther only reveals it ſavingly. The Eye may ſee the Letters, the Head may underſtand the ſenſe, when the Spirit opens not the Heart to feel the warmth.

3. Entertain with Affection every ſpiritual motion. We can no more profit in Divine Knowledge without the breathing of the Spirit and the dews of his Grace, than the labour of an husbandman can come to any maturity without the warm irradiations of the Sun and the ſhowers of Rain. The more ſolemn diſcoveries of God and Chriſt to the Heart were reſerved for the appearance of the Spirit, upon which account Chriſt while in the Fleſh, is ſaid but to begin to teach, Act. 1.1. The Foundation was laid by Chriſt, but the conſummation of this diſcovery and the laſt line was reſerved for the Spirit. Chriſt delar'd the name of God and his own commiſſion, but the Spirit afterwards was to verifie and confirm this commiſſion as authentick in the Minds of Men. He is therefore called the ſpirit of truth, as teſtifying the Authority of Chriſt, Joh. 15. 26. The ſpirit of truth ſhall teſtifie of me; and alſo in regard of his Conduct of men into Truth, Joh. 16. 13. The ſpirit of truth will guide you into all truth. He was firſt to demonſtrate to their minds, that Chriſt was authoriz'd by God, and that his declarations of God were firm, true, and ratified in Heaven; and then to guide them into thoſe Truths which were neceſſary for their comfort and practice; to open the ſecret reſolves of Eternity concerning the work of Redemption, and draw the Curtain from before thoſe Myſteries, which the Eye of Nature was not able to reach. The firſt work of the Spirit, is that of knowledge. He communicates himſelf to our Underſtandings, before he makes impreſſions upon our Wills. As the Sun firſt enlightens the Air, before he warms it; (Knowledge is that in the Mind, which Light is in the Air.) For as the ſpirit dealt with Chriſt, ſo he deals with his Members; he firſt reſts upon them as a ſpirit of wiſdom, underſtanding, and knowledge, Iſa. 11. 2, 3. and acts in that order wherein Chriſt is preſented to us by God, firſt Wiſdom, then Righteouſneſs and Sanctification, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Whatſoever therefore the Spirit doth by Virtue of his Office, muſt be liſtned to; and every offer, every motion he makes for our inſtruction, muſt be entertain'd: For though God hath appointed many outward inſtructors, yet there is but one internal teacher, viz. the Holy Ghoſt. And there is a reſiſtance of the Spirit in this work of Knowledge, as well as in the work of Grace; and the reſiſtance lyes chiefly here, becauſe the Spirits firſt work is to rectifie the judgment in the Nature of God, and things belonging to God, and preſent the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt; and when this is entertain'd, he reflects it upon the Will and Affections, that the Faculties may regularly follow one another in the order of working, and the Soul, in turning to God, may act, and be acted, as a rational Creature: for while he is buſie in reducing the Soul to its original Conſtitution, and true Nature, he would not move the Soul againſt the primitive order of Nature, but in ſuch a manner as its return and obedience may be regular and becoming a rational Creature. When therefore a man refuſeth the motions of the Spirit, whereby his mind may be inform'd, the Spirit is reſiſted by him. Every motion is a beam from heaven: Let us take heed of ſhutting our eyes againſt it, leaſt it be ſnatcht away by the interpoſition of ſome dark cloud, and we never enjoy the like again, but loſe the Spirit of Wiſdom and Revelation, and thereby the moſt excellent Wiſdom in Earth or Heaven. If we neglect his motions, we put a ſlight upon that Perſon, whereby only God reveals divine things to us, 1 Cor. 2. 10. God hath reveal'd them to us by his Spirit. We contemn the only inſtructor that can acquaint us with God; the things of God knows no man, but the Spirit of God, ver. 11. i. e. no man knows them but by the Spirit. 'Tis excluſive of all men, though the ſtrongeſt rationaliſts. If we liſten not then to this Spirit, we ſhall receive a ſtronger Ignorance, as a reward of our frowardneſs. Would any man ſtop his ears, or ſhut his doors againſt an Angel, ſent by God from Heaven upon a happy errand? Behold in every divine motion a greater than an Angel, yea than all the illuminated Bleſſed Angels in Heaven. Since it is therefore a beam from Heaven ſhooting in upon the Mind, follow it, and it will direct to a fuller proſpect of light, as when a Ray of the Sun ſtrikes through a Cranny of a Wall, the laying the eye cloſe to the hole hole will help us to see more, and perhaps the body of the Sun from whence it stream'd. If we therefore give way to the motions of the Spirit, it may be with us as with the Apostles, who were dull and ignorant in the time of their master, and just before the Ascension of Christ betrayed their ignorance of his design in coming, in proposing to him the setling of an earthly Kingdom, Acts 1. 6. But when the Spirit came upon them, how did he refine their minds, burn up the chaff of their grosser conceits? How noble were their apprehensions of the spirituality of Christ's Kingdom, and their Souls filled with Divine Light? So may we in our measures, if we wait for the Spirit, and observe his movings upon us. Let us therefore hereby give encouragement to the Spirit to inform us with delight, who is no less pleased than our Saviour was, when any received his instructions and stretch'd out their Souls to catch his gales. More is Learned from such a Teacher than from a multitude of ignorant men, if we were to live for ever with them. The neglect of those motions is the worm at the root of all our perfections, and continues the blindness of our minds and the perversity of our hearts. It concerns us therefore to look to this.

4. Labour and long for renewed Hearts. As there is an enmity to God in lapsed nature, so there is a disrelish of God in the knowledge of him, till the vitiated palate be cur'd by the removal of the infectious humor. The disease of the eye must be removed, before we can discern things plainly and delightfully. Our natural eye while distempered, is made worse by looking long or often upon an object, and can take no pleasure in the view of any thing. That eye that would gaze upon the Sun, must be sun-like, of the nature of the Sun; the soul must become Divine, before it can know the Divinity. As no man can act, so no man can understand well Divine things, unless he be in a Divine state, and therefore no unconverted person can in that state have this knowledge. Who can behold that which he turns his back upon? He that turns his back upon the Sun may see the Earth, but not the sun in that posture. The knowledge of God, a relation to him as his people, and a Covenant interest in him as their God were all founded upon a turning to him with the whole heart, Jer. 24. 7. For they shall return unto me with their whole Heart. So Hos. 6. 1. 3. First let us return to the Lord, then shall we know. 'Tis then that God pours out the spirit as a living spring, and gives him to be our Tutor and Instructor in Divine Learning, to make known his words to us, when we turn at his reproof, Prov. 1. 23. Then shall we view every thing with a new Light, and see something more in God, his Word, and Ways, than we did before, as men when they begin to study some Art, look upon all things in a new manner and form, according to the rules of that Art, they are engag'd in. An unregenerate man cannot have lively and quick apprehensions of God, no more than a blind man can frame a true and distinct conception of colours and Light, notwithstanding his hearing several discourses about the essential properties of them. As sense only can perceive visible objects, and reason rational, so spiritual sense only can perceive spiritual objects. A natural man can no more judge of spiritual things as spiritual, than a beast can judge of the excellency of moral vertue. Saving knowledge of God in order of nature follows Regeneration, though the Historical knowledge of God the object precedes it, for God being the object of Religion and conversion must be known, before any act can be exercised about them.

5. Obedience and purity of Heart is the way to encrease this knowledge. The freer the eye is from bad humors, the more able it is delightfully to behold the Sun. In a full Righteousness Gods face is beheld hereafter, Psal. 17. 15. as for me I will behold thy face in Righteousness; and according to imperfect measures of Righteousness we behold his face here. Our Saviour makes purity to precede, and the sight of God to follow, Matth. 5. 8. The pure in Heart shall see God. The more the Heart is purifyed, the more the mind is clear'd to have an insight into the things of God: Whereas a defil'd Heart sends out steams to mud the understanding, as a foul stomach raiseth vapors to disturb the head. Purity prepares the soul for a more free and constant residence of the spirit the great Instructor. He is a Dove, and Doves care not for foul and polluted places; as the foul spirit loves a polluted lodging, ing, ſo doth the Holy ſpirit a pure ſoul. He that fears God is the ſubject of Gods Teaching, Pſal. 25. 12. But to leave off to do good, is to leave off to be wiſe, Pſal. 36. 3. Moſes hid his face and was afraid to look upon God, Exod. 3. 6. which the Jews underſtand of a fear of Reverence, and for that cauſe (they ſay) he was rewarded with a ſight of the ſimilitude of God, Numb. 12. 8, 9. and indeed the fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wiſdom, i. e. the firſt foundation divine wiſdom layes in building her houſe in any ſoul. God required a three dayes purification of the Iſraelites, before he would diſpence the Law and admit them to a knowledge of his will; and is not a purity requiſite to a knowledge of his nature? To think to ſee God without purity in the ſoul, is as if we ſhould imagine we could behold viſible objects without a Chryſtalline humor in the ball of the eye. He that doth Gods will ſhall know the doctrine of Chriſt, Joh. 7. 17. As in practical Arts the skill is encreaſed more by working than ſtudying, ſo is the knowledge of God encreaſed by the practice of what we know. God delights to be obeyed, and where he is obeyed he delights to give greater diſcoveries of himſelf, both to encourage and direct to a further obedience. As Chriſt by his obedience had the Communications of God to him, ſo ſhall we by our obedience have the Communications of Chriſt to us, which he calls an abiding in his love, John 15. 10. A purified ſoul is more capable of Divine beams than a ſharp wit. Plato could ſay, That after a walking with God, or a τὸ συζῆν, a living with him, a certain Light breaks out upon us as from fire, and falls upon our ſouls.

Τήρησις τῶν ἐντολῶν γνῶσις τοῦ θεοῦ Baſil.

6. Humliity. If Grace be given to the humble, the Grace of the beſt knowledg is not excluded from Gods liberality. We gain it ſooner by an humble Contemplation than proud wranglings. As to obey God we muſt deny our wills, ſo to know him we muſt deny our Reaſons; Will muſt ſubmit to Precept, and Reaſon to Revelation. Agur acknowledged himſelf brutiſh, who came behind none of his age unleſs Solomon in underſtanding, Prov. 30. 2. The humble perſon will quickly be a Scholar in this Learning, when a Phariſee ſhall remain as ignorant as he is proud. God reveals himſelf to Babes, Matth. 11. 25. not to thoſe that conceit themſelves Giants. Thoſe that hear Chriſts voice muſt have the quality of Sheep. John 10. 4. The meek God acquaints with his choiceſt Truths, Pſalm 25. 9. The meek will he teach his way. As God knows the proud afar off, Pſal. 138. 6. So doth the proud man know God afar off. 'Tis not poſſible when God beholds him at a great diſtance, that he can behold God. A proud Scholar and a Dove-like Teacher can never accord. God humbles himſelf; Pſal. 113. 6. we muſt be like him, if we would underſtand him. Chriſt was meek and lowly; he is never like to be a Learner who imitates not his maſters pattern. Eſpecially when in this humiliation of Chriſt the Attributes of God ſhone out brighter than in Creation or general Providence. What God required in his ſon as a medium for the diſcovery of himſelf, he will require in us to make us capable of a Communication of that knowledge. We are never fit to hear God, till we hear with ſubmiſſion. Humility brings us into ſuch a poſture, it takes away the blocks which ly in the way of ſaving Truth. It drives away inconſideration, ſilenceth contradictions againſt the Truth, and ſtifles curioſity. If we will not therefore ſlight Gods direction, we muſt be fools that we may be wiſe, 1 Cor. 3. 18. Our dulneſs doth grieve Chriſt, but not ſo much as our conceitedneſs. Chriſt ſpake in parables to the arrogant Phariſees, but he repeated his inſtructions to his humble Diſciples, though he reprov'd them for their dulneſs. The pride and curioſity of this age ſets men back in the knowledge of God, but it is likely a ſharp lance is not far off to cut the ſwelling.

7. Heavenly Meditation. An heavenly mind hath brighter and more delightful apprehenſions of God than all the carnal World. The purer the Air we live in, the more active and ſtrong is the body; the Air of Heaven quickens the underſtanding and clears the ſight. By Meditation we enter within the vail and behold his Glory. He meets thoſe that humbly aſpire to him; frequent aſcents of the mind to God is the way to attain the manifeſtations of him, Exod. 19. 3. When Moſes went up to God *, (which the Jews underſtand of an intellectual aſcent, an aſcent of Meditation,) ditation) the Lord called to him out of the mount, that they understand of his Corporeal Ascent. Abstraction is necessary to this best of Sciences. If we are thus out of the Body, we may with Paul hear and know things which are unutterable. The senses of the soul, which are as real, and have as real operations about their proper objects, as the external senses of sight and taste have about sensible objects, are thus to be exercis'd; and when they are so, it makes us capable of stronger meat and more spiritual knowledge, Heb. 5. 14. Without this we cannot come to a knowledge of God; Who can know the Sun, if he shuts his Eyes? or understand Musick, if he stop his Ears? and know God, if he never stirs up his Understanding about him. * We use the Faculties and senses which are proper for the Objects propos'd: If Musick be presented, we employ our Ears; If the Sun shine, we use our Eyes, not our Ears; If we would know God, we must employ our Minds, they can only be conversant about him. By this ascent of Meditation, we may see more of God in a Moment, than otherwise we can do in an Age; as a man may see more of London upon the top of the Exchange in half a quarter of an hour, than he can by going about in many days or standing in one street many years. But let our Affections keep an equal pace with our Meditations, that the heart may be enflam'd with a divine Love. Endeavour to have a savour of Christs oyntments, Cant. 1. 3. We shall then profit more in the knowledge of God in a week, than without blowing up our Affections, we shall do in many years; for then God will communicate himself to us with a more Cordial Affection, than we can embrace him.

* Maximus Tyrius Dis. 1. pag. 11.

8. Communication of what knowledge of God we have upon occasion. Talents improv'd, increase, Luk. 19. 17. Increase in the Act, and increase by a Reward. Let not what knowledge you have, lye bound up in a rotten Napkin as a useless thing; but venture it, and you will find a quick return. What knowledge of God we have laid out, is lent to God, as well as what we give out of our purses to the poor, and God is no insolvent or careless Debtor to his own promise; he hath bound himself to pay the less, and so he will the greater. We gain by imparting, as the Husbandman flings his grain into the ground with hopes of an encreasing Crop.

9. Affect Christian Society. Every Christian is a King and Priest to God, and why not also a Prophet to his Brother? If a man will converse with Divine Persons, Light will break in upon him as flame from a sparkling fire. He that would gain knowledge, would converse with the best Company. The daughters of Jerusalem were askt by the Spouse for her Beloved, when she was upon the pursuit to find him, Cant. 5. 8. The meanest Christian may be of use in this. The lower Plants have more of Medicine in them, than many taller Shrubs. Nay Apollos learned more of Christ from Priscilla, than from the Apostles themselves. God often blesseth the weaker above the stronger means, to show that he is not tyed to any.

Let me conclude all with the speech of a Heathen. * O quàm contempta res est homo, nisi supra humana se erexerit! If we would have life Eternal, the way by our Saviours prescription is, to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent.

* Seneca Præfat. ad Natural. Quæst.

A DISCOURSE OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD IN CHRIST.

JOHN XVII. III.

And this is Life Eternal, that they might know thee the onely true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.

THere were Two Principal Doctrines pitcht on, at the beginning of this Discourse.

Doctrine I. The Knowledge of God, and Christ the Mediator, is the necessary means to Eternal Life and Happiness.

Doctrine II. The true and saving Knowledge of God, is onely in and by Christ.

God and Jesus Christ.] Some make an Hendiadis here, for God in Christ. As 2 Pet. 1. 2. Through the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ, i.e. through the knowledge of God in Christ; and ver. 3. Hath given us all things pertaining to life and godliness, i.e. to a Godly Life; and ver. 4. who hath called us to glory and virtue; or & through Glory and Virtue, i.e. through a glorious Power; so Psal. 96. 7. Give unto the Lord glory and strength, i.e. the Glory of his strength. Gen 3. 16. I will multiply thy sorrow and thy Conception, i.e. thy sorrow in thy Conception, or of of thy Conception. To know God in Christ his Embassador. To know God the Father in Christ the Mediator; the Father being considered here as God, and Christ as Mediator; to know God as Christ hath declar'd him, as he speaks, ver. 6. I have manifested thy Name.

Since the lapse of Humane Nature, no man that understands his fallen Condition, can have any knowledge of God from the book of the Creatures, and the dictates of Nature, but what is terrible without a Mediator; and all Notions of God out of Christ, are below him, many times unworthy of him, and foul and undecent in themselves. Christ asserts it, Mat. 11. 27. All things are deliver'd to me of my Father, and no man knows the Son but the Father, neither knows any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him. All things were first deliver'd to Adam in the Creation, viz. the knowledge of God; and rectitude of Nature, to be by him transmitted to his Posterity. * But since Adam so foolishly and wickedly threw it away for a little pleasure, he render'd himself and his Posterity uncapable to know and enjoy God. God therefore pitches upon Christ in his secret Council, and stor'd up in him all the treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge, to shoot his Beams through him upon man; and convey by him, those good things which Adam had made himself, by his Fall, uncapable to communicate to his posterity. When our Saviour saith universally, All things are deliver'd to him, he instanceth in none but the knowledge of God, as the foundation of all those rich Communications which men receive from him; for without the Revelation of God the Father to Man, Man would be uncapable to partake of those Riches intended for him by the Mediation and Interposition and Furniture of the Son of God; and therefore Joh. 3. 35. when it is said, The Father hath given all things into his hand, it follows, He that believes on the Son hath Eternal Life: The End why all things are given into his hand, is to convey to man such a knowledge of God, that men might be induc'd to believe in Christ, and in God through Christ. Between the Father and the Son there is a Communion of Knowledge; none knows the Son, but the Father, none knows the Father but the Son: none makes known the Son, and what things he hath deliver'd into his hand, but the Father by the Spirit; and none knows the Father and his Mind and Affections to Man, and the Relation his Nature and Perfections bear to him, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him, by the outward preaching of the Word, and the inward illumination of his Spirit; and upon this Christ makes a general invitation, Come unto me, all ye that Labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest: that labour under, and are heavy laden with your ignorance and darkness in the things of God, as well as with other Miseries, and I will give you such a Revelation and knowledge of the Father, wherein you shall find a Rest, and complacency. Another place is Joh. 14. 9. He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father; where Philip, in his desiring of Christ to show him the Father, takes it for granted, that the knowledge of the Father was only to be expected by and from Christ. Though he discovers his infirmities in his Petition, implying that the Father was to be seen with corporeal eyes, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us; Christ answers with a reproof for his Ignorance, and inadvertency, he that hath seen me, hath seen the Father. The Son hath render'd the Father spiritually visible in his Person; his Excellency, Majesty, and unexpressible kindness to Man, shine forth in Christ as a lively and clear image; and there is so exact a resemblance and so near a conjunction, that as he speaks, ver. 7. If we know Christ, we know the Father also, because Christ hath reveal'd him by his Doctrine and Word, and the Holiness, Righteousness, Tenderness of God are made visible in the Transaction of Christ, and God is represented in the Person and Doctrine of Christ more clearly than in all the Apparitions and Evidences of himself to the Patriarchs and Prophets.

One place more, 2 Cor. 4. 4, 6. Christ is said to be the image of God, and that God hath shin'd in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Where the Apostle expresseth two things, 1. That Christ is the Image of God. 2. That the knowledge of the glory of God, or the glorious God, is discover'd in the face, or Person of Christ. He is the Image of God; he is indeed the essential Image of God; the natural Image of God possessing in one Essence with the Father all the Glories and perfections of the Deity. A ſubſtantial and permanent image, not vaniſhing as that in a glaſs; A natural Image, as the Image of a Father in his Son, who hath the Lineaments of the Father by participation from him; not as the Image of a Prince in his Coyn, which is Artificial. Subſtantial Image of God; not in regard of likeneſs, for every thing that is like another, is not ſaid to be the Image of that thing which it is like; but that which bears a figure impreſt by another, and expreſſeth that whoſe figure it is; as one man may be like another, yet is not ſaid to be the Image of another, as a Son is ſaid to be the Image of his Father. Not ſuch an Image of God as man is, who is rather ſaid to be created according to the Image of God, than to be the Image of God; ſuch an Image as in Creation was like to God, not one with God. Chriſt is ſuch an Image of God, as if ſhining upon the Soul in the Goſpel, can turn the Heart; which man, tho' the Image of God, cannot perform. Chriſt is therefore the Image of God, as a Child is the Image of his Father; not in regard of the individual property which the Father hath diſtinct from the Child, and the Child from the Father, but in reſpect of the ſame ſubſtance and nature, deriv'd from the Father by Generation. Chriſt is here called the Image of God, not ſo much, ſaith Calvin, in relation to God as the Father is the exemplar of his Beauty and Excellency, as in relation to us, as he repreſents the Father to us in the Perfections of his Nature, as they reſpect us and our welfare, and renders him viſible to the eyes of our Minds. And the Jews did often give this title to the Meſſiah *. So that in the ſight of Chriſt, we ſee God, as in the light of the ſtamp upon wax, we ſee what is engraven upon the Seal, which anſwers to it in exact proportion.

Baynes Col. 1. 15. pag. 75, 76.

Chriſt God-man is the Image of God, becauſe the humanity is taken into perſonal Union with the Son of God. His Humanity abſtractedly conſider'd was no more the Image of God, than Adam was by Creation. And he is ſo the Image of God, that whoſoever hath ſeen him and known him, hath ſeen and known the Father alſo, which cannot be ſaid of a picture; for he that ſees a picture, cannot be ſaid to ſee the Object repreſented by the Picture, which expreſſeth only the outward figure, form and lineaments. But he is ſuch an image as repreſents the Nature, Features, Attributes and inward Virtues of God. A picture is but a ſhadow, but Chriſt is a ſubſtantial Image of God, wherein the Divinity dwells bodily, Col. 2. 9.

There is alſo a diſcovery of God in the face of Chriſt. Since the Divine Nature falls not under the perceptions of ſenſe, nor can be immediately known in it ſelf by the Underſtandings of men; it ſhines forth and ſparkles in the face of Chriſt, and diffuſeth it ſelf about the World. * By knowing Chriſt, who is Man, we know God; becauſe the Humane Nature of Chriſt is perſonally aſſum'd by the Son of God: As he that ſees the body of a man, ſees the man conſiſting of Soul and Body, becauſe the ſoul and body are united together and make one compoſition, though the ſoul in it ſelf be inviſible: ſo he that ſees the Humane Nature of Chriſt is rightly ſaid to ſee God, becauſe the Humane and Divine Nature are perſonally united in Chriſt, though the Divinity be in it ſelf inviſible; and indeed we cannot conceive any other ſight and knowledge of God in Heaven, but in Chriſt. The Viſion of Chriſt in his glorified Humane Nature, is a ſeeing of God face to face. So that whoſoever ſees Chriſt with his bodily eyes, or with the eyes of his Mind, ſees God; he ſees and knows God, not immediately and directly, but mediately and conſequently. As the Prophets were ſaid to ſee the Lord, 1 King. 22. 19. Micaiah ſaw the Lord ſitting upon his Throne: And Iſa. 6. 1. I ſaw the Lord upon his Throne. They ſaw not God immediately, but in thoſe forms wherein he was pleas'd to appear as the ſymbols of his preſence: and as John Baptiſt ſaw the Spirit of God, Mat. 3. 16. in the form of a Dove; not the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, but in the form wherein he appear'd, yet is ſaid to ſee the Spirit of God; the Father and the Son, having one Nature and Eſſence, when the Son is known, the Father is known.

1. All the knowledge that any man hath of God, is from and by Chriſt. Every man that hath any ſaving light, hath it derivatively from him; he is the light that enlightens every every man that comes into the world, Joh. 1. 9. Every man that is enlightned, is enlightned by him. No other light can diſpel that darkneſs which is upon our Minds in relation to God, but this light. What knowledge any man hath of God by reaſon and natural light, is by the Mediation of Chriſt; whereby are kept up in men whatſoever gifts they had by their fall forfeited; and whatſoever ſaving knowledge any man hath of God, is by the ſpecial illumination of this true light by the virtue of his Spirit. Neither our natural Reaſon is the true Light, becauſe it is blind in ſpiritual things; nor the Word is the true light, becauſe it cannot make men ſavingly intelligent, without the ſhining of this true light upon them. And this the Church expected by the Meſſiah, Hoſ. 6. 3. Then ſhall we know the Lord, at his going forth prepar'd as the morning, when he ſhall come as the rain, as the former and the latter rain *; when he ſhall inſtill into us the Divine Doctrine, and open our Hearts as the Rain doth the Womb of the Earth: We ſhall then know, when he ſhall come to teach men the ways of Life, as a Jew expounds it.

2. No man hath, can have, or ever had any knowledge of God without Chriſt, Joh. 1. 18. No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son which is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declar'd him. Which is aſſerted by John Baptiſt againſt the Jews, who boaſted much of Moſes his ſight of God, and knowledge of his ſecrets. No man hath ſeen God from the firſt Creation of the World to this day, not a man of all the Patriarchs and Prophets ever knew God but by the Revelations of Chriſt. By ſeeing, we muſt not underſtand a corporeal ſight, (for no man ever did or can ſee God with his bodily eyes) but an intellectual or ſpiritual Viſion, which the Antitheſis [But he hath reveal'd him] manifeſts. Chriſt is only capable to declare to us the nature and Counſels of God, becauſe he is his only Son, had an intimate communion with him; was, and is continually in his boſom, wherein the ſecrets of God were laid up, and was before the World intereſted in his ſecret Counſels, and knew the bottom of all; he hath expounded his Will, unfolded his Nature *. None elſe can reveal him, nor can the Revelations of any inferior to him in this priviledge, challenge a full Credit with any man. Moſes himſelf ſaw God only in Chriſt; he was put in a hole of the Rock, Exod. 33. 22. which in the judgment of the Ancients, and ſome Moderns, was a figure of Chriſt. None can ſee and know God but in this Rock Jeſus; the name which God then proclaim'd, is only declar'd by Chriſt, Joh. 17. 6. I have manifeſted thy name unto the men which thou gaveſt me. And that which we call the light of Nature, and the light of the Law, is gather'd up and center'd in Chriſt; as that light which was in the World before the fourth day of the Creation, was gather'd and embodied in the Sun, and from thence flow'd to the World; all the light was created to be brought into that Body, and to flow from thence upon the ſeveral parts of the World, and to be communicated from thence to other Creatures; ſo that there is no clear light in the World, but from and by the Sun; and no clear Light of the Knowledge of God, but from and by Chriſt. Some therefore make the Sun a natural Type of Chriſt; as the Sun was created the fourth day of the Creation, ſo Chriſt was Incarnate about the four thouſandth year of the World, the fourth Divine Day; a thouſand years being as a day in Gods ſight; all light was only to flow from it, and indeed all the light of the knowledge of God that ever was, did ſpring from Chriſt: None ever knew God by his own ſtrength and natural Abilities, but as they were kept up and animated by the Mediator.

* Ἐξηγήσατο.

And by the way we may obſerve, That the knowledge of God is more, than the knowledge of the Will of God. He hath declared him. Chriſt declared more than the Will of God, as it was a Rule of Obedience; he declar'd Gods Perfections as a ground of the creatures Confidence, as an incitement to Admiration, and a motive to obedience: He declar'd not only the Will of God, what we are to do; but the intention of God, what we are to hope for; the glory of God, what we are to adore and admire.

In the Proſecution of this, we ſhall ſhew

I. What kind of mediums there have been to know God, and how they come ſhort of this.

II. That

II. That the ſaving knowledge of God is attain'd only by the knowledge of Chriſt.
III. The neceſſity of this Medium.
IV. What Knowledge of God is diſcover'd to us by Chriſt.
V. The Uſe.

I. What kind of Mediums there have been to know God, and how they come ſhort of this way of Knowledge.

1. There is a natural Knowledge of God.

(1.) By implanted notion. Some queſtion whether there be any natural knowledge of God imprinted upon man, or the knowledge of any one thing naturally planted in him, but as he grows up (ſay they) he acquires a knowledge of things from the Objects of ſenſe, and improvement of them by the Underſtanding he is endow'd with, and making deductions and concluſions by the help of Reaſon arrives to an apprehenſion of things. Yet this knowledge of God may be called natural, becauſe by the view of the viſible things in the World, natural reaſon frames a certain concluſion that there is a God, the cauſe of thoſe Excellencies he ſees in the Creatures. But the Scripture ſeems to intimate a notion of God in the minds of men, Rom. 1. 19. That which may be known of God is manifeſt in them, for God hath ſhown it unto them: a Notion within, an Excitation of it by Objects without: That there is an internal light which doth manifeſt him, as well as an external evidence of him by the creatures. But whether this be the import of this Scripture or no, moſt underſtand no more by manifeſt in them, than manifeſt to them. Yet ſince there is a law of Nature in men, which is the Rule of the excuſings or accuſings of the Conſcience, in regard of which they are ſaid to be a law to themſelves, Rom. 2. 15. and the work of the law ſaid to be written in their hearts; the notion of a ſuperior Power to which man is accountable for his actions, muſt be as natural as that; becauſe it is the foundation of the Actings of Conſcience; and the ſuperſtructure being from an implanted light, is not like to be without a foundation of the ſame kind. To what purpoſe ſhould Conſcience accuſe, if there were not a ſupream Being under whoſe cenſure ſuch actions did fall? and ſince the Heathens had a natural ſentiment, that the extravagances they were guilty of, were worthy of death, Rom. 1. 32. they muſt alſo have as natural a ſentiment, that there was a Judge of abſolute power to inflict that death upon them, which their own Conſciences told them they were worthy of. Since there are therefore natural agitations of Conſcience rais'd up by the Law of Nature within them; the notion of a God ſeems to me to be as natural, as that Law of Nature, and thoſe motions of Conſcience. And tho' this was more clear in man at his Creation, and while he remain'd in the ſtate of Innocency, yet it is not blotted out of the mind of Man. Though the notions of God in men are dimn'd by the fumes of their corruption; yet they cannot ſtifle this inward light and impreſſion, any more than the thickeſt Fogs can blot out the Sun or hinder it from making day. And all the outward Objects which we ſee in the World, whence we argue that there is a God, ſeem only to revive and awaken that implanted notion, which lay cover'd with the rubbiſh of the Fall. For upon the firſt view of things, with what eaſe doth this ſentiment riſe up in our Minds? And nothing is more obvious, nothing more eaſily entertain'd than this, that there is a God, and that this God is a mighty, powerful, and perfect Being; which evidenceth that there is a ſpark of it, in the mind of man, which catches the outward flame ſo quickly upon its approach, as the ſnuff of a Candle not quite extinguiſh'd, will ſnatch and attract the flame of another which comes near unto it.

Jupiter eſt quodcunque vides, quodcunque moveatur. Lucan.

(2.) By the Creatures. The viſible World and every part of it is a book, wherein we may read ſome ſyllables of God. The Heathens ſaw God in Heaven, Earth, Fire, Water, Plants and Animals; all creatures being lines drawn from that Center. Though man hath not the knowledge which Adam had, ſince the flaw he contracted upon his underſtanding, yet there being ſome ſcatter'd Reliques of this knowledge, he may, by looking near to the creatures, diſcern, by his purblind

and

and dim sight, something of the Attributes of God, every creature being a glass which reflects some beams of God upon his Mind: for no man in his Wits, can conclude that the World was made by chance; but by some Being, more Wise than any Being in the World can be, or than all the wisest Men in the World put together. We know the Courage, Conduct, and Power of a General by the sight of his Conquests; the skilfulness of an Artificer, by the excellency of his Work; and the Eloquence of an Orator, by reading his Speech; though we never saw the faces of any of them. There are very few Attributes, but the Works of Creation and Providence discover in some measure to us; for the invisible things of God from the Creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal Power and Godhead, Rom. 1. 20. These two perfections are clearly seen; his Infinite Power, which discovers also his Eternity; and his incomprehensible Goodness, which is the most signal glory of the Divinity *. The beauty of the World acquaints us with the excellency of him that erected it, and the order of the World instructs us in the Wisdom of him that compos'd it. This discovery hath been ever since the Creation; From the creation of the World; from the time the World, and the things therein were first created. He imprinted some Letters of himself upon this frame of things, at the first rearing of it, wherein they have been ever since legible; you may see by the Letter whose Print it was, and what skill he had, who made the impression. Thus God brings the creatures successively upon the Stage to Job, and reads a natural History of them; he sends him to consider the foundations of the Earth, the bridled vastness of the Sea, &c. Job 38, 39, 40. chap.

* Amyraut. Paraph.

[1.] The Power of God is evident. In bringing forth a fair World out of nothing, which manifests an Infinite strength. In packing together all parts for conveniency of Life and Motion, in so little a creature as a Fly and Ant. In stretching out the Heavens like a curtain, laying the beams of his Chambers in the Waters. In setting bounds to the mighty Waters that they turn not again to cover the Earth.

[2.] The Wisdom of God. In the Order, Variety, and Beauty; In the great resemblances of Reason in some little creatures, as the Ants and Bees, which could hardly be suppos'd to have Bodies capable of Spirits, for managing those tasks they naturally undertake; In the ordering every thing to a particular and general End; the subserviency of one creature to another; the constant order they observe in their motions, as if they were sensible of a Law, and were rational observers of it. The Moon is appointed for Seasons, and the Sun knows his going down; the observation of which, drew from the Psalmist that admiration, Oh Lord how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all, Psal. 104. 24. A Lecture of the Creation.

[3.] The Goodness of God. The earth is full of his riches, Psal. 104. 24. full of the goodness of the Lord; In communicating to every Creature various endowments for their usefulness to one another, and furnishing them with abilities to attain their ends; (every providence is a witness of this Attribute, Act. 14. 17.) In the plentiful provision he hath made for his creatures; In causing the grass to grow for the cattle, and herbs for the service of man, that he may bring forth food out of the earth. Whosoever was the cause of the creation, must have Understanding, Will, and Power; Understanding to contrive, Will to resolve, and Power to perform. Wisdom is the product of the Understanding, Goodness communicates the fruit of the Will, Power executes and brings the contrivance and resolve into Act.

[4.] The Immutability of God may be known by the Creatures. Since every creature, the more subject to change, the more it partakes of Imperfection, God, the Cause of all, must be Immutable, otherwise he would want that perfection which is in the Sun and Heavenly Bodies, wherein no change hath been observed.

[5.] His Eternity, which is inseparable from Infinite Power. He must be before what was made by him in time.

[6.] His Omniscience. He must know every thing exactly which he hath made, and nothing in his creatures can be hid from him; As a workman knows every part and motion of his work.

[7.] His

[7.] His Soveraignty. In the obedience his Creatures pay to him, in observing their several orders, and moving in the spheres wherein he set them.

[8.] The spirituality of God. Because he is not visible; and the more spiritual any creature in the World is, the more pure it is. Besides, if God were a body, he would be compounded of various parts, and the parts would be in order of Nature before the whole, and God would depend upon those parts.

[9.] The sufficiency of God for himself. Since all creatures had a beginning, God had no need of creating them; for being from Eternity before the World, he had no more need of it in time, than he had before time.

[10.] His Majesty. In the glory and lustre of the Heavens which are his Throne, Isa. 60. 1. and a clear looking glass to represent in their Essence, Magnitude and motion, not only the Being but the glory of God, more Majestically than any earthly creature.

[11.] From all which may be concluded, the manner how God ought to be worshipped. As a mighty Being, clothed with all those Perfections as with a garment; so that he cannot be represented by the Image of any one creature. For since he hath made all, he cannot be limited by the Perfections of any one, because he is the boundless fountain of the Perfections of all. Nature therefore can never teach men to worship God in Images, unless they were able to frame one in which they could gather and store up the perfections of all creatures; and that is as impossible for any or all Creatures to perform, as to make a God. All this is as intelligible to a rational creature by nature, as the shining of the Sun is visible; the one is as evident in the works of creation to our Reason, as the other is to our Sense. All this may be known of God by the creation, and it is a true (tho' not a full) discovery of God. 'Tis called truth, Rom. 1. 18, 25. Change the truth of God into a lye. We may as truly conclude all this of God, by the prospect of the creation, * as a man might conclude the Wisdom, Power, and Magnificence of the Romans, by the sight of their Pyramids, Theaters, Statues, Buildings and other conveniencies in the City for the People: for it is a Rational way of Arguing, from the excellency of the Effect, to the excellency of the Cause; and from the perfection of the creature, to the perfection of God. No man can behold the visible World, and take a view of the excellency of any creature, but must conclude an higher excellency in God; because it is impossible for that which is a solitary cause, to give that to another, which it doth not possess in it self in a formal way or a way of eminency; yet because there is an imperfection in every creature, we must sift the flower of the creature from this bran, when we would frame any conception of the excellency of God by it. As we know the nature of the Sea by a drop of water from it, yet we imagine the Sea a great Mass of those drops unconceivably vaster than a drop. So when we conceive of God according to any perfection in the creature, we add a Purity, Spirituality and Infiniteness to that perfection which we conceive.

* Ochino Prædic. Par. 2. prædic. 2. p. 5.

(3.) By the nature of our Souls. Had God made only man, and one small place for him to be in, without those Ornaments of the World, he might have arriv'd to more knowledge of God by his own Being, and make, and glossing upon his own nature, than by any thing in the World. The Soul being a Spirit, and the noblest of all Beings upon the Earth, approaching nearest the nature of God, the contemplation of that, renders God more intelligible to us than all material things, whose nature is more unlike to the nature of God. As the Sun is more visible through a thin cloud, than a thicker Fog and vail which obscures it. There is more of God to be found in the little Central point of the Soul, than in the large circumference of the World *; and a clearer impression of some great and unconceivable Being is upon our Souls, than upon any creature under Heaven; and whosoever will retire within himself, cannot but perceive some characters of a supream Being in his own Nature; the Soul was lighted by God, and created according to the Image of God, and is the

the exacteſt image of God under Heaven *. By conſidering the nature of our own ſouls we may come to ſome knowledg of the original and copy, as we have clearer apprehenſions of the Sun by the image of it imprinted upon a glaſs, or other tranſparent body than we can have by any other Creature, though the image of the Sun be much leſs glorious than the Sun it ſelf whoſe image it is. The mind of Man can pierce every thing, it can conceive of Angels, deſcend into the bottom of the deep, aſcend to the battlements of Heaven, 'tis not confounded by the miſts of the Air, or checked by the diſtance of the Heavens; command your mind to paſs from one end of the World to the other, it will perform the order as ſoon as it is given; what is quicker than thought, which can skip from Earth to Heaven, from Heaven to Earth in a moment; can there be a greater ſhadow of the Omnipreſence and Immenſity of God? The ſoul hath a memory to regiſter actions and things done many years ago. It can bring out things new and old; what higher reſemblance of the Omniſcience of God? 'Tis not compoſed of the factious principles of Elements. It hath not the dregs of matter mixt with it; in this it repreſents the ſpirituality of God. 'Tis indefatigable in its motions, it is never tir'd in governing the body, our bodies that are courſe pieces of Earth flag and languiſh when the ſoul remains vigorous, and this repreſents the indefatigableneſs of Gods Providence. It can ſubſiſt without the body; it doth not in all its motions depend upon it, it can reflect upon it ſelf without it, view and pleaſe it ſelf in its own perfections abſtracted from the body which ſhadows to us the ſelf-ſufficiency of God. Thus as a Landskip or draught of a great houſe or Kingdom repreſents all the parts of that Land or Houſe, yet in a far leſs proportion than the houſe or Territory is in it ſelf, and when we ſee thoſe models we do not conceive the things repreſented to be of no bigger ſize than the pictures of them, but of a far greater proportion; ſo we may contemplate God in the model of our own ſouls, and ſince we know that we have underſtanding and will, we conclude that God hath underſtanding and will in a more tranſcendent manner, ſtill enlarging to infiniteneſs in him what we obſerve of our ſelves when we transfer it to God. Yet though we may have ſo much knowledge of God by the Creatures and by our ſouls, how little do we contemplate God? How far do we come ſhort of this natural knowledge and the improvement of it? How much ſhorter of the knowledge of God in Chriſt, which is infinitely more excellent and glorious? All the knowledge drawn from the Creatures is inſufficient to repreſent God. The knowledge of God by Nature and Creatures is neceſſary, as a foundation for higher apprehenſions and for turning to God. Men without it would be wholly brutiſh and uncapable of inſtructions in Chriſtianity as an Oxe or a Sheep; and though men deſerved by Sin to be depriv'd of this natural knowledge, yet God kept it up as a ſtock on which in time to engraft other principles in the diſcovery of Chriſt. All nature is incapable of diſcovering God in a full manner as he may be known. Nature like Zacheus is of too low a ſtature to ſee God in the length and breadth, height and depth of his perfections: The key of mans reaſon anſwers not to all the wards in the lock of thoſe myſteries. The World at beſt is but a ſhadow of God, and therefore cannot diſcover him in his magnificent and royal vertues, no more than a ſhadow can diſcover the outward beauty, the excellent meen, and the inward endowments of the perſon whoſe ſhadow it is. All that a ſhadow will inform me of, is whether it be the ſhadow of a man or brute. It diſcovers ſomething of God, not ſo much of him as to give the ſoul a full complacency; the fruit of it is but a thirſt without a ſatisfaction.

* Τὶ ἄγαλμα Θεῦ a ſtatue of God.

[1.] Innocent nature could never have been, in that ſtate, acquainted with the perfections of God in ſuch a manner as they are diſcovered in Chriſt.

(1) Some perfections of Gods nature could not have been known. Where had there been any place for the diſcovery of patience without a provocation, or for punitive juſtice without a tranſgreſſion, or for pardoning mercy without an offence? There had been no occaſion for the exerciſe of any of them, and therefore we cannot conceive how there could be a manifeſtation of them, without objects convenient for them to be converſant about. Innocent man was the object of Gods goodneſs, offending man only of his patience; innocence is the ſubject of love, injury of Anger. All thoſe glorious eminencies of Gods Nature, had lain under a thick vail, impoſſible to be diſcern'd by the eye of man. But thoſe Attributes were brought upon the ſtage, by the entrance of ſin, which was permitted to enter for the manifeſtation of them in and through Chriſt, Rom. 5. verſe 15, 20. The Law entred that the offence might abound to make way for the abundance of Grace. Some Attributes of God could not have been diſcover'd by any proceeding of his, at leaſt in ſuch an height and eminency but in Chriſt, as the wonders of his Grace, the loud ſounding of his bowels: and compaſſions, the purity of his Holineſs, and the dreadfulneſs of his Juſtice, his Creating perfections might have been ſeen by Adam and his poſterity, his Redeeming perfections are only diſplay'd in his ſon. The World as created was not capable of giving occaſion for the manifeſtation of thoſe Attributes, but the World as fallen; the not being of the World gave occaſion to God to manifeſt his glory as a Creator, but the lapſed ſtate of the World gave occaſion to God to manifeſt his glory as a Redeemer; for how could there be Mercy ſhewn, if Mans miſery did not need it? How could there be vindictive juſtice, if Mans tranſgreſſion did not deſerve it? How could there be a promiſe of reſtoration by the ſeed of the Woman, if Mans degeneracy did not want it? God had not been known in one letter of his name as it is ſet down, Exod. 34. 6, 7. but in the Redeemer. Not one tittle of his name there deſcribed had been known to the Sons of men, had they continued in innocency, nor after the fall, but in and by Chriſt the Mediator. 'Tis in him he diſcovers himſelf a God Merciful, Gracious, Long-ſuffering, and Abundant in Goodneſs, forgiving Iniquity, and by no means clearing the Guilty, but exacting ſatisfaction to his offended Juſtice for Sin. As though God was infinitely happy in himſelf, yet this happineſs could not have been diſcovered to any but himſelf, unleſs he had made Creatures wherein to diſplay his Goodneſs, and no being could have known him but himſelf, if there had been no being beſides himſelf: So without Chriſt God had not been known in his Redeeming perfections, becauſe there had been no baſis for the diſcovery of them, they had lain wrapt up in darkneſs from the Creature, and as they were a myſtery hid from ages till the diſcovery of Chriſt, ſo they had without him remain'd hid for ever from the notice of the World. And as thoſe Attributes had not been diſcovered, ſo the Creatures duty in relation to them could not have been exerciſed. God had wanted the manifeſtative Glory of his pardoning grace, and man had had no occaſion to return a thankfulneſs to God for it. He could not have humbled himſelf under Gods diſpleaſure, had there not been an occaſion to manifeſt his anger, nor could the infinite ſufficiency of God for his Creature have been known, nor prayers directed to him by his Creatures for relief; Nature could diſcover no more than what was imprinted on it by the God of Nature: The World ſtood in no need of Redemption by vertue of its Creation, but by vertue of its Tranſgreſſion and pollution.

(2.) Some perfections of Gods nature could not have been ſo clearly and fully known. The Creation was but the firſt draught of Gods perfections, and came much ſhort of the full declaration. As the firſt limning of a picture doth of expreſſing the features and beauty of the original till the ſecond and third draught, when the laſt hand is put and all the lines compleated. Though there were manifeſtations of Gods Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſs in the Creation, yet not in ſuch ſplendor as the occaſion of bringing forth Chriſt into the World did adminiſter for the illuſtrating of them. Theſe Attributes looked upon the World through a vail and lattice, but were not ſeen in their full luſtre till the coming of Chriſt drew the vail, and ſet them forth in their richeſt beauty. Here was infinite power in its ſtrength going forth like a Giant to run its race, Gods power over himſelf manifeſted, Wiſdom in a knot of Royal deſigns, and Goodneſs opening its richeſt Treaſures. The Holineſs of God could not have been clearly known; while man did not know what ſin was, he could never have ſtrong conceptions of the mighty hatred of God againſt it. Man had ſome underſtanding of it by Gods threatning, but he could not have ſuch clear notices of it by his commination, as upon the entrance of ſin by the execution, and that upon our Saviour. Nor had the veracity of God been ſo evident. It would have been known but in the half, or on one ſide, in the making good his promise upon mans obedience, but never would have been understood experimentally (which is the cleerest and most infallible way of knowledge) in his threatning, unless sin had invaded the World, and so had given occasion to the manifestation of Gods Truth to his Word of threatning, as mans persisting in an unerring and unspotted obedience would have given only occasion to manifest his Truth to his Word of promise. These vertues of God were in the Creation like a lovely Diamond under a piece of Linnen, which emits some sparklings, but is not discerned in its full lustre till the covering be removed. Christ drew the vail from them and manifested them in their fullest glory. The Angelical nature had no prospect of these things we have spoken of by their standing before the face of God, but by the discovery of them to the Church in their great head, Eph. 3. 10. And it is likely from that and other places, that though they had a notice of the Redemption of Man by the first promise of the seed of the Woman made to Man, and by the glorifying some of Mankind, and the Providences of God in the World, yet they were ignorant of the great wayes and methods of it, till they came upon the stage in the discovery of the Son of Gods taking miserable flesh to dye in it. So uncapable is the best created Nature to discern the glory of God without the face of Christ.

(3.) Innocent nature could never arrive to a full knowledge of Gods nature by the Attributes discover'd in Creation without some further revelation of him. The whole Creation was the work of Gods hands, but no work can fully express the Nature of the Artificer. We may know by a Watch, or Clock, or a curious piece of Tapistry, that the workman was skilful in his Art, that a more exact piece never came out of any hand; but by his curiosity in his work we cannot give a description of his person and disposition without other acquaintance with him. We can know nothing of God by the Creatures but as they stand in the relation to God as effects to their cause, and when the cause doth much transcend the effect, the cleerest understanding cannot by the knowledge of the effect arise to a full knowledg of the cause. God is infinitely above the fruits of his power in the World, therefore man in innocence could gain but little knowledge of him by a bare prospect of them. Nature discovers that there is a God, but not fully what that God is; nor doth the Creation furnish man with a notion of God suitable to the excellency and immensity of his Nature: as a blind man who hears a discourse of the light and heat of the Sun, being brought under the beams of it striking hot upon his body, feels the warmth and knows there is such a thing men call the Sun, and is sensible of some effects of it, but hath not a full Conception of the enlightning Nature of the Sun, nor knows what the body of the Sun is, nor what kind of shape it appears in, and if he should declare his Conception of it, it would be strangely different from the true Nature of the Sun, a monstrous mistaken description of it, not suitable to that Planet; nay what man is there that sees the Sun every day, that is able to say he fully knows the Nature of it by his sight, or the constant influences which he feels from it? The Conception of God is infinitely more above innocent Reason, than the conception of the Sun can be above lapsed natural Reason crackt by the fall. Since therefore all the Creatures cannot be a ground for Man to frame a true and right conception of God, what Adam had of this Nature was more from Revelation than Contemplation of the works of God; and since Adam was of the species of Man, what knowledge he had of God above what the effect of his power in the World did discover, he had by Revelation from God, since no man hath at any time seen or known God (taking in the beginning of time as well as the succession of time) but whatever intellectual vision any had of God, was by the declarations of the Son of God, John 1. 18.

[2. Corrupted nature is less able to know God by the Creation as he ought to be known since the fall. Since no natural light was strong enough to discover the wonders of God, corrupt reason can attain but a faint knowledge. The Providence of God after the entrance of Sin, display'd some of his Attributes which could not be manifested in an innocent state, viz. his forbearance and his justice; God did witness his Patience and Goodness to men in giving them Rain from Heaven, and fruitful sea-

ſons, and filling their Hearts with food and gladneſs, while he ſuffered them to walk in their own ways, Act. 14. 16, 17. and many of the Heathens were ſenſible of this goodneſs in ſome meaſure, when they obſerv'd how much the wickedneſs of the World deſerv'd the contrary, though moſt of them indeed deſpiſed the Riches of it, Rom. 2. 3, 4. Now and then ſome warning pieces of Judgments were ſhot off, whereby the World was ſtartled and made ſenſible of Anger in God. He now and then ſhot his darts into the Hearts of ſome, otherwiſe they would ſcarce have taken notice that there was a God that judgeth in the Earth. But there was nothing in all their obſervation that could diſcover any thing of God in Chriſt, the Union of two natures, the Doctrine of the Trinity of Perſons, which was neceſſary to the notion of Redemption, becauſe there was to be a perſon ſatisfying, and a perſon to whom the ſatisfaction was to be offer'd, and by whom it was to be received; one conſidered as the Rector, the other as the Mediator: this tranſaction was a myſtery hid in God from the beginning of the World, Eph. 3. 9. and diſcover'd to the Gentiles in the Apoſtles time, Col. 1. 26, 27. Now, made manifeſt to the Saints; not before, not a ſyllable of it communicated to Nature, it had then been no more a myſtery than any other thing that Nature declares. There were indeed ſome confuſed notions among ſome of the prime Philoſophers of a Trinity; and ſome Propheſies among the Sybills applicable to the Redeemer. The latter might have ſome glimmerings by Revelation, that thereby way might be made for the eaſier reception of the Goſpel by the Gentiles when it ſhould ſet foot in the World. The former i. e. The Philoſophers had alſo from a converſe with the Jews, into whoſe Country ſome of them had Travelled, or from the Jews which occaſionally reſided among them, or from the Phœnicians which were the Philiſtines of Canaan a Trading people, who by the neighbourhood of the Jews might learn and diſcover ſome maxims of their Religion: and they were alſo ſome of them acquainted with ſome parts of Scripture: Nature cannot challenge any thing in this affair. But the ſtrength of their natural light was more ſeen in a knowledge of the duty of Man to Man, than in the ſearching out God in the duties we owe to him, whence there are many diſcourſes extant of Juſtice, Temperance, Prudence and moral Vertues, very few of God and his Nature. And though men had by Tradition ſome notice of a Redeemer by the firſt promiſe, yet they were not able to conceive any thing of the Nature of God thereby, but that he was Patient and Gracious; but becauſe they could not conceive how this work ſhould be effected, they could not diſcern thoſe other Attributes of Holineſs, Wiſdom, Mercy, Juſtice in their bright beams, till the diſcovery of Chriſt in the Fleſh and upon the croſs. What knowledge men had by Tradition from the firſt promiſe, was quickly loſt among the corruptions of the old World, and though revived in the legal Ceremonies appointed to the Jews, yet they had not conceptions of the great intendments of them.

The inſufficiency of nature is ſeen.

[1.] In that by nature we cannot know the things of nature perfectly, much leſs the Author of nature *. If we know not the nature of the effects, how can we know the nature of the cauſe which infinitely excells them. There hath been a dimneſs in the Reaſon of man ever ſince the fall in reference to thoſe things which are before our eyes. We know not the World of which we are parts, we know not our ſelves though we dayly converſe with our ſelves, we underſtand not well the nature of our own ſouls, nor the reaſon of our own motions and actions: How then can nature help us to the underſtanding of the greater, when it doth not to the underſtanding of the leſs? How can we ariſe by the ſtrength of nature to the underſtanding of infinite Wiſdom and Power? If we are not able to arrive to ſuch a knowledge of the Creatures by weak nature, ſo as to give an eſſential definition of them: If the nature of a ſtone, ſound, colour doth poſe us, if all the queſtions put to us about a fly cannot be anſwer'd, how much leſs are we able to come to the knowledge of God with the ſtrength which is too weak for the other; if we are non-pluſt by Creatures much more by the Creator?

* Charron truis veritez. lib. 1. Chap. 5. p. 19. 20. changed.

[2.] Had nature been able in this affair, or had reaſon been ſufficient to know God and his Counſels concerning us what need of the miſſion of the Spirit? 'Tis he only

searcheth the deep things of God; no man knows the things of God, but the Spirit of God, and the end of his sending is, that we may know the things that are freely given us of God, 1 Cor. 2. 3. &c. all the reason of the World would never have arrived to the discovery of those perfections of God, they being infinitely above us, as our notions and thoughts are above the reach of a beast, which is never able to apprehend the nature of a man or understand the language of a man, whereby to come to a knowledge of him. Though reason puts us into a capability of entertaining the discoveries of him, without which neither outward declarations, nor inward impressions could work any thing upon us any more than upon a man remaining out of his wits, yet of it self it is not able to ascend to the conception of God without the Spirit of God. If men could have redeem'd themselves, what need of the expence of the bloud of Christ? So if men could have instructed themselves in this great knowledge, what need of the Spirit to lead us into the secret chambers of God? Wheresoever therefore any man knows God, and the things freely given him of God, i. e. the things of the Gospel, wherein the excellency and liberality of God most illustriously appears, 'tis the gift of the Spirit; and where any man hath an inward and spiritual tast of those things, 'tis the grace of the Spirit in him.

(3.) We find the highest improv'd nature had strange and unworthy notions of God and was ignorant of him. If the Athenians, the famousest people in the World for learning, and therefore of more refin'd understandings, confest their ignorance of God in the inscription of the ἀγνώστῳ upon the Altar, Act. 17. 23. how could more clouded nature come within ken of him? Though by reasoning they concluded there was a supream being who had the superintendency of the World, yet they could not tell what this God was; and when the redeeming perfections of God were discoursed by the Apostle to them, they were the subject of the Athenians scoffs rather than enquiry verse 32. The hidden Wisdom of God none of the Princes of the World knew, 1 Cor. 2. 8. (not the governing Princes; tho they were as ignorant as the rest, but the Princelike and towring wits of this World knew it not, and though God had display'd before their eyes the wonders of the World, and given them both in the Creation, Preservation, and Government of the World a multitude of lessons concerning his Nature, which they might in some measure have discern'd by a diligent observation, yet in the Wisdom of God (those lessons of his Wisdom in the Creation and Providence) they did not by natural Wisdom and the use of their Reason know him, 1 Cor. 1. 21. Sometimes their notions of God were rank, and they fram'd a mishapen God, modelled according to their own humors, not the nature of a Deity, who could not possibly be of that hue which they represented him to themselves in. Sometimes they counted him cruel and unjust, sometimes too fond and indulgent, some confin'd him to Heaven, others acknowledged his Providence in the greater affairs of the World, but concluded it unworthy of him to descend to take notice of the fall of a Sparrow or the hairs of the head, and that it was a disturbance of Gods rest to intermeddle with Worldly affairs. They slept out of the way of Reason into the paths of fancy, measur'd God according to their own imaginations to accommodate their lusts, and lye more at ease soaking in their sins. It were endless to tell the monstrous thoughts their corrupt minds had of God, and the multiplicity of their Idols whereby they chang'd the Truth of God into a lye, Rom. 1. 23. 25. whereas they might have discerned by a reasoning from those excellencies they saw in the Creatures, that God was an Infinite, Eternal, Wise and self-sufficient being. And such monstrous conceptions of God, after the light of the Gospel superadded to that of natural Reason, do often flutter in the minds of men among us.

2. There was a knowledge of God by or under the Law. Before the giving the Law by Moses, God instructed men by the apparitions of Angels, visions to some Prophets, by the Holiness of some of his eminent darlings; under the Law, by figures and representations, which the wisest of them did but darkly understand, and that by the assistance of some special Revelation which was successively clear'd by the Prophets, phets enlightned in ſeveral ages to that purpoſe. The moral Law was a diſcovery of God chiefly in his Soveraignty, Holineſs, and Juſtice; he enacts Laws as a Soveraign, righteous Laws againſt ſin as a holy One, annexeth Threatnings and Promiſes as a Judge. In regard of the Majeſty of God in the diſcovery, the people were afraid of death at the promulgation, Exod. 20. 19. Let not God ſpeak with us, leaſt we dye. And Moſes, who was the moſt familiar Perſon with God in the World, had not a leſs fright at the diſcovery of it, Heb. 12. 21. So terrible was the ſight, that Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake. The knowledge of God in the Law was too terrible for the minds of Men; and ſurpris'd Moſes the friend of God, the Interpreter of his Will, with an extream horror. God here manifeſted the marks of his Greatneſs and his Juſtice, arm'd with inſtruments of puniſhment for Sin. There was not a mite of his Mercy diſcover'd by the Law, but to thoſe that kept his commandements, i. e. to thoſe that were without any guilt and crime; upon which account the Apoſtle calls the Law, the miniſtry of Condemnation and of Death; and a killing, not a healing Letter; a ſword to cut, not a Balſom to cloſe a Wound, 2 Cor. 3. 7, 9. Nothing of Adoption, and juſtifying Grace pronounc'd in it. The Holineſs of God was diſcover'd in his Precepts, and his Juſtice in his Threatnings: There was alſo a daily proſpect of the Holineſs and Juſtice of God in the ſacrifices exacted of man, in the groanes, gaſpings and bloud of Beaſts; they ſaw that ſin was neither affected by God, nor would be ſuffer'd to remain unpuniſhed; and their ſight of thoſe Attributes in this Miniſtration, was greater than the World could have of them by the now and then ſprinklings of Judgments, which being not often upon the worſt of ſinners, ſtagger'd the Underſtandings, not only of the Heathens, but of ſome of the intelligent Iſraelites, in their conceptions of the nature of God and his Providence. But what was all this to the fuller diſcovery of the purity of his Nature, and the terror of his Wrath in the Execution of the Curſes of the Law upon the Son of his boſom? All preceding times were times of darkneſs till the coming of Chriſt; they were but the ſhadows of the night in the figures of the Law; but the morning light was in the riſing of the Goſpel, Hoſ. 6. 3. This was a ſufficient Revelation of God to direct them to Chriſt, who could only render God viſible and intelligible to man; but how inſufficient in regard of the corruption of mans Nature to imprint right notions of God? How often did the Jews warp and wallow in the ſink of Idolatry, notwithſtanding this Revelation of God? Much leſs ſufficient is the knowledge of God by nature.

This Natural, Legal and Evangelical knowledge by Chriſt differ.

(1.) In regard of Clearneſs.

[1.] Natural knowledge was dim. In the creation God writ himſelf in Hieroglyphicks, in ſhort Characters; In Chriſt, in a plain and legible hand, which gave a ſubſtantial diſcovery of God. The Power, Majeſty, and Wiſdom of God appeared in the heavens, the work of his fingers, Pſal. 8. 3. In maintaining their influences, and conducting their motions. The foundations of the Earth, the vaſtneſs and roulings of the Sea, the habitations of Light, the treaſures of Snow, flouds of Rain, the bottles of the Clouds, order of the Stars, proviſion for Creatures on the Earth, direct us to the knowledge of a great and glorious being. For upon all thoſe God reads a Lecture of himſelf to Job in the latter chapters. That there is a God, may be ſeen in the duſt of the Earth, as well as in the brightneſs of the Heavens; but by thoſe Works men ſaw little elſe but that there was a God: They could know but little of his Nature, congruous to the ſtate wherein they were. That glow-worm light could afford us at beſt but weak and languiſhing notions of God, and a relation to him fit for that miſerable condition, wherein the fall of Adam had involv'd us. And by reaſon of mans negligence, and not improving a number of thoſe inſtructions concerning the nature of his Vertues, which the creation furniſht them with, and which they might have attain'd by a wiſe obſervation of that which God had reveal'd in his creation, preſervation and government of the World, they gave the bridle to their own imaginations, and knew as little of God by his Works, Κοσμικὰ θεωρήματα, Jamblychus.

as Beasts know of the nature and reason of a man. The World therefore is called by some Ænigma Dei, and indeed the Heathens often err'd in their Interpretation of it, and could not unriddle God in the creatures, but worshipp'd the creature for the Creator.

[2.] Legal knowledge was also dim. Though the Temple with all the ceremonies attending it, was a clearer representation of the nature and will of God than the whole frame of the World, yet obscurity was of the nature of the Legal State; and the glory of God was wrapt up in a cloud of animal Sacrifices; so that Solomon calls the house wherein God then dwelt a thick darkness, 1 King. 8. 12. The Law was given with smoke as well as thunders, obscurity as well as terror, Exod. 20. 18. The Israelites were under a cloud, 1 Cor. 10. 1. and the Mediator of the Law had a vail upon his Face, and the glory of God was so envelopt in clouds, that the Israelites could but dimly discern. There was more of shadows than substance, and the Apostle in the Hebrews gives it no better a Title than that of a shadow, opposing it to Christ the substance: And the Gospel is said to be truth and grace, in opposition to the Law, as if there were no truth and grace in that former dispensation, Joh. 1. 17. None indeed, in comparison of the clearness of the Revelation in the Gospel; Though in it self it was a true representation of God, as a shadow may be called a true shadow. The Law being compos'd of shadows could not discover God, as the Gospel did which was made up of substance. Moses then did see his back-parts perhaps in the figure of a man, but in the Gospel God shows himself in the face of Christ, 2 Cor. 14. 7. That did discover the features of God more clearly than the works of Nature; as the form and beauty of a man may be more discern'd through Grates and Lattices, to which Gods appearance in the Law is liken'd, Cant. 2. 9. than when cover'd with a thick Vail. Very few of them could have a ken of the substance, for the multitude of shadows. If we, upon whom the glory of God hath shone in the Gospel, are not able to comment upon every one of those figures, much less could they who never saw the Antitype, and could not conceive the Analogy between them.

[3.] The Evangelical discovery of God by Christ is clearer; the brightness of the day dispell'd the shadows of the night, and dispers'd the clouds wherewith the Sun was mask't. As the fulness of the Godhead dwelt personally in Christ, so the fulness of the Divine Perfections sparkled in the Actions and Sufferings of Christ. The Deity shines out in a clear Lustre, which was seen before only in the dusty clouds of creatures and ceremonies. In Nature, we see God as it were like the Sun in a Picture; in the Law, as the Sun in a cloud; in Christ we see him in his Beams, he being the brightness of his glory, and the exact image of his person, Heb. 1. 3. As the Rays of the Sun, being the production of the Sun, cause us by their Lustre to see and understand more of the beauty and brightness of the Sun; and the stamp upon the wax informs us what is upon the Seal. We see what an Infinite Fountain of Good God is, and what a dreadful thing sin is which is a separation from him; as by the beams of the Sun we understand the beauty of Light, and the horror of darkness. Though it be not discern'd in its glory through a mist of Vapors, yet it may be known to be risen, and some effects of it are sensible to us; so it was in the creation and the Law: but in Christ those vapors are dissolv'd, the clouds dispers'd, and God appears in the sweetness and beauty of his nature, as a refreshing light. The creatures tell us, that there is a God, and Christ tells who and what that God is.

So that the clearness of this knowledge consists

(1.) In the clearness of the medium. Nothing in the World can strike our sence or influence our Minds, but by some Medium. Though a man hath the sharpest Eye, yet without an enlightned Air he can behold nothing. The clearer the glass through which we look, the clearer discerning we have of the object we look upon. Christ is the clearest Medium. As he is said to be a polisht staft in Gods quiver, Isa. 49. 2. to pierce the heart by his Grace; so he may be said to be a polisht glaſs in his hand to repreſent his Majeſty, and reflect the beams of God ſtronger upon us, The Goſpel therefore in the judgment of ſome, is meant by the Sea of Glaſs, Rev. 15. 2. In regard of the Tranſparency of it, through which we ſee God, and his Perfections. It was the ſame God, Jehovah, who was known by the Jews, and under the Goſpel, but not in the ſame manner; they had the ſame faculties, but not the ſame light to diſcern the object. The faculty and act of Viſion, is the ſame by Sun-light and Star-light; we have the ſame Eyes in the day and the night, the ſame exerciſe and roulings of the Eye; but not having the ſame clearneſs of Air, we have not that contentment in the Exerciſe of our eyes. Things appear not ſo beautiful by Candlelight as in the Luſtre of the Day: hence Chriſt is called a Sun of Righteouſneſs, Mal. 4. 2. as manifeſting the Righteouſneſs of God, diffuſing light and health by his wings or beams, and chaſing away by his ſplendor the darkneſs of the World, and opening the glories of Heaven to the Sons of Men, directing them to the knowledge of God who before wandred in darkneſs. The coming of this light and the riſing of the glory of God upon us, are knit together, Iſa. 60. 1. Thy light is come, and the glory of God is riſen upon thee. The glory of God, i. e. the Mercy and Goodneſs of God, which is his glory, ſay ſome; the glory rather of all his Attributes, which Chriſt is the Medium to clear up to the Minds of men. And indeed there is as great a difference between the knowledge of God by Chriſt, and the knowledge of God by the creatures and the Law, as there is between the knowledge of a man by his footſteps, and the knowledge of him by his image. Chriſt is the image of the inviſible God, Col. 1. 15. As a Son is the Image of his Father, who is a better Medium to know a Father by, than his Footſteps or his picture. Never any earthly Son was ſo like his Father, as Chriſt is like God the Father; he hath the ſame Eſſence, the ſame Attributes, the ſame Operations.

(2.) The nearneſs of the Object. Chriſt brings God near to us; He is Emanuel, God with us, God in our nature. The great comforting promiſes in the old Teſtament were, that God ſhould dwell among them, Joel 3. 17. Mal. 3. 1. God was not far from every one of us in the Creation, Acts 17. 27. in regard of his Being, in regard of his Goodneſs, tho' he was far from us in regard of a ſatisfactory knowledge of his Nature. * As when a man is at a diſtance from us, in regard of any particular knowledge of him, yet he is near to us in regard of our knowledge of his exiſtence and ſpecies, that he is a man, tho' we cannot perceive his ſhape and features, and what kind of man he is; but when he approacheth nearer, he appears greater, we ſee his dimenſions and diſcern his Age, yet obſcurely; but when he comes cloſe to us, we ſee him plainly, and by converſe with him we come to know his temper. Now this man is one and the ſame man we ſaw at a diſtance, and we ſee near; he hath the ſame ſhape, the ſame features and diſpoſition, but he appears in a different manner according to the greatneſs of the diſtance. God was the ſame in all Ages of the World, but after he departed to a greater diſtance from man by reaſon of ſin, and refrain'd converſe with man, there were but ſmall glimmerings of him in the creatures, and leſs to be diſcern'd by the diſtemper'd eye of man. * He came nearer in the Law, but that repreſentation was obſcure, and fitted more to the carnal conceptions of men; whence the Apoſtle calls it the rudiments and elements of the World, conſiſting in ſenſible repreſentations of him, Col. 2. 20. Gal. 4. 3. Chriſt ſucceeded (in whom God came near to us, and convers'd with us) as a proſpective glaſs, which makes that which is a far off to ſeem near at hand, and manifeſts it in its dimenſions; by him we can look through the vail, and be inform'd of the tranſactions in Heaven between the Father and the Son on our behalf.

(3.) Fulneſs of the diſcovery. What was known before, is better known; the knowledge is better for quality, greater for quantity. * For by the light diffus'd by Chriſt in the World, ſince the aſcenſion of the Redeemer, and the deſcent of the Comforter, the ſimpleſt believer comprehends more of the glorious Nature of God in his Underſtanding, than the moſt elevated Believer in the time of the Law, either by the figures of the Law, or the features of the creatures could, with the aſſiſtance of the moſt learned Doctors of the one, or Philoſophers in the other; which our Saviour verifies in the Eulogy he gives of him that is leaſt in the Kingdom of God, i. e. in the Goſpel ſtate, magnifying him above John Baptiſt, whom he confeſſeth at the ſame time ſuperior to all that went before him, and indeed knew more than all the Prophets, yet was inferior to the meaneſt believer under the New Teſtament, Mat. 11. 11. Among them that are born of Women, there hath not riſen a greater than John the Baptiſt; notwithſtanding he that is leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he. He indeed ſaw Chriſt in the fleſh, beheld his Perſon as the Lamb of God to take away the ſins of the World, knew him as the only begotten Son in the boſom of the Father, come into the World for the declaration of of him; a ſight and day which Abraham and the Prophets deſir'd to ſee, and could not obtain; yet he ſaw him not Dying, Riſing, Aſcending, pouring out the rich gifts of his Spirit, all which did clear up the righteous, true, wiſe, gracious Nature of God to the ſimpleſt Believer, after the accompliſhment of them, more than the knowledge of his Incarnation could to John. He that is leaſt and moſt ignorant in the Kingdom of God, is greater, i. e. more intelligent than John; he hath a fuller proſpect, and a diviner light; he knows what John knew, and he knows what John was ignorant of; he hath ſeen and known the performance of thoſe things, whereof John only knew the beginning. And this full and plain knowledge Chriſt promiſed before his departure, Joh. 16. 25. The time comes, when I ſhall no more ſpeak unto you in proverbs, but I ſhall ſhow you plainly of the Father. A promiſe that receives its full accompliſhment in the life to come, but reſpects the Death and Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, as the time wherein it was to begin to be of force; for thoſe things were nothing elſe but the declarations of the Tranſactions between the Father and the Son. That it is meant of a declaration of the Father in this Life, is evident by the following words. ver. 26. at that day you ſhall ask in my name; Earth is the place for Wants and Petitions, Heaven for Viſion and Praiſes. The whole Scope of the Doctrine of Chriſt, is to reveal God in his moſt illuſtrious Perfections to man, and in the Relation of a gracious Father to him. Chriſt ſpeaking in Proverbs, is underſtood by one *, of the whole time of the Moſaick diſpenſation, wherein Chriſt was the Angel to lead them, and convers'd with them in ſhadows and figures; but now in the Goſpel would plainly declare the Father to them. Natural and Legal knowledge is clarified by the Goſpel, which is a comment to explain what was before but darkly underſtood, and a new Revelation to elevate the ſoul to a greater Underſtanding, it fortifies the light of Nature and frames in us more pure and ſignificant Conceptions of God.

Though there be a clearneſs of the Medium, a nearneſs of the Object, and a fulneſs of the Diſcovery, yet

(1.) We muſt underſtand it, not of ſuch a clearneſs as is poſſible in its own Nature to be (for there may be a more ſenſible manifeſtation of God) but of ſuch a clearneſs as the preſent ſtate in this world is capable of. 'Tis ſo plain, that it can only be ſuperſeded by the light of Glory; 'tis the fulleſt that we can meet with in this World, till we come to behold him in that light wherewith he cloathes himſelf as with a garment; and whatſoever diſcoveries many may expect, they muſt be all built upon this Foundation, they are ſtill but beams, iſſuing out in this ſcene of things, from the Lamb who is the light of the new Jeruſalem in the beſt eſtate, Rev. 21. 23. The glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. Chriſt is ſtill the medium through which the light of the glory of God conveys it ſelf to the underſtandings of his Creatures, and God will never be repreſented by any other light than his own, in his own light we ſee him who is the Father of Lights.

(2). Nor muſt we underſtand it of an abſolute fulneſs of the knowledge of God. For the brightneſs of his nature is ſo great, that it cannot be fully known by a created Underſtanding. The Sun cannot be perfectly ſeen in the brighteſt day, when it traverſeth the Heavens in its Triumphant glories, and ſuffers not a Vapor to way-lay the Beams he ſends upon the Earth; yet then he is clearer ſeen than when the Air is clogg'd with Vapors and overſpread with Clouds. This is a comparative clearneſs more than in the little print of Creatures, or than through the ſcreen of Ceremonies; not such a clearness as shall be on the top of the mount in the Eternal Transfiguration of the Soul. Nor ever shall there be an absolute fulness of knowledge of all that is in God; for to know him as he knows himself, requires an Understanding as infinite as his own.

(2.) They differ in the certainty. Natural Knowledge of God is but conjectural, no position was so firm but some Wits of the World found out Arguments to contradict it. Nor was there Wisdom enough in the World to unty all the knots that were made by others. The whole World of Nature lay in darkness, 'tis from that Term every man is called that comes to Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 9. He hath called us out of darkness; and the Devil that is the ruler of the carnal World, is the ruler of the darkness of it, Eph. 6. 12. spreading his Fogs upon the minds of men. The Heathens arriv'd to the knowledge of God by rational deductions; but the most Eagle-ey'd among them, who could peer into the secrets of Nature, could not reduce their apprehensions to any fixedness: They had a vanity in their imaginations and conceptions of his nature, and as those our Saviour speaks of, tho' they agreed in the unity of the Messiah, yet differ'd about the Person; One saith here is Christ, another, there is Christ; so these, God is this, and God is that, according to their particular fancies. They acknowledg'd him an admirable being, but rather darkned than unvail'd him. Nothing was satisfactory to the understanding; many of them saw not the creating power of God, one fancies the World Eternal, another conceives it to be compacted by a multitude of Atomes or small particles of dust meeting together by chance, and kneading themselves into this frame we call the World. But the doctrine of Faith discovers God in his power, Heb. 11. 3. By faith we understand that the worlds were fram'd by the word of God. It acquaints us that the World was created by him; which indeed the Reason of many inform'd them of, but not of the manner of the Creation, by his sole Word and Will, or by the second person, the essential Word of God. This we know, by Christ, which we could not know by nature. As Heb. 1. 2. He hath spoken to us by his Son by whom also he made the worlds. But indeed that is not the meaning of Heb. 11, 3. for the Word is there ῥήματι not λόγῳ; the latter is a Title of Christ, not the former. But it is clear from it, that by the knowledge of Christ we have a certain account of the manner of Gods operations. The light of Christ, is as the light of the morning, stable *. It discovers things to us, with as much certainty, as the morning light doth the nature of the objects we doubted of in the darkness of the Night. As the sense of Vision is the most acute and exact sense, and extends further and with more assurance than that of hearing and smelling, so the knowledge of Faith is the most infallible way of knowledge; it being built upon the Revelation of the Son of God, who is the Word of God, and the Wisdom of God. 'Tis therefore called the evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11. 1. the substance of things hoped for. 'Tis not an imagination or a fancy, but a demonstration, more firm than any natural demonstration can be. 'Tis a subsistence in the mind, as sure, and as it were as real, as the subsistence of the unseen things believed without us: an evidence, as if the things not seen had not a Being but by Faith. To an unbeliever, God seems not to have that Power, Wisdom, Holiness, which are really in his nature; the Perfections of God have no existence in the Heart of such a man, so that he is without God, without the knowledge of God, an Atheist in the World. Faith in Christ renders God as visible, as he was by the same grace to Moses, Heb. 11. 27. By Faith he saw him who is invisible. As the knowledge and Faith of the ancient Believers under the figures of Christ rendred God and the things of the New Testament visible to them, according to the measure of the Revelation, so doth the knowledge of Believers under the New Testament represent God, and his perfections in a more certain manner visible to them, because the way of Revelation is firmer; That from God by Moses, This from God by his Son. 'Tis Truth, because declar'd by the only begotten Son of God, Joh. 1. 17, 18. And upon the account of the greater sensibility of this knowledge under the Gospel, 'tis the promise to the Jews, That then they shall know the Lord, Jer. 31. 4. As tho' the knowledge of him in Nature, and the knowledge of him under the Law had been a kind of ignorance in compariſon of this, as it is indeed in regard of the clearneſs and certainty of this by Chriſt.

3. In Nature, God is diſcover'd for contemplation; in Chriſt, God is diſcover'd to be embrac'd as well as admir'd. Nature never did, nor ever can, elevate one heart to a conformity to the Holineſs of God, becauſe it could not make known his tranſcendent hatred of ſin, and his rich condeſcending Grace, as the diſcovery of Chriſt doth. If it cannot ken the myſteries of God, it can never conduct men to a holy compliance with God according to his nature. There is not a ſyllable of the naturalneſs of Gods Juſtice, and the neceſſity of a ſatisfaction of Infinite value in the whole book of nature. It diſcovers the exiſtence of a God, but not the way of cloſing with God. Nature diſcovers a God of unconceivable excellency, but brings no ſaving meſſage from him. It ſets out God as a being to be ador'd, Chriſt ſets out God, as a being to be enjoy'd. That preſents notions of God to our Minds, this imprints motions to God in our Wills. Nature preſents God in ſome of his creating glory, Chriſt preſents God in his redeeming Grace, with his armes open, his voice encouraging and directing his Creatures to a way of fruition. Nature directs us to the admiration of God, becauſe there is ſome reſemblance of God in every creature; for whatſoever God hath created, he hath created according to his own Idea, and with a print of his own goodneſs upon it. He at the firſt creation pronounc'd all things Good, Gen. 1. 31. But all created goodneſs is a participation of the divine goodneſs, and by conſequence ſome kind of conformity to the Divinity, and the more excellent any creature is, the ſtronger and fuller ſtamp it hath of the goodneſs and excellency of God; the conſideration of which, would rationally guide the mind to an acknowledgment of an infinite Perfection in the Author of them, but is unable to conduct men to a due compliance with God. Not that they have any greater inſufficiency in themſelves to perform the end for which they were created, than they had when they were firſt made; but becauſe of mens inability to improve their natural inſtructions, ſince the crack of their rational faculties by the Fall. The caſe is the ſame with them as with the Law; the Law hath the ſame virtue and power of direction and making men happy, as it had in the ſtate of Innocence, i. e. in it ſelf; but man by his lameneſs, contracted by the Fall, was unable to walk the pace of the Law, and enjoy the bleſſings of it. The Law was weak through the fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. not in it ſelf. So the creatures are not unable of themſelves to anſwer the end of their creation; but Man by reaſon of his darkneſs, is unable to make an improvement of what the creatures do dictate. Yet I cannot ſee that the whole book of Nature preſents us with that knowledge of God, which is neceſſary for us in the preſent ſtate wherein we are lapſed; for they were created to ſerve man as innocent, not as an offender; in which Relation he ſtands now to God as a Judge, and cannot know by all his natural Learning, without Revelation, what the nature of God is in this caſe, and what is neceſſary for him to do, worthy of God for his Reſtauration. Such a diſcovery of God and the way of compliance with him in ſuch a manner as becomes God, in this Relation, is only known by the Revelation Jeſus Chriſt hath made. Yet there is ſo much knowledge to be had of God by the creation, as to render men inexcuſable before the Divine Tribunal; tho' they never heard the ſound of the Goſpel, they will be juſtly puniſhed at laſt; not for the neglect of that which they never heard, but for their contradiction to the voice of their own Conſciences, the univerſal ſound of Nature, the leſſons they might have learn'd from the whole Creation, eſpecially the Heavens which declare the glory of God; for the thwarting the firſt principles and notions implanted in their hearts, and damping thoſe ſecret motions and touches they had by a manifeſtation of his common goodneſs to ſeek after God, Act. 17. 26, 27. The creation of the World, and the Mercies men are indulged with, are that they might ſeek the Lord. For there is not a drop of rain or a fruitful ſeaſon, but is a witneſs of a God to be ſought after, Acts 14. 16, 17. all this will render men inexcuſable at the laſt day. All men have ſuch reliques of natural light, more than are due to a fallen Nature, as will condemn them in their own Conſciences; though there is not enough to render them ſo intelligent of God, as is neceſſary for their recovery from their lapſed ſtate. Chriſt only opens the heavens to let out the beams of God upon Mankind, and opens the Heart and Underſtanding to receive them and reflect them back upon God in thoſe ſeveral duties requir'd at Mans hands in his preſent broken eſtate.

The Second thing is,

II. That the clear knowledge of God is attain'd only by Chriſt. The full Revelation of God was promiſed to be given out by the Meſſiah, the grand Prophet God promiſed, upon the Iſraelites deſire that God might not ſpeak immediately to them, Deut. 18. 16, 17, 18. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a prophet from the midſt of thee, &c. To him ſhall you hearken. Intimating thereby, that a higher diſcovery was to be made by him of the Mind of God; why elſe ſhould they be bound to hearken to him more than any other Prophet? He was to be a light to the Gentiles, to open the blind eyes, Iſa. 42. 6, 7. God would call them in righteouſneſs, according to the Promiſe he had made to Abraham, and afterwards to the Iſraelites of a great Prophet, to take off the vail and darkneſs in regard of God, and remove their erroneous conceptions of God, whence he is called the light of the World, and ver. 8. ſeems to intimate, that the Majeſty of God and his name, and the incommunicableneſs of his Attributes were to be the ſubject of this diſcovery, I am the Lord, that is my name, my glory will I not give to another; and Joh. 17. Chriſt aſſerts, that he had manifeſted the name of his Father and would further declare it to the Sons of Men. So that the ſpring of all ſpiritual knowledge is in Chriſt, he is made wiſdom to us, 1 Cor. 1. 30. from him we draw all ſorts of ſpiritual underſtanding, and Revelation. By him we have the illumination of our Minds, as well as the Juſtification of our Perſons, the Sanctification of our Natures, and Redemption from our enemies. He is the Mirrour that repreſents to us the perfections of God, being the brightneſs of his glory. Every beam, whereby God is manifeſted, is ſhot through him; as every Pardon, whereby the grace of God is diſcovered and the ſoul refreſh'd, is diſpens'd through him. The Jews expected the diſcovery of the Face of God by the Meſſiah, and to that purpoſe interpreted, Dan. 2. 22. He reveals deep and ſecret things, and the light dwells with him. That light is the Meſſiah dwelling with God, and ſome of them call him by the name of light there mention'd נְהוֹרָא: Though the words ſeem only to declare that God is the Author of all knowledge, and ſees by a clear light whatſoever is done among the Sons of men. 'Tis certain, that whatſoever tends to the glory of God, his Soveraignty, Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, Grace is fully reveal'd by Chriſt. He hath declared who is the Creator, Governour, Judge of all, that he is the chief good, the laſt end, and revealed all the means whereby we may come to a conjunction with him, and fruition of him, and exchange our darkneſs and miſery for light and bleſſedneſs; and this chiefly by his death; for by that the perfections of God, hid in the infinite depths of his own Eſſence, were in their Rayes tranſmitted to us. He could not be known, either by Creatures or bare Scripture in ſuch a manner, as he is known in the Croſs of Chriſt, wherein his immenſe Goodneſs, profound Wiſdom, ſevere Juſtice, exact Truth, infinite Condeſcenſion are manifeſted in ſuch a manner, that it is as, or more, impoſſible to conceive how God can make an higher diſcovery of himſelf, as it was for Men and Angels to conceive before, how he ſhould make ſo rich a diſcovery of himſelf as this is. The Croſs of Chriſt was the diſſolution of the ignorance of men. The darkneſs which had lain upon the land of Egypt, (a Type of the ignorance of Man by Nature, as the Iſraelites deliverance Typified the Redemption by Chriſt) was taken off in the morning on the Paſſeover day, a Type of the death of Chriſt.

But take in theſe Propoſitions, what is to be ſaid about this.

1. Chriſt was only capacitated for this diſcovery of God.

(1.) In regard of his intimacy with the Father. Though Moſes was a Non-ſuch for converſe with God, and ſpake with him Face to Face, yet he had not that intimacy as Chriſt had, who lay in the Fathers boſom, Joh. 1. 18. In the Depths of his his Counsels, the intimate knowledge of his nature, in the delights of his Favour. The secret of the Father, is called the bosom of the Father; wherein he not only was, but is; he is in the Bosom of the Father in Heaven, while he is expos'd to infirmities below. No man hath ascended into heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven, Joh. 3. 13. i.e. No Man hath understood the secret Mysteries of God but Christ. He only knows those Counsels, Eternal Transactions and Condescensions of God, because he only was interested in them. He hath not things by Revelation, as the Prophets and Apostles; nor from the Law and Scripture, as other Teachers. None of them had seen any but the shadows, and tasted some Raviſhments in the Visions when they were reveal'd: None of them had been in Heaven, and seen those things in the Fountain, in the Counsel of God. Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, acquainted men with many secrets of God, but they had not seen in Heaven, the things which they declar'd to others. Nor was the full scope and design of those Revelations understood by the Prophets themselves, 1 Pet. 1. 11. They searched what the spirit of Christ did signifie. They were more prophetical Instruments, than prophetical Agents; the Spirit rather spoke through them, than to them. They saw things in images, heard them in obscure Representations, and so deliver'd them as obscurely as they understood them; and those that were most familiar with God, as Moses, had their Revelations on Earth, not in Heaven. But Christ saw all things in the secret of his Father, in their proper form without Dreams and Visions; he had suck'd in the Truth from the Fountain, and drew that which he taught from the depths of Wisdom in the Bosom of his Father, which could not be in the power of any man; and therefore, Joh. 3. 31, 32. He that comes from above, is above all, and what he hath seen and heard that he testifieth. Others testifie what they have heard, Christ testifies what he hath seen as well as heard; he did not only hear and report, but he saw the things himself; and in regard of his Divine Nature is above all Teachers, as well as above all Creatures. Was any else ever seal'd with the brightness of Gods Glory? Was any else the dew from the womb of the Morning? Did any else come out of the Depths of the Fountain and Father of Lights? None was ever call'd the Angel of Gods Presence or Face, but Jesus Christ, Isa. 63. 9.

(2.) In regard of his being the medium of the first discovery of God in the creation. All things were made by the Word of God, and without him was not any thing made that was made, Joh. 1. 3,4. and being the life of men, he was only capable to be the light of men. Christ was the Voice of God, whereby he exerted his power to bring things from nothing into Being. The Lord said, Let there be light, Gen. 1. 3. and oftentimes, God said, ver. 6, 9, 11, 14, 20, &c. Which was not an external sound or voice, but the essential Word of God, whereby he communicated his Goodness to the World in Creation. A meer Voice or outward sound of Words could not be an instrument of it self to frame the World to such a Beauty. And that the mystery of the second Person lay in that often Repetition of God said, in Gen. 1. is obvious from Joh. 1. 1. which seems to be a comment upon, and Explanation of it; In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God, so that the story of the Creation is decypher'd to us by Gods speaking, to signifie unto us that Eternal מימרא whereby the Scripture assures us, God created the world, Heb. 1. 2. who was with him when he laid the Foundations of the Earth, stretcht out the Heavens, and digg'd a place for the Sea, Prov. 8. 22, &c. he is the Wisdom and Power of God in Creation, as well as Redemption. Now as in the creation, the Son communicated to all Creatures some resemblance of God, and the end of the Creation being to declare God to the Rational Creature, it was most proper for the Son of God, to make those further declarations of him, which were necessary, who at first made the manifestation of God in the frame of the World. As the Beautiful image of Reason in the Mind, breaking out with the discovery of it self in Speech and Words, is fittest to express the inward Sense, Thoughts, Conceptions, Nature and Posture of the Mind; so the essential Word of God clothes himself with flesh, comes out from God, to manifest to us the Nature and Thoughts of God; He which is the Word of God, is fittest to manifest the Nature of God. The Word in the Mind of a Man is insensible to others, but publish'd with the voice is made sensible, and makes the Person known whose word it is.

2. It was fit a higher knowledge of God should be manifested by Christ than by other Prophets. It had not been for the honour of this Prophet, who was greater than Solomon, greater than Moses, to have no more to discover of God than what was clearly known before in the Church of the Jews; he had then been no Prophet of note, a Prophet without a discovery, a Title without an Office. As he is a King in name who hath nothing to govern, so he is but the Eccho of a Prophet that repeats only what was declar'd before. The intimacy of our Lord Jesus with the Father, had not appear'd, if he had not something to manifest which was hid from the Messengers that went before. * That he might have an excellency above other Prophets, and appear in the World with more eminent prerogatives, there was to be a greater effusion of light. He had not been a Sun of Righteousness, if he had shin'd no brighter than an ordinary star. Since his coming was to be glorious, wherein could the glory of it be, if the greatness of the knowledge of God were not one excellent prerogative belonging to his Incarnation, and in such a measure, that the light that dawn'd before in the World, either from Creatures, Law or Prophets, should be as nothing, compar'd with this Sun? And tho' whatsoever was known of God by men, was known by the mediation and direction of Christ, to whom after the Fall God had committed all judgment, (whence the spirit of Christ is said to speak in the holy Prophets, 1 Pet. 1. 11. and from him Isaiah receiv'd his instructions, when he show'd himself to be sitting upon his Throne, Isa. 6. 1. compar'd with Joh. 12. 41.) yet some things were reserved hid for the gracing the office of this great Prophet, as the Doctrine of the Trinity, and real distinction of the three Persons in the Godhead, the Union of the Divine and Humane Nature, which were as clearly reveal'd by Christ under the New Testament, as they had been obscurely under the old. * Ante adventum Christi sciebatur Deus, Pater ignorabatur.

* Camero pag. 374. Col. 1. 2.

* Hieron. in Psal. 103. 1.

3. The discovery of God was the great end of Christs appearance upon the earth, His Office. He was to declare things hid from the foundation of the world, Mat. 13. 35. to unfold the mysteries and secret Counsels of God, and remove the shades and vails between him and the understandings of men, and reveal things which God never reveal'd before. In him who was Gods light we were to see light, Psal. 36. 9. In the Messiah, as the Jews expound it, or by the grace of God in him we were to know God with clearness. The World was a dark Chaos till Christ the Sun appear'd in it, as the Earth was till light was form'd. Christ was not only to make a propitiation for us, but a manifestation of God to us, this was the design of his father in sending him, Joh. 17. 6. As the Sun hath not light only for himself but for the World, so had Christ the knowledge of God in his humane Nature, not for himself, but to spread abroad in the World. He came out from the bosom of the Father to declare him, Joh. 1. 18. ἐξηγήσατο, to bring to light the hidden things of God, and comment upon the abstruse excellencies of the Deity. This was the common opinion of the Jews, that Adventu Messiæ res absconditas & profundas apertas fore omnibus, as appears by the Samaritan Woman, Joh. 4. 25. When the Messias is come, he will tell us all things. Before him there was no God formed, Isa. 43. 10. no right notion of God form'd in the minds of Men, no conceptions of his Power, Wisdom, pardoning Grace, and saving Mercy. The knowledge of Christ is urg'd in Scripture, not as the ultimate term of our knowledge, but as the Medium of our knowledge of God; for the term Mediator, and the office of Prophet evidence this. A Mediator is to discover the inclinations and resolutions of the party with whom we are at variance, in order to the piecing up an agreement; a prophet discovers something of the Mind and Will of God to us; we are to know Christ, as he is the only Person appointed to direct us to the knowledge of God; therefore though Moses and Elias were with him upon the mount of Transfiguration, i.e. though the Law and the Prophets pointed to Christ and declar'd something of God, yet we are order'd by the voice of God to hear him only, as the great instructer of the

the World, Mat. 17. 5. This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him. 'Tis his incommunicable Title as Mediator, to be our only Master, Matt. 23. 10. One is your master which is Christ. He is only the Wisdom of God, as discovering the secrets of Heaven to the Believer without those Clouds of Levitical Rites.

4. The Angels have the clearest Knowledge of God by Christ, much more than The Voice of Christ extended to Heaven as well as Earth, and manifested the graces of God to Angels, as well as Men. As he was the Medium of their Creation, so he was the Medium of the manifestation of God to them, that from the same hand from which they had their Being, they might have their Happiness and Perfection of their Nature. The whole time they had seen the Face of God in Heaven, they knew little of him, as he is known in Christ, nor could conceive him so admirable, as the Revelation of him by Christ represents him. If they had seen in lumine gloriæ, all that which may be known of God in lumine gratiæ, what need they bow down themselves (a posture intimating pains, curiosity and earnestness of inquiry) towards the Divine Propitiatory, to dive if they can to the very bottom of it, 1 Pet. 1. 12? It was this way that God would give them a knowledge of the Depths of his Wisdom, and his other Perfections, Eph. 3. 10. To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the Church the manifold Wisdom of God. It was one end of God in the manifestation of the Riches of his grace to the Gentiles, to enrich the Angelical Nature, with a greater light, that thereby they might be furnish'd with more ravishing matter of his praise. Not that the Angels are present at Sermons to understand things they know not before; but that by the effects of God in the World, gathering men into Christ, and framing a Church out of lost Mankind, they contemplate the manifold Wisdom of God. God might have communicated this to them by immediate Revelation, but he remits them to gather it from his effects, and to view it in the glass of Christ and his Church. This was the purpose of God, to encrease the knowledge and matter of the Angels praise, when he should pour out his Treasures in Christ upon the World; not by the Churches teaching them, but objectively by a sight of those things acted in the Church. If they then learn so much of the excellency of God by the calling of the Gentiles, how much more must they learn by the contemplation of the Son of God in his Incarnation and Passion? and to this purpose consider 1 Tim. 3. 16. And without controversie, great is the mystery of Godliness, God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of Angels, &c. seen of, or appeared to the Angels; * It cannot be understood of a simple Vision, so was Abraham, Moses, Elias, seen of the Angels. Every believer is seen of them, since they are ministring Spirits to the Heirs of Salvation; all the World is seen of them: What Grandeur is there in the Mystery of Godliness in this regard, that Christ was seen of Angels, if it be meant of a simple Vision? Nor is it meant of the sight that Angels had of him at his Resurrection and Ascension; for so he was seen by the Apostles, and other Disciples, and by the Women that came to the Sepulcher; and was this a Mystery, for Angels to see that which was obvious to the view of men? Not seen of Angels that they might be witnesses of his Resurrection; to whom should they be so? To his Disciples? Christ in his own Person, witnessed his Resurrection to them: To the World? Angels were not made Apostles by Christ for such a purpose. The Apostles founded the witness they gave of the Resurrection of Christ to the World, not upon the Revelation of Angels, but upon their own sight and knowledge of him. He was seen of Angels, as he was justified by the spirit, declar'd to be the Son of God, Redeemer of the World, as he was preached to the Gentiles, as Mediator and Reconciler, as he was receiv'd up into Glory, approv'd of by God, settled as an Advocate for Mankind. Not seen of Angels to receive from him any healing virtue, as the Brazen Serpent was seen of the Israelites to extract the Venom of the fiery ones; because they had none of that poyson in them? But seen of Angels, as a Mediator representing to them a greater knowledge of God in the Mystery of Redemption, than the beauty and order of the World, their own glory in Heaven, the variety of past providences, the former communications of God to the Jewiſh Church could poſſibly teach them. The Angels could not behold the Eſſence of God, though they ſtood before him in Heaven. No finite Creature in the moſt elevated condition can ſee that which is infinite. The glorious Eſſence of God is too illuſtrious for any creature to behold without being overwhelm'd by the brightneſs of it; and is ſo immenſe that it infinitely ſurpaſſeth the Angelical Underſtanding. Hence they are in the viſion pourtraied with wings to cover their faces as well as their feet, Iſa. 6. 2. as not able to ſuſtain the glorious luſtre of his countenance, as we cover our eyes with our hands, when we are invaded with too dazling a light. They muſt therefore have ſome other Medium of the knowledge of him than by a direct Viſion; this they have by Chriſt. They know ſomething of him by the Creation of the World, by Scriptures, they ſaw that after the revolt of Mankind, God expreſs'd a care and tenderneſs towards the World; and thereby they know him to be a God of Patience, as well as before they had known him to be a God of Juſtice in the puniſhment of the Apoſtate Spirits. They ſaw that God employ'd them in many meſſages to the Patriarchs and Iſraelites, and about the Affairs of the World. They ſaw him bear with the Idolatry of the Gentiles, and ſpare thoſe Arrows they had deſerv'd to be ſhot againſt them. They might ſuſpect there was ſome way of Reconciliation intended. They knew the Propheſies of a Redeemer, the promiſe of the ſeed of the woman, as well as Adam did by the knowledge of Scripture; yet the manner and methods of it were reſerv'd as a Myſtery in the ſecret Counſels of God. They were not ignorant in general of what God would do, but the predictions of it being obſcure their knowledge of it muſt be of the ſame nature. They knew the Myſtery of Chriſts Incarnation, when it came to be accompliſh'd, and knew then that the deſign of it was peace on Earth, and the fountain of it good Will to men. But all this knowledge was nothing to that which they had experimentally and clearly, when they ſaw the things themſelves perfected. When they ſaw the Son of God remaining in his Divine Nature in Heaven, and yet by an admirable union to the humane Nature manifeſted in the infirmities of our fleſh: When they ſaw him in the Divine Nature ſitting upon a Throne of Juſtice; yet expos'd to the ſufferings of the Croſs, injur'd by men, invaded by Devils, deſerted by his Father, Heaven and Earth in confuſion at the groanes and death of the Son of God: When they ſaw him juſtified in the Spirit, rais'd from death, Aſcending up to Heaven with that body wherein he had ſuffer'd; they learn'd more of God and his Nature, more of the depths of his Wiſdom, Treaſures of his Grace, and power of his Wrath, than they had done by all Gods actions in the world, from the Foundation of it, in all thoſe four thouſand years wherein they had remain'd in being.

5. The manner how we have by Chriſt the knowledge of God will alſo evidence it. Not to ſpeak that the naked declaration of Chriſt is a manifeſtation of God, we have it.

(1.) By way of purchaſe. The declarations of the name of God are founded upon the expiation of ſin, made by the merit of the Death of Chriſt. All the knowledge of God we have by Reaſon, is not from Nature, but is a part of Chriſts purchaſe. He was the Lamb ſlain from the Foundation of the World, and is thereupon the light that enlightens every man that comes into the World. Sin made the Vail between God and us, and Chriſts ſacrifice remov'd it. God ſhone out upon man, till a cloud of Iniquity interpos'd; the Sun of Righteouſneſs diſſolv'd the cloud, and made the Nature of God viſible to us. The Propitiation made upon the Croſs, is the Cauſe of the knowledge of God under the new Covenant, Heb. 8. 11, 12. All ſhall know me, from the leaſt to the greateſt, for I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins and their iniquity I will remember no more. God ſmelt ſo ſweet a ſavour in the bloud of his Son, that he was appeas'd, open'd his Treaſures, ſent out his Spirit to acquaint men with his Nature, Counſels and Thoughts; and though the Spirit deſcended before, in ſome ſprinklings and dews, yet not in a full ſhower, till Chriſt had died, and carried his perfuming bloud to heaven, preſented it to God, whereupon the Vail was drawn, the Heavens opened, the Spirit

pour'd out upon men, and that light given to the souls of his people which was neceſſary for their inſtruction. It was after his Death and Aſcenſion that he gave gifts to men, whereby ſome became Apoſtles, ſome Evangeliſts, that men might come to a knowledge of Chriſt and by him to a knowledge of God.

2. By Illumination. Our reaſon being impair'd by ſin, and the acuteneſs of it dull'd by the diſeaſe of Adam, the underſtanding muſt be renewed, and reaſon muſt be repair'd to know the myſteries of Heaven. For as there muſt be an eye to diſcern things viſible, ſo there muſt be a mind to diſcern things ſpiritual, for the natural man receives not the things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14. Though they be propounded [for the word not receiving implies an offer.] * yet ſuch is the conſtitution of corrupt nature in every man, that he comprehends not the things of the Spirit of God, and ſo great is the diſproportion between the excellency of the things propounded and the diſpoſition of the carnal mind that he judgeth of thoſe things differently from their true nature; for the mind is carnal and the things are ſpiritual, and therefore there muſt be a ſpiritual faculty to enable for the diſcerning of them. Chriſt therefore tells the Phariſees, John 5. 37, 38. that they had neither heard his voice, nor ſeen his ſhape, and had not his word abiding in them, i. e. They had no knowledge of God, becauſe they believed not. Their poring upon the Law, and the Scriptures was to as little purpoſe till the darkneſs of their minds was remov'd, as a blind mans bending his face to a book till his eyes be reſtor'd. This is the work of Chriſt, he preſents God to the mind, and fits the mind to take a proſpect of God. He offers the object, and prepares the faculty, he flaſheth the light, and diſchargeth the mind of the films which hinder the reception of it, 1 John 5. 20. We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an underſtanding that we may know him that is true. He hath given us an underſtanding, is * not meant of the natural faculty which is the gift of God in nature and creation, and which grace preſuppoſeth; but of an enlightned and purifyed mind, which is operative upon the Will and Heart, and imprints ſo firmly the glory of God upon the mind, that the will is carryed out to Love and Fear him, which complyance of the Will with an illuminated underſtanding is the formal act of our Regeneration. This is given only by Chriſt, for who teacheth like him? Job 36. 22. who doth not only preſent but imprint the object, and of darkneſs makes us light in the Lord. Hence Chriſt is compar'd to a Roe or a Wild Goat *, which is a creature not only of an acute ſight it ſelf, but hath that humor in the bowels that expels dulneſs from the eyes, and ſharpens the ſight. So Chriſt doth not only ſee the Father, but makes us ſee him, when he hath opened our underſtandings.

* Cant. 2. 9. Δορκὰς Septuagint. Voſs. de Idolat. Lib. 3. cap. 58.

The Third Thing is.

III. The neceſſity of this medium for the knowledge of God. This hath been evident already. For

1. The inſufficiency of other mediums ſhows us the neceſſity of ſome other, and God hath revealed no other but this of Chriſt, which ſeems to be a ſtanding and Eternal one whereby God will tranſmit his beams upon glorified ſouls; for ſo it will be in that ſtate of the Church in this World which is but one remove from that of Heaven, Revel. 21. 23. The Glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof.

2. The knowledge of the Angels being by this medium evidenceth the neceſſity of it. For what is neceſſary to thoſe unſpotted underſtandings, is much more neceſſary for us who have weaker intellectual eyes.

3. The immenſe Glory of God, and our natural weakneſs as Creatures evidence the neceſſity of it. The Glory of God would overwhelm the underſtanding of a Creature, there is too great a diſproportion between God and us, his infinite glory would dazle and ſtupifie us. The weakneſs of our ſight hinders from a full proſpect of the Stars, much more from a ſight of the body of the Sun, which is more offenſive than delightful to our eyes, both by its brightneſs and its heat, if we venture to lift them up without an inſtrument fitted for that purpoſe. If we cannot then gaze upon the Sun with our bodily eyes without being oppreſt by its luſtre, how can we look upon God with the eyes of our minds, without being overwhelmed by that dazling light wherewith he clothes himſelf as with a garment, ſince God is more tranſcendently excellent above the capacity of our underſtandings, than the Sun can be too bright for the eyes of our bodies. The Sun as glorious as it is, may be ſeen and view'd, not only by its effects, but in a glaſs or a veſſel of Water or a thin Cloud, but we can only ſee and know God in Chriſt his image, and the beam and brightneſs of his Glory, Heb. 1. 3. The glory of God is refracted by Chriſt, and tempered to our weakneſs, whereby we may believingly behold his love without complaints of a ſcantineſs, and ſee his juſtice without fear of being conſum'd by it, and inſtead of being oppreſt by his light may be changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, 2 Cor. 3. 18. Chriſt is the vail through which we may look upon God, as through a vail we may behold the Sun. He that hath ſeen Chriſt hath ſeen the Father, John 12. 45. He that ſees me ſeeth him that ſent me, and he that knows Chriſt knoweth the Father, becauſe of the likeneſs of one to the other, John 14. 9. He that ſpiritually knows the Son knows the Father. Not he that ſeeth Chriſt corporeally, for then the unbelieving Phariſees might be ſaid to ſee the Father; nor he that ſeeth Chriſt intellectually, for then meer Chriſtian notionaliſts may be ſaid to ſee the Father: but he that ſees Chriſt ſpiritually with a knowledge of Faith, knows the Father, for the Majeſty and bounty of God ſhine in Chriſt as an exact image.

Non ut ipſe ſit patri qui filius ſed quod a patris ſimilitudine in nullo prorſus diſcrepat filius: Auguſt. in loc.

The Fourth Thing is

IV. What knowledge of God is diſcover'd to us by Chriſt. We do not only know in Chriſt what we know by Creation, but more than can poſſibly be known of God by the works of his hands. All his works in Creation are but obſcure flaſhes of his nature in compariſon of this. God hath opened himſelf abundantly in the ſufferings and exaltation of Chriſt, and done enough to raiſe himſelf from thoſe common thoughts and apprehenſions men have of him. He hath ſpread abroad the enſigns of his Majeſty, to clear the minds of men, raiſe their admirations and elevate their thoughts and eſteem of him. The Church therefore in the time of the Goſpel is called the throne of God, Jer. 3. 17. and a glorious high throne, Jeremiah 17. 12. (The legal ſtate was called the throne of his glory, Jeremiah 14. 21.) Becauſe therein by Chriſt he doth, as Kings upon the throne, ſhow himſelf in his royalty and magnificence, in the largeneſs of his bounty, ſeverities of his Juſtice, luſtres of his Wiſdom, and the honour of his Law, in Chriſt the Head of the Church, and this manifeſtation of God was chiefly in the Death of Chriſt, John 13. 31. Now is the Son of man glorifyed, and God is glorified in him. Now ſhall there be a manifeſtation of my good will to men, and obedience to God, and a manifeſtation therein of Gods love to mankind and Juſtice againſt ſin.

In Chriſt there is,
First, A collection of Gods perfections.
Secondly, The Harmony of all.

1. All the Attributes of God are glorifyed in Chriſt. This was the petition of Chriſt, John 12. 18. Father glorifie thy name; then came a voice from Heaven, ſaying, I have both glorifyed it, and will glorifie it again, i. e. thy Attributes and the perfections of thy nature, make them all illuſtrious in the work I have undertaken; which petition God readily aſſents to, ſo much was his heart and delight ſet to make the brightneſs of his own nature appear in this way, which glorification is not any addition to the eſſential glory of God, but the manifeſting it and making it known in the riches of it to the Sons of men: Chriſt added no glory to Gods nature by his death and Reſurrection, but opened the curtains, and manifeſted that which had layn hid from Eternity in the infinite depths of his own eſſence. In this regard he is called by the name of the glory of God riſing upon the World, Iſaiah 60. 1. For Chriſt is a certificate wherein the World may read, how excellent, wiſe, bountiful, juſt, faithful, holy God is. Theſe are all viſible in him in the nobleſt manner, ſo that we cannot deliberately view and conſider Chriſt, but we are preſently inform'd of the glory glory of the Deity. Since Chriſt was ſo loving, tender, holy, righteous, we muſt conclude the Father is of the ſame nature, he would not ſend one unlike himſelf, one that was not the character of his perſon upon ſuch an errand as the diſcovery of his own Nature to Men and Angels. God had in ſeveral ages of the World pitcht upon particular Seaſons, to manifeſt one or other particular property of his Nature, his Juſtice in drowning the old World and firing Sodom, his Truth and Power in freeing the Iſraelites from the Ægyptian chaines, his Truth in performing a promiſe which had lain ſo long dormant, his Power in quelling his Enemies by the meaneſt of his Creatures, his Wiſdom in delivering them from the Babyloniſh captivity by the ordering ſecondary means for the attainment of that end. In the creatures one or other Attribute ſeems to be more illuſtrious in one than another, in ſome appears more of goodneſs, in another more of Wiſdom, in another more of Power, though his glory ſhines in all; as not a Star in Heaven but ſparkles and diſcovers not only it ſelf, but ſomething of the Heaven wherein it is placed, yet ſome with more luſtre than others, according to the portion of light afforded them. But in Chriſt all the perfections of God are centred together, as if all the Stars were made one body and tranſmitted their light in one beam upon the World, or as various ſtreams gliding from ſeveral parts, and circling large compaſſes of ground fall unanimouſly into the Sea, and reſt in the boſom of it. In him ſparkle the Juſtice of God in the puniſhment of ſin, Mercy in laying foundations of pardon, bounty in his Love to his creatures, faithfulneſs in the accompliſhment of his promiſes, and realizing the figures of the Law, Wiſdom in framing and managing the Goſpel deſign, Holineſs againſt the pollutions of the World in the condemnation of ſin, and power in effecting what he pleaſed in his own councel. Hence it is that God ſo often ſpeaking of his deſign of Redemption adds often, that I may be glorified, Iſaiah 49. 3. and 60. 21. &c. As though he had none or but a retail glory by creation, but the riches and full ſum of it was to be gather'd in and laid out in the work of Redemption by Chriſt. For of ſome of his Attributes we could have no acount by the creation, and of others not ſo apparently and delightfully, as in the tranſactions of Chriſt: For as the Sun excells all the Stars in diſcoveries, diſperſing his rays in all Climates of the Earth, ſo doth Chriſt the Son of the Fathers boſom, and the Sun of Righteouſneſs exceed all creatures in the Revelation of the excellencies of God. Chriſt is the ſtage wherein all the Attributes of God act their parts; in creation he was a God of goodneſs and power, in Providence a God of Wiſdom, in the Law a God of Juſtice, in Chriſt a God of all, and a God of Grace, a Father of Mercy.

(2.) As in Chriſt all the Attributes of God are manifeſt to man, ſo they are manifeſt in an exact Harmony. In Jeſus Chriſt thoſe Attributes that ſeem'd to look with an ill aſpect on one another, are mixt together with unexpreſſible ſweetneſs, and knit in an Eternal amity. Patience rejoyceth at its indefatigable waiting, Juſtice triumphantly flouriſheth the bloudy Sword bath'd in the Heart of the Redeemer, and Mercy as triumphantly kiſſeth it, Juſtice glorying, and mercy ſinging at the triumphs of Juſtice, Truth holding both Threatnings and Promiſes in conjunction in her boſom; all careſſing one another, and applauding the deſigns and accompliſhments of manifold Wiſdom and infinite power, which remov'd the ſeeming contrarieties, and tyed a knot between time and eternity. Chriſt is the firſt-born of every Creature, Col. 1. 15. Or of all creation πασης κτισεως, as the Firſt-born is the ſtrength of the Parent, ſo is Chriſt the ſtrength of God. The glories of God ſcattered in the creation are gather'd into him, all things in Heaven and Earth. The Eternal glories of God in the confirm'd felicity of Angels, and reſtor'd happineſs of man. As he gather'd Angels and Men into one Family, all things in Heaven and Earth, Eph. 1. 10. So he gather'd all the Attributes of God into one ſumm to conſpire together for the welfare of Believers. His Juſtice made our iniquities meet upon him, that they might not remain upon us; Wrath paſt by us and ſeiz'd upon him. Wiſdom contriv'd for his own glory and our good. His Truth made good his Promiſes upon our perſons, and his Threatnings upon our ſurety; he took the curſe off from us to fulfil it on Chriſt, Gal. 3. 13. that he might be righteous as well as gracious to forgive us our ſins, 1 John 1. 9. the treaſures of his goodneſs and grace are opened in him, that we might receive Grace for Grace, John 1. 16. more grace from God in Redemption than that we forfeited by Tranſgreſſion, more habitual grace for our eſtabliſhment than Adam had in Paradiſe for his ſtanding. He is made Wiſdom, Righteouſneſs, Sanctification, and Redemption, the Power, Wiſdom, Juſtice, Holineſs of God to us: Goodneſs, Grace, Love, Righteouſneſs, whatſoever diſtinction they have in themſelves, meet all in him in their glory and ſweetneſs, combine together, and ſing one and the ſame note for the happineſs of man; all the treaſures of them are laid open in Chriſt, to be laid out in all the fruits flowing from them for the Eternal welfare of Believers. How delightful a knowledg of God is this which Chriſt tranſmits to his people? How much higher and more raviſhing is this proſpect of God, than that in the creation? All variety with Harmony is pleaſant; the choiceſt muſick is made up of diſcords skilfully fitted to agree with one another and compoſe a charming air. This is that Chriſt, in whom God hath made all his Attributes which ſeem'd to be in debate againſt man, and irreconcileable to one another, to be in league together for the good of every believing Soul, and rendered all their wayes ways of pleaſantneſs, and all their paths peace. Let our Souls praiſe him, let us delight to view him, this is that Prophet, Let us rejoyce in him.

But in particular the Patience, Wiſdom, Purity, Juſtice, Mercy, Power, and Truth of God with the Reaſons and depths of them were manifeſted in and by Chriſt, as well as the nature, and excellency of God.

[1.] The Patience of God. We ſee the Patience of God as the firſt Attribute coming to our view after the Tranſgreſſion of man, and the interpoſition of Chriſt. When Chriſt ſtept out of the councel of God, forbearance with a fallen World ſtept out to meet him. This is the reaſon, why he did not daſh the World in pieces upon the ſin of the firſt man, and raiſe another that ſhould keep his Law; nothing of this glorious perfection had then been viſible. This is the reaſon why after forbearance with the firſt man, and after multiplyed provocations by his poſterity he did not deſtroy the whole race of mankind, and turn a defac'd World into flames, and make it ſmoke by the fire of his Juſtice, as well as he had rear'd and preſerv'd it by the arm of his Power. He had not then manifeſted the long-ſuffering, the unwearyed duration of this Attribute, nor anſwered the end of his Patience which was a diſcovery of himſelf in his Son. By this we come to know why we were not made a prey to the juſt wrath of God and the fury of Devils, why the Divine revenge was held back ſo many ages, why he winkt at the times of ignorance and corruption, Acts 17. 30, 31. even becauſe he had appointed a man to jugde the World whom he would firſt ſend to ſave the World: Why he ſuffered all nations to walk in their own wayes, yet left them not without witneſs in the diſpenſations of his Providence, viz. that in time he might be known in his Son to be the living God which made Heaven and Earth, Acts 14. 15, 16, 17. He exerciſed his Patience upon this account, and would not take the forfeiture in expectation of the fulneſs of time, wherein his Son ſhould be manifeſted to make up the breach, and the glorious deſign of his Patience manifeſted in him. For the great ground of it was the diſcovery of his name, his loving kindneſs in Jeſus Chriſt, Iſaiah 48. 9. For my name ſake will I defer mine anger, and for my praiſe will I refrain for thee that I cut thee not off. And he bore with an infinite Patience the affront of Jews and Gentiles, till the time came that his Son ſhould be ſet out to be a propitiation for the remiſſion of ſins, that were paſt through the forbearance of God, Rom. 3. 25. He diſcover'd his Patience in not pouring down upon every great ſin deſtroying judgements; not for want of Juſtice in himſelf or lowneſs of diſpoſition, but for the demonſtration of his Juſtice and Loving kindneſs together in the ſacrifice of his Son, wherein he intended to repreſent himſelf in a glorious manner to the World. His kindneſs was the end of his forbearance. He ſupported himſelf under the indignities of men, and deferred the time of the oblation of this Sacrifice, that this Attribute might be known, and that he might have a more glorious foundation for the diſplay of his pardoning Mercy, which he intended ſhould follow after, and might bring forth his grace in its glory to take away the guilt of mens

ſins, upon the return of men to him, after the bearing with ſo many oppoſitions; 2 Pet. 3. 9. He is long-ſuffering to us, not willing that any ſhould periſh. 'Tis highly diſcover'd alſo, ſince the coming of Chriſt; that notwithſtanding thoſe repeated indignities offer'd to his Son by contempt and unbelief, and to himſelf in his Son; yet he keeps the World ſtanding, till he hath gathered in the Objects of his Eternal Grace, and compleated his Family in his Son; whereby he hath render'd his Long-ſuffering more clear and admirable, than if he had ſuſtain'd the rejection of Millions of more Prophets, than ever yet were put to death or perſecuted by the unbelieving World.

[2.] His love and goodneſs and pardoning Mercy; Joh. 14. 6,7. I am the way, the truth and the life, no man comes to the Father but by me; If you had known me you ſhould have known my Father alſo, and from hence-forth you know him and have ſeen him. As I am the way of acceſs to the Father, ſo I am the Medium of the manifeſtation of the Father: If you know me, my love and my heart toward you, you cannot but know my Fathers heart and love too. Though man fell from his finite goodneſs and duty to God; yet it is manifeſt in Chriſt, that the Infinite Creator could not fall from his Infinite Tenderneſs. If the manifeſtation of his Goodneſs was his end in bringing forth the Creatures, it was much more his end in bringing forth his Son.

(1.) This the creation did not diſcover. Man might know that God was bountiful, in filling his heart with food and gladneſs by the creatures; but did not underſtand any thing of pardoning Mercy in God, if ſin ſhould enter upon the World. Had the Creation had any Inſcription of Forgiving Grace upon it, why do we not find ſome ſupplications for it from the mouth of Adam after the Fall? Do we not find his Heart as naked of any thoughts of this nature, as he was of his original Righteouſneſs: He was ſeiz'd with an horror of Conſcience after his ſin, but not a groan for Pardon; for how could it enter into the heart of Adam but by Revelation? The Law given him at his creation, ſpake not a ſyllable of it; the voice of that was nothing but Death, Death, Gen. 2. 17. Thou ſhalt ſurely die. Nothing elſe could be expected by him upon his eating the forbidden fruit, nor could he have the leaſt ſentiment of Remiſſion till the pronouncing the Promiſe of Chriſt in the ſeed of the woman. The manifeſtation of Chriſt in the beginning of the book was the firſt notice of any ſuch perfection in the Nature of God: that ſame moment of time wherein Chriſt was given wrapt up in a promiſe, did pardoning grace ſparkle out, and not any time before.

In the Law which God gave Adam for the Rule of Obedience, there was nothing but ſtrict juſtice, and upon Gods firſt enquiry after Adam, there was no proclamation of Pardon by God, nor expectation of it by Adam; but an examination of matter of Fact. Haſt thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou ſhouldſt not eat? Gen. 3. 11, 12. Nor any offer of Adam falling upon his knees and imploring mercy; but ſtanding upon his Juſtification, wiping off the durt from himſelf to diſcharge it wholly upon his Wife. The Treaſures of this were ſo cloſely lock't up in God, that Adam juſt ſtept out of a happy condition (who though he had loſt his Righteouſneſs, had not loſt his Knowledge and Memory, as appears by his anſwer to God of what had been done before his Fall, and in the time of his Fall, yet) could not in the leaſt imagine any mercy; and therefore the wittieſt and moſt refin'd natural Knowledge in the Heathen, leſs than Adam had, could not have any ſentiments of it barely from Nature, without ſome Traditional Revelation at leaſt. This Attribute could not poſſibly have exerted it ſelf without Chriſt. Power, Wiſdom, Goodneſs, did ſhine in the Creation, Holineſs in the Law of Nature, Juſtice in the puniſhment of Fallen Angels, and expulſion of Man out of Paradiſe; but this of forgiving Mercy, if you reſpect the firſt Oeconomy of things, could not be evidenc'd without Chriſt; for, not to ſpeak of the naturalneſs of Gods Juſtice, whereby he could not, in regard of his Nature, pardon ſin without a ſatisfaction which is very probable; but only that the word of threatning being paſt for the death of the Sinner, a Satisfaction was neceſſary for the Truth of God, Honour of the Law, and recovery of the Creature, which could not have been perform'd by a meer Creature; therefore it was neceſſary ſome Perſon above a Creature ſhould undertake it, or elſe no ſuch thing as pardoning Grace, which is one of the greateſt glories of the Deity, could ever have been known either by Angels or Men, but had remain'd undiſcover'd in unfathomable depths, unknown even to the Angels in heaven, who know nothing of God but by the effects, becauſe his eſſence is inacceſſible to the Underſtanding of any Creature. As in Chriſt alone, and in his bloud, we have the purchaſe of Redemption, even the forgiveneſs of ſin, Col. 1. 14. ſo in and by him alone, we had the firſt diſcovery of it in the promiſe, and a full declaration of it afterward. When he was ſet forth as a Propitiation, it was not only to purchaſe our Happineſs, but to let into our Knowledge the righteous and gracious nature of God thereby, Rom. 3. 25. To declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins, to declare, I ſay, at this time his righteouſneſs, that he might be juſt, and a juſtifier; which declaration was not made by nature and the Creation.

(2.) This then was only diſcover'd in and by Chriſt. Both in the glory of it to God, and the ſweetneſs of it to us. It was in Chriſt diſcover'd to be Gods Nature, and our Life. God is love, and the manifeſtation of it to us was in Gods ſending his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him, 1 Joh. 4. 8, 9. that the dead world might live through him. Hereby he did not only declare himſelf placable, not only deſirous to manifeſt a ſcanty goodneſs to the creature; but to ſhow that his nature was enrich'd with the choiceſt Love and Grace, and his deſire that it ſhould flow out in the higheſt manner through a Mediator to the polluted and rebellious World, and be ſcrew'd up to the higheſt peg. In him God opened his bowels which lay ſecretly yearning, and brought life and immortality for the creature to light through the Goſpel, 1 Tim. 1. 10. Both Mercy and Love were manifeſted. Love is a perfection of a higher ſtrain than mercy; Mercy may be prevalent where Love is abſent. Mercy hath for its object a thing miſerable, Love hath for its object a thing amiable, pardoning Grace hath for its object a thing criminal. The Mercy of God is manifeſted in the death of Chriſt for us when we wallowed in Miſery, the pardoning Grace of God is declar'd upon us as we are loaded with guilt; Love is manifeſted in being well-pleas'd with us in the beſt beloved, after we are made comely and amiable by him. Chriſt is the Medium of the manifeſtation of this. This was his main deſign, that his grace might be diſcover'd with an Emphatical praiſe, Eph. 1. 6. To the praiſe of the glory of his grace, i. e. by an Hebraiſm, his glorious grace; and be known in its glory to men and Angels, in the height, breadth, length and depth of it; that he might communicate his Spirit, his heaven, himſelf to them; to be in them, and they in him; to love them with ſuch a love as he loves his Son, i. e. with ſuch a love as he loves himſelf; and all his other Attributes were employ'd in the deſign of glorifying this: Wiſdom contrives, Truth deſigns the Sacrifice, Juſtice ſtrikes, to render Mercy and Love Triumphant. God conſtituted this his principal glory, and in a manner eſteem'd not all his other Vertues but as they were order'd to manifeſt this. Though he had manifeſted ſeveral perfections in the Creation, yet this was utterly unknown to the World till he expos'd his Son to death for them. The Law manifeſted him to be juſt, the Goſpel manifeſted him to be juſt and a juſtifier; In the Law he manifeſts the Soveraignty of his Juſtice in puniſhment, in the Goſpel he inflicts ſevere puniſhments upon his Son the ſurety, and mercifully abſolves the believing offender; he is in Chriſt unvail'd, and ſhines in the condeſcenſions of his Love.

Diſcover'd,

(1.) In the freeneſs of it. His goodneſs ſhin'd in the Creation, but with a weaker light. Goodneſs was communicated to Nothing in bringing it into Being, which Nothing, as it had not merited that goodneſs, ſo it had not deſerv'd the contrary: It had as little of demerit, as it had of merit: He made his Goodneſs break out then upon nothing; but in Chriſt upon things worſe than nothing. He manifeſted his Goodneſs in giving life to man, but without the expence of the bloud of his Son and the loſs of his Life by whom he conferr'd the benefit of Life upon ſinners. What good-

goodneſs he manifeſted to man after his creation, in giving him the other Creatures for his ſervice, had not ſo beautiful a complexion as his goodneſs in Chriſt: Then he gave Creatures to him of the ſame mould with man himſelf, but in Chriſt he gives mans Creator to man; his own Wiſdom whereby he created all things. When he gave creatures to man at firſt, he gave them to an holy, juſt, righteous man, pure as he came out of the mint of Gods Power and Holineſs; but he gives his Son to depraved Man, who had affronted him, and caſt thoſe rich endowments of his nature behind his Back. He finds out a way to glorifie his Mercy, when he might only have glorified his Juſtice; takes Rebels into his Armes, who had merited the thunders of his Anger; and, by an incomparable and unimagin'd kindneſs, gives his Son to ſave his Enemies, and adopts them for his children; and that by a free act of his own, not being perſwaded by any other; Joh. 3. 16. He gave his only begotten Son. Alſo, in taking occaſion from ſo great an evil as ſin, to manifeſt ſuch an exceſs of love, as if the ſteams of Dung and Vapors from Mire and Dirt, ſhould be an occaſion of the Suns emitting his Beams with greater clearneſs and freedom. The Heathens regarded God as ſevere; though they ſaw teſtimonies of his Patience, they imagin'd the kindneſs he ſhew'd to them, wrung from him by their Sacrifices and Cries, and purchas'd by their Services; but they ſaw not the ſprings of kindneſs freely bubbling up in his own breaſt. But in Chriſt we behold his compaſſions moving of themſelves, and working together till the whole deſign of love was brought to perfection.

(2.) In the tenderneſs of it. The Goſpel preſents God in Chriſt under more tender Titles to Man, than either Creation or Law. In the one, it was the Lord God; In the other, the Mighty Lord, the Lord of Hoſts, the Terrible God; Names and Markes of Grandeur, Soveraignty and Juſtice. In the Goſpel he aſſumes the Title of Father, a name of kindneſs and compaſſion; and is call'd in the New Teſtament more by that Title of Father, than that of a Lord, as if his Soveraignty had been ſwallow'd up in tenderneſs. This Title of Father is aſcrib'd to him in the Old Teſtament more rarely; once in regard of the deliverance of the Iſraelites from Egypt, as Typical of the Redemption by Chriſt; Deut. 32. 6. Is not he thy Father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee and eſtabliſhed thee? And promis'd to be the familiar name whereby they ſhould call upon God in the times of the Goſpel, Jer. 3. 19. Thou ſhalt call me, my Father, and ſhalt not turn away from me. As indeed the name Abba, Father, is peculiar to the Goſpel, and the name wherewith we have acceſs to the Throne of Grace. In giving alſo a new Law founded upon better Promiſes, repealing the Threatnings in regard of any force upon a Believer, and enjoyning milder conditions than in the Firſt Covenant.

(3.) In the Fulneſs of it, declar'd in the Perſon of his Son. Rather than he would loſe the whole Race of Mankind, he would ſpare nothing, no not his beſt beloved; with whom though he were ever well-pleas'd, yet he muſt ſuffer, that in him he might be well pleas'd with us. He advanc'd his Mercy over all the difficulties which lay in his way; and to magnifie it, would not ſpare his Son, that he might ſpare the ſinner, but condemn him to death for the Redemption of a Servant. The immenſe goodneſs which appears in Heaven and Earth, Sun and Moon, and motions of them, and in every other Creature, is nothing to the making him a Creature by whom he made the Worlds. To make him, who was the brightneſs of his Glory, become as vile as Earth; him who was God, to be a man; the Lord of Life to be the ſubject of death, whereby the ſouls of men ſunk into the Depths of Miſery, are made capable of deliverance and enjoyment of an happy immortality, the poſſeſſion of an heavenly Paradiſe, a communion in glory with himſelf, is a love infinitely above that Goodneſs which appear'd in the Creation; and ſo magnificent, that if Angels and Men had Millions of years to buſie their thoughts, they knew not know to imagine higher: For it cannot enter into the Heart of men or Angels to conceive the Grandeurs of Affection and Mercy, which God hath not only prepar'd, but repreſented to our view in Chriſt. He hath hereby evidenced, that he was ſo far from envying the Happineſs of Man, as the Devil had made

Adam

Adam at firſt believe, that he would rather advance it at the expence and coſt of the bloud of his Son, and would give life more abundantly in Chriſt, Joh. 10. 10. in a greater plenitude and longer duration, than Adam had by creation and his own ſtrength, or the Patriarchs under the Law. Here love ſpends it ſelf in the Conqueſt of Death and Hell, which had diſſolv'd the happineſs of man; gives life, a freedom from unrighteouſneſs the death of our innocent nature; and from the ſeverities and Torments of Juſtice, which is the Death of our Perſons. And whereas in creation he gave creatures to man, which are the works of his hands, he gives now his Son to man, who is partaker of his Eſſence; and ſends him to be put in the place of the Sacrifices, whoſe Throats were cut under the Law, and were unable to make an atonement for ſin; and not only to ſuffer for us, but to ſuffer as a curſe and execrable thing in our ſtead, Gal. 3. 13. * If God had ſent an Angel, one of the excellent Creatures of Heaven, to be cloath'd with our Nature, and dye in our ſtead, it had been admirable goodneſs not to ſpare for us one of thoſe ſublime and excellent creatures; God had manifeſted a goodneſs, but had not been glorified by it in the fruits of it, which we could never have enjoy'd, becauſe no creature could pay a ſufficient Ranſom for the ſin of man; the Ranſom was to be Infinite, but Angels were limited and finite creatures; and if they had undertaken, they muſt have ſuffer'd too Infinitely, and never have emerg'd out of their Miſery. Yet ſuppoſing an Angel could have redeem'd us, this Love which is the glory of his Nature, had not appear'd in its riches by ſuch a grant, becauſe the Angels were form'd of nothing, and were the works of his hands, but were not of the Eſſence of God. But herein his love appears in the choiceſt dreſs, in that he ſent one begotten of his ſubſtance, one with him, true God with the Father, to whom the Father had communicated his nature. We call not the works of an Artificer his children, becauſe they have not his nature, though they are the products of his Art and Induſtry. Herein he ſhows the luſtre of his Mercy, and that he is Love indeed in his Nature, as well as in his fruits, beyond the imagination of Men and Angels, and all that nature could inſtruct them in. His ſhooting his Arrows into his Son rather than loſe the Rebel, and engraving upon him the marks of his Anger, is the higheſt point his compaſſion to us could mount to, and the higheſt proof of the Treaſures of Love and Pity in his Heart for us.

* Meſtrezat ſur 1 Joh. 4. 8, 9.

(3.) This knowledge of Gods love is moſt comfortable to the Creature. God is ſweetned in Chriſt to our Underſtanding: He lays by his fury to unvail his Mercy, and ſticks the ſting of his Juſtice in Chriſt, to receive us into the boſom of his Love. 'Tis a ſtrong conſolation, that if God kept to his own deſign, form'd in his breaſts from Eternity, and diſcover'd to the World in Chriſt, to advance the Riches of his Grace, no penitent and believing ſinner can deſpair, but rather have an argument that God will pardon him, becauſe it is ſutable to the deſign he had from Eternity, and the manifeſtation of it in time: for why ſhould he prepare all things for mans Recovery before mans Fall, foreſeen by him and decreed to be permitted? Why ſhould he provide a Medicine before the Diſeaſe, a Solder before the Crack, and fix upon a certain way to pardon the Rebels, before they had Beings wherewith to Rebel, if he had no intention to apply it, when they ſhould have the grace to believe it? And is not this pardoning Grace rather honoured by the Pardon of great ſins, and many ſins, than by the pardon of few ſins and ſmall ſins? Therefore, as he ſuffer'd ſin to enter into the World, that he might bring upon the ſtage his pardoning Mercy, to the view and comfort of the Creature, which elſe had lain in the Abyſs of the Divine Eſſence without any opportunity of diſcovery; ſo he ſuffers men to go on in ſin a long time, that his Grace may enter upon their Souls with the greater Magnificence and Glory; The Law enter'd that ſin might abound, but where ſin abounded, grace did much more abound, Rom. 5. 20. Not, or not only, that Law the Jews had, but the firſt Law to man in Innocence; not as the finis intentionis, but the event in the fall of Man and preſcience of God. Men naturally think God will not pardon their Crimes, cannot have a kindneſs for ſuch notorious Rebels, becauſe their ſcanty Natures are not capable of ſuch a quality towards grievous offenders againſt themſelves. But this Declaration of love in Chriſt takes away all

ſcruples from men, brings forth his Love triumphing over all the objections of penitent Souls, that Heaven it ſelf cannot find a ſtronger medium to aſſure them of an immenſe plenitude of Love in the breaſts of God. The Goodneſs of God is therefore propoſed as an object of Truſt (as it may be underſtood) in the day of the Goſpel, Hoſ. 3. 5. which is a larger manifeſtation of his goodneſs than in the Law which was an object of Fear. They ſhall fear or Truſt in the Lord, or run with haſt unto the Lord and to his goodneſs, viz. Chriſt, in whom they taſt the bounty and goodneſs of God, and this in the latter dayes when the ſhadows of the Law ſhall fly away and have their period. And indeed when a poor deluded ſinner ſees thoſe Treaſures of Mercy in Chriſt, that raviſhing Love doth as much ſurpriſe as delight him, ſo that with an amazing comfort he can caſt himſelf into the arms of that Goodneſs which are open'd ſo wide in the Son of his Love. So that here only was Love in its willingneſs, grace in its freeneſs, mercy in its ſweetneſs, goodneſs in its fullneſs of benefits conſpiring together to ſet themſelves forth in their beſt attire.

[3.] The Wiſdom of God is admirably manifeſted herein. The ſending of Chriſt being ſo ſtupendious, the Wiſdom of God muſt be admirable in the ends deſigned by it, which ſhoots forth with clearer beams in his Son than in the creation, in which regard Chriſt is called the Wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. Chriſt crucifyed the wiſdom of God, i. e. the higheſt diſcovery of his Wiſdom, is in the crufixion of Chriſt, in the Death of the Son of God upon the croſs. Wiſdom ſhin'd in the creation, it glitters every day in Providence, but the depths and riches of it are in Chriſt. In thoſe there are ſome doles, ſome leſſer ſumms, but the treaſures of it are hid in him, as in the great Exchequer. Here are the deep councels of God, which the Apoſtle cannot ſpeak of without a raviſhing admiration, Rom. 11. 33. Oh the depths of the riches both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God. A manifold Wiſdom, Eph. 3. 10. in regard of the variety of effects in the glorifying his name, and dignifying his Creature, in repairing the breach and eſtabliſhing the repair. Wherefore the Apoſtle ſpeaking of this great myſtery breaks out into a Doxology of the Wiſdom of God, Rom. 16. 25. 26, 27. To God only wiſe be glory thorough Jeſus Chriſt for ever, Amen. When the Creation was deſpoyl'd by ſin, not a jot of goodneſs left in it to give God any content, it was a greater Wiſdom to repair it without breaking it to pieces, than to have created a new one. The Wiſdom in a new Creation had been but of the ſame level, but that in reſtoring was of a higher elevation and a clearer gloſs. To bring his glory out of the aſhes wherein it ſeem'd to be buried, to bring man out of darkneſs wherein he was, as to his own ſtrength, irrecoverably involved; to put Heaven and Earth in tune again, which ſin had made at diſcord with one another, was a high piece of skill. 'Tis an admirable Wiſdom among men to unite two Princes at variance without invading either of their rights, but intirely preſerving them, to link them in a ſtronger peace than that they were in before they fell out; to enlarge their Empire not only to a mutual ſatisfaction, but the encreaſe of both their grandeur and glories. The caſe is the ſame; God repaires the breach between himſelf and man, and preſerves his right, he loſeth nothing of his own honour, but enlargeth it; man is reſtor'd to favour with a temporary diminution of his bodily happineſs, but with an Eternal encreaſe of the felicities both of his ſoul and body; all ſeeming contradictions are remov'd, and means fully proportion'd to the ends intended are appointed. In this regard the Apoſtle calls it all Wiſdom and Prudence, Eph. 1. 8. Wiſdom drawing the platform, and prudence diſpoſing the means conſonant to the end. The work is done to the content of both, the glory of both, the reſt of God and the happineſs of the Creature; and the skill was more wonderful in repairing the devaſtation in ſuch an infallible way, paſt the reach of the Tempter that defac'd the firſt creation. Certainly that which ſhall be moſt admir'd at laſt, will be the harmony and conſent of things, by the skill of infinite Wiſdom, in conſpiring together for the bringing about thoſe ends God aim'd at.

(1.) In uniting the greateſt extreams. In the creation God brought nothing to become ſomething. In this he joyns together beings at a greater diſtance.

(1.) The divine and humane natures are united in one perſon. The higheſt intellectual nature, with the loweſt rational nature, infinite and finite, glory and miſery, time and Eternity. * Chriſt calls himſelf the Son of man, to ſhew that he was really man in qualities, John 3. 13. And no man hath aſcended up to Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of man which is in Heaven, yet ſaith he is in Heaven to manifeſt that he is God, man born of the Virgin, yet the Son of God Eternally begotten; the word made fleſh: God in Heaven manifeſted in fleſh upon the Earth, each preſerving their intire properties, the Son of man by this union is become the Son of God, yet retains his pure and naked form as man; the word by this union is made fleſh, yet without loſing his infinity, eternity and original being: As a man hath two parts, an immortal and inviſible Soul, and a mortal viſible body. * As a man he paſſeth through infirmities, as God he is above them. The two natures are diſtinct, yet united in one ſubſiſtence, and make but one perſon, as the ſoul and body make one man. Yet not in ſuch a manner, as that the Divine Nature is the form of the humane, for then Chriſt were not real man; he was in the form of God, yet in the form of a Servant, Phil. 2. 6, 7. Tho there was no change in the divinity, yet the luſtre of it was vail'd by the infirmities of the fleſh, as when a thick cloud interpoſeth between the body of the Sun and our eyes, it obſcures the beams from our eyes, but defaceth not the body of the Sun or raviſheth its inherent beauty. * And this Union was made at the firſt conception; if it had not been ſo, the Virgin had not conceived God but a pure man, contrary to Gal. 4. 4. God ſent his Son made of a Woman. If the humanity was not at that inſtant united to the λογος, it did then ſubſiſt in its own created perſon, and the Conception was then terminated to a created perſon, and in no ſort to God, and then it cannot be ſaid that God was conceived of the Virgin: If the divinity did aſſume the humanity of that perſon after the time when Chriſt dyed, and the humanity had not before been united to the Divine Nature, his bloud then ſhed could not have been ſaid to be the bloud of God, tho the divinity ſhould have aſſum'd that humanity after the Reſurrection. An unexpreſſible Wiſdom in the uniting in an unconceivable manner two ſuch vaſt diſtances, the Divine and Humane Nature in one Perſon, that there might be a ſufficiency to perform the task undertaken, and capacity to endure the ſuffering requir'd to make up the breach: To unite one greater than a man to the humane nature, that he might ſatisfie for man, and have that in himſelf which might exceed all the debt man ow'd to God! He provided a Divine perſon to ſatisfie a God offended, a Mediator one with God that was wrong'd, and one with man that had ſinn'd; partaking of the nature of both, that he might pay a price ſufficient for the one, and acceptable to the other. In the Creation one Creature was united to another, and all made up a World. In this, finite is united to infinite to make up a compleat and able Mediator.

(2.) The Juſtice and Mercy of God are united in a joynt applauſe. He becomes Merciful without being unjuſt, and juſt without impairing the honour of his compaſſion. Juſtice hath the higheſt right, and Mercy its utmoſt intention, the cries of his Juſtice and the yearnings of his bowels are united without depriving either of their rights; no complaints can be found in the mouth of the one, nor any diſcontent in the looks of the other, but Mutual ſmiles and mutual applauſes. Juſt and Juſtifier are joyned in one Juſtice and Juſtification, Rom. 3. 26. The World is preſerv'd which in Juſtice ought to be deſtroyed, without any reproach to the Righteouſneſs of God, as the Governour of it; an Eternal marriage is made between Mercy and Juſtice, both ſhake hands and not only acquieſce but rejoice, for the ſin is puniſht by juſtice in the ſurety, and pardoned by Mercy in the ſinner; both pleaſed and both gratified in ſeeing the honour of the Law preſerv'd, and the guilt of the ſinner remov'd.

(3.) In uniting God and Man in eternal fellowship. By this act he brings ſtubble to dwell with flames, and weakneſs to behold and enjoy Glory without being overwhelmed by the weight and ſplendor of it, to draw near to the ſupream Majeſty through the vail of the fleſh of Chriſt. He cauſeth pardon and puniſhment to meet, that God appeas'd, and man acquitted may come together, the puniſhment is inflicted upon the ſurety that the offender might ſhare in the glorious fruits of his Mediation, God and Man are brought to Amity, Angels and Men are made one Family, and more grace given to fit us for God then Adam loſt. This was the point his Wiſdom aim'd at, to make the riches of Grace abound towards us, Ephe. 1. 7, 8. And to add to the wonder of his Wiſdom, God ſaves the ſinner in the ſame way whereby he condemn'd the ſin, and advanceth the offender to communion with him, the ſame way whereby he ſhow'd his deteſtation of the crime. Sin is made the mark of the Divine diſpleaſure in the perſon of Chriſt, ſwallow'd up and devour'd by the flames of Juſtice, that the wall of ſeparation being remov'd he might meet his creature with armes widen'd by the deareſt Love.

(2.) In effecting this reſtoration without the perpetual prejudice of the Mediator, and with his great honour and advantage. Had our ſins been transferr'd upon an Angel, he muſt have layn for ever plung'd in that miſery, for ſince his nature was not infinite to render his ſatisfaction infinite, an infinite duration of his ſufferings was neceſſary to make that ſatisfaction valid, which his nature being finite was too weak to do. But the Son of God ſuffers a ſhort time, to have an eternal glory for himſelf in his humane nature as well as for his brethren. A ſatisfaction for ſin is procur'd without a total deſtruction of the Perſon ſatisfying; for ſuch an one was deſign'd by the infinite Wiſdom of God, whom it was impoſſible for the bands of death to hold, Acts 2. 24. His death the puniſhment of ſin is but of a ſhort duration in regard of the pains, yet eternal in regard of efficacy for thoſe ends for which it was intended; Gods glory is reſtor'd, mans happineſs ſecur'd without a perpetual impairing the Mediator, but with an eternal exaltation of him.

(3.) In fruſtrating the ſubtlety of Satan. The Devil thought he had brought a total deſtruction upon mankind, when he perſwaded our firſt parents to eat of the forbidden fruit. But God orders it to bring about a greater glory to himſelf, and a firmer ſtability to his people, in introducing an Everlaſting Covenant founded in a Mediator, which could not be broken; and eſtabliſhing their happineſs upon ſurer terms than it was ſettled on in Paradiſe: And afterwards outwits the Devil in ordering him to be inſtrumental to that which he deſigned to hinder; for while he is filling the Heart of Judas to betray Chriſt, and egging the Heart of the Jews to Crucifie him, God by his Wiſdom over-rules him to a ſubſerviency to his own glorious ends; for by that very way he thought to ſtifle the good of mankind, he occaſionally promotes their perpetual Redemption. God turn'd the ſubtlety of the Devil to his own praiſe, bruis'd the Devils head by letting him bruiſe the Mediators heel, and made his malice conduce to the reſtoration of mankind from that ruin he had before by a proſperous ſubtlety effected. God by a myſterious Wiſdom more ſignal than all that in the Creation, gain'd the victory over the Devil who had defac'd his work, and gave man alſo a victory over the tempter who had depray'd his Soul.

[4.] In the propagating this means of the diſcovery of himſelf. The Wiſdom as well as the power of God is diſcover'd in uſing the moſt unlikely means to bring about his great ends, as the skill of a man is more evident in the moving great bodies by ſmall engines and wires, than if he engag'd in it a ſtrength proportionable to the vaſtneſs of the body he would move. God hath ſpread abroad this knowledge by ſuch means as the World counts fooliſhneſs, and by ſuch perſons as are no better than Fools in their eſteem, 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27. he lodged his treaſures of Wiſdom firſt in veſſels of Earth, bended the World to himſelf by the Sermons of Fiſhermen, enlightned the World by men unskilful in the affairs of it: Chooſeth not to this purpoſe the Cedars of Lebanon, but the ſhrubs of the Valley, not the learned Phariſees of Jeruſalem but the poor men of Galilee, whoſe education was not capable to enoble their minds, and fit them for ſuch great actions as they were employed in. But out of the mouths of ſuch babes and ſucklings he ordains praiſe to his own Wiſdom, and makes the World know that the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than men, 1 Cor. 1. 25. Now, what is the frame of Heaven and Earth to this? Juſt as his Wiſdom is in making a clod of Earth to that which appears in the fabrick of a man, or his yet more glorious wiſdom in the frame of an Angel. In the creation it is like a Sun-beam through the chink of a wall in compariſon of this which is like the Suns face in a brighter glory. There is counſel as well as will in the minute paſſages of Providence, but a more glorious workmanſhip of Wiſdom in the diſcovery of Chriſt.

(4.) The Juſtice of God is more evidenc'd than by all other judgments in this World, or that which is to come. God would be acknowledged in his Juſtice after the fall, which was not known nor could not be known in an innocent ſtate any other way than in the threatning, God would therefore have bloody ſacrifices which might ſignifie mans demerit, and therefore probably God was diſpleaſed with Cain for offering onely the fruits of the Earth, whereby he onely acknowledged Gods dominion and bounty, but not Gods Juſtice and his own Offence which requir'd a bloudy ſacrifice, he did not acknowledge the rights of juſtice and the neceſſity of a Mediator to bear his ſin. Whence Abel who offer'd a more ſignificant ſacrifice is ſaid Heb. 11. 4. To offer a more excellent ſacrifice, πλείονα θυσίαν. And his juſtice was never ſo evident as in Chriſt crucifyed, he choſe his Son to lay upon him the guilt of the World, ſubjected him in the ſtate of a criminal, depreſt him to the condition of a ſervant, ſunk him into the miſery of Rebels, cauſed him to ſwallow the diſgraces of men, and drink down the vials of his Anger rather than the ſin of the World ſhould boaſt of impunity, and men preſume to think him diſarm'd of his Juſtice. What if the whole World was drown'd by a wrathful deluge, Sodom and Gomorrah conſum'd to aſhes by a ſhower of Fire? What if every Son of Adam were to lye roaring in endleſs torments? What if not an Angel from Heaven had eſcaped the ſin and puniſhment of Devils? What if this world were multiplyed into millions, what if every man upon Earth, and every Angel in Heaven, were multiplyed into thouſands of millions of men and Angels? What if every ſpire of graſs, grain of Corn, atom of the ſand were made a rational creature, and for ſin thrown for ever into devouring flames? Is not here unexpreſſible Juſtice? But what is this Juſtice upon creatures which were made, to that juſtice upon his Son by whom he made the Creatures? What is this to the Son of God trayling a weak body for thirty three years in the World, ſuffering the indignities of men and Devils, bearing the weight of an infinite wrath? What are all other judgments to his bloudy ſweat in the Garden, or the groans of this Divine perſon upon the croſs, of more worth than innumerable worlds of Creatures? Who ever knew before the power of Gods wrath? Pſal. 90. 11. For as there is no proportion of Creatures to God, ſo there is no proportion of the death of the Son of God for a time, to the death of all men and Angels together. Conſider the circumſtances to render the juſtice of God more viſible.

(1.) He was innocent in his own perſon. He was beloved by his Father, had never diſpleaſed him, the ſins he ſuffered for were none of his own by commiſſion, he made them his own by a voluntary ſubmiſſion, and God made them his own by a penal infliction. God would have ſin puniſhed in the perſon of our ſurety, though he was his only begotten and perfectly innocent Son.

(2.) He was willing to pay the debt. He offer'd himſelf up with a deſign to glorifie his Father, to reſtore the Creation to its former lovelineſs, to renew the delight that God had in his works when he pronounc'd them good, a conſideration which one would think might ſweeten the ſevereſt juſtice, yet nothing abated him, he muſt groan and bleed to death.

(3.) Yet he endur'd ſorrows unexpreſſible. The powers of darkneſs had their hour againſt him, all the curſes of the Law were thunder'd out againſt him, while he was cloth'd in the garb of a ſinner, as if when he had been leading to the Croſs, God had had particularly ſpoken that word to him, Curſed is he that hangs upon a tree, Gal. 3. 13. He was condemn'd and tormented by his Servants, and thoſe whoſe Salvation he ſought and deſign'd; he was ſubject to that which no man, no not the wickedeſt man had ever endur'd in this life; the Heavens were darkned upon him, earth forſaking him, none ſeem'd to have pity upon him; Terrors took hold upon him, and purſued his ſoul as the wind; his ſoul was pour'd out in him, his bones were pierced, and his ſinews took no reſt, Job 30. 15, 16, 17. He had an Angel to comfort him, but with no Commiſſion to remove the Cup from him, that his Father held out for him to drink. What a demonſtration of the Juſtice of God is here? that he in whom all Nations of the Earth were to be bleſſed, whom the Angels in Heaven bleſs, the Saints on Earth bleſs, yea and is the bleſſed of his Father, yet is made a curſe by him.

(4.) Deſerted by his Father. His prayers were not anſwer'd for deliverance, nor the leaſt ear lent to his Cryes in his weightieſt diſtreſſes. He was deſerted as to the comforts of a Father, to be given up to the ſtrokes of his Wrath, as if he had diſcarded all Bowels of Compaſſion towards him; God dealt not with him as a Father, but as a God of Juſtice; whence Chriſt upon the Croſs calls not upon God by the name of Father, which was his wonted Cuſtom, and as he had us'd that Title in the Garden; but by the Name of God, My God, my God. God became as it were cruel, Job 30. 21. to him, and with ſtrong hands oppos'd himſelf againſt him. Nay God regarded him not; as if he were for a time aſham'd to acknowledge him for his Son, and when they taunted him upon the Croſs, he truſted in God, Let him deliver him, ſeeing he truſted in him, though they reflected upon the name and glory of God, he would not at preſent take notice of the Sufferings of his own name in the reproaches of the Jews; nor remit upon that ſcore, any thing of his indignation againſt the ſins of men, when it was the fitteſt time to vindicate his Sons Innocence, becauſe for this he was condemned in making himſelf the Son of God. But he was ſo intent upon revenging ſin imputed to his Son, that he regarded not the preſent actual indignity offer'd to himſelf, ſo that our Saviour himſelf ſeems to be aſtoniſh'd at his Fathers ſilence in ſuch a caſe, ſince his words, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? are utter'd a little after that reproach of the Jews in the ſtory, Mat. 27. 43, 46. This was the higheſt act of Juſtice that the arm of God could put forth to make the Soul of his dearly beloved an offering for ſin, whereby he manifeſted that without bloud there could be no Atonement, Heb. 10. 7. And ſince no other bloud had a ſufficiency in it to quench the flames of his Juſtice, God would ſingle the beſt bloud in the whole creation wherewith to ſatisfie it; a bloud though created, yet the bloud of the Creator. Never could Earth or Hell read ſuch a Lecture of Divine Juſtice as in this caſe. * For if God ſhould damn thouſands of Worlds, his Juſtice would be glorified but in a Company of little Creatures; it would be but a devouring a few drops of a Bucket. But in Chriſt it is glorified in the man that is his Fellow, Zech. 13. 7. 'Tis a ſtronger teſtimony of a Prince's Juſtice to condemn his Son, his only Son for a Crime, than to condemn a ſhiftleſs and friendleſs Creature that hath not wherewithall to live. This doth manifeſt Gods Nature to be as juſt as it is gracious, that he will be as ſeverely intent upon the puniſhing obſtinate offenders, as he will be graciouſly intent upon the pardoning penitent ſinners. 'Tis equally incredible to the preſumptuous ſinner to believe God ſeverely juſt, as to an humble ſoul to believe God magnificently gracious. 'Tis not without cauſe therefore that the Apoſtle doth urge his diſcourſe of the juſtice of God on Chriſt, and thereupon the Juſtification of Believers with a Repetition, Rom. 3. 25. To declare, to declare, I ſay, his righteouſneſs; For in Chriſt we ſee God doth declare as well the rigors of his Juſtice, as the Grandeurs of his Love; for that ſin ſhould not be pardoned without puniſhment in his Son, is the height of Juſtice; that he ſhould expoſe his Son as a Sacrifice for Rebels, his richeſt Grace. 'Tis clear that Juſtice in God is his Eſſence, not as in us a quality; and that he is to ſinners a conſuming fire. The knowledge of God as thus repreſented in Chriſt, ſhould ſtop the courſe of a daring ſinner; God had not contriv'd the Death of his Son, but for the declaring his Juſtice, as well as magnifying his Grace. The knowledge of God in his Juſtice on Chriſt is comfortable to a believer; and the more, ſince that perfection of God which is

moſt terrible, is render'd a foundation of Joy; for God is Gracious in being Righteous, Pſal. 116. 5. Gracious is the Lord and righteous, yea our God is merciful. If he had not been righteous in his Son, we cannot conceive how with honour he could have been merciful to us. The ſeverity of his Juſtice on Chriſt, glorifies the greatneſs of his Grace to the Believer. By how much the puniſhment on Chriſt was the ſharper, by ſo much his Mercy to the Believer is the fuller. This vindictive Juſtice is joyn'd with his pardoning mercy, Exod. 34. becauſe his not clearing the Guilty, illuſtrates his pardoning the Guilty upon the account of the Surety. 'Tis a Foundation of a plea for every Believer; the Juſtice of God hath drunk up the Bloud of Chriſt as a full ſatisfaction, 'tis therefore glorified in the higheſt manner, whereas in the damnation of men, the Debt had been always paying and never paid; and ſo Juſtice had been always ſatisfying, and never ſatisfied; and ſo had been always glorifying, and never fully glorified. But here the Debt is paid, and Juſtice hath no more to demand; whereas in the other it would have been always receiving, and always demanding more, becauſe the payment could never have amounted to a full ſum. In the puniſhment of Creatures, Juſtice would have had its due by parcels, but in Chriſt it hath its full demand; and this may be pleaded with God by a Believer. This is the knowledge of God we have by Chriſt, which is as terrible to any impenitent, as it is comfortable to a penitent Believer.

[5.] The Holineſs of God is manifeſted by Chriſt. His Juſtice is founded in his Holineſs. The holy God is ſanctified in righteouſneſs, Iſa. 5. 16. His Holineſs is illuſtrated by his Juſtice, he is exalted in judgment and ſanctified in Righteouſneſs. Had not Chriſt dyed upon the Croſs, we had not had a diſcovery of the ingratitude and baſeneſs there was in the firſt ſin againſt God, and in all that follow'd it; nor could we have had ſo full a proſpect of the Holineſs and purity of Gods nature, as in the dreadful puniſhment of Chriſt for ſin, becauſe ſin never appeared in its blackeſt and bloudieſt colours, and nothing was ever able to ſhow us the true tincture of ſin comparably to the bloud of the Son of God. This perfection did ſparkle in the commands of the Law, which he gave Angels and men for the rule of their obedience; the conſtancy of this Holineſs appear'd in the renewing the Law in Tables of ſtone to the Jews; adding thereunto the Ceremonial Law, made up of ſacrifices of beaſts for the expiation of Sin, as Typical of a greater Sacrifice, whereby he would declare that he would never be pleas'd with iniquity. But this manifeſtation was with a fainter light than in a crucified Chriſt. If ever ſin appear'd odious, it was in the death of his Son; here we ſee nothing but frowns and diſpleaſures againſt the breach of his righteous Law; his deteſtation of ſin, to be as great as his indignation; his hatred of it, to be as infinite as his wrath againſt it; both joyning hand in hand together, to declare the contrariety between the beauty of the one and deformity of the other; ſtriking it to the heart, and condemning it for ever to that death and diſſolution, the greatneſs of the evil had merited; and publiſhing an irreconcileable enmity to the filthineſs and lothſomneſs of it, ſhowing that he would rather have his Son dye than ſin live. He never declared the hainouſneſs of ſin in it ſelf, and its hatefulneſs to himſelf, ſo much by all the Viols of Judgments pour'd out upon the World, by all the Flames and Torments of Hell, as by the Humiliation, Groans and Sufferings of his onely Son. That was the hatred of ſin in the perſons of his Creatures, this his hatred of it in the perſon of the man his fellow, bearing his indignation for ſins never committed by him, wherein he was both white and ruddy, Cant. 5. 10. an innocent and a ſufferer; pure in Innocence, and ruddy with Bloud. It was the intention of God to manifeſt his Holineſs and his Juſtice in this affair. When he was accus'd, Mal. 2. 17. Every one that doth evil is good in his ſight; That he delighted in evil men, and had ſtript himſelf of his Holineſs and Juſtice, and ſeem'd to countenance the wicked in his Providential diſpenſations; the Anſwer the Prophet by the Spirit of God gives to this Charge, is Mal. 3. 1. That the Lord ſhould come into his Temple, a place applyed to Chriſt in the Goſpel, whereby I ſhall make a full diſcovery that I neither delight in evil, nor will ſuffer it to go unpuniſhed. And by righteouſneſs which God declares in the death of Chriſt, Rom. 3. 26. ſome underſtand the Holineſs of God, which is evidenc'd by his being juſt and a

justifier; he is first just, that he may with the honour of his Holiness and Justice, justifie the sinner believing in Christ, whence the great praises of God in the Revelations, as well as in Isa. 6. a Gospel Vision, are for this perfection of Holiness, Rev. 4. 8. Rev. 15. 4. And herein the holiness of God may be considered with delight, which did before affright the sinner, and make him deplore the impossibility of his own, or any others standing before so pure a Majesty, 1 Sam. 6. 20. 'Tis not only discover'd in Christ but honour'd, and Justice, the fruit of it, being satisfied, both smile upon men capacitated by Christ to stand comfortably before both of them. 'Tis declar'd also in setting us so exact a pattern as the holy of holies visibly for our imitation in all ways of Humility, Self-denial, Obedience, and Love to God. The sum is this *, Though God had manifested the purity of his nature in his threatning annext to the Law, and in the punishment of man after he had sinn'd, and in the Law by the sacrifices of beasts, yet these manifested Gods hatred of sin very little in comparison of the death of his Son: God being more willing to punish sin in his Son, than to leave it unpunished, shows an extream hatred of iniquity.

* Mestrezat in Heb. 1. 3. pag. 98, 99.

[6.] The Veracity and truth of God is manifested in Christ. Christ gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time, 1 Tim. 2. 6. τὸ μαρτύριον for a testimony. ('tis a noun, not a verb) A testimony not only of his Grace, and the abundant goodness of God in redemption that he would have all men to be saved, ver. 4. excluding none who have the conditions of Faith and Repentance; But also a testimony of the Truth of his first promise constituting him the only Mediator as the seed of the woman, his Passion was a testimony of the veracity of God in that promise, whereby it was accomplish'd. Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, Joh. 1. 17. Grace in regard of our pardon, Truth in the regard of the Promise. This attribute was highly discovered, in making good the promise of the seed of the woman after so many revolutions of time, weary expectations of his coming, contrary appearances, a stay of four thousand years between the promise and the performance; whereby the Faith of the ancient Believer was almost non-plus'd, had not God supported it by a succession of prophetical predictions, as assurances that he would make good his Word; all which were to the utmost point fulfilled in the Death and Resurrection of Christ. His Veracity, In the promises of assistance made to Christ in this great undertaking, which were the Objects of our Saviours confidence, Isa. 50. 7, 9. The Lord God will help me; which were accomplished in bearing up the humane Nature under such a Sea and load of Sufferings, making his Arm bare rather than his Truth should sink in the Promises, made either to his Son or his Creatures. Veracity in his Threatnings; He had declared in Paradise his certain resolution to punish the violations of his Law, which he could not recede from, without making a breach upon the Holiness of the Deity. This threatning, which Satan had made Man believe that God would falsifie, he kept up without any spot upon his Truth, any breach of his Word, and yet disappointed the Devil of the great end he aim'd at in his Lye. He makes in Christ the threatnings of the Law, and the promises of the Gospel kiss each other; both live comfortably together, and the honour of his Truth is preserv'd in both, which have contrary aspects as far distant as Heaven and Earth, East and West in the furthest points, so that it was an impossibility in the judgment of men, that God could be true to himself, and be merciful to men, if he were immutably true to his Threatning. God starts not one step from his Word, breaks not one tittle of his Righteous Commination; his Threatnings are as certain as they are dreadful, and rather than one Iota of them shall pass away, or be accounted an empty word, or a Copy of his Countenance, he will give up his Son for the breach of that Law to which his sharp threatning was annext. Herein the immutability of God is declared to be as great in his Will, as in his Nature. 'Tis impossible for him to lye, though for the saving his Son from Death; which gives us such a representation of God in the infallibility of his Promises, as affords us a strong consolation, Heb. 6. 17, 18. The Soul that knows Christ, cannot but without scruple rest upon his Word, and think nothing more becoming him than to credit God, who hath been punctual in keeping his word, though the relation of a Son, the miseries to be endur'd by this Son of his Love, and also the yearnings yearnings of his Bowels ſtood in the way to move him to a breach of his Word, had it been poſſible: and ſince God hath not the ſame reaſon to fall back from this word of Promiſe (which is a demonſtration of his goodneſs natural to him) as he ſeems to have had to fall back from that wherein his juſtice, his ſtrange work was to be manifeſted, the ſoul is carried out to a reliance on him, beyond any rational poſſibility of a doubt. If ever he would have denied himſelf, it would have been in the caſe of his Son, whoſe prayer for the paſſing away of the cup could not make him alter one tittle of what had paſs'd from his Lips. When his own Glory in the good of his Creature was concern'd, he could not deny himſelf, 1 Tim. 2. 13. no, not in the concerns of his Son. He hath hereby declar'd, that if he be wanting to his Faithfulneſs, he would be wanting to his Nature; and to break his Word, would be to deny his Deity; which is ſuch a diſcovery of God, as dreadful to an impenitent, as delightful to a believer; for he hath manifeſted his Truth to be as much his Nature, as his Holineſs, Grace, and Juſtice.

[7.] The Power of God is manifeſted in Chriſt. Hence Chriſt is called the Power of God, as well as the Wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. Not only in the fruits of the Goſpel upon the hearts of men, but in his Office, wherein was manifeſted the Power of God in Redeeming the World. It was in him God tore up the Foundations of the Devils Empire, diſarm'd all the Curſes of the Law, overthrew the falſe conceits of the World, knockt off the Fetters of their Captivity, demoliſh'd the power of Death, ſnatcht ſouls from the flames of Hell, unbarr'd the gates of Heaven, prepar'd everlaſting Manſions, laid his beams in the waters, the foundations of an happy Eternity in the Miſery, Afflictions, Death, Bloud of his only Son. He reſtor'd man to Glory by Weakneſs, to Wiſdom by Fooliſhneſs; he made the Law loſe its ſting in the ſides of him whom it ſtruck, took away our Captivity by Miſery, flung Death to the ground by Death, quencht Hell by its own Flames, open'd Heaven by a Croſs, cemented an everlaſting habitation by bloud, and condemned ſin by a Sacrifice for it. By a crucified man, and a weak fleſh encompaſs'd with infirmity, the God of Heaven ſubdues the God of the World, deſtroys the Empire of the proud ſpirits, and ſubdues Principalities and Powers under his Feet, who beſides their Uſurp'd Authority had a vaſt Ambition to preſerve it, and a ſtrength and ſubtlety unconquerable by the power of man; and hereby ſhows, that no evil was ſo great, but his Almighty Arm could put in execution, what his Immenſe Wiſdom had provided as a Remedy againſt it. By his ſtrength he gives a Being to his own Word and Promiſe, when neither Angels nor Man could conceive the Methods of the execution, even after the Promiſe of bruiſing Satan by the ſeed of the Woman was declared. 'Tis ſeen in raiſing Chriſt from the dead, after he had ſuſtain'd the weight of the ſin of the World upon him; and bringing him forth with ſucceſs and glory, after that great encounter with the powers of Hell: which power is called the glory of the Father, Rom. 6. 4. As Chriſt was rais'd up from the dead, by the glory of the Father, διὰ δόξης; By the glory of the Father, as noting the efficient Cauſe, or to the glory of the Father, as noting the final Cauſe, being for the glory of Gods Power. In powerfully raiſing a Church to him from the ſeed of his Bloud, in ſpight of all ſpiritual and ſecular Enemies, defending it and ſupporting it under the moſt terrible waves of the World, that he might be acknowledged, ador'd, and prais'd in this World, and that which is to come. The Power of God is not ſo manifeſt in laying the Foundation of the Earth, ſtretching out the Heavens, turning the wheel of Providence, as in this, which is the Topſtone of all his Providences in the World, to which they tend, and wherein they Center. Twice we have heard that power belongs to God, Pſal. 62. 11, 12. Alſo unto thee, O Lord, belongs mercy. Once we have heard of it in Creation; more gloriouſly in the work of Redemption, wherein his Power and his Grace were link'd together, as well as in Creation his Power and his Goodneſs. And this is a comfortable manifeſtation of God, his Power is as great as his Mercy, and they join hands together. His Power is known in Chriſt to be able to ſave us without giving his Enemies any ground to reproach him; and his Mercy is made known, whereby he is willing to ſave us.

USE,

If the true and saving knowledge of God is only in and by Jesus Christ; It will afford us matter for our,

I. Information, and it informs us,

(1.) Of the insufficiency of reason without Revelation. Though there be some reliques of the Law of nature, like Seths pillars, standing in the Heart; the mind of man pav'd with some broken pieces of the Tables of the Law, yet among all those fragments there is not one that hath the inscription of Christ the Mediator upon it. Nature never preacht the doctrine of a Saviour, and the necessity of Faith; and therefore by all the endowments of nature the soul cannot be inform'd of the true nature of God. Meer reason in innocency was never a key fitted to all the Wards of divine mysteries. The beauty of God is not discerned in the same way as we discern the beauty of Nature. Reason, though it be the candle of the Lord, Prov. 20. 27. yet it is but a Candle, and can no more discover the nature of God as he is to be known in Christ, than a Candle can help us to see the Sun when it is mask't by a thick Cloud. We cannot comprehend what is revealed of God in the creature, much less can we arrive to that by our own Reason, which no creature under Heaven, nor in Heaven, of the highest endowments, can make known to us without a Revelation from God: Reason presents us but with some dark shadows or notions of God only.

[1.] Reason is blind in the things of God. Can we render a satisfactory Reason of any thing under our feet, and thorowly uncipher the characters of Nature? How can we then unlock the cabinet of God? If we understand not what is below us, how can we understand what is above us? If we could picture the Soul of man in his lapsed state, it must be painted without eyes, covered with a thick mist, more crooked in his Will and Affections than any thing can be mishapen and monstrous under the Heavens. A clear ey'd Reason can only be in an uncorrupted Soul. Never speak of right Reason in the things of God without a supernatural illumination, and the guidance of Revelation, till you can show a Soul free from all manner of corruption, as white as Snow, and as innocent as a standing Angel. Since the fall there is as little of pure Reason in our Minds, as there is of an exact Holiness in our Will, and the Spirit is as necessary to enlighten the one as to encline the other, the one being as full of prejudices and mistaken principles as the other of corrupt and perverse habits. Hence man is represented in Scripture * with a mind as vain as his will is crooked, an understanding as much darkned towards God, as his will is alienated from the Life of God; as great a blindness of Heart as there is madness of Affection, and therefore the Apostle gives it no better a title than darkness, Eph. 5. 8. comprehending thereby the race of all mankind naturally. And what can better express the deplorable nature of the Mind and Reason, which so many men are proud of, than darkness, the horror of the World, the cloud to the beauty of it, the distracter of the fancy, and the spring of fears? 'Tis by darkness we are blinded from seeing the comliness of things in the World: 'Tis in darkness we have the most affrighting fancies; and such a dismal thing is man fallen, without any power to open his own eyes, without any more ability to become light in the Lord than darkness hath to change it self into the light of the Sun. Man is said to have no more understanding in regard of the spiritual things of God, than a beast, Psal. 49. 20. Not a man as considered in Adam, and upon that root, that understands God, Rom. 3. 17. He is blind as to the object which he was created to know and contemplate. The World by all the Wisdom of God discovered in the creation, knew not God, 1 Cor. 1. 21. By all those things wherein the Wisdom of God appear'd in Creation and Providence in regard of the order, harmony, beauty and effects of them, the World with all their reasons and speculations were ignorant of God. All worldly Wisdom cannot remove that darkness which is upon the understanding as to heavenly things; for the corruption like smoke rising up still from the furnace of that Hell in the Heart, darkens the Heavens from our sight, and it is as impossible that we should know God while our corruption remains in its full force, as that an eye bemisted by an uninterrupted succession of thick vapors from other parts of the body can clearly behold any object. Peter whose eyes were something opened, thought he had great reason to dissuade Christ from suffering, but his master sharply rebukes him, and tells him he did not savour the things of God, Mat. 16. 23. he understood not the nature and design of God. The blindness of reason is seen, by considering that most of the reason we have in the World is the fruit of education. What a miserable thing would a man be, if he were bred up among beasts in a desert? What a stupid statue of a man would he be rather than a man? There is no knowledge of God, Man since the fall can lay claim to by his own Reason, without some common illumination. We know nothing of God by the creatures, but as God spreads an inward light upon the mind. In nature there is a manifestation in us, as well as a manifestation to us, Rom. 1. 19. yet it is a common illumination.

[2.] Reason is uncertain. 'Tis a wandring vagabond, coyns lies, and reports falsities as Truths. Is it not more often deceived in things of a divine concern which are above our natural capacity, than the sense is in sensible objects, which often mistakes things because of their distance? Is not the whole scene of nature troubled with janglings and controversies? What knowledge is there in the World that is not perplext with a thousand doubts? Is not that interest, education, and often passion which we call Reason? Are not our minds often seduc'd by our humours and drawn aside by a faction of passions? How can that mind which is sway'd by the bestial part of man frame right notions of God? Do the beasts that perish understand him? And man is no better since the fall. Is the knowledge of God bred and nourished by Flesh and Bloud? Some of the Heathens were so sensible of this uncertainty, that they counted it their only knowledge, that they knew that they knew nothing as they ought to know; and some of them beleived that God from Heaven could only be the revealer of Truth. So much are mens thoughts entangled in Divine things.

[3.] Reason in a natural man is an enemy to the knowledge of God in Christ. It receives not the light that shines upon it, John 1. 5. It offers a strong resistance, it reflects it back, as a stone-wall doth the beams of the Sun without suffering the light to pierce into any part of it. 'Tis from hence the Gospel hath not the same advantage upon men, as things of a moral concern, which are written in the Law and have a counter-part in the remainders of the Law of nature in the heart of a man. But the Gospel finds nothing of kin to it in the Soul, but rather principles that oppose it; the mysteries of Christ wherein the Grace, Justice, Wisdom of God are discover'd, seem foolishness to a natural mind. It seems to them a folly, to imagine; that God should put his Son to death for the demonstration of his Justice, that man should be justified by his bloud: And upon this account it is that the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 2. 14. That a natural man receives not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him. He doth not say a carnal man but an animal, a souly man, he doth not speak of one led by the affections of the Flesh, but those wise men that are led by flashy reason, and by the common estimated Wisdom and principles of the World, and order their lives according to the rational dictates of the World; such an one receives not the things of the Spirit of God, he doth not say receives not the things of God, for he knows something of God; but not the things of the Spirit of God, i. e. he knows not God Evangelically, embraceth not, apprehends not, affects not, the knowledge of God in Christ in the Gospel spirit. The reason is, because they are foolishness to him. If the Apostle meant a man wallowing in sensual pleasures and conducted by his bestial appetite, he might rather say, such an one receives them not because they savour of Wisdom, because they are against the pleasures of the flesh, than because he accounts them foolish; but he is one given to the study of Wisdom and disaffects them, because he thinks them contrary to that which he thinks wisdom, to that which hath prepossest his mind. No sensual man in the world can in his own judgment and conscience disapprove of things morally good, and known so by the common light of nature, as foolish; but such an one rejects, and hates the knowledge of God in the Gospel; for as a rich man hates nothing more than poverty, a sensual man nothing more than a seriousness and sobriety of Life, so a wise man hates nothing more than that which he thinks to be folly. With what contempt did the Athenians reject the Doctrine Paul Preacht to them under no civiller a title than that of babbling? Acts 17. 18. Carnal Reason is the most furious beast in the world. A natural wise man is too lofty to know God in Divine methods, who is best discern'd in a way of humility and self-denial. And at the best beſt, the notions of God by the repreſentations of Reaſon without Chriſt loſe much of their Majeſty, beauty and commanding power over the hearts of men, they are weak and faint, for it is a repreſentation by a declining and diſproportion'd light.

From what has been ſaid in this caſe it follows.

(1.) That there is a neceſſity of Revelation and Illumination. There muſt be Firſt, An external Revelation of the object. And Secondly, an internal Illumination of the faculty. There is a word of Revelation which is the Goſpel reveal'd to the underſtandings of men, there is a ſpirit of Revelation requiſite beſides, which the Apoſtle begs for the Epheſians who had the object already revealed to them, that their underſtandings might be further enlightned, Eph. 1. 17. ſo that the further underſtanding of God and his myſteries in the Goſpel after the firſt illumination, is not a work of the bare Reaſon and Underſtanding of man, without further operations of the Spirit in and upon them.

* Suppoſe that the light of Reaſon were come to that point to know that our chief good conſiſted in Communion with God, yet no man could know that God was of ſuch a gracious and condeſcending nature, and were willing to communicate himſelf in the choiceſt manner, ſince man was a ſinner and had incur'd his wrath and malediction, without ſome divine Revelation which muſt diſcover God to be of ſuch an encouraging nature. *Meſtrezat.

(2.) We ought to ſubmit our Reaſon to Revelation. God doth not give us Reaſon to quarrel with, but to diſcern and entertain Divine Revelation. He hath given us Reaſon to examine Revelations, whether they bear a Divine ſtamp upon them. He hath not therefore impoſed things upon men without undeniable characters of their Divine authority. Whatſoever hath been reveal'd, which Reaſon could not of it ſelf reach, has been attended with miracles which could not be wrought by any created power, and bore the marks of omnipotency upon them. We have not Reaſon to comprehend all the parts of Divine Revelation, ſhall we therefore deny it to be from God? Adam, and the Angels too in Heaven may with as much Reaſon turn Atheiſts becauſe they cannot comprehend God. Some truths reveal'd may if not be formally demonſtrated by Reaſon, yet receive ſome clearneſs and evidence from it after they are revealed. But as Adam had, and the Angels have clear Reaſon to prove to themſelves, and experience too, that there is a God, though they cannot fathom the infinite depths of his nature; ſo there is clear Reaſon to manifeſt the Scripture, which gives us a declaration of Chriſt, to be the Revelation of God, though we cannot graſp all the parts of that Divine Revelation, and make every Theſis therein clear to a natural Reaſon. There are ſuch arguments for it, that contradicting ingenious reaſon cannot but be ſtartled at. We ought therefore to ſubmit our reaſonings to Gods declaration. The rational creature was made to ſerve God: His Reaſon then ought to be held in the rank of a ſervant, the light of Reaſon ought to vail to the authour of Reaſon, and the light in the mind ought to vail to him who enlightned it when man came into the World. Reaſon ought to follow Faith, not precede it. The Stars borrow their light from the Sun, not the Sun from the Stars. Reaſon indeed may come in with an auxiliary force after a Revelation is made, for the maintaining the Truth of it, and clearing it up to the minds of others, and may be a Servant to Revelation now under Chriſt, as well as it ſhould have been to any Revelation in the ſtate of innocence. We ought therefore to ſubmit our Reaſon to God, not think to mate him in knowledge any more than we can in majeſty and infiniteneſs, nor ſet up a ſpark to vye with the Sun. Pride put out Adams eye at firſt, and the pride of Reaſon cheriſht will continue us as blind as beetles in the things of a heavenly concern.

[2.] Information. The excellency of the Goſpel and Chriſtian Religion. The Chriſtian Religion is a perſpective wherewith to look to Heaven, it preſents us with that knowledge of God which neither all the Angels in Heaven, nor Creatures upon Earth were ever able without Chriſt to convey to us. Chriſts being the image of God is a Reaſon why the Goſpel is ſo glorious, 2 Cor. 4. 4. 1 Tim. 1. 11. 'Tis called the glorious Goſpel of the bleſſed God, wherein the glory of Gods perfections ſhines forth, becauſe in that Chriſt is made known to us, and in him the beauty of God is diſplay'd to our view. The knowledge of God in nature was in darkneſs, in the Law it was in ſhadows, in the Goſpel it is in light: In nature it was a light as at midnight, under the Law as in the dawning, in the Goſpel as at Sun riſing, for by reaſon the knowledge was by Candle-light, in the Law by torch-light, in the Goſpel by a Sun-beam. The Doctrine of the Trinity obſcurely delivered in the Old Teſtament, is more clear'd up ſince the coming of the Meſſiah, which could never have been found out by Reaſon, nor can yet be demonſtrated by reaſon, though it be capable to furniſh us with ſome illuſtrations of it. The Heathens diſputed about God and the Chriſtians know him. It anſwers the ends of all Religion. Religion reſpects God; it muſt have the knowledge of God therefore for a foundation. If it hath not the right knowledge of God, it is ſuperſtition. All true Religion conduceth to the Creatures duty and happineſs, our duty and happineſs is to know and Love God; this Religion only gives us a knowledge of God honourable to him, and preſents us with inducements to love him comfortable to our ſelves; and whatſoever makes God known to Man in his own glory, and for mans comfort, is certainly in Reaſon the moſt excellent Religion. Whatſoever renders God venerable and amiable to the minds of men, is true, for it cannot be ſuppoſed that infinite goodneſs ſhould create the World, and communicate it ſelf with a deſign to be hated, and contemned by his Creatures, but to be fear'd and lov'd: Whatſoever therefore doth preſent God in the richeſt ſtreams of goodneſs to the Creature, with honour to himſelf, hath Truth for the Foundation of it.

[1.] This Religion repreſents God with honour. It renders God as Juſt as Merciful, and as Merciful as Juſt. It ſets forth the riches of the one without darkning the glory of the other. It preſents God in the depths of his Wiſdom, heights of his Love, equity of his Juſtice, ſtability of his Truth, beauty of his Holineſs, wonders of his Patience, and glory of his Power, without offering violence to any principle of Reaſon. The Goſpel is moſt Divine in the Articles to be believ'd of God, moſt magnificent in its promiſes, unqueſtionably holy and advantagious to the World in its precepts. It unvails a God to encourage to duty, and twiſts our duty with Gods Honour. What can be more reaſonable? Or how can the Creature Honour God more than to fear his Juſtice, truſt in his Goodneſs, turn to him becauſe of his Mercy, depend upon his Truth, and glorifie his Grace, accept of a Righteouſneſs from him, and be freed from guilt by him? It pulls the Creature from it ſelf to make it all in and by God. It brings God to the ſtate of a God, and the Creature to a Creatures poſture: it ſets God upon his throne, and the Creature at his feet, exalts Heaven and depreſſeth Earth. It ſhows us that God is all our repoſe, that our reſt and felicity is to love him. It ſhows us the unreaſonableneſs and folly of our natural conceits of God. It diſcourages every thing that hinders us from a conjunction with him. Inſtructs us to abhor every thing that made our ſeparation from him, to embrace every thing that may further our return to him, and renders man uncapable of any Center, any end by himſelf, any repoſe but in him. Where is God ſet out more illuſtriouſly, and with greater incitements to love him; ſince his love to man hath reach'd the higheſt point, what is wanting to heat us, what is wanting to enflame us? But do we not diſgrace this honourable Religion by not elevating our ſouls to God, having hearts as cold as Ice, and like Salamanders that cannot burn in the midſt of ſuch a Fire?

[2.] It repreſents God with unſpeakable comfort to the Creature. The firſt notions of God in the Goſpel flaſh like lightning with comfort upon the diſconſolate Soul. He diſcovers himſelf as a Father of Mercy becauſe the Father of Chriſt, as a God of tenderneſs and conſolation, as a God that would enter into the heart with all his ſweetneſs if we would but open, would ſpread his wings over our Souls and dwell in the midſt of us, unite us in Eternal bands to himſelf. He ſends to us the expreſs image of his perſon, Heb. 1. 3. One of his own nature to take ours, that we may freely converſe with him in that image, which we could not immediately with God becauſe of the diſtance of our Nature. A communion between Man and a Creature of different nature is hard; Man cannot converſe with an Angel, or a beaſt, much leſs with God. But the Godhead holds out his hand in the humanity of Chriſt, to take us by the hand and lead us into his Chambers. In Chriſt, God condeſcends to ſhow his face to the Creature, whereby he renders his Nature amiable, and the believing Creature comfortable. There is ſuch a knowledge of God in it as can com-comfort a man upon a death-bed, appeaſe his Conſcience, direct his eye to a delightful ſight of another World, make him embrace death with joy; ſuch advantages as the knowledge of God in the whole book of Nature, all political skill, and the choiceſt ſpeculations cannot afford a man. Theſe things delight him at preſent, help him to paſs his life with ſome content, but are unable to miniſter the leaſt cordial dram at a dying hour. In other Religions we may know ſomething of God, little of our own Miſery, nothing of a Remedy; but in the Goſpel we know God, our Selves, our Miſery, and our Medicine. We ſee a God fit to be truſted by us, one that hath given the greateſt evidence of his Care of the World. No ſtronger teſtimony can be given, than his ſending his Son to declare it; acting ſo about his Son, and in his Son. Who can queſtion the Providence of God, and his taking care of humane Affairs? Who can diſpute the tenderneſs of his bowels, when he hath writ his care and compaſſions in the bloud of his only begotten?

[3.] The knowledge of God in Chriſt hath in the Goſpel been mighty ſucceſsful. Whatſoever diſcovery of God was among the Heathens before the manifeſtation of Chriſt, did ſoon vail to that which was diſcover'd by him. The Idols fell down at his feet, Dagon gave way to the Ark, and that which was limited to the Jewiſh Nation, extended it ſelf to the utmoſt bounds of the Earth, and brought People to the acknowledgment of one God in his Glory and Soveraignty, as it had been predicted, Zach. 14. 9. And the Lord ſhall be King over all the earth, in that day ſhall there be one Lord, and his name one. The Mountain of the Lords Houſe was lifted up above all the Idolatrous Mountains, and the whole frame of Idolatry the Devil had erected and preſerved ſo many ages in the World againſt the Traditions left by Adam, was demoliſh'd; and ſo much hath God been diſcover'd in his Truth, that not one of thoſe Heathen Idols, ſo much fam'd in their Writers, is acknowledged for a God in any part of the World. In the Eaſtern parts indeed they have ſome Idols, where the Chriſtian Religion is expir'd; But the names of Jupiter, Apollo, &c. are wholly buried among thoſe Nations that before ador'd them, and ſcarce any part of the World, that we know of, doth acknowledge now a multiplicity of Gods; the diſcovery of Chriſt hath been the cauſe of this. The Turks who acknowledge Mahomet for a Prophet, yet acknowledge him not for a God. The true God that had been caſt out of the World by the ſubtlety of the Devil, and had confin'd himſelf in his worſhip to the ſmall ſpot of Judæa, is reſtor'd by Chriſt to the knowledge of Men, and to a Worſhip due to him, and the ador'd Idols ſunk at the foot of the Croſs. The knowledge of God cover'd the Earth in reſpect of plenty and abundance, as the Waters cover the Sea; Superſtition was demoliſh'd, and Errors about God diſpers'd. Hath not then the Goſpel and the Chriſtian Religion the greateſt Trophies? Can any thing claim an equal honour with it? Is there any Religion in the World whereby God hath been ſo fully diſcovered, reſtor'd to his right, to that right which the common Reaſon of the World muſt acknowledge due to God? It hath defac'd no notions of God which were according to true Reaſon, but clear'd them; given us the reaſons of thoſe proceedings of God, obſcure before, and added a worthy and ſatisfactory account of God, which innocent reaſon could not reach, and the moſt corrupted reaſon hath no firm ground to quarrel with; all which cannot be aſcrib'd to any other profeſſion in the World but the Chriſtian. This is the glory of the Goſpel, this is the fruit of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

(3.) Information. How inexcuſable is the ignorance of God in them that hear ſo often? God was but faintly diſcover'd in the Creatures, In the Jewiſh time was obſcured by ſhadows; But that which was a myſtery in former Ages, is clearly reveal'd, ſo that there is now no Myſteriouſneſs in the Nature of God, ſo far as to hinder our direction to a happy enjoyment of him; the things of God are as plain as the Sun, ſo that whatſoever ignorance there is of him under the preaching of the Goſpel, is not invincible but affected. Every man under the Goſpel may be greater in point of knowledge than John the Baptiſt. Shall any man behold the beams of the Sun every day, and not caſt his eyes up to ſee that body from whence they ſhoot? With what face can we call our ſelves Chriſtians, if we have no deſire to know God as reveal'd in Chriſt? Shall we worſhip a God we know not? Are we created by God and preſerv'd by God, yet are content to be wilfully ignorant of him, to whom we we owe our Being and preservation? Can we pretend any Affections to him, whom we desire not to understand? A worse charge will be brought against, and a sharper punishment inflicted on such, than upon the Heathens who were given up to a Reprobate Mind, because they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, Rom. 1. 28. when it was a knowledge only by the dim light of Creatures. What do they deserve that will not embrace nor retain the knowledge of God by a clearer light in Christ? It was the end of the whole Creation to point us to God, Psal. 19. Psal. 104. It was the end of the work of Redemption, to bring us to an acquaintance with God. By a wilful ignorance of God, we cross both the end of Creation and Redemption, and slight God as our first maker, Benefactor and Restorer. He that doth not know God in Christ, has no true knowledge of God absolutely, because it is no God as conceiv'd by him, and packt together of various inventions of his own; 'tis not a God according to Christs Revelations, but his own Imagination and Fancy.

II. Use of Exhortation.

(1.) Let those that have the knowledge of God in Christ bless him for it. The seventh day was appointed to bless God for the discovery of his Goodness and other perfections in the Creation; the first day is ordain'd, wherein we should bless God for the discovery of his perfections in Redemption. The name of Christ should be as an ointment pour'd forth, Cant. 1. 3. we should delight in the fragrancy, and praise him for the odors and savours of it. The Patriarchs had a knowledge of Christ, and therefore a knowledge of God afar off, Heb. 11. 13. They saw the promises afar off, (i. e. the promises of the Messiah) obscure and dark; Men have not a distinct sight of the objects they see at a distance. What reason have we to render the praise due to the name of God, for bringing us as it were to see him face to face? Christ bestows a blessing upon such, which was denied to many Prophets and Kings, referring to the knowledge of the Father by his Revelation of him, Luke 10. 22, 23, 24. as though the old Believers saw nothing, nor heard any thing; yet they that were pronounced blessed, then had not seen Christ dying and rising and the coming of the Spirit, whereby the Apostles had a clearer knowledge of the Nature of God. We have the full Testimony of it in the Gospel: What blessing should we reflect back upon God, and how should our hearts be filled with Venerations of him! And where there is the knowledge of God in Christ, it will be perfected in time in all the fruits of it. * In Christ, God is our God in Covenant, to communicate himself to us in all things we are capable of. As when the Sun communicates it self to us, 'tis to enlighten us with that light which it hath. When a knowing man communicates himself to one ignorant, 'tis to give him part of his knowledge. If Creatures communicate their goods according to their condition, God will also render us partakers of a Divine condition, which extends to the banishing all ignorance and Errors; and to the Bestowing on us a fulness of Wisdom and knowledge, as well as Holiness and Happiness, as much as the condition of the creature will permit. Therefore Glory not in Riches and Strength or any thing else, but glory in this that you know the Lord, Jer. 9. 23, 24.

* Mestrezat Serm. 4. sur 8. Heb. pag. 407, 408.

(2.) Let such as want the knowledge of God in Christ, indeavour for it. 'Tis by this we gain a union with God; when we have an understanding to know the true God, we are then in him which is true, 1 Joh. 5. 20. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. God lives in such, and they in him. We are united to him who is truly discover'd in his Son Jesus Christ. Calvin observes this intimation from the Apostles expressing it without a copulative, for the particle even is not in the Greek. Those that seek to know God without Christ, have not any light that can satisfie them; they know that there is one God, but they have no means of Union to him, or Communion with him, without the Mediator. Without Christ we can neither know God, nor know our selves. Without him there is nothing but darkness and ground of despair, nothing but confusion to us appears in the nature of God, nothing but trouble and misery in our own Nature. We are desirous God should know us in our Misery, and know our want and indigence we lye under; and is it not a folly for us not to know God in his fulness? We can make but slender guesses at God, till we see him in the face of a Mediator.

To

To this End,

[1.] Study the Gospel. The Gospel hath the same Titles in part that Christ hath; 'Tis called the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God, as instrumentally it declares Christ to the World, who is essentially the Power and Wisdom of God, and Mediatorily and by way of Excellency, as he discovers the perfections of God to the World; and the Gospel is so by way of subserviency, to inform our Understandings, conduct us to God, and excite our motions. 'Tis in this God makes the Churches Windows as Aggats, Isa. 54. 12, 13. or, as others, Jasper stone, clear as Chrystal, more fit for Windows than dark Aggats; and indeed the light of the Church is compar'd to Jasper, as Rev. 21. 11. The issue of all is to be taught of the Lord. 'Tis unworthy for any man to trifle away his time in the knowledge of Humane things, with a neglect of this. Should not an eye-salve be more desirable to a blind man for the Restauration of his sight, than a purple Robe? What comfort can Learning, Riches, Greatness, yea a Thorny Crown and Scepter, be to one as blind as a Mole in Spiritual things? Angels know more than any Creatures, of the depths of Gods Wisdom in Creation; they see the several Engines whereby the creatures perform their motions; yet they are not said to enquire into those things, or please themselves with Philosophical Meditations, but to be Students in the Wisdom of God in the Mysteries of the Gospel, which presents them with a Scheme of God more ravishing than that in Creation. The knowledge of God in the Gospel is more glorious than the knowledge of God by Nature, as much as Scripture Revelation is above Natural Reason. There hath been something of God in Christ known in the Church, ever since the first promise of the Seed of the Woman; Abraham saw Christs day afar off, the Prophets predicted him, he was wrapt in Types, the Israelites beheld him in their Paschal Lamb, the stricken broacht Rock, the nourishing Manna, the Divine Propitiatory, and the daily Sacrifices. But what is all this to the knowledge of him by the Gospel, and consequently the knowledge of God by him since his Incarnation, since the shadows fled away, and the Sun hath appear'd in its splendor?

[2.] Submit your selves to the Prophetical office of Christ as his Disciples. He is as real a Prophet now to instruct the Soul, as he is a Priest to intercede for it, or a King to rule it. As God is propitious through Christ, so he is only an instructer through Christ. As the power of God in the conversion of the Soul, so the Wisdom of God in the instruction of the Soul, breaks out through Christ. He only that can bring us to Glory, can guide us by his eye, Psal. 32. 8. He is the Lord that shows us light, Psal. 118. 27. If we would have light, we must use the beams of the Sun: If we would be knowing, we must have recourse to some skilful person in the Science we would learn. Resignation to Christ, is the first step to Divine Knowledge. Christ will not teach any that proudly strut against his Office. 'Tis the masters delight to teach an inquisitive and humble Scholar. It was given to the disciples, those that had devoted themselves to him, to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of God, Mark 4. 11. Receive him therefore as the great Prophet of Gods appointing, furnish'd with skill to propose to you the knowledge of God, and efficacious ability to imprint it upon your Minds by an inward illumination. Have a solemn Veneration for the letter of the Gospel, but lift up your eyes to Christ as a Prophet, begging of him to open the eyes, and seal Instruction; to unlock the Soul, and enlighten the understanding; and say as Zophar to Job, Oh that God would teach and show me the secrets of wisdom! Job 11. 6. He is Gods Interpreter; to discover God was the end of his coming: His Office is to teach; put him upon the exercise of it. He hath a charge from the Father to declare his name, he will not be unfaithful in it; plead his Charge, he hath promis'd to declare it, urge him with his Truth.

[3.] Endeavour after Suitable Affections to whatsoever you know of God in Christ. Let the holiness of God in Christ be the aw of your Souls. Let us not dandle any sin which God so hates, that he would not remit it without the price of the bloud of his Son. Tremble at that Justice which drank such draughts of precious bloud in the punishment of sin, and consider every sin in its utmost demerit. Admire and bless that Wisdom, which made it self so eminent in the untying so many knots, paſſing over ſuch mountains of difficulties that he might ſhow himſelf a hater of ſin and a lover of his Creatures, that he might entwine his Mercy and Juſtice in perpetual embraces. Let us have as ſtrong Affections of Love and Joy, as the Devils by their Knowledge of God as diſcover'd in Chriſt, have of Horror and Hatred. We ſee in that, not only the manifeſtation, but the ſatisfaction of his Juſtice; they ſee the manifeſtation of it, and the diſſatisfaction of it for ever with them; they have ſuch a knowledge of God in Chriſt, as to awaken their Conſciences; we may have ſuch a knowledge of God in Chriſt, as to calm our Conſciences; their Terrors are as much increaſed by that diſcovery, as a Believers Comfort. They behold God in Chriſt, their implacable and inexorable Judge; we may behold God in Chriſt, a tender and condeſcending Father. They know a God in our Nature, imparting his own Nature to us; and refuſing their Nature, to leave them to lye in their fallen ſtate for ever. The terrible Attributes become ſweet in Chriſt to Man, and more dreadful to them. Let the motions of your Will, and the affections of your Soul, riſe according to the Elevation of your knowledge of God in Chriſt more or leſs.

To Conclude. Let us behold his Juſtice to humble our ſelves under it, his pardoning Grace to have recourſe to it under preſſures of guilt: Let us ſweeten our Affections by the ſight of his Compaſſions, and have confidence to call upon him as a Father in our neceſſities. Not any diſcovery of God in Chriſt, but is an encouragement to a forlorn Creature, loſt in his own ſenſe; his Perfections ſmile upon man; nothing of God looks terrible in Chriſt to a Believer; the Sun is riſen, ſhadows are vaniſht, God walks upon the Battlements of Love, Juſtice hath left its ſting in a Saviours ſide, the Law is diſarm'd, weapons out of his hand, his Boſom open, his Bowels yearn, his Heart pants, ſweetneſs and love is in all his Carriage. And this is life eternal, to know God believingly in the glories of his Mercy and Juſtice in Jeſus Chriſt.

A Diſcourſe

A DISCOURSE OF Conviction of SIN.

JOHN XVI. verſ. 8, 9.

And when he is come, he will reprove the World of Sin, and of Righteouſneſs, and of Judgment; of Sin, becauſe they believe not on me.

OUR Saviour in this Chapter ſhews what was the intention of his Diſcourſe in the former, which was, Firſt, To forewarn his Diſciples of, and forearm them againſt that violence they ſhould meet with in the World after his departure from them, in the chapter foregoing, verſ. 20. Which violence ſhould be the hotter againſt them, becauſe it would be thought an acceptable Service unto God, to aſſault them with the ſharpeſt Perſecutions; he therefore wiſheth them to remember what he had ſaid in the fourth verſe of this Chapter: But theſe things I have told you, that when the time ſhall come, you may remember that I told you of them. He knew the Jealouſies of mens Hearts, how apt upon every occaſion they are to make unjuſt Reflections: Therefore, ſaith he, conſider it well, and do not have hard thoughts of me, when you come to feel theſe Sufferings I now ſpeak of; I tell you before of them, that you may have no cauſe to blame me, as one that dealt falſely with you, in concealing the Sting, while I preſent you with the Honey: No, I acquaint you with the worſt as well as the beſt part; the bittereſt as well as the ſweeteſt. Then Secondly, he ſupports his drooping Diſciples, who began to faint at the thoughts of his departure, John 15. 26. and alſo in this Chapter; which he doth by the Promiſe of a Comforter to be ſent unto them.

You may obſerve, Firſt, That God doth not ſend any Affliction upon his People, without providing them alſo a Cordial. As a wiſe Phyſician, who preſcribes a Purge to carry away the corrupt humours, and a Cordial to ſupport the Spirits. Our Saviour tells them of the Comforter that ſhould refreſh them, as well as acquaints them with that miſery that might deject them. The ſame was Gods procedure with our firſt Parents after the Fall; firſt he revives them with a gracious Promiſe, before he denounceth a grievous ſtanding Sentence upon them. And,

Secondly, Obſerve, That God ſends Afflictions on his deareſt Children. Theſe Apoſtles, that were the Salt of the Jewiſh Nation, preſerving them from a total Putrefaction, thoſe that Chriſt had laid in his boſom, revealed the Secrets of his Father, and the Myſteries of Redemption to, and prayed for their preſervation, and intended to do it further in a ſolemn manner, (as he did in the following Chapter,) had culled them out as Witneſſes to bear up his Name in the World, and given them an aſſurance of being in Glory with him; yet theſe muſt be hated and killed, and depreſt under the violence of the wicked world.

The Miſeries they ſhould endure are two, Joh. 16. 2.

Firſt, Excommunication: They ſhall put you out of the Synagogues. The Jews ſhould not think them worthy to be in the Church.

Secondly, Deſtruction. Whoſoever killeth you, will think he doth God ſervice. They ſhould not be thought worthy to live in the World.

And the Grounds of this violent proceeding are two.

(1.) Superſtitious Zeal; they ſhall think they do God good ſervice in ſo doing.

(2.) Blind Ignorance. verſ. 3. Theſe things will they do unto you, becauſe they have not known the Father. Theſe are the two great grounds of all Perſecutions that are in the world, ſuperſtitious Zeal and blind Ignorance. You may obſerve, Firſt, How often is Religion pretended to juſtifie Cruelty! God had not any Church in the World but among the Jews at that time, yet the Body of them do ſet themſelves in oppoſition againſt thoſe few Diſciples that bore up the Name of Chriſt in the World, and under the pretence of Religion they would ſend them out of the World: So contrary to the main deſign of God, which is to promote Charity to Man, as well as Love to himſelf.

Secondly, Nothing is ſo great an enemy to true Chriſtianity, as Ignorant Zeal. Nothing ſo hurtful as Paſſion, cloathed with the Purple of a ſeeming Piety. A zealous Paul will be a perſecuting Paul, becauſe zealous in the external part of the Jewiſh Religion. The ſuperſtitious Jews did more oppoſe the progreſs of the Goſpel, than either the profane ſort among them, or the blind Heathen.

Thirdly, We may obſerve in the chapter, how Chriſt giveth them the reaſon why he acquainted them with theſe things now, and withall why he did not tell them of them before; ver. 4. Theſe things I have told you, that when the time ſhall come, you may remember that I told you of them; and theſe things I ſaid not unto you at the beginning, becauſe I was with you. He was with them, and by his perſonal preſence did give them a Remedy upon any emergency. He was a Skreen to keep off the rage of men from them, by receiving it upon himſelf.

Fourthly, He ſearcheth into the Cauſes of their ſorrow, verſ. 5, 6. But now I go my way to him that ſent me, ſorrow hath filled your hearts.

(1.) His Departure from them, verſ. 6. that had filled their hearts with ſorrow, the thoughts of that. And who could blame them for grieving at the parting with ſo good and tender a Maſter, and to part with him when a deluge of miſery by his own prediction was flowing in upon them, and to part with him upon ſuch terms, and by ſuch a death as to outward appearance would reflect on them as his followers, as well as on him their Maſter? Such apprehenſions of the Storm could not but ſtagger an ungrown Faith, and nip their budding Hopes and Joy. Probably their carnal Conceptions of a carnal Kingdom being foiled by our Saviour, was the ground of all. Alas! have we lett all to follow him, and expected great outward advantages, and that we ſhould be near him, and be his Friends; and are we thus miſtaken in his Perſon and Deſign, and fallen from the top of our Hopes into the depth of an unexpected Miſery? Such Conceptions they might have, and therefore their ſorrows were the greater.

Firſt, Obſerve, That ſpiritual apprehenſions are an Antidote againſt Unbelief, and the ſorrow conſequent upon it. All ſuch ſorrow in a Chriſtian ariſeth from ignorant, and falſe, and mean, and ſordid, and unworthy notions of the deſign and the Truths of God. Had theſe weak and heavy Apoſtles had right and ſpiritual Conceptions of their Maſters work, they had rejoyced as much as now they grieved. None can live to Chriſt, as dying and riſing for them, who have no other knowledge of him but after the fleſh, 2 Cor. 5. 15, 16. Carnal conceptions of the Deeps of God, do leave a very gloomy darkneſs upon the Soul. Therefore he ſearcheth into the Cauſes of their ſorrow, the firſt of which was his Departure.

Secondly,

Secondly, Their careleſneſs in enquiring whether he went. Which he tells them of in a way of reproof, verſ. 5. Now I go my way to him that ſent me, and none of you ask me whether goeſt thou: Had they enquired of him the reaſon of things, their Grief had been prevented, and their Joy eſtabliſhed. It was to Heaven he was to goe, upon their account as well as his own, to a Father that Loved him and them alſo.

1. Obſerve: Thoſe things which are ground of Joy in themſelves, are by our neglect of a due enquiry, and our miſtakes, matter of Grief to us. How apt are good men to draw matter of Sorrow from grounds of Joy? The beſt man is a very ignorant Interpreter of the deſigns of Providence. We cannot ſee the Beauty of Providence, becauſe of the black Mask that vails it. For want of enquiring of Chriſt the end of his Death and Aſcenſion, the reaſon of his going, and the place whither he went, they taſted not that Comfort, which this might have afforded them, and miſſed at preſent the deſign and intendment of it.

2. We may Obſerve, that the way to true Comfort, is to enquire into, and conſider well the reaſon of Divine Myſteries. Had they underſtood the reaſon of his Death, the reaſon of his Aſcenſion, the reaſon of his going to his Father, they could not have grieved, but rather have rejoyced: A ſlight Knowledge will make but a ſlight Grace, and flaſhy ſtaggering Joy, 2 Pet. 3. 18. But grow in Grace, and in the Knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: Know how he is a Lord, and how he is a Saviour, and upon what accounts and grounds, and growing in ſuch a kind of Knowledge, is the way to grow in Grace.

Fifthly, He Informs them of the neceſſity of his departure, for their advantage: It was neceſſary for him to take poſſeſſion of his Kingdom, ſit down upon his Throne; neceſſary for them, that thereby they might enjoy the choiceſt fruits of his purchaſe, verſ. 7. It is expedient for you that I goe away, for if I goe not away, the Comforter will not come unto you.

1. He illuſtrates this neceſſity by the contrary, If I goe not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; therefore if you would have the Comforter come, it is neceſſary that I goe.

2. He confirms it by an aſſeveration, I tell you the truth, I ſpeak truly to you, If I do not goe, the Comforter will not come: There is one to come after my departure to ſupply my abſence, who ſhall carry on the work of Redemption I have laid, with greater ſucceſs to the Conviction of the World, who ſhall be in your Miniſtry with you, and ſhall convince men of their Sins, and of that remedy I have provided.

We may Obſerve,

Firſt, How tender is our Saviour of grieving his weak and diſtreſſed People: He doth not rate them for their unbelieving ſorrow, and forbear any further dealing with them; he might have chid them for not believing him upon his bare word, but he condeſcends to give them an affirmation, next to an Oath, I tell you the truth. He is alwayes very careful not to break a bruiſed Reed, and is like his Father, who by his Oath hath given us ſtrong Conſolation, and a mighty prop for our tottering Faith.

Secondly, Obſerve this: The Death and Aſcenſion of Chriſt were highly neceſſary for the Deſcent of the Spirit.

(1.) This choiceſt Benefit we receive from God could not have come, unleſs the Juſtice of God had been ſatisfied, and his Favour procured by a ſufficient Sacrifice. How unreaſonable is it to think God ſhould beſtow the higheſt of his Favours, while his Juſtice was not contented? Chriſt by his Death appeaſed the Anger of his Father, and bare the Puniſhment we had merited, and opened thoſe Treaſures of Grace, which by reaſon of our Sins had been ſhut up from us: Beſides, the Death of Chriſt was ſo perfect an Obedience, that it gained all the Love and Affection of his Father as a Requital: It was ſo highly grateful to him, and the pleaſure he took in it was ſo great, that becauſe of that, he would give to Chriſt and his People whatſoever was moſt dear and precious to him. To have this right of ſending the Spirit, it was neceſſary Chriſt ſhould dye: The Rock was to be ſtruck by the Rod of Moſes, before it did ſend out Water; and Chriſt the Spiritual Rock was to be ſtruck by the Curſe of the Law, before the Spirit (which is often in Scripture compared to water) could flow out: And though the Spirit was ſparingly communicated before the Death of Chriſt, yet it was Communicated, and that upon the Promiſe which Chriſt made of dying for men in the fulneſs of time, upon the account of that Death which was to be ſuffered in due time.

(2.) The Spirit could not come, unleſs Chriſt had Aſcended; for by his going to the Father, he means his Death and Aſcenſion. The Spirit could not come, but by the Gift and Miſſion of the Mediator, on whoſe Head he was firſt to be pour'd, and flow down from him on all Believers. Beſides, Chriſt received not thoſe rich Gifts from the hand of his Father, to communicate to us, till he had entred into the true Sanctuary not made with hands. He received them for himſelf before, to fit him for that Obedience he was to perform by the death of the Croſs; but he received them to communicate unto us after his Aſcenſion, then he received Gifts for men. What he purchaſed by his Death, he took Poſſeſſion of at his entrance into Heaven. The end of the Spirits coming, could not be carried on without Chriſts Death and Aſcenſion; for the Spirit was to manifeſt the infiniteneſs of Gods Love to Man, and declare the means of Salvation. Now the principal reaſon upon which this Manifeſtation was to be built, was the Death of Chriſt; he muſt therefore dye and riſe again, and aſcend, before the grounds of this reaſon could be valid; which appears afterwards, in the reaſons rendred of his Reproving the World of Sin, of Righteouſneſs and of Judgment. His Death was neceſſary to ſatisfie Gods Juſtice, his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion to manifeſt Gods Acceptation and Approbation of his Death: the ſending the Spirit being a part of his Royalty as Mediator, it was not convenient he ſhould be ſent, 'till Chriſt was Crowned, and ſate down on his Throne in his Kingdom. There are two Benefits by Chriſt, Acquiſition of Redemption, which was by his Death; and Application of that Redemption, which is by his Interceſſion in Heaven, and his Spirit on Earth; ſo that if he had not Aſcended, we had wanted the Spirit to make Application, and to render us fit for it: We had wanted the preparation for it, and the comfort of it. Then,

Thirdly, We may Obſerve, That the Preſence of the Spirit is a greater Comfort, than ſimply the preſence of Chriſt in his Fleſh. It is expedient for you that I goe away; if I goe not away, the Comforter will not come: It is better for you I ſhould goe, becauſe then the Comforter will come. Chriſt is a Comforter, but the Spirit is more intimately a Comforter than Chriſt in his fleſhly preſence. Chriſt in his firſt coming did poſſeſs himſelf of our fleſh, and converſe with his Diſciples outwardly: But the Spirit is to poſſeſs himſelf of our Hearts inwardly, Gal. 4. 4, 5, 6. When the fulneſs of time was come, God ſent forth his Son, made of a Woman, made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the Adoption of Sons; and becauſe ye are Sons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying Abba, Father: Chriſt dwelt among us in the Fleſh, the Spirit doth not only dwell with a Believer, but in him, John 14. 17. Not only dwell with you by outward Declaration, but he ſhall be in you by inward motion and Inſpiration. And you ſee he giveth him here the title of Comforter: The name ſignifies one that ſpeaks eloquently, perſwaſively, with much facility, elegancy and affection; in ſuch a manner as mightily works upon others, and pleaſingly gratifies them. It ſignifies both a Comforter and Inſtructer, both which agree well to the Holy Ghoſt. For,

Firſt, He was to acquaint the World with the higheſt Myſteries of God manifeſt in the Fleſh; to open the ſecret of Gods Love to the World, and the reſolves of Eternity: To draw the Curtain from before thoſe truths, which neither the eye of nature, nor the more open eye of the Jews were able to pierce into, becauſe of the Vail, verſ. 13. He was to guide them into all Truth, Truth, the Knowledge and Obſervance of all Truth neceſſary.

Secondly, He was to witneſs of Chriſt; and therefore might well be called an Inſtructer. As Chriſt unfolded the Treaſures of his Fathers Love, and purchaſed Divine Bleſſings by his Paſſion; ſo the Spirit was to bear witneſs to the Commiſſion Chriſt had to offer up himſelf, and the validity of that Offering, and the nature of his purchaſe. It was a thing incredible in it ſelf, that a God of infinite tenderneſs ſhould expoſe his Innocent Son to Sufferings, and Death for rebellious Creatures. It was neceſſary the Spirit ſhould be employed to perſwade men inwardly of the reality and truth of this, of the Authority of Chriſt, his ſincerity in Dying, and the efficacy of that Death, and the neceſſity of their intereſt in it by Faith, and to apply all to the believing Soul with Comfort, and fill it with Peace by vertue of this Expiation.

Now what is this Comforter, Advocate or Inſtructer to doe? He will Reprove, or rather Convince; the word here tranſlated Reprove, is ſometimes ſo ἐλέγξαι rendred, 1 Cor. 14. 24. He is convinced of all; it is the ſame word which is here, and alſo in Jude 15. To convince all that are ungodly, of their ungodly deeds: It ſignifies to Reprove by way of Argument, to manifeſt by an undeniable demonſtration the truth or falſity of ſuch an Opinion, ſo as to ſtop the mouth of the guilty or erroneous perſon, that he cannot find ſo much as a Fig-leaf of an excuſe, or a ſtarting-hole from it. It is to charge a thing ſo home and ſo cloſe, as to bring the Conſcience under the power of Truth, and to make it ſelf-condemned, to convict us by our own Conſcience, ſo the word is rendred in Joh. 8. 9. So the Spirit was evidently to demonſtrate the guilt of Sin, and the beauty of Righteouſneſs, and the certainty of Judgment.

To convince the World. The Spirit was not only given to the Apoſtles to ſet up light in their Hearts, but to the World in a large ſence, to juſtifie Chriſt before them. Not only to thoſe that ſhall be ſeriouſly affected under a ſenſe of ſin, and turn to Chriſt; but to convince others in the World of Sin, who will never ſtep any farther, nor yield to the Power and Authority of it, nor acknowledge the Truth, nor accept of Chriſt and his Righteouſneſs.

What is the Spirit to convince of? Of Sin, of Righteouſneſs, and of Judgment. A threefold Object the Spirit was to be converſant about.

I. He was to convince of Sin. The light of nature was not ſo extinct, but ſome ſins were to be diſcerned. All the moſt barbarous Nations agreeing in ſome common notion of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs, they knew that many things they did, were worthy of Death by divine Judgment: And they perceived by ſharp Puniſhments inflicted on ſome notorious Offenders in a particular manner, how odious ſome Actions were to God, and how criminal before him. But,

Firſt, The World underſtood not the extent of Sin: They knew ſome ſins, but not all the kinds of ſin to which Wrath is due: They looked upon ſome Sins as part of their happineſs, rather than their miſery. What were clearly againſt the light of Nature, crimſon and ſcarlet Sins, they could diſcern, and acknowledge themſelves for them worthy of Death; but there were ſome Mole-hill ſins, Peccadillo's, againſt which they had no help by conſideration of the Mercy of God, by laying hold of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the neceſſity of Faith in him: They armed themſelves with the Mercy of God, without conſidering the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt. It opens not the malignity of ſin, nor underſtands all the aggravations of it, which are neceſſary deeply to affect the Soul.

Secondly, The World did not underſtand the ſin of their Nature. The World would not acknowledge it for Unrighteouſneſs, would not apprehend it ſelf in a State of ſin, becauſe of their commendable qualities in the eyes of others: The World is not ſenſible of its change from the Image of God by Creation, into the Image of the Devil by Corruption. It underſtands not the extent of Original Sin, the depravation of their rational Faculties, the Lameneſs and Impotency of their Free-will, nor the ſinfulneſs of the firſt motions motions of their hearts: Nature applauds its own Power and Self-ability in the midſt of its Weakneſs, and an affection to God under a boiling enmity.

Thirdly, The World did not underſtand the Sin of Unbelief: As the light of Nature could not diſcover a Chriſt to them, ſo it could not diſcover the ſin of Unbelief to them: How could it convince of their Unbelief, when it did not diſcover the Object to be believed in. But the Spirit ſhall convince of a ſtate of Sin, of the depths of it in the Heart, the ſtreams of it in the Life; and eſpecially of Unbelief, which renders the Diſeaſe incurable, ſince there is no other Medicine but the Blood of Chriſt, and no other way of partaking of that Medicine but by Faith; it will evidence they are born in ſin, can do nothing but ſin, and cannot but by Faith be delivered from thoſe bonds of ſin, but muſt dye in them; that if they believe not in Chriſt, that came to redeem fallen Mankind, their ſins will lye on them, they will periſh in them, and lye under the Curſe of God: Now that ſin in general is here meant, (The Spirit ſhall convince of Sin,) as the Object of the Spirits Conviction, is clear: Becauſe, Firſt, He names it in general, as noting the whole Maſs of Sin.

Secondly, Becauſe it is in vain to convince men of the ſinfulneſs of their Unbelief, unleſs they be convinced firſt of the neceſſity of Faith: And what ground have they to be convinced of the neceſſity of Faith, unleſs they find ſuch loads of ſin upon them, as they are never able to bear, ſuch Guilt as they are never able to anſwer for, or remove from themſelves?

Thirdly, Becauſe the Holy Ghoſt condemns all other Sins, as well as Unbelief; and therefore convinceth of them; not only of Unbelief, but other Sins that ſtand in the way of Salvation.

Fourthly, The Spirit in the Text was to pronounce the whole World out of Chriſt to be in a ſtate of ſin and Death: Becauſe when the World would plead its Righteouſneſs, and ſeem to eſtabliſh Trophies to it ſelf, ſhield it ſelf by its own Righteouſneſs; the Spirit ſhould condemn that Righteouſneſs as not ſufficient, becauſe elſe it had been in vain for God to ſend his Son to work another Righteouſneſs. That is the firſt thing; the Spirit was to convince of Sin.

II. The Spirit was to Convince of Righteouſneſs. (1.) Some refer it to the Righteouſneſs of Chriſts Perſon: That is, his going to the Father was an evidence that he was a juſt perſon, Heaven would not elſe have entertained him: It would have been no receptacle for an Impoſtor, and one that to his laſt gaſp ſhould perſiſt in a known crime. The Spirit ſhould convince the World by undeniable teſtimonies and demonſtrations, that he was an Innocent Perſon, that he was no Malefactor when he ſuffered.

(2.) Others referr it to the Righteouſneſs of Chriſts Office, and his Merits imputed to Believers: And indeed the coming of the Spirit was a teſtimony of his Acceptation with the Father: For the Spirit had not come in ſuch a miraculous manner as was manifeſt in the Apoſtles, had not Chriſt in Heaven had an acceptation of his Sufferings from his Father.

(3.) Others underſtand it thus: He ſhall convince of the inſufficiency of humane Righteouſneſs. By the light of Nature men had ſome particular notions of Juſtice; by nature they knew in ſome meaſure what was right, they knew they were not to do wrong, that they were to be advantagious to the Commmunity, they knew they were to cheriſh thoſe that had been beneficial to them: Hence they deified thoſe that were publick Benefactors, either by the diſcovery of Arts that were uſefnl to humane Societies, or the defence of their Countrey in an Invaſion, or the delivery of thoſe that were oppreſt, from the common Plagues and Scourges of Mankind. Theſe they boaſted of, their moral Virtues, their invented Worſhip, the Service of their Gods, and their good Intentions. Now ſince by the light of nature men could not conceive of a higher Righteouſneſs than Juſtice between man and man, and an external devotion towards God; the Spirit was to convince them of the weakneſs of this conceited Righteouſneſs, and the want of a better, ſhewing that Chriſts Righteouſneſs is the only true Righteouſneſs of God; becauſe he is gone to the Father, and ſhall not return again to be a Sacrifice for ſin. For if Righteouſneſs ſhould have been by works, Chriſt had dyed in vain.

III. The Spirit was to convince of Judgement. Some underſtand it, that the judgment of this World concerning Chriſt was unjuſt; and the Spirit was to convince that it was ſo. Others, To convince of the damnation of the Devil, and conſequently of all that adhered to him. Of judgment, becauſe the Prince of this World is judged. Others, of the deliverance of Man, which was evidenced by the condemnation of the Devil, ſubduing him upon the Croſs, taking away that ſin whereby he had power over Man. Others, of the judgment of the World concerning Oracles, Superſtition and the worſhip of Idols, which they thought an acceptable Worſhip: The Spirit ſhould convince that this was a falſe judgment, ſince the Devil was caſt down from his Chair of Oracles, and the mouth of the Father of Lies was ſtopt, and the Prince that uſurpt the Government of the World, and to whom men paid ready Obedience, was caſt out and ſtript of his Power. Alſo convince of judgment, of the conſequent of this Righteouſneſs and Merit of Chriſt, and the certainty of Gods Judgment concerning him; becauſe the Devil is caſt out, which is a ſufficent evidence that God hath adjudged the Victory to Chriſt, ſince the Devil is diſmounted of his power; and that perfection of Holineſs and freedom from Sin, ſhall be obtained at laſt, ſince the great Captain of ſin is ſlain, and there is no hopes of his riſing again to ſecure his own ſtanding, or deſtroy a Believers Intereſt: For if the power of the Captain of their Salvation, did in his Humiliation break the ſtrength of the Devil, much more in the ſtate of Exaltation will he keep him from ever reducing his People to that miſery wherein they were before. And in this part of Convincing, the Spirit did work as a Comforter. Now to convince the World of Sin, of Righteouſneſs, and of Judgment, and to ſhew the further extent of Sin, and the neceſſity of another Righteouſneſs, required a mighty power; ſince theſe apprehenſions which the world had, had reigned ſo long in them, and the new Propoſitions and Declarations were in themſelves incredible to blear-ey'd Reaſon. Who could imagine that the Son of God ſhould take fleſh, and dye upon the Croſs, and the Devil be conquered and ruined by the Death of the Son of God? Who could have imagined theſe things? Had the Son of God come in triumph into the World, with Legions of Angels, and viſibly caſt the Devil from his Throne, and viſibly given forth his Laws; then the World could not but have believed on him, and ſubmitted to him: But to talk of a Victory over a living Devil by a dying man; of the neceſſity of Believing in a crucified Perſon, that ſuffered death as the vileſt Malefactor; to ſpeak of the Righteouſneſs of God, wrought by one that was put to death as a Criminal and a Blaſphemer, in the judgment of a whole Nation, and his own Countrey-men too; theſe were ſuch ſeeming Contradictions to the weak Reaſon of the World, without the divine Light of the Spirit manifeſting the Reaſon, and divine methods and the Nature of the things which he was to inſtruct men in, as a Comforter, as a Teacher of the World, that they could not poſſibly take place in them by any leſs power than an Almighty one.

One thing more; ſome think theſe Convictions not to be by an inward illumination, but by an objective Teſtimony of the Spirit, by Miracles and extraordinary Gifts conferr'd on the Apoſtles, whereby the truth of what Chriſt had ſaid and ſpoke, was confirm'd and demonſtrated. Though this be true, yet it is not all, there was an objective conviction by Miracles, but was there not alſo a ſecret inward conviction by Inſpiration? The Spirit was not only to dwell among men, or with them by outward acts, but in them, Joh. 14. 17. The Spirit was to be ſent into the heart by an inward Operation, as well as by an outward demonſtration of Miracles, and the Father and the Son promiſed to make their abode with the Souls of Believers, and manifeſt themſelves to them; how, except in this manner? All the works works of the Spirit are couched in this act of convincing of Sin, of Righteouſneſs, and of Judgment. What's to be done here, but hating Sin, and encouraging our Faith in Chriſt, becauſe of his Merit and his Aſcenſion to the Father, and heightning our Hopes by the aſſurance of the conqueſt of Sin and Satan? And all theſe are the acts of the Spirit in every Believer more or leſs to the end of the World. The convincing of Sin, of Righteouſneſs and of Judgment, do in a manner comprehend all the acts of the Spirit in a Believer. Therefore it's more than an objective Conviction. Thus much concerning the words. I ſhall pitch upon theſe two Obſervations.

1. Obſerv. That the Spirit of God is the Author of Conviction of Sin. And,

2. Obſerv. That Unbelief (that being the reaſon rendred, of ſin becauſe they believe not on me,) is a ſin of the greateſt malignity againſt God, and danger to the Soul. But for the Firſt, The Spirit is to convince of ſin. Not only in general, but in particular, of Unbelief, conſequently of the Root whence it growes, the Food that maintains it, and every ſin that ſtops the entrance of the grace of Faith. He was to ſhew the demerit of Sin, whereby men might apprehend and be aſcertained of the neceſſity of Believing in the Mediator propoſed, when they ſaw the depths of filthineſs broken up, and the Mountains of ſin diſcover'd, and not a mite of ſolid Righteouſneſs viſible either in their Natures or Actions. The Spirit of God is the Author of the Conviction of Sin. I ſhall ſhew, Firſt, That the Spirit doth convince of ſin.

Secondly, It is neceſſary the Spirit ſhould througly convince of ſin, if ever a man be convinced.

Thirdly, How and by what Means the Spirit doth work this Conviction.

Sixthly, The Uſe.

I. That the Spirit doth convince of Sin. We ſhall ſpeak to it in ſome Propoſitions.

Firſt, All convictions of Sin do either mediately or immediately, come from the Spirit of God. As it is commonly ſaid, whenceſoever Truth immediately cometh, it originally ariſeth from the Holy Spirit; ſo whatſoever the Inſtrument be, the principall cauſe of the application of Conviction is from the Spirit. There is a common and a ſpecial work of the Holy Ghoſt. All Convictions of men, though they may ſome of them ariſe from ſome more immediate cauſe by the Word, are the Spirits work efficiently, by the Word inſtrumentally. Conſcience is naturally a dead and ſtupid thing, Man a brutiſh creature, being fallen; and being fleſh, he reſiſts and diſputes againſt any convictions of Sin; and therefore if Conſcience be not ſtirred up by the Spirit, it would never riſe up in any ſelf reflection. Gen. 6. 3. My Spirit ſhall not alwayes ſtrive with man, for he is Fleſh. As man being fleſh is perverſe againſt the reaſonings of the Spirit, ſo being fleſh he would never have the leaſt diſtaſts of any iniquity, unleſs the Spirit did excite thoſe reliques of natural light which remain in the Soul. As thoſe reliques do remain in us by vertue of the Mediation of Chriſt, ſo all the awakenings of them to any ſenſe, or the Reformations which have been wrought thereupon in the World, have been by the Spirit of Chriſt. All the ſenſe that any of thoſe of the old World had, was from the inward motion of the Spirit, inviting them to repentance. My Spirit ſhall not alwayes ſtrive with man; implying that it did ſtrive, and it was in ſubſerviency to Chriſt the Mediator that the Spirit did ſtrive with that Generation of men. Upon which account Chriſt is ſaid by the Spirit to go and Preach to the Spirits in Priſon, which ſometimes were diſobedient, when the long-ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, 1 Pet. 3. 20.

It

It was that Spirit of Holineſs and Truth whereby Chriſt was quickned, which was no other than the Holy Ghoſt; and theſe diſobedient Perſons to whom Chriſt Preached thus by his Spirit, are called Spirits in relation to the ſtate wherein they now are in Priſon, before the Reſurrection, not in relation to the ſtate wherein they were when the Spirit did ſtrive with them: Whatſoever ſenſe there was upon any in the old World, was from the ſtriving of the Spirit of God with them, as the Spirit of the Mediator, by whoſe Interpoſition thoſe Reliques which were in them were kept up, and that Reaſon which they had was conveyed to them, and did remain in them. By this Spirit Chriſt is ſaid to go and Preach unto them. So that all motions of Conſcience, all convictions, whether upon thoſe that reject them, or thoſe that receive them, are from the Spirit as the Spirit of the Mediator. From this power did the Terrors of Cain and Judas ariſe, ſo far as it was the work of Illumination, exciting their rational faculties, though the ſin and Unbelief in thoſe Terrors did not ariſe from the Spirit. The ſtick ſtirs the water by the Childs agitation, the mud is raiſed, though the ſtick doth not convey the mud to it, nor immediately touch it, but by the water. When the diſcovery of ſin in its evil is made by the Spirit, that's a good work; but if men abſtain from that ſin, the evil of which they ſee, out of a ſervile principle, that's evil; the diſcovery and reſtraint is good, but the Principle is evil, being the effect not of any Love to God, but Enmity to him, and love to themſelves. All the Convictions of ſin, do either mediately or immediately come from the Spirit of God in any perſon whatſoever, it is from his ſtriving with them that they do ariſe.

Secondly, This is the Office of the Spirit: The word Comforter ſignifies an Advocate, and is ſo tranſlated when it's uſed of Chriſt, 1 John 2. 1. If any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous: παράκλητον. Now the Office of an Advocate, is to convince the party he appears againſt of his Crime, and the injury he hath done to his Client, to anſwer his reaſon, and ſtop his mouth, and make the matter of fact evident. The convincing work of the Spirit is an Advocacy to the Soul, he appears and manageth the cauſe as an Advocate, he arms himſelf with the Curſes of the Law againſt it: He is an Advocate for God and his Righteouſneſs in the Law; but in the work of Conſolation the Spirit is an Advocate for the Soul, and the Righteouſneſs of the Goſpel, againſt the rigors of the Law; ſo that while the Spirit is an Advocate againſt the Soul, he muſt as neceſſarily accuſe, and argue againſt it; as when he is an Advocate for the Soul, he muſt refreſh and pacifie it, and plead for its ſupport: in regard of this Office he is called a Spirit of Bondage, Rom. 8. 15. Ye have not received the Spirit of Bondage, &c. Which though ſome would underſtand only of the outward Moſaic Diſpenſation, it ſeems to be an inward work of the Spirit in the hearts of men. The intent of the Apoſtle may be ſometimes to ſhew the liberty of Believers from the Ceremonial Law, to which the Jews were in Bondage; but it doth not appear that it was the intent of the Apoſtle in this place: Yea it is to be conſidered, that he wrote to the Chriſtians in Rome, who were not all Jews, and very likely but a few of them were ſo, and ſo were never under the Bondage of the Jewiſh Ceremonies, but the burthen of Pagan Rites. As he is a Spirit of Adoption, exciting the Soul to cry Abba, Father, he works orderly in the heart after Faith; therefore as he is a Spirit of Bondage, he ſtirs up fears inwardly in the heart before Faith. The Apoſtle ſpeaks in the former part of the Chapter, of the actings of the Spirit in Believers, of the Spirits dwelling in them, the neceſſity of a mans having the Spirit of Chriſt for Mortifying the deeds of the Body through the Spirit, which reſpects men in particular in a ſtate of Faith; therefore what he means here, is an inward work in the hearts of men, as well as the other operations of the Spirit, which he mentions both before and after it; ſo that the ſpirit of Bondage reſpects men in particular before a ſtate of Converſion; he is ſent into the Heart as a ſpirit of Bon- Verſ. 11. 13.

dage: Terrors therefore which are inward in the Soul, and are called the Lords Terrors, Pſalm 88. 15, 16. are here called the Spirit of Bondage; not as if it bound the Soul, but diſcovers thoſe bonds which are by nature upon it, lays open the Judgments of God againſt it, ſets Conſcience at work to gall Men for ſin, and giveth not only a notional knowledge, but a ſenſible feeling of the weight of them: As he is called the Spirit of Truth and the Spirit of Adoption, becauſe he applies the Promiſes of Grace, ſo he is called the Spirit of Bondage, as he gives a ſight of thoſe Fetters that are clapt on by ſin and Satan, and applies the Law as a miniſtration of Death, as that whereby the man is concluded or ſhut up under ſin, and at preſent ſees no way to eſcape: now the natural conſequent and effect of this work muſt needs be fear. As the contagion of ſin is diſcerned by the Law, and the Curſes of the Law, without the appearance of the Evangelical Remedy there muſt needs be pangs and terrors: The Law ſhews only the Guilt, but not the Pardon, opens the Command and Threatning, but whiſpers not a Syllable of Comfort without perfect Obedience. In the Application of the Threatnings he is a Spirit of Bondage; in the Application of the Promiſes he is a Spirit of Adoption; as he flaſhes Fire in the Face of a Sinner, ſo he ſtrows Comforts in the Heart of a Believer.

Thirdly, The Spirit is the Infuſer of all Grace in the Heart, and therefore is the Author of all preparations to Grace, or any thing that hath any tendency that way: It is by the Spirit of Grace any are made ſenſible of their Piercing Chriſt, Zach. 12. 10. and brought to mourn over him. The ſame Spirit that ſprings up their mournful Tears, fixeth their believing eye, both upon their ſin, and on the Perſon they had abuſed by it: The Love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghoſt, Rom. 5. 5. as he manifeſts the Love of God to us, or raiſeth up our Love to God; which cannot be without loathing ſin, and a ſenſe of it in the Heart and Life, to enable the Soul to hate it: The true ſenſe of Gods goodneſs, cannot be without the ſenſe of our naughtineſs. When the Spirit doth both theſe, it is a Spirit of Adoption, when it works only a ſenſe of ſin, it is a Spirit of Bondage: As all Righteouſneſs and Truth are works of the Spirit, ſo all works that are antecedaneous to, and neceſſary for the attaining and preſerving true Righteouſneſs, are the fruits of the Spirit, among which deep Convictions are none of the leaſt. It is by the Spirit that we ſee, as well as crucifie, the Luſts of the fleſh.

Fourthly, The Spirit of God is promiſed in the times of the Goſpel, for ſuch Operations as this of Conviction, as a Spirit of Judgment, and a Spirit of Burning: When the Lord ſhall waſh away the filth of the Daughter of Sion, and purge the blood of Jeruſalem from the midſt thereof, by the Spirit of Judgment, and by the Spirit of Burning, Iſa. 4. 4. A ſpirit of Judgment to convince them, a ſpirit of Burning to refine them, and conſume their greater and leſſer Iniquities: He cites the Soul before a Tribunal, before he Baptizes it with Fire to refine it: And that this is to be underſtood of Goſpel times, will appear from the 2d. ver. In that day ſhall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious: And this is part of that excellent Fruit that ſhall be in the Earth. In regard of this the Spirit is called Fire, to ſcorch in Conviction and Self-condemnation by its heat, as well as to Comfort by its light and warmth. Iſa. 40. 7. The graſs withereth, and the flower fadeth, becauſe of the Spirit of the Lord that bloweth upon it: Our carnal Confidences ſtand firm, 'till he hews them down; our Righteouſneſs is amiable, 'till the Spirit blows upon it, and diſſolves its paint; beautiful, 'till the Spirit ſnatches off the diſguiſe; this is a Goſpel-promiſe, that Fleſh ſhould appear what it is: It ſhould be made Deſolate, and Convictions be wrought in men of the uglineſs of ſin, and the emptineſs of their own Righteouſneſs, and the inſufficiency of every thing that comes under the title of Fleſh. This is a Goſpel-promiſe of what the Spirit ſhould doe, when The glory of the Lord ſhould be revealed; Fleſh ſhould appear to be what it is, a manifeſt niſeſt Conviction be wrought, of the uglineſs of Sin, the emptineſs of our own Righteouſneſs, the inſufficiency of every thing that cometh under the title of Fleſh. The

II. Second thing is to ſhew, That it is neceſſary the Spirit ſhould do this work of Convincing. There is as much need of the Spirit to convince us of the guilt of ſin, while we are in a ſtate of Nature, as there is of the Spirit to comfort us under the apprehenſions of guilt, and the charge of an accuſing Conſcience. There is as much need of the Spirit to do the one, as to do the other. For,

(1.) The light of fallen Nature is inſufficient of it ſelf to cauſe a thorough Conviction. It is true, there is a natural Law in mens hearts, which diſcovers ſome duties to be done, ſome groſs Impieties to be avoided; there are common Notions left in man which may conduct him in a Moral courſe, without which humane Society could not be preſerved. Theſe are, that there is a God, that this God is to be worſhipped, that he is righteous, who rewards thoſe that ſeek him, that there are evil actions worthy of death, that there is a Judgment to be inflicted upon the commiſſion of ſin, a ſelf-ſatisfaction and peace in the avoiding of it, and performing ſuch things as are good, and comely, and honeſt, and of good report; and from ſuch Principles as theſe, common in man, thoſe Laws in all Nations againſt enormities, which are praiſe-worthy, and are the bands and ligaments of Society and of Government, did ariſe. Now theſe habitual Principles in the Mind, if read over, will judge and cenſure ſome acts of unrighteouſneſs: ſome works of the fleſh are manifeſt, ſuch as theſe, Adultery, Fornication, &c. Gal. 5. 19. clear by natural light to be the works of the fleſh. Conſcience muſt more or leſs naturally ſet in order before a mans eyes, ſome ſort of unrighteouſneſs, ſuch unrighteous actions which are contrary to thoſe implanted Notions, and plainly tell them without any other proof than what is in them, that they that do ſuch things are worthy of death, Rom. 1. 32. Becauſe they are againſt the univerſal Law imprinted in humane Nature, and againſt the acknowledged Principles placed in us by God. For the knowledge of Righteouſneſs and Sin, and alſo of Gods piercing Eye, whereby he ſeeth all ſin, and of his impartial Juſtice which hath ſtore of Puniſhments for the violators of his Law, is almoſt as deeply imprinted upon the Mind of man by nature, as the notion of a God: For indeed they do naturally flow from the notion of a Supreme Cauſe, the Governour of the World. Wherefore in many caſes God appeals to mens Reaſon, and the Principles that are left in them, Iſa. 5. 3. Ezek. 18. 25. and is willing to ſtand to the unbyaſſed Judgment of their own Minds. But natural light diſcovers not ſin ſo fully, as it is neceſſary for a Man to be convinced of it, in order to the entertainment of Chriſt, and the Grace of God in and by him. For natural Light

Firſt, Diſcovers not the Root of ſin. But there is a neceſſity a man ſhould be convinced of the Root of ſin. Men do not by nature underſtand the univerſal pollution of their Nature, nor feel the heavineſs of the ſin of Adam: It ſhews us that ſomething is amiſs, and much amiſs, but whence this diſorder doth ariſe, Nature of it ſelf is wholly ignorant, hath not ſo much as a regular gueſs without Revelation. The light of Nature is too dim to pierce into the depths of Evil; it acquaints not with the fomes of ſin, and that inward ſtrength of evil that gave birth and nouriſhment to thoſe uncouth actions; ſome actual evils it diſcerns to be ſo, but not the depraved Principle of them. Some actual evils are loathſome to men by nature, but not the Principle of them; men are not ſenſible what poſſeſſion the evil ſpirit of Adam hath of their Souls. There muſt be therefore ſome other Light to pierce through the Clouds of Nature, and ſearch into the depths of the Belly, and bring to view that habitual Inconformity of our Nature, to that rectitude required of us, and once poſſeſſed by us.

Secondly, It diſcovers not ſin as the greateſt evil in the world, neither did ever Nature hate ſin as ſuch; becauſe Nature is not endowed with any ſpiritual Affections by its natural deſcent. It never had a due ſenſe either of the Authority or Holineſs of the Law-giver, nor ever conſidered ſin as a contempt of the Sovereignty and Purity of the Law-giver and his Law, wherein indeed the intrinſick evil of ſin doth conſiſt, James 2. 10, 11. Nature did excite ſome fears upon the Guilt of ſin, but no grief for the Filth of ſin. Men by nature reſpect ſin as it ſtands in relation to the Juſtice and Omniſcience of God, as it is the Object of his ſight and knowledge, and the object of his revenging Juſtice and Wrath, but not as it ſtands in contrariety to the Purity of God. As it is an afflictive evil they may regard it, but not as it is a polluting evil; as ſtaining their Reputation, not as defiling their Souls. Nature giveth us but a little Proſpect of the Beauty of Gods Holineſs, whereby we muſt meaſure the hainouſneſs, malignity and odiouſneſs of ſin. As from the weakneſs of the reliques of natural light there are no ſtrong and powerful motions to God, becauſe, thô Nature diſcovers ſomething of God, yet not in all his Perfections, and the amiableneſs of his Nature; ſo the Convictions of ſin are weak, becauſe there is not by that light a diſcovery of the abominableneſs of it to God, and the intrinſick Pollution, which is as eſſential to ſin as Guilt; neither indeed doth Nature diſcover the Conſequents of ſin in their dreadfulneſs, and that wrath which will at laſt meet with it, and overflow the ſinner. The mind therefore muſt be enlightned by ſome higher Power, to underſtand the Holineſs of God, thereby to conceive the impurity of ſin.

Thirdly, Nature diſcovers not the Extent of ſin, in the inviſible and ſecret veins of it: Many branches of ſin are inviſible to Nature; it doth not diſcover ſin in its Latitude. Nature acquaints not with all the Duties to be done, nor the manner how to do them; therefore tells not of all the ſins we are to ſhun, nor the manner how to avoid them. It utters not a Syllable of Chriſt the Mediator, in whoſe Name we are to perform our Duties; nor of the ſanctifying Spirit, in whoſe ſtrength we are to perform them; nor of Faith, through which Principle we are to do them; nor of the glory of God in all the wayes of it, for which end we are to do them; nor of the Evangelical Promiſes, from which we are to take encouragement for the doing of them; and conſequently doth not ſhew the extent of ſin, which conſiſts in the failing in all theſe. It did indeed dictate ſince the Fall that God was to be worſhipped, and that with the beſt ſtrength of the Creature, but not the Manner and way of that Worſhip, and therefore informs not of ſins committed againſt the true Worſhip of God. It diſcovers not the ſinfulneſs of the firſt motions, and of the inward workings of luſt. The Jews, that had the Improvements of Nature by the diſcoveries of the Law, knew not the firſt inward motions, when ſtifled, to be ſin. They needed, though not the correction of the Law, yet the interpretation of our Saviour, in his Sermon on the Mount. What ſins Nature did make a diſcovery of, it did only manifeſt in ſome pieces and parts, not in the whole ſcope of them. As the light of Nature did not ſhew the Law of God in its wideneſs, ſo neither ſin in its foulneſs. It is neceſſary therefore that there ſhould be ſome higher power to diſcover thoſe ſins that are beyond the Ken of natural Light. By the light of the Sun we ſee the Atomes and Motes, that we can never diſcern by the light of the Stars.

Fourthly, Nature diſcovers not Unbelief, the greateſt ſin of all. Nature doth not convince of unbelief; what ſight of it can Nature direct us to? The Works of Creation evidence not the myſtery of Redemption; ſo the Light of Creation doth not evidence the ſins againſt that myſtery. The light of Nature diſcovers a Creator, but not a Redeemer: Becauſe though God made the World in order to that Glory he intended to get by Redemption, yet he made not the world as a Redeemer. And though it was made by that Perſon who was the Redeemer, yet it was not made in the way of Redemption, nor with the manifeſtation of thoſe Attributes of Love, Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs, which were evident in the work of Redemption.

A Toad upon the view of its Image in a glaſs, knows not its own deformity, nor the excellency of a man, or ſome other creature ſuperior to it, and therefore knows not how to meaſure its own deformity; nor doth a natural man with his depraved reaſon know himſelf by the Glaſs of the Word to be of a viperous brood, without ſome common work of the Spirit. Men by nature are not aſhamed of ſin as ſin, Rom. 6. 21. What fruit had ye then in thoſe things, whereof ye are now aſhamed? Now aſhamed, intimating, that in the ſtate of Nature they were not aſhamed. They were now aſhamed, under the new light whereby they ſaw them in their nature, not before, under their natural darkneſs wherewith their eyes were cloſed. Nature never diſcovers its own deformity. That's the firſt thing, the light of Nature is inſufficient to diſcover or convince throughly of ſin. Nature is inſufficient for this work.

(2.) The Law barely of it ſelf doth not convince throughly of all ſin. It diſcovers indeed more clearly ſome ſins, than the light of Nature, in regard it doth more evidence the Sovereign Authority, and holy nature of God, and conſequently diſcovers the nature of guilt, and the greatneſs of the filth of ſin, and brings to view upon an examination of the Heart, thoſe little Sprouts and Branches of ſin in the firſt motion, which are not viſible by Star-light; yet this diſcovers not the main condemning ſin; it diſcovers not the work of Redemption by Chriſt. It commands Faith in what God reveals, but but not Faith with ſuch a modification, directed to ſuch an Object as a dying Redeemer. The voice of the Law is not, He that Believeth ſhall be ſaved, but Do this and Live. The knowledge of other ſins is by the Law, but the knowledge of Unbelief by the Goſpel. Yet this doth not convince us of all actual ſins of it ſelf, not in regard of the inability of it as a Rule, or want of perfection in its prohibition of ſin; but in regard not only of the multitude of our Sins and Infirmities, but the weakneſs of our nature: Whence David, Pſalm 19. 12. cries out of ſecret Sins, Who can underſtand the errors of his life? Lord cleanſe me from my ſecret faults. He rightly imagined, there were more ſins in him than fell under his diſcovery by that light. Theſe properties of the Law can never be exerciſed but in the hand of God, as it is an Inſtrument of his managing and directing. How few Souls among thoſe multitudes of the Iſraelites, were rightly and throughly convinced by the thundrings at mount Sinai, at the firſt publiſhing of the Law! The Word is a Sword, yet the ſword of the Spirit, and can no more make gaſhes in the Conſcience without the Spirit to weild it, than a Sword can pierce and cut without a ſtrong arm to adde force to its edge; God himſelf appearing to a man by his bare word to his ear, without exerting a power on his heart, cometh ſhort of attaining to this end. It was not preſently that Adam came to a downright acknowledgement of his Sin, though charged with it by God in the Garden. Nor did Cain come to a kindly Conviction and Confeſſion of his Sin after all Gods diſputes with him about his Sin, and Manifeſtations of his Patience in making a hedge of his Providence round about him. So that the Law, as it doth not diſcover all Sin, Sins which are immediately againſt the Goſpel; ſo it is unable of it ſelf to convince without ſome powerful hand, the power of the Spirit of God to manage it. The reaſon of this inſufficiency is

First, The wrong notion of things, and the blindneſs of mind in natural men under the Goſpel. It is a notion that will not enter into the hearts of men naturally, that Sin is ſo odious and abominable to God. Many things they count very light, and prop up themſelves with a hope of mercy, and it will not enter into their heart, (it is ſo deeply in-laid in their natures,) that there is need of the death of the Son of God to take away the guilt of ſin, and the power of the Spirit to waſh away the filth of it. They are not ready to believe this, unleſs the arm of the Lord pull up ſuch notions, and root others in them: Hence Iſaiah cries out, Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? Who hath believed, that ever ſin is attended with that Guilt, that the Meſſiah muſt be ſmitten of God, ſtricken and afflicted, to repair the breaches ſin hath made? We have falſe opinions of Sin, of Righteouſneſs and of Judgment, and therefore the Spirit doth

ἐλέγχειν. confute an Opinion (as the word ſignifies) which had been ſettled in the Soul; it ſhews us ſins we never dreamt of, a Righteouſneſs we never imagined, and a new Fountain of Holineſs. Rom. 1. 21. When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, and became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned. Man believes he is as God created him, he is ignorant of the corruption of his blood, believes himſelf holy in his unholineſs, righteous in his unrighteouſneſs. Vice is hid in the Soul worſe than any outward Diſeaſe in the Body: men eaſily find their Bodies ill affected, but underſtand not the ſtate of their Souls poſſeſſed by ſin, becauſe the underſtanding which ſhould judge of the Diſeaſe, is ill affected it ſelf. The fooliſh heart of man is darkened, and being darkened cannot underſtand the diſeaſe, becauſe that is the power of judging, and that being corrupted cannot judge in the things it ſuffers. This makes Soul-diſeaſes naturally incurable, cauſeth men to refuſe the Medicines, ſhun all means of Recovery, and be angry with them that apply Remedies. Men may converſe with the Law, underſtand the Letter of it, while they are ignorant of the intent; a man may ſee a Glaſs without a reflection on himſelf. Paul a Phariſee was a Student in the Law, a Doctor fit to teach the letter of the Law; yet there was a vail between him and the Spirit of it, 'till the Spirit held the Law cloſe to his Conſcience, Rom. 7. 9. We may have the outward Letter and outward work too, when yet the brightneſs of it by reaſon of the thick miſt on the mind, reacheth not the remote part of the Soul. Bring a man that hath loſt Sight and Smell into a naſty filthy place, he knoweth not but that it is a beautiful Garden, 'till his Eyes be opened, and his Smell reſtored. Therefore there is a neceſſity of the Spirit to enlighten the mind, in this firſt work, as well as in all conſequential acts. A neceſſity of the Spirit to enlighten our minds, who in regard of his Omniſcience is able by the light of the Word to bring ſins to view, out of their ſculks and hiding places. How great is this Ignorance of themſelves in the beſt! We know but in part, and as in a Glaſs darkly, either God or our ſelves: And as we ſtand in need of an High-prieſt to pity us under our Infirmities, ſo of the Spirit to diſcover them to us, that we may have a ſpiritual diſcerning of a ſpiritual miſchief: For as there is a Common, Natural, and a Spiritual Knowledge of God; ſo there is a natural and a ſpiritual knowledge of ſin: Natural, when men know ſuch a thing to be ſin, but Spiritual, when they underſtand the ſpiritual filth and pollution and miſchief of ſin: There's need of the Spirit, that we may ſpiritually diſcern the ſpiritual miſchief. That we may know ſpiritual truths in a ſpiritual manner, that we may know ſins alſo with a ſpiritual eye. Since the darkneſs of the mind is the cauſe of a vain walking, Epheſ. 4. 17, 18. that can never be in any ſort a Remedy, which is the cauſe of the Diſeaſe; therefore the wrong notions of men, make them uncapable of working this Conviction upon themſelves by the Law.

Secondly, Another reaſon is, A natural enmity to any ſuch Diſcovery, which is univerſal in all men. There's nothing men more naturally abhor, than any thing tending to the rooting out thoſe vitious habits they are deeply in love withall. As men when they know God, have no mind to glorifie him as God, ſo men when they cannot avoid the knowledge of the Threatnings of God, have no mind to believe them and conſider them, as the Threatnings of God. Convincing arguments alwayes meet with contradiction from Nature: It is for this very reaſon men hate the Light, leſt their deeds ſhould be reproved, their deeds they be convinced of, John 3. 20. Every one that doth evil, hates the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved; which light they would love well enough, were it not attended with ſo unpleaſing an effect: Our Saviour pronounceth it univerſally of all Mankind, Every one that doth evil, hates the light; and who by nature can pretend an exemption? Not a man by nature, but abhors more to have a Conviction of ſin, than the beſt Believer abhors thoſe deeds he is convinced of; and this makes the Conviction utterly impoſſible by the meer ſtrength of nature: Hence we are compared to wild Aſſes that ſnuff up the wind; endure dure hunger and thirſt, undergoe any Inconvenience, rather than be convinced of a miſerable State, and ſubmit to be reduced to a better. Hence where do you find a man that yields to the firſt Arguments brought againſt his Luſts, but ſtruggles and ſtrives againſt ſuch Conviction? nay, do they not cheriſh their beloved ſins under rebukes, draw a Curtain between themſelves and the Law, and will ſee no faults in what they affect? What an irrational folly did poſſeſs the Phariſees, who becauſe Chriſt by raiſing Lazarus had got a Name, and a greater number of Diſciples, would have killed Chriſt and him, as though that power that raiſed Lazarus, after he had been dead three dayes, could not have preſerved him from them, or if they had killed him, could not have raiſed him again, and reſtored Life to him as often as they had ſtript him of it, or turned them into their Graves? So hard is it to convince men of ſin, yea and of common and rational Truths, againſt the overſwaying Love of their Paſſions and Intereſts. There's need then of ſome ſuperior power, to ſet the light before men, and fix their eyes upon it; for naturally men reject all impreſſions which come upon them from any declaration of Truth, and are no more friends to it, than Darkneſs is in league with Light, and cannot from themſelves have any due reverence to the Word, on the account of the Authority of it, and the Holineſs of God the Author of it, but endeavour to extinguiſh it as ſoon as ever they ſee any ſparks of it in their Hearts.

Thirdly, The weakneſs and falſeneſs of natural Conſcience, is another thing that proves Natures inſufficiency to ſuch a work.

(1.) The Weakneſs of it: Conſcience indeed hath a natural power of Judging, but not higher than the Light in it: a clear Light is neceſſary to a right Judgment; and when there is a light in it, yet it ſelf being dull and ſleepy, muſt be rouſed up to perform its Office. As original Corruption hath darkned the Mind, and enfeebled the Will, ſo it hath darkned this faculty, (for there is no room in the houſe that is priviledged from Infection) and the greater the ſtrength of ſin, the weaker is the ſenſe of it; for the defilement encreaſeth the inſenſibility, Epheſ. 4. 19. Which is the ſtate of men by nature, it being the ſtate of all the Gentiles: the fuller of dead works, the more Lifeleſs muſt it be in its Office; for the ſtrength of ſin puts the Conſcience under a reſtraint, and makes that a Priſoner to it, which ſhould be a Spye and Monitor againſt it; Who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs: There's an Impriſonment of Truth, and though Conſcience doth ſometimes reflect the light of the Law upon the Soul, yet becauſe of its weakneſs, it is as unable to fire the Soul, as a ſmall ſpark is to enflame a reaking Dunghill, or a Burning-glaſs to fire any thing when the Sun is mask'd with thick clouds and foggs. Sometimes Conſcience makes falſe determinations and reflections for want of knowledge, ſometimes no reflections by reaſon of ſtupefaction by ſin, which is the effect of every ſin, 'till it be rouſed by the Voice of God. Perhaps Adams Conſcience might be put almoſt into as deep a ſleep by ſin, as his Body had been by his Creator, when he took Eve out of it: For though he was ſenſible after his fall, of his being ſtript of his Righteouſneſs, yet he doth not ſeem to be convinced of his ſin, 'till God had ſpoke, which awakened his Conſcience; juſt after by his ſin he fell from ſo great and ſo happy an Eſtate, the Scripture giveth no remark of any affrightment he had, 'till he heard the Voice of God. Priſoners are jolly in the Gaol, 'till they hear of the coming of the Judge, though they know the Crimes they are guilty of. In ſome, Conſcience is ſo ſleepy, or rather dead, that it may be ſaid of them, as of thoſe, Acts 19. who when they were asked, Whether they had receiv'd the Holy Ghoſt, they had not heard of ſuch a thing as the Holy Ghoſt: ſo theſe have not heard of ſuch a thing as Conſcience..

(2.) The falſeneſs of Conſcience, and its eaſineſs to be deceived, ſhews the unlikelihood of natures ever convincing: An evil Conſcience being oppoſed to a true Heart by the Apoſtle, Heb. 10. 22. is a falſe Conſcience; the falſeneſs of Conſcience lyes in not preſſing what it knows. Every man by nature

ture hath the ſame general and natural notions which a renewed man hath; but Conſcience makes not the Soul ſenſible of what it knows, by urging things, and bringing them to a particular Application, and drawing them out in rank and file. Though it hath a Commiſſion as Gods Deputy, yet it neglects its charge, is bribed and overawed, like an Officer in a Town, who neglects the truſt repoſed in him by the Governour: it is apt to be deceived by outward performances, which doth incapacitate it to convince men throughly. It's apt to have its mouth ſtopt by the husk of a Duty, inſtead of the kernel; it troubles rather for groſs ſins, than for ſpiritual ones; nay, it doth not ordinarily rebuke for any ſpiritual ſin; leaves off reproving, and rather applauds men when they engage in outward performances, ſaith, Well done good and faithful Servant. It is uſually contented with the outward performance, though there be more of ſelf in it, than of aim at Gods glory; with the work of the Law, though there be not the power of the Law, written in the Heart. If it hath any voice at all, 'tis not loud but faint, like that of Eli to his Sons, Do no more ſo; and 'tis apt to ſpeak Peace when there is no ground of Peace; this is univerſally the Diſeaſe of Conſcience in natural men: It Conſpires with the other faculties, not to be Injurious to the carnal Intereſt in the Soul. There muſt therefore be, on the account of its falſeneſs and weakneſs, ſome higher power to rouſe a ſleepy Conſcience, rectifie a depraved Conſcience: Unleſs the Eye be more piercing, the Judgment more ſound, Conviction can have no Progreſs; 'till the Bullet be ſhot by the Spirit, it will fall ſhort of the mark.

Fourthly, A fourth reaſon which ſhews the Inſufficiency of nature to ſuch an end, is the falſe Diſguiſes of Sin, and the Pretences for it, which make the univerſal Conviction of it impoſſible to nature. Beſides thoſe notions of ſin which naturally are in mens own minds, they are ſwayed much by the common ſentiments of others, concerning this or that practice; and when any Vice is eſteemed a Virtue, it's above the power of nature to affect the Heart with that which is commonly applauded as a matter of Praiſe. The ſinfulneſs of actions which are attended with profit and honour, is not eaſily perceived, the whole bent of Nature ſtands in defence of them; Intereſt, Profit and Credit, whatſoever is dear to men, they are mighty Champions for it. Covetous, and ambitious and proud men, and whoever are guilty of thoſe ſins that ſtream from theſe Fountains, do not eaſily acknowledge their Crimes, becauſe they lye hid in the Heart, they continually beſiege the mind, fill up all the corners of the Soul, that true reaſon hath not room to lift up its hand. Thoſe that are given to ſenſual Pleaſures and Intemperance, appear more eaſily to acknowledge their ſins in the Intervals of Luſt, becauſe theſe are more brutiſh; but as for others, their ſins are more refined, accounted neceſſary and generous, they have Cloaks and covers for them, of Frugality, Fortitude, &c. Whence it appears, men are more eaſily brought to a ſenſe of, and turning from brutiſh Vices, than from internal ones, thoſe which ſpring up from a root more faſt ſettled in the Heart, thoſe Vices which bring in Honour, Profit and eſteem, ſuch being more dear to men than thoſe of Pleaſure, which may be laid aſide, and men being at great pains in undertaking to nouriſh their Ambition: In ſome things men have an Imagination they act generouſly and bravely, even in their Vices, which renders them more inflexible to any Reflections of Conſcience, and ſhews a neceſſity of ſome higher Power to take off the maſk of ſin, and diſcover it without its diſguiſe.

Fifthly, The ſubtil evaſions of carnal Reaſon, render the univerſal Conviction of ſin Impoſſible to meer Nature. What gloſſes will a winding Wit put upon ſin, preſent evil as good, and good as evil? Ever ſince man drew in the Serpents breath, he hath imitated the Tempter, in this his Maſter-piece of falſe repreſentations: Excuſes for ſin are equally derived with the ſin of our Nature, from our firſt Parents in their firſt ſin. Adam and Eve did not deny their crimes, but caſt the blame from themſelves, Adam upon Eve, Eve upon upon the Serpent. And Adam wraps God himſelf up in the Society of his Crime, charging it on that ſnare that his Wife was to him. Thus great ſinners imagine themſelves innocent, when they can excuſe their ſin by the inducement of others, and the conſtitution of their Bodies, as if any thing could force the Will; they will have ſubtil diſtinctions for the extenuating of their Sin, though their ſpots appear in all their Garments, and may be ſeen without ſearching for. Men will not many times believe themſelves ſinners, by reaſon of the ſubtil diſtinctions that a corrupt Wit will find out, though their blackneſs be as viſible as that of a Negro, and argue againſt ſtrong rebukes as much as a troubled Conſcience will againſt grounds of comfort. Men naturally ſtand upon a ſenſe of Honour, are loth to condemn themſelves under apparent Crimes, and for fear of Puniſhment will rather reflect upon God, and by diſtinctions blunt the edge of his Word. And there are other corrupt reaſonings, by Promiſes of future Repentance, hopes of Mercy, entitling preſumptuous ſins Infirmities, and ſuch as all men by nature are incident to, whereby they non-plus Conſcience, and delude their Souls; and thô they confeſs ſin in the general, yet they ſuſpend as to a particular Confeſſion. Till this ſelf-love be diſcover'd, and over-aw'd by the Spirit, little good is to be expected. There is therefore need of the Spirit ἐλέγχειν to confute theſe Calumnies, and ſtop mens mouths, and bring down the contrivers and inventers of them to lick the duſt. God only who is omniſcient, and knows all the Wards of the Heart, can ſearch the ſecret parts of it, and bring ſin to light, and the Soul to ſpiritual Reaſon.

Sixthly, The natural levity, and inconſtancy of the Soul, renders it impoſſible to Nature to convince. It is from this inſtability, thoſe wreſtings of Scripture, and evaſions to turn away the dint of a rebuking argument, doe ariſe; 2 Pet. 3. 16. Which they that are unſtable and unlearned wreſt, to their own deſtruction. They are naturally like Clouds which have no certain baſis, therefore as ſoon can a natural Cloud fix as they. Hence mens convictions are like fits of an Ague, which have their intervals, and at laſt wear quite away. Man can have no compoſedneſs nor conſiſtency in himſelf, while he is hurried about by various Ends and Objects, while in a ſtate of Nature. All the power of Nature can no more make an impreſſion on ſuch fluid perſons, than a man can draw a Picture upon the water, or plough the Rivers, and make them receive ſeed and bring forth Fruit. Inſtability ſcatters and divides the powers of the Soul, that they cannot unite in any ſerious reflections. So that you ſee Nature is utterly inſufficient, and there is a neceſſity of ſome higher power than Nature to convince the Soul of ſin. I ſhall adde a

(3.) Third Argument. As neither Nature nor Law can do it, upon thoſe accounts, and therefore there is a neceſſity of the Spirit for this purpoſe; ſo it's neceſſary that this through Conviction which ends in Converſion, ſhould be the work of the Spirit, in regard of the Honour of God, that the whole new ſtate, with all its antecedents as well as conſequents may be of God. That the hewing the Stone as well as ſetting it in the Building, the Preparations of the Members, as well as uniting them to the Head, may owe it ſelf only to the Divine Power, that all cauſe of glorying in our ſelves may be cut off, according to the intent of the Goſpel. If a man ſhould convince himſelf, and make himſelf ſenſible of ſin, though afterwards he ſhould be brought to a through Converſion and cloſe with Chriſt; yet the glory of the firſt ſenſe and preparation will be the glory of the Fleſh: But all Fleſh in every thing which concerns our recovery, muſt be ſilent before God. As the Spirit doth all things about the head Chriſt, ſo he doth all things about thoſe he intends his members. As Chriſt was led by the Spirit to be tempted by the Devil, that he might have a ſenſe of ſin, and be acquainted with the craft and ſubtilty of that Adverſary, which had brought all the diſhonour upon God, and ſunk all Mankind in miſery; ſo the Spirit doth convince his members of ſin, ſuits the Word providentially to make Impreſſions, worketh and preſerves theſe Impreſſions in them, that the whole work, the ploughing up the fallow ground of the Heart, as well as the ſowing the ſeed in it, may redound to the glory of God in the entire praiſe of it.

So that you ſee it's neceſſary the Spirit ſhould convince of ſin, Nature cannot do it, cannot convince of the Root of ſin, and it cannot convince of the Evil of ſin, and it cannot convince of the Latitude of ſin, nor of Unbelief: And the Law, that cannot convince of Unbelief, nor indeed of any ſin, without the Spirits management of it, it being the ſword of the Spirit: The reaſon of the inſufficiency of Nature, which is, the wrong notions of things, the blindneſs of Mind under the Goſpel, and a natural enmity univerſally in every man that doth evil, againſt any ſuch diſcovery, the weakneſs and falſeneſs of natural Conſcience, and the falſe diſguiſes of ſin, pretences for it; all which render univerſal Convictions impoſſible; and ſo doth the levity and unſtedfaſtneſs of the Soul; beſide the neceſſity of it for the Honour of God. The

III. Third Queſtion is, How doth the Spirit work theſe Convictions? And before I ſpeak to that, take only this Caution. Though the Spirit doth work theſe Convictions in the Hearts of men, (and it's neceſſary he ſhould,) yet ſlaviſh Fears, Deſperation, and other ſinful things conſequent upon the Knowledge of our ſelves, are not the work of the Spirit, and therefore do not flow from him, by any immediate impreſſion of his upon the ſoul; but they are the Conſequent of this ſight and ſenſe men have of the dreadfulneſs of their ſtate, which the Spirit ſhews them, by fixing their eye on the Glaſs of the Law, and their thoughts upon their miſerable condition. As when a wilde Beaſt is tyed to a Poſt, or ſhut in a Den, the hand that faſtens or ſhuts him in, is not the cauſe of his ſnarling, and toſſing, and beating himſelf againſt the Wall, this is a conſequent of his own wild diſpoſition, as being in ſuch a ſtate; or, as the Wrath of God which kindles Hell, and locks and ſcorches the damned in the perpetual Priſon, this as Puniſhment and a Phyſical evil belongs to God, and is his proper act, but not thoſe Blaſphemies and Curſes which riſe from the Pain of the damned. If men in Afflictions, which may be remedied, do Curſe God, Iſa. 8. 21. much more will it be conſequent upon an endleſs miſery, where there is no hope of redreſs. 'Tis impoſſible that a man under Puniſhment, without the hopes of a Pardon, and being wholly corrupt, ſhould have good thoughts of a revenging God. Yet though God inflict what is juſt, he doth not excite what is evil and unjuſt. So though the Spirit makes Impreſſions upon men, diſcovers the miſery of their State, ſets their ſins in order before them, by the awakening of Conſcience, and by his motion fixeth their Minds on the Conſideration of them; yet thoſe ſinful Fears, Accuſations of God, Charges againſt God, are not the effect of the Spirit in them, but the bubling up of their own hearts naturally incident unto that ſtate they are apprehenſive of. And now to proceed unto that

Third Queſtion. How doth the Spirit work this Conviction? The great Inſtrument whereby the work is wrought, is the Law; he acts in ſuch a method in Conviction as a Spirit of Bondage, as he doth in Aſſurance as a Spirit of Adoption. As he is a Spirit of Adoption, the Goſpel is the Inſtrument whereby he works Aſſurance; as he is a Spirit of Bondage, the Law is the Inſtrument, which is in a way of Syllogiſm: When he comforts, 'tis in this manner; He that believeth ſhall be ſaved; but the Soul aſſumeth, But I believe, therefore I ſhall be ſaved. So it is in this of Conviction, Every one that believeth not, ſhall periſh; the Soul aſſumeth, But I believe not, therefore I ſhall periſh: Every one that is unholy ſhall not ſee God; I am unholy, ſaith the Soul, therefore I ſhall not ſee God. The firſt Propoſition is the evidence of Scripture, the ſecond is the evidence of Conſcience, the third is the evidence of Reaſon in a rational Deduction. It is as a ſolemn Court of Judicature: The firſt Propoſition conſiſts of matter of Law, He that believeth not ſhall periſh, the Aſſertion of God; and, He that is unholy ſhall not ſee God; this is matter of Law, the Aſſertion of God. The Evidence as to matter of Fact, is given in the ſecond Propoſition, But I believe not, but I am unholy: The Sentence is pronounced ced in the third, Therefore I ſhall periſh, therefore I ſhall never ſee God. In the firſt the Soul is Arraigned, in the ſecond Tryed and Caſt, in the third Condemned. The Inſtruments then which the Spirit uſeth in Convincing, are,

Firſt, The Law, which is the Rule whereby to judge of the Moral good or evil of Actions; and Conviction is nothing elſe but the formal Impreſſion of Sin by the Law, on the Conſcience, or the reviving that which was before imprinted; the blowing off the duſt, from the Letters of the Law written in the Soul. The Second Inſtrument the Spirit uſeth, is the Conſcience, in the Conviction of the Fact: This tells the Soul of its breaking the Law, and contempt of the Law-giver; flyes in the face with a Thou art the man, and affects him as if the Law had pronounced him by name accurſed; upon which account Conſcience is called a Witneſs, Rom. 2. 15. And when this cometh and gives full Evidence, the Mouth is ſtopt, Rom. 3. 19. and the Soul is ſaid to die; Rom. 7. 9. is no more able to anſwer the Accuſations of the Law, when applyed by Conſcience, than a man deprived of life is able to anſwer a word at the Bar; but remains as dead in Law, under a ſenſe of guilt. To aſſiſt Conſcience in this work, is the greateſt work the Spirit hath to do, which otherwiſe would be ſilenced by mens luſts, or bribed to give in a falſe, weak or ſlight witneſs, Ignoramus, or mince the matter. As in the Syllogiſm, whereby we come to Aſſurance, it is the hardeſt matter to frame the ſecond propoſition, But I believe, but I love God; the hardeſt matter to find out the truth of grace; ſo it is the hardeſt matter in this way of Conviction to find out ſin, to be ſenſible of the guilt of ſin. As many Chriſtians do not own and find the truth of Grace, by reaſon of their fears, and doubts, and darkneſs; ſo many a ſinner will not own his ſin, by reaſon of his ſelf-love: Therefore the Spirit doth firſt work by the Law, this is the breath of his lips, wherewith he ſlayes the wicked, Iſa. 11. 4. Which hath a greater force in the hand of the Spirit, than the Eloquence of the mightieſt Orator, and makes men fall down under the Power of it. As Converſion is a knitting the Heart and the Goſpel together, ſo Conviction is a knitting the Heart and the Law. As the Spirit dwells in Sons in a way of Comfort, to make them call God Abba, Father; ſo he is in Sinners in a way of Conviction, to make them regard God as a Judge. As by the Word men are forewarned from ſin, ſo by the Word men are reproved for ſin. This is the Spirits Inſtrument, for God doth not in an ordinary way act immediately, but uſeth Inſtruments in all his works. Not that we ſay, that the Law is the cauſe of Salvation, (that's only by the Goſpel.) It is no more the Cauſe of it, than the launcing of a wound, letting out the putrified matter, is the cauſe of the cure; but it diſcovers the depth of the wound, and that corrupt matter, which reſiding there would hinder the cure, and feſter, and end in putrefaction: Or as one ſaith, it is but as a Fiſherman beating the River, and troubling the water to drive the fiſh into the Net. The Law drives men into the Net of the Goſpel, whereby they are catched for God. There are three Acts of the Law, juſtifying, directing, and convincing; the juſtifying act of the Law is out of doors, and a condemning act ſtept into the room, ſince men are concluded under ſin, Gal. 3. 21, 22, 23. Man in his firſt Creation ſtood in an indifferency to the Promiſes and Comminations of the Law, according as his carriage ſhould be, but when ſin came, the Promiſe of the Law was of no force, becauſe the Condition of obedience was not performed, whereupon man lay under the power of the Curſe. The directing pow- of the Law remains, as a Rule to guide us; for the work of Chriſt was to reduce us to obedience. The convincing Power of it is of perpetual uſe, for the diſcovery of the depth of ſin in the Heart, Pſalm 19. 12. Who can underſtand his errors? cleanſe me from my ſecret faults. Of perpetual uſe even to Believers too, in regard of the conteſt with ſpiritual ſins, even for the diſcovery of ſpiritual ſins. There is a ſpiritual uſe of a ſpiritual Law, to manifeſt thoſe ſins to a Believer; in which reſpect it is not a terror to a Believer, but a delight; becauſe it diſcovers the Enemies of God in the Soul, and makes it run to the Fountain of Chriſts blood in the Goſpel for the cleanſing of them; ſo that the more this revealing power of the Law is uſed, the more occaſion hath Faith to manifeſt it ſelf, in recourſe to the Goſpel Promiſe. In theſe two latter reſpects the Law is of conſtant and neceſſary uſe; the convictive is neceſſary to affect us with ſin, and the inſufficiency of our own Righteouſnes; and the directive is not deſtroyed, but enforced by the Goſpel. We muſt know our ſelves, and know God; the Law giveth us a Knowledge of God in his Authority and Holineſs, and a Knowledge of our ſelves in our Subordination and Vileneſs. And,

Firſt, The Spirit diſcovers ſin by the Law: It is the end of all Laws to inform the underſtanding of what is to be done, and conſequently of Mens deviation from them: And ſo abſolutely neceſſary the Law is for this diſcovery, that the Apoſtle owns all his Knowledge of ſin to come from thence, Rom. 7. 7. I had not known ſin but by the Law; by this ſin is revived, Rom. 7. 9. When the Commandment came, ſin revived. As the moyſture in wood is excited by the fire, wheezing out at the end, which was not diſcerned before. The rectitude of the Rule, diſcovers the crookedneſs of our Nature; the perfection of the Law, the degenerateneſs of the Soul; the purity of the Law, the pollution of the Heart; the ſpirituality of the Law, the carnality of our Minds: the Rule being altogether excellent, diſcovers a man altogether vile. Galat. 3. 19. The Law was added becauſe of Tranſgreſſion: To diſcover the filth, ſtench and venome of a mans Heart and Actions, and make him to lye under the Condemnation of it, without any accuſation of the Righteouſneſs of God. Hence it is ſaid, that The Law entred that ſin might abound, Rom. 5. 20. Not to make it abound by encouraging the Commiſſion of it, but by impreſſing the Conviction: A man before thinks himſelf a ſcanty and Mole-hill Sinner, but after the ſight of the Law, deep conſideration, and the ſenſe of it, he ſeeth himſelf a large and mountainous Sinner, though he may appear ſmall to the eye of man. And the Spirit diſcovers by the Law the extent of ſin; by the breadth of the Law, the Spirit helps us to meaſure the latitude of ſin: naturally we think not ſin to be ſo great as it is, but its dimenſions are ſeen through the Glaſs of the Word, which ſhews it to be exceeding broad; as a Star which a Child thinks is but a little Spark, is known and diſcerned by an Inſtrument to be bigger than the Globe of the Earth. The Spirit ſhews the extent of the Precept, and thereby meaſures the wideneſs of the ſins; he diſcovers the purity of the Precept, and thereby the filthineſs of ſin. And as he diſcovers ſin, ſo,

Secondly, Secret and lurking ſins he diſcovers by the Law: The Spirit by this diſſecting Knife opens the entrails of the Heart, to manifeſt the ſecret holes and traverſes of this inward Serpent: As when the Body is opened, all the little ſtrings within are plainly ſeen to the Back-bone *, every thing in the whole compoſition of it lyes open to publick view, Heb. 4. 12, 13. It divides Soul and Spirit, it diſcovers what Cattel litter in the Affections and Fancy: It doth unmask thoſe ſpiritualized ſins which harbour in the Underſtanding and Will; thoſe luſts which appear abroad in the garb of Virtues, as acts of gallantry and generoſity; though they looked like Stars of the Firmament, it ſhews them to be but ſome unhappy Vapours. The Spirit by the Word opens both Heart and Mind, and Affections; the ſpiritual and ſenſitive part of the Soul of man, brings the Conſcience as he did Ezekiel from Chamber to Chamber, to ſee the Vermine which crawl in every part; and as in diſſection we ſee the Valves and ſmall Fibres of the Body, ſo the thoughts and intents of the Heart, the ſecret aims wherein the ſpirit of wickedneſs lyes, the Councils which gave the firſt birth unto ſin, the cloſe intents that had a fair outſide, like a venomous Serpent in a Golden Box; theſe the Spirit brings to light, it rifles the very corners, and ſheweth the inwardeſt and the leaſt things, and fetcheth up that mud which

which lay under a clear ſtream, which Conſcience was not acquainted with before: And this diſcovery of lurking ſins is not from the innate power of the Law; that hath not a power of Omniſcience; but by the Spirit working by that Law: It is God that ſearcheth the Heart, Jer. 17. 10. 'Tis Gods Heart, like Eliſha, in 2 Kings 5. 26. that goes with every man when he doth this or that. The Spirit doth work by the Law, in the diſcovery of ſin, both as to the extent of it, and as to ſecret ſins. So,

Thirdly, It diſcovers the Wrath of God due to ſin by the Law: As the Goſpel is a Glaſs reflecting the Glory and Love of God upon the Heart, ſo the Law is a pure Glaſs reflecting the Holineſs and Wrath of God upon the Conſcience. The Goſpel repreſents God upon a Throne, with a Scepter of Grace and Righteouſneſs; the Law exhibits him upon a Tribunal of Juſtice, with a Rod of Iron and Wrath: As the Goſpel is called the Word of Reconciliation, ſo the Law is the word of Wrath: It ſhews a man lying under Gods diſpleaſure, at the brink of the pit, and holds him quaking over the ſmoak of Hell: As the Goſpel is the miniſtration of Life, ſo the other is the miniſtration of Death. It ſhews Wrath entailed upon the leaſt, as well as the greateſt Iniquity; brandiſheth and darts Curſes againſt the Sinner. God is diſcovered in Arms againſt the Soul, going forth, conquering and to conquer, with Death and Hell marching before him. Rom. 2. 8, 9. Indignation and Wrath, Tribulation and anguiſh, on every Soul that doth evil. Sin is ſhewn in its filthineſs, and Wrath in its dreadfulneſs, Sin too in its Guilt: By the Law we diſcern our Debts, and are aſſured they muſt be paid. The Law lays hold of every Sinner, like that Servant in the Goſpel, and with a dreadful voice claims the Debt, Pay me that thou oweſt. That's the firſt thing, the Spirit works by the Law as an Inſtrument.

Secondly, The Spirit doth ſtir up the natural Notions, and acquired Knowledge in the mind in this Conviction. He lets looſe thoſe Truths in the Heart, which were Priſoners in the Chains of Unrighteouſneſs, to be aſſiſtant in this work. As Invaders put Arms into the hands of thoſe Priſoners, which had been under a force before. This work is the exciting and reflecting the Light and Knowledge in the underſtanding upon the Conſcience, whereby the Creature feels the heat of the Light, which in its direct beams he did not; nor doth Knowledge ſwimming in the Brain affect: He blows up the ſparks of Reaſon to a height, and like the Sun draws forth the ſap of thoſe notions implanted in the Heart, making them ſprout up, according as he firſt ſet them. For as the ſowing this Seed was by the hand of the Spirit, ſo the Improvement of theſe Principles ſown, is by the breath of the Spirit, in a way of common Grace: He cauſed the Birth, and he cauſes the Growth too: that which he had ſown, he preſerves and excites; ſo that when theſe notions are excited by the Spirit, men ſee double to what they did before diſcern of the ſecrets of Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs, and accordingly that there are more Tranſgreſſions according to the Law of nature, than men uſually dream of, which makes them juſtifie God in the way of his Judgments. Job 11. 5, 6. O that God would ſpeak and open his lips againſt thee; and that he would ſhew thee the ſecrets of Wiſdom, that they are double to that which is! Know therefore that God exacteth of thee leſs than thine Iniquity deſerveth. It is an Anſwer to Job's Complaint, that his Afflictions were without ground; which Zophar anſwers, That if the ſecrets of Wiſdom in the Law of nature were excited, it would diſcover ſin enough to juſtifie God in his proceedings. The Law of Moſes was not in being in the time of Job, but in the Original Copy the Law of Nature, and the common notions of Mankind. The Spirit ſtirs up theſe in this Conviction, and though the Spirit takes theſe, and works by the excitation of natural Light, yet he brings in alſo another light, becauſe the chief Conviction he aims at, is the corruption of the State, not only that of corrupt Acts; the neceſſity of a Mediator, and a ſenſe of ſpiritual ſins, which cannot be wrought meerly by that light which is naturally in the mind: It ſtirs up therefore Principles already impreſs'd, and introduceth Principles not yet impreſs'd, and binds both of them on the

the Soul. For it convinceth by way of Argument, and therefore its Convictions muſt be founded on ſomewhat which the Soul knew before, or ariſe from a new Light, attended with a greater Evidence. Now the Spirit of God doth not put out Nature by the ſhining of Grace, but improve, perfect and regulate it, putting it into a right Channel, making it to ſerve the ends of Grace; ſo in this act of Conviction, he maketh the natural Knowledge ſubſervient, and rouſeth up that Knowledge which lay ruſty and uſeleſs: There's uſe of this, for God acts in a rational manner, that reaſon may be employed in this caſe; hence are his Appeals to men (Iſa. 5. 3.) of a depraved reaſon; Oh Inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and men of Judah, judge I pray you betwixt me and my Vineyard. Had reaſon no competency at all, to judge of the unprofitableneſs and the bad return the Vineyard had made to God, the Appeal had been fruitleſs; but the Appeal implies, that even natural Reaſon would have caſt the Verdict on Gods ſide. So in Conviction the Spirit doth ſtir up that natural light in the mind, and that acquired Knowledge that it hath, to be aſſiſtant in this work.

Thirdly, The Spirit doth irradiate and enlighten the mind, and practical Judgment: The Spirit brings a man to belief of the Truth in the Word, by clear and undeniable reaſon, and by rectifying and elevating the underſtanding. As he makes the Characters written upon the heart legible, ſo he enlightens the dimm mind, and ſnuffs the Candle of the Lord, that they may be read, Prov. 20. 27. that thereby the inward parts of the belly may be ſearched. In this regard he is called a Spirit of Bondage, not that he brings us into Bondage, but as he opens the Curtain of ſin, and the blind eye, to ſee the Bondage ſin hath brought it into. The Truths of God in the Word have an objective light, and the Spirit doth enlighten the mind, not by diſcovering new notions, and giving new objects of Knowledge only, but by creating a dogmatical Faith, and an aſſent unto thoſe Principles, and helping us to receive right and diſtinct notions of thoſe things which are repreſented. And it is ſuch a Faith which the Spirit in this work doth create, which is not only apprehenſive, but quietative; it not only apprehends the things themſelves, but the Soul reſts in them for truth; not that they are grounds of Comfort in themſelves, but doth clearly aſſent to them for truth, and own them and fully aſſent unto them: There is a Faith of aſſent common to men, but the Spirit quickens this Faith in Conviction, that it hath a fuller proſpect of theſe things, which he doth diſcover, which were weakly and imperfectly aſſented to before; and the Soul weighs theſe particulars which the Spirit ſets before it, more ſeriouſly than ever it did. This is a neceſſary work of the Spirit, for a ſtupified Judgment is a barr to any recovery; but when the light of the Word and the light of the Mind meet together, the iſſue is, a full diſcovery of the moats in the Soul, and Sink in the Heart.

Fourthly, The Spirit excites and actuates the Conſcience: Sets the Conſcience to ſmite, as David's heart ſmote him, upon the Spirits touch by the Miniſtry of Nathan: Moſt men know ſuch and ſuch actions to be ſinful, they know Unbelief to be a damning ſin, God to be a righteous God, Chriſt the only Saviour; yet how few know theſe things convincingly, with an Application of them to the Conſcience! how few have the deſcent from the ſpeculative to the practical Judgment, to be affected with them, and with their own deplorable State! The Spirit, as it increaſeth the light, it doth ſharpen this faculty of Conſcience, for ſelf-reflection: Direct beams are darted in to ſhew the Object, and an edge is put upon the faculty to do its Office. Light is ſhot in upon the underſtanding by the Spirit in the Word, and fire is ſtruck upon the Conſcience; ſuitable paſſions are raiſed in the heart by that light in the mind. As the Spirit of Adoption giveth efficacy to the Goſpel, in affecting the Soul with Righteouſneſs; ſo as he is a Spirit of Bondage, he giveth efficacy to the Law to affect the Conſcience with Guilt, he lets looſe the natural activity of Conſcience, he arms it with a renewed Commiſſion, he opens the mouth of this Herald of God, and makes it denounce dreadful things; he enlargeth it to take in the Impreſſions of Wrath, and tranſmit them to all parts of the man; he reviveth the guilt, and rouſeth the Conſcience, the Serpent in the Boſom ariſeth and hiſſeth, and Conſcience in man being awaken'd, laſhes him: Thus Sin being revived, and Conſcience awakened, they lay the Soul flat and breathleſs; Sin revived and I died. Guilt is ſo ſtrongly reflected, that a man doth not ſimply underſtand himſelf to be in a damnable ſtate, but feels in himſelf the filthineſs and miſery of that State, and becometh a Judge and Witneſs againſt himſelf, acknowledging the Righteouſneſs of God, and the Unrighteouſneſs of his Nature. Conſcience thus actuated by the Spirit, pleads ſharply from the Law againſt the Soul, (as a Kings Attorney doth againſt a Priſoner at the Bar) takes off all Excuſes, beats it off from all Apologies made in its defence, and reproacheth him for it, Job 27. 6. It brings not only the ſubſtance of ſin, but the circumſtances to mind, and what Rebukes it ſelf gave before to hinder the Commiſſion: Juſt as it will at the laſt day deliver thoſe Truths that were ſuppreſt and clouded in Unrighteouſneſs, and uſher them in as ſo many ſpeaking Witneſſes; the Memory is alſo revived to aſſiſt Conſcience in this work. Now the Spirit only can excite Conſcience: Though Conſcience hath a power to judge, yet it muſt have a light to judge by; and becauſe it is ſleepy and dull, it muſt be ſoundly rouſed: And therefore there is the ſame need that the Spirit ſhould ſet Conſcience right, as any other faculty, becauſe that is depraved as well as the underſtanding is darkened, and the will perverted.

Fifthly, The Spirit brings forgotten ſins to mind, and preſſeth them upon the Conſcience. As the Samaritan Woman concludes Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, becauſe he told her all that ever ſhe had done, Joh. 4. 29. So the renewing upon us the ſenſe of all that ever we did, is an evidence of the Spirits work; when old forgotten ſins are brought to light in the mind, it is an effect of Gods Spirit, who is greater than our Hearts, and knoweth all things. Thus the Spirit doth ſet in order youthful ſins in old age, makes men to poſſeſs the ſins of their Youth, as in Job; and gathers Iniquities laid in the duſt together, upon the beating the Drum of Conſcience, and fills the Soul with the ſenſe and conſideration of them, and brings in an old ſcore of ſin with many Items: Item, Such a time a Contempt of God, ſuch a time a ſpeculative Wickedneſs, ſuch a time a quenching of the Spirit, profane Speech, ſwarms of vain Thoughts and vile Luſts; the many aggravations of ſin, againſt Mercies, in the very Face of God, when a Pardon was offered, Rebellion againſt the light of Conſcience, ſtifling holy Motions, breaking the bonds of Love, the Influence our ſins had upon others, Principles and root of ſin, Enmity to God, ſecret riſing of heart againſt the purity of the Law; thus it brings ſins that were forgotten, and ſets them home, Pſal. 119. 59. I conſidered my wayes: He counted his wayes and his ſins one by one, as the word there ſignifies, as much as he could, and as the Spirit of God directed; though many times the Spirit layes one ſin cloſeſt, yet all the reſt are brought in, and ſeverally charged. As in a Peſtilent Diſeaſe, all the humours wherewith the Body was troubled before run into that Infectious Diſeaſe: And the Soul is made to read thoſe ſins as plainly, as if they had been Commited but the day before. A wicked man knoweth not whither he goeth, 1 John 2. 11. he hath no clear Knowledge of the nature of ſin, and the dreadfulneſs of Wrath: But the Spirit in this work makes us not only ſee ſin, but giveth an intuitive Knowledge of it, draws the Vail from the Face of ſin, waſheth off its Varniſh, pulls away its fine dreſs and attire, and preſents it as the greateſt evil, and in its moſt Æthiopian deformity.

Sixthly, The Spirit fixeth the ſenſe of the moſt terrible Attributes of God upon the Soul in this work: His Juſtice, Eternity, Holineſs are brandiſhed againſt him, and Mercy ſeems ſtanding aloof from him; he makes him look upon Juſtice incenſed, Holineſs diſparaged, Mercy ſlighted, Power preparing a Tophet of Wrath, and kindling it againſt it, and Eternity perpetuating the puniſhpuniſhment, and hides all Conſiderations of God that might give hope of relief. Upon theſe perfections of God which breath terror againſt the ſins of men, is Conviction founded. Men naturally have a greater ſenſe of Gods Mercy, than any other Attributes, becauſe Mercy and Patience are more continually expoſed to their view, in the warm Sun, influences of Heaven, fruitful Showers, and kindly Proviſions, which multiply the notion of his Mercy in the Minds of men; and from thoſe Ideas, fortified by theſe common works of Kindneſs; and from ſelf-love in mens breaſts, doth ariſe mens confidence and preſumption in the Mercy of God. And therefore the ſoul is never ſoundly convinced of its own natural ſtate, till ſelf-love be ſhaken, and the other Attributes of God ſeriouſly pondered and owned. When the ſoul is in a dead ſleep, there is no conſideration of Juſtice; and when awakened by the Law, without the ſight of the Goſpel, and a diſcovery of his Mercy in Chriſt, like Adam and Eve the ſoul runs from Gods preſence, and every Voice of God is terrible; and finding himſelf culpable, and ſeeing nothing but a ſea of ſin, he fears the Juſtice of God, that the Sovereign Judge of all the World will bring him to a ſpeedy account, and inflict that death that he knows himſelf worthy of. Now the conſideration of theſe Attributes have in the holieſt men, alwayes cauſed in them reflections on their Iniquities; hence holy men in Scripture, upon ſome Apparition of God, or an Angel, were full of apprehenſions of Gods Holineſs and their own Impurity, which poſſeſſed them with expectations of death, when they looked upon God as a conſuming Fire, and themſelves as dry Stubble; Ezek. 3. 6. Judg. 13. 22. Iſa. 6. 6.

Seventhly, The Spirit of God removes in this work of Conviction, all the former ſupports which the Soul leaned upon. It blows up all the little Caſtles of defence, puffs them away as Chaff, makes Conſcience work through all the Plaiſters laid on to aſſwage the grief, layes the Soul naked without any covering. The heart of man being ſtuft with ſelf-love frames a multitude of miſerable Comforters as weak as Adams fig-leaves; but when the Spirit ariſeth in the Miniſtry of the Law, he tears all thoſe Coverings, nonpluſſes all thoſe ſubtil evaſions, breaks all thoſe props and crutches in pieces, and caſts down the Soul before the foot of God's righteous Judgment, that it dares not caſt a glance, a loving look towards that Sodom which God hath fired; knocks off the hands from all thoſe things whereby men would compound with God and their guilty Conſciences; all the ſtrong reaſonings for the Life of their luſts, and the preſumptuous arguings for the Salvation of their Souls, fall before the Battery of the Word, which like an Engine playes againſt the high-built and pleaſant Imaginations. He pulls up the Foundation of their own Righteouſneſs, ſtrips it of its painted Garment, and makes them look upon their pretended beauties as loathſome deformities. When ſin revives by the Commandment, the ſinner dies in the former opinion he had of himſelf: The ſentence of death in himſelf, is attended with death in all his comforts. And upon this account afflictions are mighty helpful to this work, when the Spirit ſets in with them; when the ſupports of Sin are drawn away, the evil of ſin is more ſeen, which was not obſerved by men in the midſt of their Wealth and Pleaſure; when he holds them in Afflictions, then he ſhews them their work and their tranſgreſſion, wherein they have exceeded, he openeth their ear alſo to diſcipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity, Job 36. 8, 9, 10. On this account God takes Afflictions as the proper ſeaſon to carry on this convincing work. For the Rod puts life into the Word, and makes men look inward to their Conſciences, and outward to their Actions. When their former ſupports are pulled down about their ears, and Conſcience is quickned by the Spirit, then is the time for it to ſhew it's Commiſſion; whereas in the hurry of Pleaſures, it was wholly ſilent. And while the Spirit doth arm Conſcience againſt a man, he doth ſuſpend the force and fury of his luſts, which before ſtopt the mouth of it.

Eighthly, The Spirit makes the Soul intent upon the conſideration of its Sin, and thoſe evidences which are brought in againſt it. (1) Up-

(1.) Upon the Conſideration of it's ſin. The thoughts of his ſin haunt him like ſo many Ghoſts, and Conſcience, like Zippora to Moſes, flies in his Face; not once, but with a repetition, A bloody Husband haſt thou been unto me. It giveth no reſpite, every thought is a particular Sting; wherever he looks, ſin ſtares upon him; and wherever he is, or moves, Conſcience is with him, thundering in his ears the Curſes of the Law, and flaſhing in his face the Fire of Hell, and preſenting the black Scroll to his conſideration: his ſin is ever before him, which Job calls, chap. 13. 27. a putting his feet in the Stocks. He cannot move, but he feels the ſmart of his wounds at every motion. The Spirit ſeals Inſtruction, he ſets ſuch a brand upon the Conſcience, that all the Art of men cannot raſe it out; 'tis held in by the Law, Rom. 7. 6. and filled with bitterneſs, Job 9. 18. The Spirit ſtakes him down, and points him to his ſins, Lo theſe are thy ſins, and theſe will be thy Plagues without a Converſion. He will not let him take one ſweet draught, nor a mouth-full of cool Air; he fixeth his eyes upon ſin with ſorrow, as much as his eyes were before upon it with joy. The ſoul had heard a thouſand times of its Lying, Swearing, Drunkenneſs, uncleanneſs and other wickedneſſes; the neceſſity of Converſion, the miſery of Hell, and the Pleaſures of Heaven; but all were vaniſhing ſounds, till the Spirit ſounds the Trumpet of the Law, and fixeth Truths upon the Conſcience, and maketh Reaſon perform its Office, then he holds the eyes waking, Pſal. 77. 4. and the Soul cannot ſpeak of any thing but its trouble. For as the Spirit brings to remembrance the Promiſes of Chriſt, and fixeth them as a ground of Faith, brings to remembrance the Precepts of Chriſt, and ſettleth them upon the ſoul as a ground of Obedience; ſo as a Spirit of Bondage he brings the Threatnings of the Law, and leaves the ſtamp of them upon us, that we cannot look off from them; inlays the Law in the Heart as a Law of Death, as in Converſion and Faith it is engraven as a Law of Life. Thus Chriſt dealt with Paul, Acts 9. 4. tells him of his perſecuting, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? When Paul would know who it was that ſpoke to him, verſ. 5. I am Jeſus of Nazareth; yet holds his eyes ſtill upon his ſin, Jeſus of Nazareth whom thou perſecuteſt. Theſe conſiderations break in like a deluge on the ſoul, ſo that none can ſtop them, and they attend the Perſon at his Bed and Table, and Shop and Walk, and they incorporate themſelves with him. And the Spirit

(2.) Doth follow the Soul with one word after another, and preſſeth, and urgeth more and more that which may make a thorough Conviction. The Word to natural men is like a flaſh of Lightning, that ſcareth and vaniſheth; 'tis like an Arrow ſhot againſt a brazen Wall, that immediately falls down again; it's a Glaſs wherein a man ſeeth his face, and quickly forgets his own Phyſiognomy. But the Spirit in this work holds the Glaſs before the face, preſſeth upon the ſoul the pure interpretation, the ſenſe and meaning of the Law, drives it deep, like a Nail that cannot be pulled out, doth many times providentially guide a man to thoſe places of Scripture that ſharpen the Conviction, and rend the ſoul wider, as a torn Garment is by every nail that catches hold of it; and never leaves it till he brings it to ſubſcribe, I am the man whoſe name is written here, I am the man who is meant in this Curſe. But then,

Ninthly, The Spirit ſprings up fears in the Soul, at the conſideration of this ſtate. Fears, ſo far as they are not ſinful, are the work of the Spirit, as a Spirit of Bondage; he concludes it under a ſtate of unbelief, makes it underſtand the intolerableneſs and duration of its miſery in that ſtate, puts the queſtion to it, whether it can dwell with everlaſting burnings. The Spirit preſents it with a pure Law, a righteous Judge, and a deſerved Wrath; now it is natural for any man under the juſt ſentence of the Law, for a Capital Crime, to be full of dread. There is Fire and Thunder in the particular Application of the Law, as there was in the firſt delivery of it on Mount Sinai: And ſince the tranſgreſſion of the Law, there is nothing but death, horrour, and the Curſes of it, ready to ſeize upon the Soul: It may well ſet the holieſt men, when they examine themſelves by it, on trembling, as Moſes did at the delivery of it, Heb. 12. 21. And indeed it is impoſſible for the Spirit to act in an ordinary way, but according to the nature of that word which is preſented to the mind. If a Promiſe be applyed, the proper conſequent of that is Comfort; if a Threatning be impreſt upon the mind, the proper conſequent of that is Terrour; if a Precept, the immediate operation of that is Obedience: Therefore the Spirit can be no other but a Spirit of Bondage, exciting troubles in the ſoul, as it works by the Law, becauſe there is no Promiſe of reward in that, but to thoſe that perfectly obey. If the Law met with a pure heart, free from all taint of ſin, the Spirit would engender Comfort by it; but ſince there are deep ſpots in the hearts and natures of all men, God by the Law only perſwades them of the truth of that; and it is impoſſible that from the Law alone any thing ſhould ariſe, but what is ſlaviſh. If the Spirit ſpeak no other word but the Law, it can produce nothing but Terrour and Condemnation. What Terrours muſt then ſeize upon the ſpirits of men, and what diſtreſſes be rooted in their ſouls, when they conſider themſelves cut off from all hopes of mercy by the Law, having broken it, and no Promiſe giving any ground of Comfort, but a Curſe pronounced for the violation of it? And how ſevere that is, you may ſee, Gal. 3. 10. Curſed is every one that continueth not in every thing to do it. Now when a man ſeeth he hath no title to Heaven in regard of the Curſe, no diſpoſition to Heaven in regard of his Nature, and that the Curſe of the Law is his right before the legal Bar, and beholds the ſparklings of wrath without any Cloud to ſhelter him; can a man ſee this without ſelf-condemning, and a crying out, I am undone, I am undone? When Conſcience is thus awakened, Sin thus preſented, the Law thus manifeſted, and the Soul held down to the conſideration of all, it is as impoſſible it can be without inward Convulſions, as the Ground without Earth-quakes which hath air in its bowels without any vent. This Thunder from Sinai raiſeth nothing elſe but blackneſs and darkneſs, and ſtorms in the Region of the ſoul.

Laſtly, The Spirit in a ſaving Conviction brings the Soul after this wounding to a ſelf-debaſing and a humiliation. Man is the moſt backward in the world to the charging guilt upon himſelf, he is more skilful at Self-excuſes than Self-indictments; but the Spirit brings the ſoul to comply with the end of the miniſtration of the Law, which is, That every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the World become guilty before God, Rom. 3. 19. By this Revelation of the ſecrets of the Heart, and the urgency of Conſcience, the overpowering work of the Spirit, the ſoul makes a poſitive Concluſion againſt it ſelf, to the glory of God: 1 Cor. 14. 25. Thus by ſharpening his Arrows in the hearts of his Enemies, Pſal. 45. 5. he makes his Enemies fall under him, in an acknowledgment of his Righteouſneſs and Power, and the unlikeneſs of their hearts to the purity of the Law; not extenuating the guilt, but loading themſelves with it, to a ſelf-abhorrence, abhorring themſelves in duſt and aſhes, counting themſelves as dead dogs, to violate ſo holy, righteous, juſt and good a Law; and turning all their ſelf-righteouſneſs to ſhame, heartily wiſhing thoſe ſins which gaul them, had never been committed. And after this, when the Goſpel is preſented, the ſoul enters into debates with it ſelf, and makes a judicious compariſon between the firſt Covenant, and Condemnation by that, and the ſecond Covenant, and Life by that: Here are Flames of Wrath, and there are Rivers of Joy; here is a Lake that burns, there is a Paradiſe that refreſheth; here is a flying Roll full of Curſes which will ſeize upon me, there is a rich Goſpel, full of Bleſſings, that is offered to me; here's Death to ſinners that will not have God to reign over them, there's Life to Believers that ſubmit with the Obedience of Faith: If I ſin while I live, I muſt periſh when I die; I muſt be ſaved by Grace, or be puniſhed by Wrath; and ſhall I ſin away my hopes, to fall into a miſerable Eternity? ſhall I ſin my ſelf to death, when the Promiſe of Grace is freely made to me, in order to my ſalvation? Thus the ſoul is brought to a ſenſe of ſin by the Law, and the inſufficiency of the Creature, and then, welcome Chriſt, Chriſt, and Goſpel, and Covenant, and Promiſes of Grace; welcome the Yoke of Chriſt: And when it cometh to this, then Conviction ends, hath its perfect Work, concluding in a thorough Converſion, and Acceptance of Chriſt. The

IV. Fourth thing. What Sins, or what in ſin the Spirit doth chiefly convince of? The Conviction by any other cauſe is partial, it's but half baked, roaſt on one ſide, and raw on the other; the Spirit's Conviction is univerſal; he holds a right Rule to the crooked heart; he meaſures all the dimenſions of the ſoul, and of ſin in it, conſiders Root and Branch, Leaves and Fruit: As the Spirit in a good man mortifies all ſin, cleanſes from all ſin, ſo in this work he diſcovers all ſin.

Firſt, The Spirit uſually ſingles out ſome one ſin at the firſt to ſet home upon the Soul. Sometimes ſome baſe unworthy action, ſome blaſphemous word, ſome diſparaging thought of God, ſome Captain and Maſter-ſin, which is firſt brought out to face the ſoul, and preſented in its hideous ſhape. As Crucifying the Saviour of the World was charged by Peter upon the Jews, Act. 2. Fornication upon the Woman of Samaria by Chriſt, John 4. 18. As the Spirit of Adoption in working Aſſurance evidenceth to the ſoul ſome one particular Grace which is wrought in the ſoul, whereby he may be able to judge of his ſtate, ſo, as a Spirit of Bondage he preſſeth ſome particular ſin at firſt, whereby a man may judge of his deplorable Condition. Some one ſin the Spirit takes hold of, to begin this work of Conviction. But though one ſin chiefly ſticks in the Conſcience at firſt, yet in the Spirits work all others do ruſh in afterwards to have their ſhare. When one Bee cometh forth and ſtings one that hath diſturbed the Hive, the reſt come out to revenge the quarrel; or when one Maſtiff ſets upon a Paſſenger, all the reſt will come barking in. The guilt of one ſin is let looſe upon the Conſcience; not that the work ends here, (for then the ſoul might be loſt,) but this is an Introduction. Judas's thought, dwelt only upon one ſin, Mat. 27. 4. betraying innocent blood, that did affect him, but he never ſearched further into the Kennel, never into the depravation of his Nature. But the Spirit begins at one, and leads the ſoul from Chamber to Chamber, from Luſt to Luſt, till it hath viewed the whole Den by degrees; for he doth not ſhew all at once, that the ſoul for whom he hath kind thoughts, may not fail before him.

Secondly, The Spirit uſually convinceth the Soul firſt of groſs ſins: He begins with theſe, becauſe they are more legible and obvious by natural light, which of it ſelf condemns them, and ſets the ſoul ſpeechleſs. As in the Siege of a Town, Batteries are planted againſt that part of it which is weakeſt. Sins in the Converſation are more viſible than thoſe that lie ſecret in the heart; other ſins are obſcured by theſe outward ones, as Stars are by a bigger light, and a little ſpot by a greater ſtain: Theſe are more viſible to the inward ſenſes, and more eaſily read by Conſcience, by Principles of Reaſon which riſe up in accuſation of them. David's Murther and Adultery firſt affected his Conſcience by Nathan's Miniſtry, but in the progreſs he complains of his Hypocriſie, Pſal. 51. 10. Of thoſe ſins which poured in their ſtreams to the increaſing that River, thoſe Auxiliaries, which had contributed their aſſiſtance to maintain his Heart in its hardneſs for that ſin. As in Thankfulneſs one great Mercy appears, but when that is diſſected, the whole train of Mercies appear; ſo in Conviction one groſs ſin firſt ſhews it ſelf, and when that is diſcerned, the whole litter comes in view. Chriſt rouſeth Paul for his Perſecution firſt, but after, it ſpread further on his Conſcience; for he acknowledges himſelf not only a Perſecutor, but a Blaſphemer and Injurious. The Spirit holds the Conſcience to the viſible Letter of the Law, before he applies the inviſible Spirit of it to the Heart, and affects the heart with that which is biggeſt, becauſe of its nearneſs, rather than others, which thô as bad or worſe, ſeem leſs by reaſon of their remoteneſs.

Thirdly, The Spirit from thence proceedeth to the Conviction of the boſome ſin.

All men worſhip ſome Golden Calf, ſet up by Education, Cuſtom, natural Inclination, or the like; and while a Dalilah lies in the Boſom and engroſſeth the Affections, the Soul cannot be ſet with its Love upon God; and if the Heart be diſſaffected to this, the others are more eaſily hated: When a General is taken, the Army runs; this is the great ſtream, others but Rivulets which bring ſupply. The diſaffecting the Soul to this, facilitates the remaining work, becauſe this is the ſtrongeſt Chain wherein the Devil holds a man, the main Fort. The Spirit fights againſt the lighter parties that come forth, but chiefly againſt that which hath been the great Commander of all the other forces againſt God, and the greateſt Confidence of the Devil: As a wiſe General directs his force againſt the ſtouteſt Body, wherein the ſtrength of the Enemy conſiſts, when that's worſted, the Arms preſently fall out of the hands of the reſt. Other ſins are as the ſtraglers of an Army, by the routing of which the Victory is not obtained, but by the ſhattering the main body. The Spirit doth chiefly convince of this boſom ſin. Violence was the Souldiers, Extortion was the Publicans ſin, and the Spirit directs John Baptiſt againſt theſe; Hypocriſie was the darling Iniquity of the Phariſees, Chriſt plants his battery moſt againſt this: Paul in his whole Progreſs after Converſion, abhors moſt his Perſecution. As Sanctification is a cleanſing a man from his Iniquity, ſo is a Conviction of the Spirit, a diſcovering to a man his proper Iniquity, Pſal. 18. 21.

Fourthly, Thence the Spirit directs the Soul to a ſight of its Corruption by nature; opens the root of bitterneſs, makes us ſmell the Sink of ſin, diſcovers the Dunghill whence all theſe little Serpents derived their life and ſtrength, ſhews us the rotten Coar as well as the worm-eaten skin; That the nature of the perſon lies in wickedneſſe, as a Mole in the Earth, or a Carkaſs in putrefaction, 1 Joh. 5. 19. all under ſin, no good ſpring in the Heart; that there is a poyſon in the Heart that taints every work of the Hand, Imagination, Fancy, Thoughts of the Mind, and Motions of the Will. He brings a man from the Chamber of outward to the Cloſet of inward ſins, 'till he arriveth to the large room of Nature; bids him ſee if he can find out one clean corner in the Heart, and ſo conducts him to the firſt ſin of Adam, makes him behold the firſt Fountain whence all iſſued; and all little enough to make the proud heart ſtoop to God: He makes him conſider he is deeply concerned in that firſt ſin, though ſo many revolutions of years have paſſed; this makes a man vile in his own eyes, that he cannot look upon himſelf, but with confuſion and an univerſal bluſh. God looks to this ſin of Nature as the ground of Puniſhment, Gen. 6. 5, 6. The imagination of the Heart was only evil, and therefore it repented God that he made Man on the Earth: Therefore the Spirit doth affect moſt with this in Conviction. As Chriſt came to cure the wound of nature, ſo the Spirit ſhews the impurity of nature in order to that cure, he would not elſe act upon the Foundation Chriſt had laid. He is ſent to convince men of their need of Chriſt, therefore of that which layes men under the greateſt neceſſity of Chriſt, which is the violation of the firſt Covenant, and the evil conſequents of it. As the Spirit in Mortification ſtrikes to the root of ſin, ſo in Conviction he digs to it; as in Sanctification he cleanſes from the ſink of ſin, ſo in Conviction he ſhews it. Chriſt in his Diſcourſe with Nicodemus, lays this open to him, who thought the Doctrine of the neceſſity of Regeneration a ſtrange kind of Diſcourſe, and muſt needs think ſo, 'till he underſtood, Joh. 3. 6. That that which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh: That Nature was univerſally depraved. David begins with a ſenſe of his Adultery in his Conviction, but traceth up his ſin to the Spring, his natural Conception, Pſal. 51. 5. He followeth the young Cubs to the old ones Den, where he found ſins mark upon every Member at his firſt formation. If the Spirit did not convince of this, he did little or nothing to the purpoſe: for as long as we think there is any good in us, we ſhall depend upon it, and never goe to to Chriſt. But when we ſee the running Iſſue of Nature, as well as the outflowings flowings of nature, then we ſhall with open arms fly to him. To be ignorant of this, and complain of other ſins, is a ſign of Conſcience but half awakned. This is the proper work of the Spirit, and it cannot be done without this: the branches and fruit are viſible, ſo are the Beams and Rafters of a houſe; but the Root and Foundation lyes under ground. The Spirit ſhews this corruption of nature not by a glimmering but clear light, not only ſhews a man that he is fallen, but makes him ſee the Heavens in their Glory from whence he fell, Hell in its miſery to which he fell: He affects him with his Nature, as the ſeminary of all ſin, as a Womb to prepare and ripen ſin, 'till a ſuitable Temptation is offered to give birth to it.

Fifthly, The Spirit convinceth of the evil nature of ſin; and this is a neceſſary work of the Spirit. As in ſtriving againſt it, the renewed Soul quarrels with it as it is ſin, ſo in a through Conviction the Spirit doth unmask it as it is ſin; he preſents it under thoſe conſiderations upon which the Soul is to fight againſt it; he evidenceth it ſenſibly to be Enmity to God, to his Eſſence, Attributes, his Law, turning the back upon God with the greateſt ſcorn, and lifting up the heel againſt him, Jer. 32. 33. endeavouring to deſpoil God of his Government, (whence Sinners are ſaid to be without God in the World,) caſting the Holy Law behind their backs, preferring a dirty Creature before the Creator, a baſe Luſt before a bleſſed Jeſus. He doth evidence every ſin to be Idolatry, an implicite adoration of Satan; Ingratitude, becauſe our Mercies are received after our Lives were forfeited; Theft, in Robbing God of that Reverence that is due to him, and the Revenues of his Glory; Unbelief, not believing his Promiſes whereby he allures, nor his Threatnings whereby he ſcares; Unfaithfulneſs in breach of Covenant, and abundance more bound up in the Womb of ſin; this the Spirit doth convince a man is in the nature of ſin, in every ſin. Now the Spirit ſhews ſin to be an Injury to a gracious God, Impurity, Diſingenuity againſt a Holy God, Diſloyalty to our ſupream Lord, a breach of a holy and righteous Law, a ſtab to the Heart of Chriſt, a ſhedding the beſt Blood that ever was, and ſuch a hainous thing as is not to be remitted without the Blood of God. As the Spirits ſecond Conviction of the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt, is as it is the expiating cauſe of the ſin of man; ſo his firſt diſcovery of ſin is, as it appears to be the occaſion of the Death of Chriſt. Without this Conviction of the evil nature of ſin, the Spirit is not like to attain its end; for there cannot be a Converſion, 'till a man be ſenſible of what ſin is in its own Nature, averſion from God, alienation and contrariety to him.

Sixthly, The Spirit doth convince of the filthineſs and Pollution of ſin. Sin is the contagion of the Soul, the univerſal ſtain of Nature, nothing but Pollution ſucceeded in the place of original Purity. The Scripture doth ſet forth ſin to us under all the vileſt terms, calls it an Æthiopian blackneſs, Spots, Mire, Dirt, Dung, Plague, Ulcer, Sore. As there is a ſaltneſs in every drop of water in the Sea, ſo there is a filthineſs in every action of ſin. The Spirit diſcovers the naughtineſs of the Heart, and the naſtineſs of Luſts, being more loathſom than Toads, and Infectious than Plagues: Iſa. 57. 20. The wicked mans heart is like the Sea, caſting up Mire and Dirt. The Spirit in this work, doth (as it were) ſpread Dung in the Face of the Sinner, he ſhews what Slime and Frogs it hath left behind in every part it hath touched, that he may feel as well as ſee the loathſomneſs of it. When the Spirit cometh thus as a Judge into the Soul, though we ſeem to be waſhed with Snow-water, and our hands appear clean, yet we ſhall be as plunged in a Ditch, that our own Cloaths will abhor us *: Then a man ſees himſelf bemired from head too foot, like one over head and ears in a Common-ſhoar. By ſeeing Original ſin, we ſee the defilement of it, how it hath infected the whole nature; and that humane Nature is not like a River to purifie it ſelf, but its Mud is encreaſed rather than diminiſhed. If the Spirit ſhould ſtir up all the ſtench of ſin, and unmask all its uglineſs, without making any further Progreſs, utter Deſpair, Fury, Confuſion,

on, Self-hatred would be the effect of it. The Spirit in this work muſt needs diſcover this filthineſs, if he attain his end in it. For as the Soul in ſanctification is to purge out ſin by the ſtrength of the Spirit, ſo it is neceſſary by Conviction it ſhould ſee the filth of that that is to be purged out, as an Incentive to cleanſe it. No ſoul will hate it, no ſoul will move its hand to its expulſion, till it be ſtript of its painted colours, till it be ſhewn in its native blackneſs, till the Serpent be ſtript of his skin, and manifeſted in the Venom and Poyſon of its nature. Cain ſaw his ſin in the wrathful effects, as it was not forgiven, but not in the polluting effect, as the Blood of his Brother had defiled his Conſcience. When we ſee the Guilt, it terrifieth us; and the Filth, it ſhameth us; the one makes us deſire eaſe, the other cleanſing. Without this ſight we cannot juſtifie God in his Righteouſneſs, nor admire him in his Patience, that he did not long ſince fling ſuch naſty Veſſels on the Dunghill; without a ſight of this, we can never hate ſin ſpiritually. Senſibleneſs of the wrath that is due to it, may make us fear it; but 'tis ſenſibleneſs of the filthineſs of it, that muſt make us loathe it: Both theſe are the deſigns of the Holy Spirit in Conviction, to make God appear admirable, deſirable, and Sin appear hateful. Then Seventhly, The Spirit convinceth of ſpiritual ſins; and this is the great work. It convinces of the Corruption of Nature, the nature of ſin, and the filth of ſin; but it preſſeth moſt upon ſpiritual ſins, the firſt motions, ſelf-conceit of our own worth, Pride againſt God, Unbelief, and the like. Conſcience hath a natural edge, to wound a man for thoſe ſins which render a man inexcuſable by the light of Nature; but ſome ſins lye remote out of ſight, as ſpiritual wickedneſs, in the high places of Underſtanding, Will and Affections, yea and of Conſcience it ſelf; a clearer Light and a more piercing Principle is requiſite for the diſcovery of theſe. Drunkenneſs, Murther, Luxury, Theft, &c. are ſins condemned by the general conſent of Nature; the works of the viſibly defiled Fleſh are manifeſt, but the works of refined Fleſh lye cloſer in the inward corner, and are not ſo eaſily diſcovered, thô there is a greater defilement in theſe than men commonly imagine. Other ſins diſgrace us more in the eye of men, and theſe defile us more in the eye of God. The Soul, which ought to be a living Temple for God, is defiled by theſe ſins, which is as if the Throne of a Prince ſhould be beſmeared with dung. That's worſe in the eye of God, which conſiſts in a conformity to the Devil, Gods greateſt Enemy, than that which conſiſts in a conformity to the brutiſh Creature, as ſins of the fleſh are. They are the ſtrength of ſin, the Heart and Life of the body of death, the main Fort, the other ſins are but the Out-works; the great end of the Spirit is to convince of theſe: the Outworks muſt be firſt taken, therefore groſs ſins muſt be firſt known; yet there's no hopes of conqueſt while the main ſtrength remains inviſible. As Sanctification begins at the ſins of the fleſh, but grows up to a cleanſing from ſpiritual ſins, ſo muſt a ſenſe of ſin in order to ſanctification ſail the ſame courſe. Theſe being the ſubjects of the Spirits ſanctification, as that wherein the Enemies chief ſtrength lies, are the ſubject of Conviction too; and herein conſiſts the ſpirituality of Conviction. As the ſtrength of an Eye appears in diſcovering the ſpots in the Sun, which lye covered with a rich Robe of light, ſo the ſtrength of Conviction in the ſpirituality of it is diſcerned in the Eyes diſcovering the ſtains in the heart, which are covered with a beautiful Cloak of outward Morality. When Sciences are learned, the Rudiments and more obvious Principles are known before the Myſteries are underſtood, and men grow up from a common to an abſtruſe knowledge: ſo the Spirit leads us from a ſight and ſenſe of more viſible, till it dives at length to the ſecrets of ſin, to the deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs in the Spiritual Antichriſt working in the ſoul: no ſpiritual Conviction without a Conviction of ſpiritual ſins. A Natural man may by natural Conſcience be convinced of great ſins againſt the light of Nature, as a dim

Eye

Eye can read a great Print; but ſuch are uſually moſt ſenſible of ſins againſt the ſecond Table, or more open ſins againſt the firſt; but the Spirit convinceth of the more inward imperceptible ſins, affects it with thoſe againſt both Tables. Paul was convinced not only of the ſins he acted without, as his Perſecution, but of ſins dwelling in him, ſpringing up in him, and diſcovering themſelves by their motions in him. And,

Eighthly, The Spirit convinceth the Soul of its own impotency and weakneſs. He ſhews the Sinner his filth and his chains, how Luſt brings Guilt and Slavery; how his Underſtanding is deprived of true light, and his Will of true liberty; whence there is an utter inability to make up the breach between God and the ſoul, from whence his beſt Righteouſneſs ſmells rank, and contracts a taint from that corruption which is derived from Adam unto the whole humane Nature. Men naturally glory in their own Power, they think Grace no more than walking according to the Rules of blinded Reaſon, they underſtand not the depth of their Wound, nor their weakneſs by it: Sins of infirmity they think they have, which are to Nature only like the ſcratch of a Pin, not like the ſtab of a Sword; they think their Vitals are ſound and ſtrong ſtill. But the Spirit convinceth the ſoul that her wings are broke, and her feet crippled, and her hands poſſeſt with a dead Palſey; that Man hath an univerſal impotency, ſpiritual feebleneſs, his weakneſs as incurable as his wickedneſs, that he can no more ſtrengthen himſelf than purge himſelf, Rom. 7. 15. The Spirit convinceth man, that his beſt Strength is but a ſhadow of Righteouſneſs; that as he was mutable in Righteouſneſs in Innocency, ſo ſince the Fall he is immutable to ſin, and unable to turn from it: That he is a Slave to his Luſts, held in Chains till they be knockt off, ſhut up in a Priſon that he cannot break, and under the power of a Jaylor that he cannot conquer. Without this he would think to lick himſelf whole, and never lie ſighing and ſobbing at the foot of Chriſt. Though a man naturally juſtifie himſelf, yet when the Spirit deals with him, overturns all his Props, and diſcovers him overgrown with feebleneſs as well as ſinfulneſs; he cries like Job, Chap. 9. verſ. 20, 21. If I juſtifie my ſelf, my own mouth ſhall condemn me; If I ſay, I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe: though I were perfect, yet would I not know my ſoul; I would deſpiſe my life.

Ninthly, He doth continually convince of the Conſequences and Demerits of Sin; He doth diſſect ſin, and ſhew it in its Circumſtances, and he doth convince and ſet home upon the ſoul the demerit of ſin; and (though he doth alſo propoſe the Goſpel) he ſets home that wrath which is deſerved by it: For he ſpeaks a Language quite contrary to that of the Devil to our firſt Parents, perſwading Adam that no wrath would enſue upon it; that he ſhould meet with Life in eating the forbidden Fruit. The Spirits Method is contrary to that of the Devil; Death is the Wages of every Iniquity: You ſhall be as Gods, ſaith Satan; You have made your ſelves like Devils, ſaith the Spirit; are transformed into the Devils Nature, fallen into the Devils Condemnation. The Spirit ſets home what it deſerves at the hands of God; although he doth propoſe the Goſpel, yet he affects the ſoul with what ſin hath deſerved. The

V. Fifth thing is, What the difference is between the Convictions of the Spirit by this or that Inſtrument, by Nature, Law, and Goſpel: What difference there is between the Spirits ſetting ſin before us in a way of Conviction, and Satans ſetting ſin before us, who doth intereſt himſelf ſometimes in this Conviction of ſin, when it is attended with much Terror: What the difference is between the ſenſe of ſin barely from natural Principles, and a ſenſe of ſin that is wrought by the Spirit: Then what the difference is between a Legal and an Evangelical Conviction.

(1.) Though there are ſome Beams of Candle-light in Nature, which make a diſcovery of ſome unrighteouſneſs, whence ariſe rebukes of Conſcience; yet Nature is not able to furniſh us with a full Conviction, and ſuch a one as is neceſſary for

for our Repair. Blind Nature cannot ſee the Rubbiſh, much leſs remove it; depraved Nature is not ſenſible of all its crookedneſs, much leſs can it rectifie it: It cannot hew and prepare it ſelf for the Introduction of the Image of God; the higheſt natural Improvements of our natural Faculties, cannot guide us into the cloſe Dens and Chambers of ſin, and give us a true Proſpect of the poyſonous Entrails of it. Nature may ſpring up ſome good operations in the heart, take Nature in its latitude, what a man may be in his natural ſtate, before his Converſion to Chriſt: Nature as it is propt up by the Mediation of Chriſt, and as there are ſome commendable reliques left in it, there are ſtill ſome inbred Principles which bring forth many excellent things according to their proportion; as there is vertue in the Earth ſince the Curſe of it after Man's Fall, to bring forth many excellent Plants, and medicinal Herbs. But theſe Convictions by Nature are,

First, Light and uncertain, of a ſhort duration; they are ſudden qualms, and fits upon ſome obſervation of outward Judgments. As all Judgments are ſent to make men ſenſible there is a God in the Earth, and that there are unrighteous actions that are diſpleaſing to him, upon theſe Judgments there are ſome reflections in a natural Conſcience, ſome ſenſe of God, what is due to ſin, and what deviations are from him; but they continue no longer than the cauſe that raiſed them; they are ſudden frights and ſtartings, which ſoon ſettle again; as in a ſudden fright and ſtart, Nature is ſpeedily reduced to its former temper, and the blood that was put on the ſudden into another motion, is quickly brought to its former conſiſtence: They are uſually like a Land-flood, which cauſes an inundation, but ſink not into the roots of the ſoul. Pſal. 9. 21. They are put in fear, and while they are in fear, they know themſelves to be but men. It is a work not ſo much upon the Judgment as upon the Affections, therefore it is like a fire falling upon flax, and other combuſtible matter, which flames and expires; and you ſee it's death almoſt as ſoon as it begins to live: Whereas thoſe Convictions that ariſe from the Spirit, ſettle upon the Judgment, and like a fire in a Logg of Wood, are kept alive in the ſoul, eat into the ſoul, dive into the bottom, produce ſerious and laſting Affections. Conſcience is ſtaggering and unfixed, therefore whatſoever ariſeth from it, partaketh of the uncertain nature of the cauſe. We ſhall be moveable in our affections, unleſs firſt ſtedfaſt in our judgment; until then, there can be no abounding in the work of the Lord. The Apoſtle makes one the cauſe of the other; *Be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. First a ſtedfaſtneſs in Judgment, and then a ſettlement in the affections, and then an abounding in practice. No Conviction can faſten in a rolling and unballaſted Mind; no Conviction that ariſeth from Nature. Beſides, Fear is an unwelcome paſſion; as Love is a delightful one, Nature is held longer in the Chains of Love, than in the Fetters of Fear, the one it hugs and embraceth, the other it knocks off: the whole courſe of Nature ſtrives againſt flaſhes of fear, and will not endure the object of it; not invite and encourage its ſtay, but rather is up in Arms againſt it: And upon this account thoſe Convictions that ariſe barely from natural Principles, from any thing of bare Nature, are not of long duration. Any Conviction from Nature is like the ſmart of a prick of a Pin in the fleſh, which is ſoon forgot; a Conviction by the Spirit is like the ſtab of a Sword in the heart. The Arrows of Nature are eaſily pluckt out, but God's *Arrows ſtick faſt: Nature likes not to retain any thing of God in its knowledge, Rom. 1. 28. but the Spirit imprints things, and holds them upon the ſoul, binds his Corroſive to it, that it cannot ſhake it off.

* 1 Cor. 15. 58.

* Job 6. 4.

Secondly, Convictions by Nature do at beſt but ſtand at a ſtay; they are not growing. If the Convictions by Nature do remain, yet they are not growing Convictions, they gather not ſtrength and perfection every day; if they do not decay and fall, as a ſeeming Star, into duſt and rottenneſs, yet they riſe not up into a ſtronger light, are not in a ſtate of progreſs, but are ſtinted to low meaſures: If they do ſeem bigger, it's by an external ternal addition from multiplyed cauſes, and renewed obſervation of Judgments, not from any internal Principle of an enlightned Mind. But in the Conviction of the Spirit, the Light yeſterday was as the light of a Torch, to morrow as the Moon, and ſtill riſing till it be as the Sun, which diſcovers the filthineſs and little motes of the Heart, as the Sun doth the filthineſs as well as the beauty of the Earth: And this Light will increaſe ſeven-fold, as the light of ſeven dayes put into one; Prov. 4. 18. The path of the juſt is as the ſhining light, that ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day. His path from his firſt ſtepping into any thing that tends to it, is as the ſhining Light, which ſhines more and more unto the perfect day; whereas the way of the wicked is as darkneſs; a ſudden gleam of light lighting upon him and vaniſhing, leaves his eye under more darkneſs than before. The Spirit makes a progreſs from the firſt ſtep towards Righteouſneſs, till the dawning of the day of Righteouſneſs in the ſoul. As Chriſt came not only to give life, but to give it more abundantly, Joh. 10 10. ſo the Spirit giveth not ſmall flaſhes of light in the Mind and Conſcience, but an abundant and growing light. Uſually Convictions of nature do ſtand at a ſtay; Nature will not row long againſt the ſtream, but at laſt be carried down by its force. Talents not improved, are quickly loſt, and Plants when they begin to wither, never ceaſe till quite blaſted, unleſs influenced afreſh by the Beams and Showers of Heaven.

Thirdly, Natural Convictions ariſe from ſome external cauſe, Spiritual from the Word imprinted upon the Soul: Natural Convictions are from ſome natural outward cauſe, only from the ſight of Judgments on others, or ſome perſonal Afflictions on themſelves; but the Word is the Sword of the Spirit, Epheſ. 6. 17. whereby he cuts open the ſoul: By this he did execution upon thoſe whoſe hands were red with the blood of Chriſt: Act. 2. This is always his Inſtrument to cut, though he uſeth Judgments and Afflictions as Whetſtones to ſharpen the edge, or as a Mallet to ſtrike it in the deeper. David, a moſt intelligent perſon, well skilled in natural notions, was not convinced of his ſin of Murther and Adultery by any immediate excitation of his natural Principles, or thoſe ſpiritual Notions in his mind, without the Inſtrumentality of the Word in the mouth of Nathan; that Man of Underſtanding was not ſenſible of his ſin, till Nathan came with a meſſage from God, and upon this Alarm the Spirit arms his Memory, and Conſcience, and Underſtanding, to carry on the work, 2 Sam. 12. 7, 8. The filthy Soul and the pure Word are brought together, when a ſpiritual Conviction is wrought, and it diſcovers Millions of loathſom Luſts which the dim light of Nature could never diſcern. That's the firſt thing; The difference between the Convictions of Nature and the Spirit.

(2.) There are alſo differences between Legal and Evangelical Convictions; And Firſt, In regard of the Principles whence they proceed.

1. A Legal Conviction ariſeth from a Conſideration of Gods Juſtice chiefly, an Evangelical from a ſenſe of Gods Goodneſs. A legally Convinced perſon cries out, I have exaſperated a power that is as the roaring of a Lion, a Juſtice that is as the voice of Thunder; I have provoked one that is the Sovereign Lord of Heaven and Earth, whoſe Word can tear up the Foundations of the World with as much eaſe as he eſtabliſhed them: This is the Legal Conviction. But an Evangelically convinced Perſon cries, I have incenſed a Goodneſs that's like the dropping of the dew, I have offended a God that had the deportment of a Friend, rather than that of a Sovereign. I have incurred the Anger of a Judge, ſaith a Legaliſt: I have abuſed the Tenderneſs of a Father, ſaith an Evangelically convinced perſon; O my Marble, my Iron Heart, againſt a patient, wooing God, a God of Bowels: It makes every review of Acts of Kindneſs, to be a Sting in the Conſcience; it makes ſuch a perſon miſerable by mercy, and ſcorches him with the Beams of Goodneſs; turns the Honey into a bitter Pill, and uſeth a Branch of the Balſom Tree as a Rod wherewith to laſh him. O Wretch, to run from ſo ſweet a Fountain, to rake in puddles! to ruſh into a River of Brimſtone, through a Sea of Goodneſs! What a cut is it, when Ingenuity is awaken'd, to reject a natural goodneſs, much more an Infinite goodneſs; to reject the goodneſs of a man, much more that of a God; the goodneſs of a Friend never provoked, much more the goodneſs of a God that had been ſo highly Incenſed! There is a torture of Hell in both, kindled by the Breath of the Lord; in the one by the breath of his Wrath, in the other by the breath of his Goodneſs; one is inflamed by Juſtice to a ſenſe of Rebellion, the other by Goodneſs to a ſenſe of his own vileneſs. This is that which was promiſed ſhould be in Goſpel-times, that in the latter dayes men ſhould Fear the Lord and his Goodneſs, Hoſ. 3. 5. That's a true evangelical Conviction, that ſprings from a through ſenſe of Gods goodneſs; when the goodneſs of God excites Ingenuity, as well as the Majeſty of God ſtrikes a Terror.

2. A legal Conviction ſprings from a ſenſe of Gods Power, an evangelical from a ſenſe of Gods Holineſs. Power is the relief of a Friend, and the terror of an Enemy. Faith pitcheth upon the Power of God for its eſtabliſhment, and Unbelief ſinks under the ſenſe of Gods Power with Confuſion; the Believer ſtays himſelf upon the Name of God, but the Sinner languiſheth under the conſideration of the mightineſs of that ſtroke that power can inflict: An evangelical Convict diſſolves under the ſenſe of Gods Holineſs, the other falls under the ſenſe of Gods Power; I have offended Majeſty that can puniſh me, ſaith one; I have offended Purity that would have ſanctified me, ſaith t'other. As the forgetfulneſs of Gods Power and Majeſty is the cauſe of mens ſins; we regard not how corrupt our Practices and Offerings to God are, when we conſider him not as a great King and dreadful Lord, Mal. 1. 14. As the forgetfulneſs of this is the cauſe of ſin, ſo the remembrance of his greatneſs is the cauſe of mans Reflection; but a beam of Gods Holineſs ſhining upon the underſtanding, makes a Soul more ſenſible of its droſs, than all the flames of Wrath. The Angels ſolemnly applauding of Gods Holineſs, which they cryed up in Iſaiah's hearing, Iſa. 6. 3, 5. One cryed to another, Holy, Holy, Holy is the Lord of Hoſts; caſt him down in a ſenſe of his vileneſs; Then ſaid I, woe is me, becauſe I am a man of unclean lips. The ſight of their covering their pure Faces with their wings, made him abhor, and cry out of the uncleanneſs of his Soul: He ſaw the Sun in its purity, and himſelf in his darkneſs and filthineſs. A Conviction by Wrath is like a Fire which only ſcorcheth, a Conviction by Holineſs is like that of the Sun which burns by its heat, and diſcovers Atomes by its light; the one meaſures his loathſomneſs by the Judgment of men, the other his filthineſs by the Holineſs of God: Was I made for God? did not his Holy as well as his powerful finger frame me? and am I ſo baſe as to wallow in Corruption? But,

3. Legal Conviction ariſeth only from a ſenſe of the Omniſcience of God, but an Evangelical ariſeth from a ſenſe of the diſaffection of God to ſin: The Cauſe why men ſin, is the Unbelief of Gods Omniſcience, and the cauſe why they are troubled, is a ſenſe of this Attribute, and not of Gods hatred of their ſins. The firſt Impreſſion from the edge of the Word, is, That all things are naked and open before him with whom we have to doe, Heb. 4. 13. And that ſins, even ſecret ſins, are ſet in the Light of his Countenance, Pſal. 90. 8. Men will forbear their actions of folly, when they think the eye of a grave man beholds them, but are bold to commit them when his back is turned: If a Prince be unknown behind the Hangings, when Subjects ſpeak Treaſon, they will be afraid when they diſcover he hath over-heard them; not becauſe they ſpoke it, but becauſe he heard it; they conſider it as the object of his Knowledge, and the mark of his Vengeance. A Legaliſt conſiders God only as privy to his Iniquity, the other as he is diſaffected to it; he would never be troubled for his ſin, if it never came under Gods notice, the other ſinks under it, becauſe it is the object of Gods diſpleaſure; the one ſhakes becauſe he is convinced God obſerves it, the other trembles becauſe he is ſenſible God diſapproves it.

4. A

4. A legal Conviction is a ſenſe of ſin in the Death of the Soul, an Evangelical is a ſenſe of ſin ariſing from the Death of Chriſt. One perſon ſeeth ſin in the miſery of his Soul, and the other in the Croſs of the Redeemer. The Moral Law condemns ſin, and the practice of the Ceremonial acknowledged that Condemnation; the Offerer ſaw himſelf in thoſe Sacrifices which died for him, guilty of Death; hence in the renewing of them there was *a remembrance of ſin, and the killing of them was a bond or Hand-writing, whereby they confeſſed themſelves obnoxious to the Curſe, and Debtors to Puniſhment, Coloſ. 2. 14. This was only a ſight of ſin in the Death of a Beaſt, though it typified the Death of Chriſt. An Evangelical Conviction ſeeth ſin in the ſighs and groans, cries and agonies, Suffering and Blood of the Son of God, an only Son, an Innocent Son, unſpotted as to any inherency of ſin in his perſon, only ſubmitting to the Imputation of ſin to him, and infliction of Puniſhment upon him, even to a commotion of Soul and Body. This giveth a clearer evidence of the demerit of ſin, to a full Conviction, than the whole latitude of Threatnings, or the roarings the Damned utter, or the deſtroying millions of Angels and men. This giveth ground for a full ſenſe of the inviolable Sanction of the Law, the reaſonable ſeverity of Juſtice againſt us, and the unavoidable demerit of ſin, more than thouſands of Sacrifices could diſcover to the Jews. The Voice of Chriſt's blood diſcovers more the malignity of ſin, than all men or Angels are able to expreſs. In this Glaſs doth the Spirit ſhew it, to convince the Soul in an Evangelical manner. One ſeeth ſin in the Hand-writing of Ordinances againſt him, and the other ſees it more meltingly, in the tearing and cancelling this Bond and Bill by Chriſt upon the Croſs. That's the Firſt thing, they differ in the Principles whence this ſenſe doth ariſe.

* Heb. 10. 3.

Secondly, They differ in regard of the Object of the Conviction, or matter they are convinced of.

(1.) A legal Convict accounts his Torture the greateſt evil, an Evangelical his ſin: Both indeed are burthened, the one with his Puniſhment, the other with his Deſert of it; one counts his torment hateful, the other his ſin abominable; the firſt is troubled there is not a beam of Mercy, but not troubled that he hath not a ſpark of Grace; he groans under the preſages of Damnation, but not under the want of Holineſs; he is of the Devils temper, Why doſt thou torment us? but doth not deſire to be reſtrain'd from ſin, but to be kept from torment: Cryes out as Lamech, Gen. 4. 23. I have ſlain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt; not to Gods diſhonour, no complaint of that: It is true, he hath no pleaſure in his ſin, in the remembrance of it at the preſent, not for want of Affection to it, but becauſe it is imbittered to him with the Gall in his Conſcience; the Law ſpits fire in his Face, and makes his beloved object too hot for his holding; his Allegiance to ſin is not caſt off, but at preſent only interrupted in the exerciſe. The other, the Evangelically convinced man, cryes out of his ſin as the greateſt burthen, My God I have diſhonoured, his Spirit I have grieved, his Name I have ſlighted, and his Mercy abuſed. And therefore the one, when his Rack is laid aſide, and the ſtorm in his Conſcience blown over, falls as roundly to his former Courſe as before; or if he abſtains from that ſin which was a cauſe of his ſmart, he opens his Heart for more ſpiritual, and therefore more rooted Iniquity, which breaks out into worſe: Some think Ananias and Sapphira were in the number of thoſe that had their Hearts pricked at Peter's Sermon, but their Covetouſneſs in a great meaſure remain'd in their Affections, and ended in lying againſt the Holy Ghoſt. Such lay aſide their Apparel as Players, to put on a diſguiſe that ſuits the part they are to act, but ſtrip themſelves after, to put on their old Garment again. Whereas the other that is Evangelically convinced, is more tender and careful to avoid the ſmalleſt ſlip as well as the groſſeſt, not only when his Conſcience torments, but when the heat is allayed; careful to avoid ſin in his duties, as well as in his more publick Converſation; he is afraid of the ſting of Sin, as well as of the ſting of Puniſhment; he judgeth ſin his greateſt evil, and next to that the want of Gods favourable preſence: How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, how long wilt thou hide thy face for ever? Pſal. 13. 1. But then,

(2.) A legal Convict is convinced of ſome ſin, but he is alſo conceited that he hath ſome good: An Evangelically convinced perſon is ſenſible he hath no good dwelling in his Fleſh; his Conviction is more univerſal, the other's is more limited; a legal Conviction layes a man but half dead, an evangelical layes him wholly dead; he hath no eſteem of his Sin, nor any of his Righteouſneſs. One is ſenſible of his ſin, but not of his utter inſufficiency to redeem his ſoul from everlaſting Death; the other ſees fully what poor ſtuff his own Righteouſneſs is to make a Saviour of. The Spirit, as it diſcovers the uglineſs of ſin, ſo it diſcovers the rottenneſs of that Righteouſneſs wherewith a man ſtilted himſelf up; it makes all ſeem as Graſs, and fading Flowers, and of no value. The other, like the Prodigal, thô he be ſenſible of his miſery, yet thinks to preſerve himſelf by husks. A true Convict ſeeth himſelf under the Curſe of the Law, without ability in any thing but Chriſt to take it off; he ſeeth a neceſſity to have Chriſt to deliver him, or he muſt be for ever bound; and Chriſt to raiſe him, or he is utterly loſt; whereas the other thinks he is able to raiſe himſelf. The one thinks to repair himſelf out of the Ruines of Nature, and raiſe up a Building of Righteouſneſs by materials of his own hewing; the other, like Job, abhors not only ſin, but himſelf too*; and ſpeaks not a word of that Integrity he boaſted of before. The one knows himſelf a debtor to the Law, but thinks himſelf able to do ſomething to content the Creditor, and patch up his Credit by promiſes of Reformation; he lies down in ſparks of his own kindling, wraps himſelf in a Garment of his own weaving, thinks himſelf rich by Conceits framed in his own Mint, and fancies that he is able to ſilence the clamours of the Law, and lick the wound of his Conſcience whole; as Saul thought to redeem his Credit with God by the Sacrifice of Beaſts, after he had offended in the caſe of Amalek: He makes Self a God, and idolizes his own power. This is a ſecret ſelf-pride, that runs in the Channel of the whole Nature from Adam; and as ſin is irritated by the Law, ſo theſe thoughts ſtart up by it, and make many that ſeem'd to begin to be ſpiritually convinced, to end in the fleſh: As ſin revives by the Law, ſo doth this Pride riſe up afterwards, and is the ruine of many. Hence ariſe thoſe frequent excuſes of men before they will come to a downright Confeſſion; whereas the other that is Evangelically convinced, is dead to his own Righteouſneſs, as well as his ſin, he is ſenſible he hath no activity in himſelf, unleſs Grace inſpire him with a new Principle: He performs Duties, but doth not Idolize them, puts forth his power to the utmoſt, but doth not reſt in it; he ſeeth the emptineſs of his Righteouſneſs, as well as the foulneſs of his ſin; and thinks the one as unable to deliver him from the ſtroke of Juſtice, as the other to deſerve it; and deſpairs of help and relief from the ſpring of Nature. Paul, while a Jew, was of the ſame ſtamp with his Brethren, thought to keep up his reputation with God by an external obſervation of the Law; but when the Law came in the hand of the Spirit, he dyed; ſaw, not only his damnable Condition, but the inſecurity of his ſoul upon any legal foundation, and the rottenneſs of all his former Services to bring him to Heaven: Then all his Natural and Moral Excellencies were as unvaluable as before they were amiable; they were loſs in his ſight: And to heighten his vile eſteem of them, he adds Dung, a Dung-hill Righteouſneſs, things of no account as to Juſtification; yet none more holy than Paul, by a Holineſs derived from Chriſt by the Spirit after Converſion, as none was more Moral before by the ſtrength of Nature: Thus was he dead to the Law, convinced of the Vanity of any confidence in legal Services; not that he might live to ſin, but to God, by a new power derived from Chriſt; Gal. 2. 19. for he was ſupplied with ſap from that Crucified Root. Now what was really the attainment of Paul, is ſo of every true Convert, and is the deſire

* Job 42. 6.

ſire of every Evangelically convinced Perſon. This Conceit which the Legaliſt hath of ſome good in himſelf, ariſeth from the conſideration of himſelf, compared with thoſe that defile themſelves more in ſin. A ſenſe of our own vileneſs when truly convinced, ariſeth from our conſideration of the perfection of the Law of God; for meaſuring our ſelves with the Holineſs of God, we ſee nothing at all that bears proportion to him: Morality is but as the Moon, which is glorious if compared with a Candle, but faint if compared with the Sun.

Thirdly, There are differences in regard of the Carriage of the Perſons under each of theſe works of Conviction.

(1.) Legally convinced Perſons ſnatch at Comfort, though never ſo falſe; an Evangelical Convict looks for Comfort only from the Mouth of God. The one doth not kindly own the Supremacy of God, and therefore makes not full and cloſe Addreſſes to him for healing, but ſeeks for ſhelter from every Hedge; like Saul in his melancholly to Muſick, and in his diſtreſs to the Witch of Endor; like Pharaoh to his Magicians, the charming Pleaſures of the World: he thinks by thus being in a Fools Paradiſe, by the Pleaſures of ſin to choak the ſenſe of Conſcience; take a Receipt from any unskilful hand, rather than from the Phyſician; worldly mirth, carnal advice, or at beſt he runs to Sermons, and faſts in hopes of remedy; catches at any paſſage in a Sermon to eaſe his ſoul. Sometimes he endeavours to ſtupifie his trouble by ſinful diverſion; he moves Hell for eaſe, and cries, Give me comfort, or I die: Sometimes he ſnatches a Promiſe, wherein he is in no manner concerned, and claps it on by a miſapprehenſion, and ſo charms his trouble for a time; and in this he is aſſiſted by the Devil, who is skilful in this Art; and ſo he makes a flower of Paradiſe prove Poyſon: Such wreſt the Scripture to their own deſtruction, and to allay the ſtorm is all they look for. Now an Evangelically convinced Perſon, he longs for Comfort from that Spirit which firſt impreſt the ſenſe of ſin: As he was ſtruck by the Law, ſo he will be healed by the Goſpel only. He longs for joyes, not of the World, but of Gods Salvation; his eye is fixed with Heman's, only upon the God of Salvation, Pſal. 88. 5. He will wait Gods leiſure, and take nothing but what the Word offers, examine well whether the Word belongs to him. The Spirit makes him like Chriſt, inquire into any thing that is alledged, that he be not deluded by Satan's fair pretences; he longs for healing by the Sun of Righteouſneſs, that he may come and ſcatter the darkneſs he ſits in: All the good Opinion of men concerning him, cannot give him a grain of true contentment; he is willing to do any thing, with the Jaylor, for the ſaving his ſoul; Sirs, what muſt I do to be ſaved? Reſolved to undergo the hardeſt conditions preſcribed by the Word of God; but he knows all the true ſpring of Comfort is the Blood of Chriſt, the Covenant of Grace, the Promiſes ſealed by that Blood, and a ſound and ſubſtantial Faith in them; and till Milk ſpout from theſe Breaſts into his mouth, he will not be contented; he is for no other Peace, but that which is the fruit of Gods lips: whereas the other is ſatisfied with a ſlight Anſwer, warms himſelf by his own ſparks, drinks of any puddle, ſo he may but quench his enflamed Bowels, and regards not Faith in Chriſt: Such coolers make Men go on more reſolutely in the wayes of Death afterwards, ſince they can quickly have an allay for Conſcience when it begins to ſtir. Theſe legally convinced perſons ſnatch at comfort, though never ſo falſe.

(2.) A Legally Convinced Perſon would only be freed from the Pain, an Evangelically convinced Perſon from the ſin, the true cauſe of it: Like Swine they would not have the Cudgel, but they would have the Mire; would have a freedom from the laſh of the Law, but hate to come under the Yoke of Chriſt: They hate the Iron that's come into their ſide, but not the Crime; as a Malefactor doth the Gaol, or a Thief the Gibbet. Such a one had rather have a rotten Heart, than a painful Rack; he had rather have a putrified ſoul, than a deep inciſion: The one cries for a Plaiſter to eaſe his Conſcience, the other for an Ax to be laid to the root of his Sin; he would keep his right hand and eye, provided they would not feſter. The other would not have any corner of his heart inhabited by any ſin, he is deſirous it might loſe its Empire and Dominion in the Heart: He hath a reſpect to Gods Teſtimonies, though tremblings at the conſiderations of God; Pſal. 119. 119, 120. My fleſh trembles for fear of thee, and I am afraid of thy Judgments. The other like the man poſſeſt, in the the Goſpel, would not have the Devil tormented in him, and utters not a word to have the Devil caſt out of him, Luke 8. 28. He that is Evangelically convinced, looks forward to ſin that may tempt him, and is watchful againſt the occaſions of it; the other at beſt looks only backward to thoſe already committed, and ſpends that diſaffection he hath, only on that for which he is rackt, he ſingles out that to wreak his anger upon; he doth not fall on the Troops of ſin, not upon ſin in general, but ſome particular ſin which hath been painful to him; he hath no diſaffection to the Pleaſure promiſed in other occaſions, though he hath a diſtaſt of the Pain for that which is paſt. If the Legaliſt be wrung into ſome Reformation, it is with as much regret to part with his darling ſin, as David with Abſalom, or Adam to be turned out of Paradiſe: Though he forbears it, he doth not abhor it; if he abhors it, 'tis only the Pain, not the Sin: And the reaſon is, becauſe there is no higher principle in ſuch a perſon than Fear, and Self-love, and to one or both of theſe all the Reformation he hath, owes its Original. He is only afraid of Hell, and could he enjoy ſin without Terror in his Conſcience, or wrath in Hell, he did not care if the glory of God were loſt for him, whether ever he came at Heaven, or the preſence of God; whether ever he had an hatred of evil, or acted good; he diſtaſts the evil only. But one that is Evangelically convinc'd, diſtaſts the ſoulneſs of ſin, reliſhes the excellency and beauty of Holineſs, becauſe of its ſuitableneſs to its Creator. Where there is fear only, there is nothing but Bondage, and a legal frame. The voice of one Legally convinced is, How ſhall I do this Wickedneſs, and open the Flood-gates of wrath? The voice of an Evangelical Convict is this, How ſhall I do this Wickedneſs, and ſin againſt God, and ſpurn at his Bowels?

Fourthly, There are differences in regard of the Effects of theſe. And,

(1.) A legal Conviction doth not of it ſelf ſoften, but rather harden. An Evangelical is melting and ſubmiſſive. The making a fleſhy heart, and diſpoſing it to ſuch a frame, is the incommunicable Property of the Covenant of Grace, and was never within the Verge and compaſs of the Law. The Law, like a Cannon, thunders only Bullets and Curſing, not a word of a Promiſe but to perfect Righteouſneſs; therefore a legal Conviction cannot be attended with any melting fruit. It is like a Hammer, that may break a Stone in pieces, yet every part retains its hardneſs. After a meer legal Conviction the Heart is commonly harder: As water, if it grow cold after it is heated, freezes harder, than it would have done if it had retained its native cold, without the interruption of a contrary quality. All thoſe ſtrivings of the Spirit with the old World, abated nothing of that evil Figment, thoſe evil Imaginations which lodged in the Heart continually. And it is obſerved, that though the Iſraelites heard the Thunder, ſaw the Lightning, the Mountain burning with Fire, the blackneſs, darkneſs and Tempeſt, as a preparation for giving the Law, which made them tremble, yet before forty dayes were over, they had not only forgotten that Law, but they ſin againſt that God whoſe Power they feared, renounce God and his Power over them, and make themſelves a golden Calf, Exod. 32. 1. 4. The ſcorching of the Law makes the burnt place more brawny after the Fire is out. The Underſtanding may be ſoundly convinced, yet the Heart not melted; the one is from the undeniable evidence of Truth, the other is from the kindly Influence of the Spirit. But when the Spirit convinceth the Heart in a ſpiritual method, it ſhines like the Sun in the Heavens, which thaws the cold and frozen Earth, and makes a man to be as melting Wax before God: O how immenſe is this Love of God, that ſhould offer me a Chriſt, provide a Redeemer, ſet him apart from all Eternity, for me that am ſelf-condemned, while I was a Rebel, for me who am a Firebrand of Hell! O ineſtimable Mercy! O melting Goodneſs! O free Grace! Then he calls to his Heart; Down rocky Heart, down to the very duſt; lye as low as Hell by abaſement, ſince Chriſt hath made himſelf ſo low for thee. This is alwayes attended with humility, ſuch a Perſon *falls down on his face and worſhips God, and with ſubmiſſiveneſs will bear the indignation of the Lord, Micah 7. 9. And therefore a renewed man, that is paſt theſe Pikes, is more humble under a ſenſe of his own vileneſs, than all the Legaliſts ever were; for the Spirit keeps his Foundation firm which he firſt laid, whereon to build the Superſtructure of Grace and Comfort. As this ſenſe of ſin, the Root, growes downward, ſo theſe noble Fruits grow upward. The ſenſe David had at his Conviction for the Blood of Uriah, made him ſtartle at the Numbering the People, and afraid of the Water fetcht from the Well of Bethlehem, but he poured it out before the Lord, leſt he ſhould ſeem to countenance the ſhedding of any Blood. Well then, the Legal Conviction is as a Brick in the Kiln, burnt and hardened, the other like Gold, enflamed and melted, ſeparating it ſelf from the droſs.

* 1 Cor. 14. 25.

(2.) A Legal Conviction of it ſelf tends only to deſtruction, Evangelical to health and ſalvation. The Law preſents nothing but Condemnation and ruin, and can ſpeak no other Language, its mouth is filled only with Curſes, without the mixture of any one Bleſſing for degenerate man; what can be the Iſſue of this, but Confuſion and endleſs Torment? Not the leaſt drop of Comfort ſtreams from it. 'Tis impoſſible but that when it chargeth home the violation of the Law, and brandiſheth all its Curſes, ſelf-condemnation and deſpair muſt reign in the Conſcience; and Conſcience the Deputy of God, when awakened, cannot but (like the Iſraelites) ſubſcribe an Amen to every Curſe. The Law like Mount Ebal is barren of Comfort, Bleſſing grows only upon the Mount of the Goſpel. Hence many under ſharp terrors of the Law, have endeavoured to make away themſelves, and leaped into the flames of Hell to avoid the ſparks. This of it ſelf, like Poyſon, works to the diſſolution of the Temperament of the Body; but Evangelical is like Phyſick, which though it diſturbs the humours, yet it tends to the preſerving and rectifying the Complexion of the Body: And by this at laſt the Soul is brought to ſuch a frame, that it is willing to lye under Affliction or Torment, yea under the Fury of Devils, rather than ſin againſt God; for Fear and Ingenuity in the Soul joyn hands to the keeping of Gods Commandments. The one diſcovers the Diſeaſe, the other the Remedy; the one cauſes Fear, the other Hope; the one ſhews the Plague, the other diſcovers the Plaiſter: The one is like a Dart in the ſide of a Deer, that makes him run further from him that ſhot it; the other is as a Chain to draw the Soul nearer to God.

(3.) A difference in regard of Duration. The legal Conviction is like a Convulſion fit of the Earth, when it quakes and trembles, and affects all that feel it with amazement, but holds not long e're it return to its natural conſiſtency and ſtability; but an Evangelical Conviction laſts as long as we live, and is not caſt off but with the Mantle of the Body; then the ſenſe of ſin ſhall be left, and we wholly taken up with the Praiſes of a Redeemer. Without this, Grace would not grow and thrive to a due maturity.

Thirdly, As there is a difference between thoſe Convictions which riſe from Nature, and which riſe from the Law; ſo there is a difference between Satans ſetting ſin in order before us, and the manner of the Spirit's preſenting it to us. (For Satan doth ſometimes ſet ſin in order before the Soul, and there is a difference between their Methods.) In Convictions begun by the Spirit, Satan doth intereſt himſelf, and if he cannot ſtifle them, he endeavours to increaſe them. Though they are not in themſelves acts of Comfort, yet they are the act of a comforting Spirit, and in order to Comfort; But the Devil impreſſeth them only as a terrifying Spirit. God ſometimes employes him as his Officer after Converſion, for a Correction of his People, as a Beadle to diſci-

pline Vagrants, when they ſtray from their Duty; but there is a manifeſt difference between the Impreſſions of Guilt made by him, and thoſe ſtamped by the Holy Ghoſt.

(1.) Satan ſets ſin in order as an Accuſer, the Spirit as a Comforter: The tendency of a ſpiritual Conviction is Comfort, the Intention of Satan is only to charge us with our fault; Satan as an Enemy with Violence brings his Charge, the Spirit as a friend with tenderneſs doth impreſs Conviction upon the Soul. Satan hath no mind to awaken the Conſcience, but would rather lull men aſleep in a carnal and endleſs ſecurity as to this World, and not diſcover the danger 'till they feel the ſtroke; he rather tempts to ſin, than accuſeth for it, and ſets men before the Cannon of Wrath, and giveth them no warning, 'till they feel the Bullet at their Hearts, and are ſhattered in pieces by it. When he hath a full poſſeſſion of the Heart, all things are in quiet, and this great Deceiver doth what he can to hinder true Conviction; and this great Pharaoh doth not double the burden 'till he is like to loſe his Prey, and is afraid the Soul ſhould be ſnatched out of his hands; then he Charges as before he Charmed. He chargeth violently, therefore his Title is, The Accuſer of the Brethren, Rev. 12. 10. He is alſo diligent in it, for he doth accuſe them Day and Night; he is no leſs an Accuſer, and a diligent Accuſer of men to their own Conſciences; his Accuſations do not precede, but follow the Spirits Conviction to ſpoil the Spirits work, and keep off the Soul from coming under any other Government than his own. Satan doth only accuſe like a Councellor at the Barr, with Violence doth Implead the Priſoner that he is Councel againſt, rakes up all Crimes that can be found, preſents them with the ſharpeſt Edge, blunts all Apologies made in his Defence, giveth no direction to procure a Pardon, if the Man look after any, he puts him out of hopes of obtaining; this Satan doth when he is afraid leſt he ſhould loſe a man that he finds ſoundly convinced by the Spirit, and ready to go off from him, when other means are ſucceſleſs; he deals with ſuch a Soul as with Job, after God had granted him liberty to afflict him, he diſpatched not one Meſſenger with good News to him, but haſtened one after another with tydings of his Loſs and Miſery; he doth rather over-accuſe than under-accuſe; he is a lying Spirit, and being Envious too, that delights in the Miſery of others, he cares not what he ſaith to ſtrengthen his Charge. He would not ſpeak truth to God when he accuſed Job, but makes a charge of Hypocriſie, and a falſe Prognoſtication of Job's Curſing God if he were ſtript of his worldly riches, Job 1. 11. & 2. 5. And he accuſeth Job to his Friends, of more than he was guilty of; this he doth to drive to Deſpair: But the Spirit is a Spirit of truth, he ſets ſins in order as they are; and is a Spirit of tenderneſs, convinceth the Soul with a Compaſſion to it. Satan deals with the Soul, as the Thieves with the man in the Goſpel, whom they left for half dead, but had no pity on his Wounds; he acts quite contrary to Chriſt, and the Spirit of Chriſt in the World. When the Spirit is only a Convincer, Satan will be a Comforter, tells them ſin ſhall do them no hurt, there is no cauſe of fear; but when the Spirits Conviction operates kindly, and is like to be a Preparation to Chriſt, when the Spirit begins to be a Comforter, then Satan will be a Convincer, then his Language is, Nothing will Cure. Satan tormented men, Chriſt when he was on the Earth cured them: The Spirit being Chriſt's Deputy, acts as Chriſt did when he was here, and with the ſame Affection as Chriſt did. Not but that the Spirit reproves ſharply, as Chriſt did upon occaſion Peter and the Phariſees, and yet upon compliance was as gentle as before ſevere; the Spirit doth accuſe for ſin, but doth alſo ſhew a Righteouſneſs to anſwer thoſe Accuſations, if it be embraced.

(2.) Satan preſents God only as a Judge to Puniſh: The Spirit in the Progreſs of Conviction, repreſents him not only as a Judge, who hath the power of Puniſhment, but as a Sovereign and Father in Chriſt, who hath the Power of Pardon. Satan preſents God upon ſeveral occaſions, either armed only with Fury, or covered only with a Robe of Mercy; one, when he would would drive to Deſpair, the other when he would ſettle the Heart in Preſumption: To a Soul convinced throughly of ſin, which is upon the threſhold of Converſion, he repreſents God as the Lord of the World, calling him to account in the ſtrictneſs of Juſtice; not as the Reconciler of the World in Chriſt, not as ſtanding with a Pen dipt in the Blood of Chriſt, to croſs out his Debts, upon his reſignation to him. He tells the Soul God is a God of Terror, without a mite of Mercy, never ſhews God in all his Perfections; but the Spirit being the Spirit of Truth, Joh. 16. 13. diſcovers God in all his Excellencies. Satan is the ruler of Darkneſs, Epheſ. 6. 12. The ruler of the Darkneſs of this World: He diſcovers nothing but what may encreaſe the Darkneſs in man, like that in himſelf, that God is revengefull and falſe, not willing to make good any word of Grace; not only accuſeth the Soul to it ſelf, but accuſeth God to the Soul, and chargeth God falſely; he repreſents God as arm'd with Wrath: The Spirit repreſents him as calm'd by Chriſt: Satan tells the afflicted Sinner only of an Iron rod in Gods hand, the Spirit tells the Sinner of a gracious Scepter; Satan ſhews Juſtice brandiſhing Terror, and the Spirit Goodneſs with melting Bowels. Not but that the Spirit ſhews the Juſtice of God in the Law againſt ſin, but 'tis to make way for the better welcome of the Mercy of the Goſpel. As Joſeph carries himſelf like a Judge, ſends his Brethren to Priſon, not to keep them languiſhing there, but to ſhew the Affection of a Brother, with the more Comfort to them, and advantage to his own deſigns.

(3.) Satan conceals the remedy for ſin by the Mercy of God; but the Spirit diſcovers it: The Devil may aggravate the Diſeaſe, but not tell us of the true Medicine; the Devil diſcovers ſin as an Executioner, and nothing but the ſin, the Spirit as a Phyſician in order to a Cure, diſcovers both the Wound and the Plaiſter, the Diſeaſe and the Remedy: Satan ſhews only fire to inflame, but he never acquaints the Soul with the Blood of Chriſt to quench that flame; he is only a fiery Serpent to ſting, but never directs to the Brazen Serpent to cure that ſting. Since he knoweth that all the ſtrength and activity to caſt off his Yoke, lyeth in the knowledge of, and cloſing with Chriſt, he uſeth all arts to keep us from the knowledge of the Goſpel, and the gracious condeſcenſion and good will of Chriſt, that we might not by becoming Chriſts Subjects, ceaſe to be his Slaves; therefore he uſes all the Power he hath, as the God of the World, 2 Cor. 4. 4. to blind the eyes of men, that they may not ſee a ſpark of the light of the glorious Goſpel; which he doth by putting ſtrange Fancies into the Hearts of men; but the Conviction of the Spirit is in order to the manifeſtation of the things of Chriſt. To the Convinced Soul the Devil ſhews only the Curſes of the Law, but the Spirit ſhews the Promiſes of the Goſpel; the Devil is an envious Spirit, and ſince he is thrown down from Heaven, vails any light that comes from thence, that men may not look that way; the Spirits Conviction is in order to the manifeſtation of the things of Chriſt, He ſhall receive of mine, and ſhew it unto you: Not but that the Spirit many times, firſt ſhews Juſtice with a drawn Sword, and Mercy with a vailed Face, and doth not diſcover the Promiſes for a while, and entertains the Soul with this language; Look upon a doleful Eternity, an unavoidable Wrath, conſider the eaſineſs of utter Ruine, how Life and endleſs Miſery hang upon a ſmall thred, and a puff of God can ſend thee among the Damned; but this is but temporary, and to make the Remedy more eſtimable: but the Devil is alwayes for obſcuring the Goſpel, and flaſhing the Law in the Face of the Sinner.

(4.) When Satan cannot conceal the Remedy, He endeavours to diſparage it, to keep the Soul under Terrors and a ſight of Sin, in oppoſition to that Remedy: But the Spirit convinceth of the foul evil of ſin, and alſo magnifies the excellency of the Remedy provided againſt it. Satan would make them believe the Blood of Chriſt is too ſhallow to cover the mountains of their Iniquities; the Spirit wounds to raiſe an eſteem of the depths of that Blood. Since the Devil cannot conquer Chriſt, he will endeavour to diſparage Chriſt, and the merit and value of his Blood; the Spirit was ſent to glorifie Chriſt, which is contrary to the Devils deſign, to diſparage him, Joh. 16. 14. He ſhall glorifie me. As Satan would wholly hide the Mercy of God, ſo when he cannot, but that it breaks out, he extenuates the Grace of the Covenant, fills men full of Diſputes and carnal reaſonings againſt the Riches of Grace, and latitude of the Promiſe; he ſets up Pride in the Heart, as he did in Adam, againſt the Grace of God; it was his old trade, to make men jealous of God; the ſame arts he doth exerciſe ſtill, with more ſubtilty, as being aſſiſted with a large ſtock of experience ſince the Fall: Diſtruſt of God was that he tempted Adam to, and Chriſt himſelf, putting the thing to an If, If thou art the Son of God: Satan preſſeth upon them their ſin, as unpardonable; at firſt, to encourage ſecurity, he tells them ſin is ſo ſmall that Juſtice will not regard it, and afterwards ſo great that Mercy cannot forgive it, that they are paſt the limits of Grace, that the Candle of their Lives will not burn long enough for a true Repentance: but the Spirit never acquaints the Soul with any ſuch News; for this is againſt the nature of the Goſpel, this is to belye the terms and tenour of it, for he always propoſeth the Goſpel in its true terms of Faith and Repentance: He ſhews ſin in its ugly colours, as an object of Juſtice, while it is cheriſhed, and the Sinner as an object of Mercy in the Goſpel, when Repenting: The Spirit preſſeth it as a Duty to believe, Satan preſſeth it upon their Conſciences that they ought not to believe, that Swine muſt not meddle with Pearls, nor Dogs with Jewels, that to believe is to preſume, that they provoke God in cloſing with Mercy, before they have a fitneſs for it; ſuch things are the Language of many under troubles, when Satan puts his Finger into them, and by this means keeps men off in a ſight of ſin, from cloſing with the Promiſe; if a Promiſe appears, Satan darkens it; if the Soul cometh to cloſe with it, Satan endeavours to beat off their Fingers, and tells them they have not, nor are ever like to have qualifications for the Promiſe; but the Spirit is ſent on the ſame Errand that Chriſt came on, to manifeſt the Name of God, the freeneſs of his Mercy, and that the Goſpel is as large in Bleſſings to Penitents and Believers, as the Law is in Curſes to Impenitents and Infidels, and clears up the things which are freely given us of God, Goſpel Grace and Favour, Goſpel Promiſes; theſe are the things freely given us of God, 1 Cor. 2. 12. But if the Soul, like Joſhua, doth look towards the Angel of the Lord, Satan will be at hand to turn away his eyes from him, Zach. 3. 1.

(5.) The Devil alwayes in ſetting ſin before the Soul, endeavours to drive it to deſpair, the Spirit to encourage it to Faith; the one to ſink it in Deſpair of Pardon, the other to excite it to a mourning for ſin. Satan would drive it to Blaſphemy, like thoſe Rev. 16. 11. That Blaſphemed the God of Heaven by reaſon of their Pains, and repented not of their deeds: But the Spirit Inſtructs with the Conviction, teaching us to Juſtifie God, and Condemn our ſelves, to quell our Murmurings, and juſtifie Gods Procedure, and make us ſubmiſſive to Gods righteous Judgment. Satan diſcovers ſin, to drive the ſoul to a worſe ſin than that which he hath diſcovered, and ſet the Soul more at variance with God: Satan is an evil Spirit, and is a roaring Lyon, going about to devour, 1 Pet. 5. 8. The Spirit ſeeks to ſupport, and diſcover ſin, to make men humble before God, and to have good thoughts of Gods tenderneſs; the language of the Spirit is, Thy Caſe is deſperate in it ſelf, but there is Balm in Gilead, there is Eye-ſalve: The language of the Devil is, God hath forſaken thee, as to Saul, who thereupon ſlew himſelf on his own Sword; as he ſpurr'd Judas to ſin after Self-conviction, ſo he hurried him as faſt to the Halter, thence to Hell: thus he endeavoured to engage Job in an open Hoſtility againſt God, and ſpared no way to gall him, and move him to ſo curſed a Rebellion. When ſuch motions are found by any Perſons lying under a ſenſe of ſin, and Wrath due to it, they may conclude them not to be any touches of the holy Spirit, who being a Spirit of Holineſs can never ſtir up ſuch ſinful motions. Satan hath a great advantage to this end, to drive to Deſpair, from the Guilt of our Conſciences, and an advantage to accuſe us, from the Darkneſs and Ignorance of our Hearts, and unacquaintedneſs with the largeneſs and extent of the Goſpel. He is alſo skilful in all the terrible Threatnings of God in the Word, he hath read them all over, and draws what darts out of that Quiver he pleaſes, to anſwer that end: He can open the Fountain below, the ſpring of our ſin, the window above, the ſtreaming of Juſtice, and cauſe a deluge of Deſpair; and being a perfect hater of God, he endeavours to imprint upon men the ſame Diſpoſition: whereas the Spirit being Love, and acts of Love principally aſcribed to him, aims at the drawing the Soul to ſuch a frame of Love, and opens our ſin to make us deſpair in our ſelves, and the Treaſures of the Goſpel, to make us run to God with open arms; ſhews the greatneſs of ſin, and alſo the attainableneſs of Mercy, upon our return and Repentance: The Spirit being ſent as a Comforter, his principal intent is, not to terrifie, but that he may lay more laſting and ſtronger Foundations for Comfort; and being a Wooer and Solicitor for Chriſt, when he tells us of our miſery by our Match with ſin, it is not like Satan to make our Union ſtraighter, but to break it off, and bleſs us with a better; and therefore when he ſhews the uglineſs and miſery of ſin, it is to raiſe our eſteem of Chriſt, and promote our acceptance of him.

(6.) Satan works violently and ſuddenly in this Caſe, and moſt by the Paſſions and Humours of the Body, rather than by Reaſon; but the Spirit works upon the Mind, therefore he is an enlightening Spirit. Satan works upon the Reaſon by the Paſſion, the Spirit upon the Paſſion by the Reaſon; he firſt enlightens the mind, and brings light into the Heart, and the rational faculties, the proper ſubjects of light; and by this means winds up the Paſſions to what pitch and tune he thinks fit. Satan firſt works upon the Humours of the Body, as Melancholly, and the like; Satan works violently, as upon Paſſion, as he buffeted Paul; boxes a man to and fro, ſo that he hath no time to do any thing but conſider his miſery; whereas the Spirit propoſeth the Object, helps the Soul to conſider, and by degrees leads to a further knowledge of the light of the Goſpel, from a glimmering to a ſhining light, 'till the Knowledge of the Lord break in in its full Glory. The Spirit alſo is more particular in his Convictions, as acting omniſciently; which Satan being a Creature cannot doe, who cannot diſcern all ſins, but gueſſes at ſome thoughts and actions, and therefore his ſetting ſin before men is more confuſed; the Spirits ſetting ſin before men is more particular and orderly; but in the whole, Satan acts as a Convincer only, the Spirit as a Convincer and Comforter: one aims at Terrour and Deſpair, the other at Comfort and Faith.

VI. The APPLICATION.

Uſe I. Of Information. If the Spirit of Chriſt be the Author of Conviction of ſin, if this is the Order God proceeds in: Then Firſt, The Goſpel doth not deſtroy Reaſon, and rational proceeding. It is agreeable to common Reaſon, that old Principles ſhould be exploded, and appear unworthy, baſe, unreaſonable, and weak, before new ones be introduced and entertained. The working of the Spirit is according to the Nature of man, moves not in contradiction unto, but in an elevation of Reaſon; he explodeth Principles which were planted in the Mind before, and diſcovers Principles which Reaſon cannot diſown, though it did not before apprehend: He doth not extinguiſh Reaſon, the Candle of the Lord, but ſnuffs it, and adds more Light, reduces it to its proper manner of Operation, and ſets it in its right ſtate towards God; brings freſh Light into the Underſtanding, and new Motions into the Will; he doth not dethrone Reaſon and Judgment, but apply it to its proper work, repair it, ſets it in its true motion: As mending a Watch is not to deſtroy it, but rectifie that which is out of order, and reſtore it to its true end. Religion is not the deſtruction, but the reſtoration of Reaſon: The Arguments the Spirit uſeth are ſuited to the Reaſon of men, otherwiſe Conſcience could not be moved; for Conſcience follows Judgment: It is not an act of Judgment, but Imagination, that Reaſon doth not precede. As the Service God requires, is a rational Service, ſo the Method he uſes in Converſion is a rational Method.

Secondly, We may from this Doctrine ſee the excellency of the Goſpel State. The Foundation of it is laid by the Son of God, the Application of it, and the Preparations to that Application, are wrought by the Spirit of God. The whole Trinity concern themſelves in mans Recovery; the Father contrives it, the Son layes the Foundation of it in his Blood, the Spirit prepareth the Soul for the participation of it: The Father ſhews the evil of ſin, by making his Son a Sacrifice for it; the Son acknowledgeth the demerit of ſin, by conſenting to his own expiatory Death; the Spirit bears witneſs againſt the evil of it, by diſcovering to us the filthineſs of its nature; For when he is come, the Comforter whom I will ſend, Joh. 15. 26. He ſhall teſtifie of me, ſaith Chriſt: The Spirit doth it as the Fruit of Chriſts Purchaſe, and gift of Chriſts Royalty; he breaks the Rock, ſubdues the Heart, fills it with the bitterneſs of ſin, that it may taſt of the ſweetneſs of Grace; he ſhakes the Rod of Damnation over men, to make them fly to a Golden Scepter held out to relieve them. The firſt Covenant ſpake Terror only, and ſpake no more Comfort to men than Devils, ſealed them up to Deſtruction, without one ſpark of light to ſhew the way of Salvation: But the Spirit in the Goſpel giveth us light to ſee our miſery, but in order to our apprehenſion of the Remedy; He makes us know our ſtate, that we may know our Saviour: He fills men with trembling and amazement in a way of Grace, for his ſervice, not in a way of Judgment, as a preparation to their down-lying in eternal Flames. God hath provided an Agent to do that, which Chriſt by reaſon of his Fleſh was not ſo likely to do. The Garb wherein Chriſt appeared, offended the world; it was incredible to man that God ſhould ſend his Son in ſo mean a condition; from this the World drew pretences for their Unbelief; but the glorious appearance of the Spirit, cuts off all theſe pretences. Man can have no excuſe from the Convictions the Spirit makes. This ſeems to be part of the expediency of Chriſts departure, that the Spirit might convince.

Thirdly, All Convictions, and convincing diſcourſes, muſt not be exploded as Legal: they are the work of the Spirit, as the royal gift of Chriſt, and the fruit of Chriſt's Aſcenſion; nay, the firſt work of the Spirit as a Comforter, a fruit of the Promiſe of the Spirit, as carrying on the deſign of Chriſt. The Convictions of the Spirit are no more Legal, than the Blood of Chriſt a legal Blood, the Prieſthood of Chriſt a legal Prieſthood, the Offices of Chriſt legal Offices: The works of the Spirit, in what way ſoever, are Evangelical in their end, ſince the Foundation on which they are built, is a Goſpel Foundation.

Fourthly, We ſee the mighty Power and Excellency of the Word in the hand of the Spirit. The Spirit is the Author of Conviction, not immediately, without the propoſing any object, but in and by the Word: The Spirit, like Chriſt to the Woman of Samaria, diſcovers all that ſhe had done; Joh. 4. 29. The Word in this hand, is a Hammer to break the hardeſt Rock, a Fire to melt and devour the compactedſt Metals, a Spirit to enter through the cloſeſt Bars, a Rod to ſmite the ſtouteſt Sinner, a Breath to ſlay the higheſt Wickedneſs: It makes men to aſſent to what they loath'd, ſets them on fire, though they uſe all their arts to quench it. Rev. 11. 10. It doth torment thoſe that dwell on the Earth, while they are in an earthly and carnal frame. The Holineſs of the Word is evidenced, in ſhewing us the filthineſs of our ſouls; the Power of the Word manifeſted, in pulling down that which exalts it ſelf, though it be never ſo ſtrong a hold; the Divine Authority is manifeſt, in revealing the ſecrets of the Heart, thô lying hid, not only from the eyes of the World, but alſo from the preſent knowledge of the Soul it ſelf. 1 Cor. 14. 24. Like the Sun, nothing is hid from the light and force thereof; it edgeth a mans Conſcience, ſets him a trembling, becauſe it is the voice of the Lord; when the Spirit faſtens it on the ſoul, it will make the higheſt Mountain to ſhake, the Heart of an Incarnate Devil to tremble; put ſuch a Cup of Amazement into the hands of a ſinner, that all the pleaſures of ſin ſhall not put the taſt out of his mouth; it will make a Prince come down from a Throne, let fall his Scepter; make David throw his Crown from his Head, and Ahab change his Purple into Sack-cloth, and the Jaylor ſpring in trembling before his Priſoners. Wonder not at this powerful Effect, ſince the Word is managed by the hand of the Spirit.

Fifthly, If the Spirit be the Author of Conviction, how weak then are all means of themſelves, till the Spirit ſet them home upon the Conſcience? Could Nature throughly convince, what need of the Spirit? Threatnings will not ſavingly affright, nor Promiſes powerfully allure, without the power of the Holy Ghoſt to imprint them. A man may read them ten thouſand times over, and have no full reflection upon himſelf, as concerned in them, without the operation of this mighty Arm. All the Jewiſh Sacrifices were too feeble to expiate ſin, without the death of Chriſt: All the Powers in the world are too weak to convince of ſin, without the Arm of the Spirit. How fooliſh is it for man to depend upon his own reſolution, to think the ſenſe of ſin neceſſary, and yet put it off 'till another day, when this ſenſe is not in his own power, but at the Spirits pleaſure, and there's as much need of the Spirit to touch us with a ſenſe of ſin, as of the Angel's deſcent to move the waters, to the beſtowing of health!

Sixthly, If the Spirit be the Author of Conviction, we may hereby judge of the Motions of the Spirit, and diſtinguiſh them from Motions from other Cauſes. The Spirit never moves to ſin, or any thing that appears ſinful: That Spirit which is to diſplay ſin in its black Colours, in order to Conviction, can never ſolicite to the embraces of it, in order to damnation; that Spirit which ſhews ſin in its helliſh ſhape, can never invite the ſoul to eſpouſe deformity: He that is ſent to convince of it, can never be ſo falſe to his Office, as to daub with it; impure Breathings are not the Iſſues of a Spirit of Holineſs; Injuries and Falſities againſt God, never take their riſe from a Spirit of Truth. Whatſoever therefore hath a tincture of ſin, whatſoever is per ſe an occaſion of ſin, can never come from the Spirit of God, let what Revelation ſoever be pretended; eſpecially, whatſoever diſparageth Chriſt in his undertaking, in the glory of any of his Offices, and the honour of God by him, this receives no encouragement at all from the Spirit, whoſe imployment it is to reprove for unbelief, and whatſoever ſhelters it ſelf under the wings of it: He is Chriſt's Deputy, and will not infringe the main end of Chriſt, which was to ſet up Holineſs, and pull down Sin: The Spirit cannot move to any thing that deſtroys the Foundation of Chriſt's Goſpel.

Seventhly, If the Spirit be the Author of the Conviction of ſin, we ſee then who is the great Author of ſtifling Convictions, and hindering them from coming to a good iſſue. It muſt be ſomething contrary to the Spirit of God, who is that, but Satan? It is a Character of a Child of the Devil to be an Enemy to all Righteouſneſs, Act. 13. 10. much more is the Devil, the Father of that Child, an Enemy to all Righteouſneſs: And thus ſaid Paul to Elymas when he withſtood the Apoſtle, and endeavoured to divert Paulus Sergius from entertaining the Word. The Devil hath no ſuch Enemy in the heart of man, as Faith, becauſe this brings the ſoul from under his power, to be ſubject to another Head; he ſets his ſtrength againſt the Plantation of it, and likewiſe againſt the preparation for it. His deſign is againſt Righteouſneſs and Holineſs; he firſt aſſaulted the Righteouſneſs of Adam's nature in Paradiſe, and endeavours to prevent any reſtoration of Righteouſneſs to the Soul, by keeping men off from the means of it, raiſing a ſpirit of Perſecution againſt it, inſtilling into men falſe imaginations of the unpleaſantneſs of it, the pleaſures of ſin, and the eaſineſs of a Death-bed-Repentance, and ſtifling Convictions, which are the firſt ſtep to happineſs. He finds corrupt Principles in men, which he arms againſt the attempts of the Spirit. The Spirit firſt convinceth of Sin, and then of Righteouſneſs; the Devil goes quite contrary; firſt he endeavours to convince of a falſe Righteouſneſs, and when that will not prevail, then he convinceth of ſin; when he cannot prevent a Sinners ſeeing ſin in its deformity, then he will endeavour to hinder him from ſeeing Grace in its beauty and luſtre. When the Sinner is impenitent, he repreſents God as ſtript of his Juſtice, that he may not fear; when Conſcience is ſoundly ſtirr'd, he labours to render it fruitleſs, and ſtop the Torrent of Conviction; ſtrips God of his Mercy, that he may encreaſe the Man's Fears; he tells him his former ſins are ſwell'd above Mercy. He tells the bold ſinner, that he hath a Righteouſneſs, and that God hath no Arrows in ſtore for him: He tells the troubled ſinner, that he hath nothing but ſin, and that God hath no Bowels reſerved for him: He always contradicts the method of the Spirit of God, and ſtill is what he was from the beginning, a Liar; he endeavours to comfort when the Spirit troubles, and troubles when the Spirit comforts: He will ſpeak Peace when God cries Guilt, and cries Guilt when the Spirit cries Peace: He is all for the Goſpel when the Spirit handles the Law, and is all for Law when the Spirit utters the Goſpel. Hence he hath his Fiery Darts, that is, the fear of Death and Damnation by reaſon of ſin, and imperfect Obedience, which he ſuggeſts to the Conſcience, Epheſ. 6. 16. Thus he walks contrary to the Spirit of God: You ſee then who is the Author of ſtifling Conviction.

Eighthly, If the Spirit of God be the Author of Conviction, how ſinful is it then to reſiſt the Convictions of the Spirit! It is a new, and worſe Rebellion added to all the former, more immediately againſt God, and offering violence to the Spirit, and in ſome degree a doing deſpight to the Spirit of Grace, by whoſe influence Convictions are made: It is ſomething above a ſin againſt meer knowledge, becauſe it is againſt the preſent dictates of the Holy Ghoſt, a depriving him, as much as a man may, of a great part of his Office, and conſequently of all, becauſe he cannot be a Comforter unleſs he be firſt a Convincer. The Spirit ſhews a readineſs for your cure, and it is a more than ordinary provocation to ſlight a Phyſician when he ſtands ready with his Medicines: It is a juſtification of our ſelves in the face of God, and of all thoſe ſins we have committed, when we will not regard any thing that God ſaith againſt them: It is, to be the Devils Second in his War againſt God and our Souls.

II. If the Spirit of God be the Author of Conviction, it affords a Uſe of Comfort: It being the peculiar work of the Spirit, it is a mighty comfort to them that comply with the operations of the Spirit, liſten to theſe Convictions, and do admit them to take poſſeſſion of the Soul.

Firſt, It is a matter of comfort, that the Spirit ſhould take upon him this Office of curing us, that he will condeſcend to be a Chyrurgeon to ſo many putrified Souls, deals with them in the Word, and imployes his Launce to let out the corrupt matter; that he will vouchſafe to bring the Law and our Conſciences, the Goſpel and our Hearts together. The bleſſed Jeſus ſubmitted to be a Sacrifice, that he might be our Righteouſneſs: The Spirit undertakes to be our Inſtructer that he might be our Comforter; and ſtirs up the Mud in our Conſciences, that is ſo loathſome in it ſelf: The Spirit might have ſtood aloof off, and left us and our Sins to nuzzle together, without troubling himſelf about our State.

Secondly, The Convictions of the Spirit will have a good iſſue, if they be not reſiſted. You need not fear a Launce in the hands of Love and Tenderneſs. He is Gods Agent, Chriſts Deputy, to reduce you. He hews not thoſe that ſubmit to him, for the Fire, but for the Building; he cuts that he may heal, burns that he may cure; he is only to open the paſſage into your hearts, to let in ſome of the Blood from the pierced Heart of Chriſt. As wars in the World go before the end of all things, ſo Convictions and Tumults in the Soul are the preſages of an approaching Redemption. There is good hopes ſince he is entred upon the firſt part of his work, the Conviction of ſin, that it will not be long ere he proceeds to the ſecond, which is the Conviction of Righteouſneſs. If the Spirit did not intend your good, he would never have preſſed ſo hard upon you at any time, never given a heart to comply, but have left you blind in your ſins, till deſtruction had ſeized upon you, and hurried you to perpetual Impriſonment. But thô now you are Priſoners, it is a comfort, becauſe you are Priſoners of Hope. The Spirit wounds, and wounded Souls are the fitteſt Objects for compaſſion; the ſight of ſin muſt precede the purging of it, and then the Fruit of it is true Conſolation. * God dwells with the humble and contrite Spirit; not I will dwell, but I dwell; I dwell there when I wound and bruiſe, but the end of my dwelling there is not principally to bruiſe, but to revive the ſpirit of the humble. The Spirit is Chriſts Deputy, therefore doth nothing but purſuant to Chriſts Office, and that is to turn a Spirit of heavineſs into the garment of praiſe, Iſa. 61. 1. He came to ſeek and ſave them that were loſt, to bind up that which was broken, and ſtrengthen that which was ſick, and deliver them from their deſtruction, Ezek. 34. 12, 16. in a cloudy and dark day. Such a temper was our Redeemer of when God entruſted him, ſuch a temper is the Spirit of. Our Redeemer would not have ſent one of a different nature from himſelf, the ſame nature is in all the three Perſons, they are one in nature, one in affection, one in the deſign of the Salvation of man. What though the troubles of any man may be grievous at preſent, and he may be like a Hart hunted and ſtanding at a bay, at a loſs what courſe to take? it is no ground of diſcouragement. When our ſins were ſet home upon our Redeemer, they put him to a ſtand, John 12. 27. What ſhall I ſay? Yet the Iſſue was Glorious to God and himſelf, and to poor ſouls. The Spirit will deal no otherwiſe with the Members, than God with the Head. * Iſa. 66. v. 1, 2.

III. Uſe of Exhortation. If the Spirit be the Author of Conviction, The Firſt Exhortation is, To thoſe who have been convinced by the Spirit.

(1.) Be thankful to God. It is a matter of Praiſe that God hath driven you to him, though with ſharp laſhes; and a greater matter of Praiſe, if he drew you only with cords of Love. That God ſhould employ his Spirit to be his Solicitor to ſinners; that he left you not to find out the filthineſs and danger of your ſtate by your own blind Eyes. You have had fairer draughts of his power and goodneſs. When you were under troubles, did you ever think the Mountains would have been removed? did you ever think Comfort would have dawn'd on you? Since any of you have received Light, you ſee the bleſſed skill and power of the Spirit; you were brought low, and he helped you; Pſal. 116. 6. bleſs your ſtrong Deliverer, bleſs that skilful Chyrurgeon that cured though he launced. When Peter was brought out of Mans Priſon, he conſidered it with great aſtoniſhment; much more conſideration is due when we are brought out of Gods Priſon. * It was Gods councel in your reins, though ſharp like the pain of the Stone, bleſs him for it. He hath given you but a drop of Hell, when he might have ſhot all his Granadoes into you, and at laſt have ſhot you out of his ſling into Hell. He hath brought you from Priſon, that he might bring you to a Throne of Grace, and give you a Pardon. * Pſal. 42. 6.

(2.) Compaſſionate others, and aſſiſt the Spirit, when you find him at work upon others, in ſuch a Condition. By this we become like Chriſt, who learnt pity to us by experience of our infirmities; and we ſhould learn it to others, by reflection on what we felt our ſelves. To quench ſmoaking Flax, is to be unlike our Saviour, and thwart the work of the Spirit; kindle it therefore into a quicker flame by your breath. Nothing ſo tender as an afflicted Conſcience, which therefore muſt be tenderly dealt with. Rake not in the wounds of any that are afflicted for ſin; to help-forward Affliction, will be as little pleaſing to God in ſpiritual as temporal troubles. The Spirit acts in this Office as a Comforter, and the Comforts you have had are for others, as well as your ſelves. 2 Cor. 1. 4. Who comforteth us in all our Tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by by the Comforts wherewith we our ſelves are comforted of God. Pour in therefore Balm, and not Vinegar.

(3.) Take heed of offending and quenching this Spirit. Let not new ſins make the Spirit take his old Sword into his hand; the ſecond wound will be worſe than the firſt. Love enraged ſtrikes more keenly. David had more ſharp terrors after his Fall into the ſins of Murther and Adultery, than any time before that we read of. Anguiſh and terror will fall on the doers of Iniquity, to the Jew, the profeſſing party, as well as to the Gentiles, Rom. 2. 9, 10. but Glory and Peace, ſpiritual Communications of divine goodneſs, and an unſpotted Joy attend the doing good. If you would avoid wounds of Conſcience, avoid ſins which grieve the Spirit. Conſcience that checks men for acts of a ſenſual Life, even for thoſe that are more generous, never checks the ſoul for its aſpiring upward, and attempts toward a cloſer Communion with God. Peace is the effect of Righteouſneſs, Iſa. 32. 17. The loving Gods Law affords great Peace, peace in abundance, Pſal. 119. 165. Peace can then only be as the River, when our Righteouſneſs is as the waves of the Sea; therefore quench not that Spirit that hath convinced you, and do not by new ſins drive him away.

(4.) Exerciſe Faith much. Faith was firſt acted by you, before you were brought from under thoſe Preſſures you felt, it muſt be ſtill acted for keeping them from returning on you: Faith was the Medicine that cured your wounds, and Faith is the only Antidote to prevent new ones; Faith acted will make your inherent Righteouſneſs more vigorous; and the more Holineſs, the more Peace. Chriſt conſtantly in the Eye, will make Chriſt form'd in the Heart thrive and rejoyce.

Secondly, The ſecond Branch of the Exhortation is, to thoſe who are under Convictions for Sin; if there be any that at preſent are under Conviction for ſin,

(1.) Murmure not againſt God: It is the Spirits work, murmure not therefore againſt him; let not your Hearts fret within you, while the Spirit is raking up the Mud to make you view it, let there be no breakings out of impatience, whereby to quench the Spirit: Murmuring is the way to loſe the poſſeſſion of our ſouls, and the expectation of our comforts: Deal not with God as Job's Wife would have had him to have done, Curſe God, and die, Job 2. 9. Tumultuouſneſs of ſpirit againſt God is a diabolical temper, a reſemblance to that of the Damned, who blaſpheme God under their Torments, and curſe God when ſin gnaws their Conſcience. To lie patient under the Spirit's hand, is a Chriſt-like frame, who uttered not a word againſt his Father, when the ſins of all the World were laid upon him, to bear the puniſhment of them. Speak well of God, and as bad of the loathſomneſs of your Hearts, as the Spirit himſelf doth: This is a holy compliance. To hinder pettiſhneſs, conſider God as a Sovereign, who hath power over you, and as a gracious Sovereign, who hath an affection for a man under his rebukes: Repreſent him to your ſelves, not only in his Severity, but in his Mercy alſo, laying the Foundation deep, that he may make the Building more ſtrong, beautiful, and laſting. Murmure not, unleſs you had rather remain in league with the Devil, than have the band broken.

(2.) Run to the ſame hand for healing, which wounded you. The wounds of the Spirit may ſometimes be skinned over by other helps, and left inwardly rankling, but they can be cured only by the ſame hand that made them.* Iſa. 57. 17, 18. For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs was I wroth, and ſmote him; I hid me, and was wroth; and he went on frowardly, in the way of his heart: I have ſeen his wayes, and will heal him; I will lead him alſo, and reſtore comforts to him, and unto his mourners. It is the ſenſe of Gods wrath, the forfeiture of his favour, and the ſinful diſtance man ſtands in from God, which chiefly chargeth the ſoul; the taking off his wrath, the beaming of his favour, filling up the Gulf between God and the ſoul, belong only to God. The longing of a Woman cannot be ſatisfied with the moſt delicious fruit, if ſhe hath not the very thing ſhe longs for; but there will

will be indelible Characters printed upon the Fœtus. Since our natural blindneſs by the Fall, we are not able to find out Truth, there's need of the Spirit to enlighten and guide us; hence is he called the Spirit of Truth: And ſince ſin raiſeth ſtorms in the Conſcience, which no wit of meer Nature or ſtrength of Reaſon can compoſe, there's need of the Spirit to ſilence the ſtorms of Conſcience: Hence he is called a Comforter, to diſpell them: As you are wounded by the Spirit in the Word, ſo look for cure from the Spirit, in the Word. Nathan had aſſured David of a Pardon by Gods order, David would expect the joy of it only from God, by his Spirit, Pſal. 51. 12. Reſtore to me the joy of thy Salvation. Though he had an aſſurance from Nathan of a Pardon, he would have it alſo from the Spirit of God. If the Spirit be ſilent, no other voice can be muſical; give God therefore the honour of his own Prerogative. The Key of Peace is held in the hand of God, not in the Mouth of the Creature; Peace is contained in the Cabinet of the Word, and God only can unlock it; it is an effect of Gods creating power *. Since the Conqueſt ſin hath made of us, the Heart is but a tempeſtuous place, there's always matter for ſtorms, as in the World for exhalations; when they are raiſed, only Chriſt by his Spirit can ſay to the Waves, Be ſtill: ſpiritual ſtorms will obey no other voice. Till you find any thing in the World that can equal God in a creative Omnipotency, expect no peace from it: ſin muſt be removed, before peace can be ſettled: Only the Blood of Chriſt can ſtop the mouth of Conſcience, and none but the Spirit can drop it into the Conſcience: The Application of it is only by the Spirit, as the offering it on the Croſs was by him. But it muſt not be in a way of Enthuſiaſtick expectation. As he wounded you in the Word, ſo he will heal you by the Word alſo. He is faithful to Chriſt that ſent him, and takes of his to ſhew it to us; that is, of his Truths: He takes his healing Herbs out of no other Garden. Though Peace be the fruit of a creative power, yet it is the fruit of the Lips. And the Theſſalonians receiv'd the joy of the Holy Ghoſt by receiving the Word, 1 Theſſ. 1. 6.

* Iſa. 57. 19.

Thirdly, Have recourſe to Chriſt's Atonement. Troubles of ſpirit are the Arraignment and Indictment of the ſoul before God: It is by Jeſus Chriſt only, in whom God hath writ all the Characters of his Mercy, that we can be freed from the danger: In him you'l ſee a wrathful Juſtice appeaſed, and a provoked God reconciled: 'tis this blood only that quenches the fury of God, and the fire of Conſcience: It is by his blood only we are juſtified; and by this blood only can we be pacified. An infinite Wrath you fear, an infinite Satisfaction muſt expell your fears: That that quenches the fire of Conſcience, muſt be water from the Well of Salvation. There are two things trouble a convinced ſinner, The ſight of Guilt, and the weakneſs of Righteouſneſs: He ſees himſelf much in debt, and nothing to ſatisfie; is ſenſible he is come ſhort of the glory of God; that the Righteouſneſs of God will bar Heaven againſt his Unrighteouſneſs. He muſt then go to Chriſt to pay his debt, and impart his Righteouſneſs. When David found Iniquity prevailing, he had recourſe to this, Pſal. 65. 3. Chriſt is a Phyſician for the Sick, a Saviour for the Loſt, a Redeemer for the Captives, a Refiner for the Filthy, a Surety for the Debtor, and a Prieſt for the ſenſible ſinner. In him we may ſee both our weakneſs, and our remedy; his Riches will make us ſenſible of our Poverty; his Fulneſs, of our Emptineſs; his Medicines, of our Sickneſs; his Ranſome, of our Bondage; his Glory, of our Miſery: This is the way to make a Legal Conviction commence Evangelical.

Fourthly, Thoſe that are under Conviction, ſhould wait upon God for a good iſſue. Be not too haſty to break Priſon, but ſtay Gods leiſure; call upon him, and he will be near you in a way of Grace, though not immediately in a way of Comfort. The Lord is nigh to all them that call upon him in truth, Pſal. 45. 18. It is not for want of means that God doth not preſently Comfort, he hath endleſs Comforts by him; but he ſtays for a fit ſeaſon, that he may come with double Love, for his own Glory and his Creatures advantage: As Chriſt deferred the raiſing Lazarus 'till certainly dead, that the miracle of his Reſurrection might be indiſputable, and his Glory in raiſing him more illuſtrious. God leaves men under a cloud to exerciſe their Faith, which many times is moſt ſtrnog where there is leaſt feeling; otherwiſe it would not be Faith but Senſe that would make us come to him by Prayer; he keeps the day dark that we may fly to him in Prayer, which we ſhould not regard had we Comforts at pleaſure. Hannah's Soul muſt be pour'd out in tears, before ſhe can have the deſire of her Heart. God keeps us under matter of Prayer, before he giveth us matter of Praiſe, that we may praiſe him with higher ſtrains. He that hath torn will heal, he that hath ſmitten will bind up, Hoſ. 6. 1. Exerciſe what little Faith there is, in ſuch a caſe: Chriſt did ſo in his Agony, He offered up ſtrong cryes and Prayers to him that was able to ſave him from Death. God will knock off your Fetters in time, when the Soul finds the greateſt need, and is in the fitteſt poſture to glorifie him; Pſal. 50. 15. Call upon me in a day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me: Implying, that God will deliver at ſuch a time when there is the greateſt occaſion to glorifie him; when you are moſt Humble, he will hear your Cry, 2 Chron. 7. 14.

Fifthly, All the time of your waiting for the taking off your trouble which may be upon your Spirit, deſire cleanſing as well as comforting Grace: To deſire only Comfort is more ſelfiſh, to deſire Purging is an aim more at the Glory of God, who cannot be honoured without Holineſs. David put up more Prayers for Purging than Pardoning Mercy. The Waters that proceed from the Throne of the Lamb, are not only refreſhing and cooling, but alſo Purging and cleanſing. A divine Nature is neceſſary to a divine Peace: Cordials are not ſo neceſſary, but may be dangerous when the humours are ſtrong, Purging is then more needful. The comforting Spirit is firſt a Spirit of Holineſs, and Chriſt is Melchizedeck, a King of Righteouſneſs, before a King of Peace. Beſides, Reſtoratives are beſt, when Purgatives have gone before. Now becauſe men are apt to run to wrong means, and take wayes of ſtupifying rather than rightly appeaſing Conſcience, it will not be amiſs to give ſome directions to avoid this Rock on which ſome ſplit. Man is ſo full of enmity againſt God, that he takes hold of what comes firſt to hand, and would rather gather eaſe from any thing than go to a Mediator of Gods appointment. A ſenſe of ſin is alwayes attended with a look after a Remedy; Oh wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me? Take heed of ſome things in ſuch a caſe:

(1.) Take heed of falſe Opinions. As the Word is the Inſtrument of Comfort, ſo the Truth upon which Comfort is founded, muſt be tryed by the Word. The Spiric muſt take of Chriſts, the Truths of Chriſt, and ſhew it to us. The Statutes of the Lord are right, rejoycing the Heart, the Commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes, Pſal. 19. 8. Poyſon may be fair to the Eye, and delightful to the Pallate, but hurtful to the Life. Men in diſtreſs of ſpirit are apt to catch at every rotten Plank, like men ready to be drowned: Puddle-water will be ſwallowed down in extremity, as eagerly as the Juice of a delicious Grape; the Appetite deſiring ſomething to cool the Bowels, conſiders only what may give it ſome Refreſhment. Falſe Judgments either of the Diſeaſe or of the proper Remedy, are equally dangerous: In this Caſe men are like ſick perſons, that ask Advice of every Friend, ſcrape up many Remedies, but never go to a skilful Phyſician. Take heed of falſe Opinions.

(2.) Take heed of Carnal Councel in ſuch a Caſe. For if the Spirit be the Author of Conviction, cleaving to any carnal Councel, is turning the back upon the Spirit. Fleſh and Blood are bad Councellors in this Affair, they will conſult their own eaſe, and ſeek their own ſatisfaction; to Conſult with them is to Diſobey God, Gal. 1. 6. Chriſt would not ſuffer one that deſired to be his Diſciple, to turn back, and take leave of his Friends, which was but an Act of Civility, Luke 9. 61. Perhaps, becauſe by them he might have been diverted from his religious Reſolution; and his anſwer to him intimates as much, v. 62. No man having put his Hand to the Plow, and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God. Unbelieving Hearts, unbelieving Friends are the worſt Councellors in the world, and the moſt miſerable Comforters; their Councels are the Devils delight, and the Spirits grief; ſuch will quench not only the Fire in the Conſci-

ence, but the Spirit too that kindled it, and cauſe him to depart: The beſt way in this Caſe, is to have the Councel of the Wicked far from you, Job. 21. 16.

(3.) Our own Righteouſneſs, and a Road of Formal Services is to be taken heed of: In this Caſe our own Righteouſneſs is ſo far from being a means to eaſe us, that it is a bar to true Peace, by keeping us off from that Righteouſneſs that can only purchaſe it, and only effect it in us. Pride was the cauſe of our Ruine in Adam, and what was the Cauſe of our Ruine cannot be our Remedy; this temper manifeſts the Heart to be full of the proud Phariſees, an Enemy to Chriſt, for it grudges him the title of a Saviour. An imperfect Righteouſneſs cannot afford a perfect Peace; the Righteouſneſs of a ſinful nature is not the Righteouſneſs of a pure Law: A through Conviction throws away a mans Righteouſneſs as well as his ſin, in point of Juſtification, and in point of Conſolation: And to expect Peace from a road of Formal Duties, is to truſt in the arm of Fleſh; Paul calls all things ſo, when he oppoſeth rejoycing in the Fleſh to rejoycing in Chriſt, Philip. 3. 3. By Fleſh he means all things different from Chriſt; and to goe to a Creature is to depart from the Lord: Take heed therefore of valuing your own tears in the room of Chriſts Blood, your own Petitions in the room of his Interceſſions, and applauding your ſelves in a vain Righteouſneſs, inſtead of the meritorious ſatisfaction of the Blood of God, as though a few good Duties could expiate a multitude of ſins. What are a few Tears but as a drop to the ſea of our Guilt? what are our Petitions but as the breath of a Child, to the ſtorms of our Provocations? our Righteouſneſs, but as a mite to the many talents of our Unrighteouſneſs? Sinful Duties cannot make an infinite and holy ſatisfaction; as theſe were not our Saviour, ſo they cannot be our Comforter, they have no Blood to ſhed for us, and therefore have no power to heal us.

(4.) Take heed of Carnal Contentments and Senſual Pleaſures. Saul called for Muſick to drive away the evil Spirit, ſo do ſome for ſenſual Delights to drive away the Holy Spirit; ſet up Projects in the World, to avoid the noiſe in their own Conſciences; and ſometimes ſinful Merriments, to expell the good Spirit by an Impure Devil, is as if a man ſhould endeavour to quench fire with burning Pitch, or cure the Gout by a ſtab at the Heart. Thus men uſe all arts to ſtifle Convictions, but the end of their Mirth is Heavineſs: Prov. 14. 13. What Creature can cure the wound that God makes? what can comfort when the Almighty troubles? All carnal Contentments can no more remove inward and ſpiritual Diſtempers, than a Crown can cure the Headache, or a Golden Slipper the pain of the Gout: Therefore go to none of theſe things, but run to that hand which did wound you, unto the Spirit of God, who is the Author of Conviction. The Third Exhortation, To thoſe that are deſirous to have Spiritual Conviction; to be Convinced of ſin.

Firſt, Deſire the Spirit to pull the ſcales from your Eyes, which Satan hath put on; Beg of God, What I ſee not, teach thou me; deſire him to lead you into the ſeminary of Corruption, and cauſe you to poſſeſs your ſins, 'till you cry out Guilty, Guilty; to ſee them in their filthineſs, not as a Dunghill in a Picture, but as a real Dunghil offending a delicate ſmell: this courſe Job took, Job 13. 23. when he conſidered the multitude of his ſins, Make me to know my Iniquity, and my ſin; not only with a ſimple but ſenſible Knowledge.

Secondly, Meditate much upon the ſenſe Chriſt had of Sin. Conſider how his Underſtanding was enlarged to the higheſt pitch of Knowledge, not a grain of Malice or Ingratitude in the bowels of ſin, but was within the compaſs of his apprehenſion. He underſtood the Holineſs of that God that was offended with ſin. Conceive Chriſt in his Agonies; conſider how much ſin hath diſpleaſed and injured God, ſunk and ruined the Soul; and this may be ſome aſſiſtance, by the means of the Spirit, for gaining a ſpiritual Conviction. A ſpiritual ſenſe Chriſt had, and the conſideration of him, and imitation of him, is the way for us to have a ſpiritual ſenſe of ſin.

Thirdly, Study the Law in its ſpiritual meaning, and in the extent of it. Paul apprehended the Law in its ſpirituality, which before he underſtood

according

according to the Phariſaical Interpretation, which dulled its edge in its operations.

Fourthly, Set every Doctrine you know home upon your Conſcience. There is a double Knowledge, Dogmatical and Affectionate. We may know many things that do not affect us, we may be Affectedly ignorant, when we are Dogmatically knowing. Paul knew the Law by the means of Gamaliel, at whoſe feet he ſate, but had no ſenſe of it, till Chriſt came and brought the ſenſe of it from his Head to his Heart.

Fifthly, Attend upon the Means. God will honour the Word with convincing men of ſin, even of thoſe ſins which the Light of Nature would manifeſt. As David of Murther and Adultery, which God would convince him of by the Prophet.

Sixthly, Suppreſs not any Convictions when they flaſh in upon you, let them have their perfect work: Cheriſh every Conviction the Spirit faſtens upon you, while it is warm upon your Affections; it is dangerous to ſuppreſs it; the Spirits operation will not be fruitleſs, it will end in a full Conviction, or in a Curſe. If the Spirit hath Invited himſelf, and hath been refuſed to be a Phyſitian, he may leave you Remedileſs, he may have no more hand to knock, but duſt to ſhake off from his Feet, as a token of his final leaving you. And wait upon God in the uſe of means, it is there that the Spirit doth breathe, it is by the Word he doth Convince, as well as by the Word he doth Comfort.

A DISCOURSE OF UNBELIEF, Proving 'tis the GREATEST SIN.

John XVI. 9.

Of Sin, becauſe they believe not on me.

THERE were two Obſervations in this Text.

1. The Spirit is the Author of conviction of Sin.
2. Unbelief is a Sin of the greateſt malignity againſt God.

For the ſecond.

Of Sin.] Not of Sins, but Sin; the Spirit convinceth of all Sins, but chiefly of a ſtate of Sin, of Unbelief.

First, As the fountain of all Sin. It was the firſt Sin of Adam: Not unbelief of a Mediator, but the not giving credit to the Precept of God, and the reality of Gods intention in commanding. There was a jealouſie, that God had not dealt ſincerely and plainly with him in the Precept, as if he thought the prohibition was not ſo much an act of his Soveraignty, as an act of his Envy. It was the cauſe alſo of all the Sin that grew up to ſuch maturity in the old World; they had not Faith in that firſt promiſe made to Adam, and without queſtion tranſmitted by him to his poſterity. The Faith of Abel is applauded *, conſequently the Unbelief of Cain, the head of the wicked World, is markt. If Abels Sacrifice was more excellent in regard of his Faith, Cains was more vile in regard of his Unbelief *. The Apoſtle ſhowing that Faith makes the difference between the Godly and the Wicked, begins his diſcourſe with the two examples of Faith and Unbelief in thoſe Brothers. Abels Faith ſeems to be thus in his Offering; 1. He conſidered his own ſin transferr'd upon that innocent victime, thereby underſtanding the demerit of his ſin as deſerving wrath and death for it. 2. He conſidered, that this ſacrifice being the blood of a Beaſt, could not take away ſin, but that it was typical of the Lamb promiſed, upon which his ſins were to be transferr'd, and to whom they were to be imputed, and accordingly acted Faith on that promiſe of the ſeed, and deſir'd God not to impute his ſins to him, but to that Lamb which was to be ſlain; and this the very nature of his Sacrifice being bloody, and the character the Apoſtle gives of his Faith, intimates. Cain had not Faith in the promis'd ſeed; he brings an Offering to God of the Fruits of the ground, ground, not a bloody Sacrifice whereby he might ſignifie the acknowledgment of his own deſert, and his reliance on that Lamb of God whoſe heel was to be bruiſed, who was to be made an Offering. The kinds of their Sacrifices imply two different conceits in them: Cains ſeems to be only a preſent to acknowledge God the Author of the good things he had, at the beſt, or to oblige God rather; for the ground of all his wrath was, becauſe God did not reſpect his Offering, did not teſtifie a well-pleaſedneſs with it; his Offering was no ſignification of his ſin, nor a type of the blood of the promis'd ſeed; he own'd God as Creator, not as Redeemer *. Cain and his poſterity which infected the old World, diſregarded that promiſe of the ſeed of the Woman, ſlighted the offers made in it, and reſiſted the ſtrivings of the Spirit with them againſt their Unbelief, which was principally the matter of the Spirits ſtriving, becauſe he acted with them as the Spirit of Chriſt the Meſſiah *; and therefore to accept him with a ſence of that ſin, which was properly againſt that perſon in whoſe name he came, and by whom he acted; the Spirit was then in the World ſtriving againſt their Unbelief in the promiſe, as he is now in the World ſtriving againſt Unbelief in the performance.

* Heb. 11. 4.

* Illyric. in loc

* Catharin. Πλείονα θυσίαν more ſacrifice, more acknowledgment of God. Heb. 11. 4.

* 1 Pet. 3. 18, 19.

2. As the ligament and band of all ſin, John 8. 24. If you believe not that I am he, the Meſſiah ſent of God, you ſhall dye in your ſins; unleſs you believe me to be that ſeed of the Woman, promiſed by the merit of my Death to reconcile the World, you will ſink with all the maſs of your ſins upon you. If Unbelief be removed from a Soul, the guilt of all other ſins departs with it: If that remain, the guilt of all other ſins is bound and faſtned with an adamantine Chain upon the Soul, and that with more crimſon aggravations; where the notices of a Mediator have been revealed, there is a ſuperadded guilt to all the reſt. As Faith is the only means whereby we gain a pardon, ſo Unbelief is the only formal cauſe of condemnation, though other ſins are the meritorious cauſe of eternal Death. As no price had been paid for our Redemption, unleſs Chriſt had offered his Blood, ſo no application can be made of that price to us without Faith in that Blood; upon this, ſins are flung into the depths of the Sea; upon the other, they remain with their whole weight upon the Soul.

In General. That Unbelief is the greateſt ſin appears,

1. Becauſe God employs the higheſt means to bring men to a ſence of it. This is in the Text: 'Tis the work of the Spirit to convince of this ſin. The odiouſneſs of Sin to God appears by his ſending Chriſt to expiate it; the odiouſneſs of Unbelief to God appears by his ſending the Spirit to reprove it. That which calls for the Spirits deſcent from Heaven, in order to a conviction of it, is attended with black aggravations. This is the great errand of the Holy Ghoſt to the World; the firſt thing he does, is to open the underſtanding, the eye of the Soul, to ſee the malignity of other things, in order to convince the Conſcience of this, before he changeth the will. This is the principal Fort againſt which the Spirit plants his battery, and it is the laſt that is ſurrendred: A terrified ſinner would run from the ſhot that is ſhowr'd about his ears, he would reform, he would be holy, but crys out ſtill, loth to believe. The Prodigal will be next door to ſtarving, before he will come to his Father; and the Woman with the Bloody Iſſue will ſpend all her eſtate, before ſhe will come to Chriſt.

And indeed it is a ſin ſo deeply rooted that,

(1.) Reaſon cannot convince of it. Chriſt, the object propos'd, is above the reach of a rational eye, and therefore the ſin againſt him is not diſcern'd in its blackneſs by meer reaſon. Reaſon will not inform a man of the ſtupendous love of God in ſending his Son to dye for men, that were and would be unprofitable Servants. Neither doth it conſiſt with the natural notion men have of the juſtice of God, to lay upon an innocent perſon the ſins of guilty offenders. It cannot naturally enter into any mans heart, that he that by Power and Wiſdom made the World, ſhould deſign by the croſs and the fooliſhneſs of Preaching to ſave it; that he that is infinite in love and mercy, ſhould make his Son to ſuffer. 'Tis not therefore by the ſparklings of bare reaſon men can ſee the blackneſs of this Sin. Other Sins may be known by natural light, becauſe the duties to which they are oppoſite, may be known by the light of nature. As the

Spirit

Spirit only diſcovers the greatneſs of Chriſt, the excellency of his Perſon, the preciouſneſs of his Paſſion; ſo it alſo only ſhows what a Sin it is to reject Chriſt. As Faith is the gift of God ‖, a grace more peculiarly the birth of Heaven; ſo the extirpation of its oppoſite muſt only be from God. ‖ Ephes. 2. 8.

(2.) Natural Conſcience of it ſelf helps not in this conviction. It indeed maintains the quarrel againſt other Sins, and plains the way for the Spirits victory: But in this caſe there is no auxiliary force from Conſcience, nothing of a natural Intereſt to plead for Faith. It finds all the powers of the Soul prejudic'd againſt it, maintaining a War againſt the Doctrine of the Goſpel; and the tide of our own Natures carry us forcibly againſt it: the Spirit enters the liſts ſingly and maintains the Duel alone. So that what was ſaid of the Temple, may more properly be ſaid of this, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, ſaith the Lord.

2. It is a ſin againſt the Goſpel. Not as a killing Law, but an healing Command; a blacker ſin, becauſe againſt a better Covenant. 'Tis his peculiar Goſpel-Command; a Precept of the higheſt valuation with him, 1 John 3. 23. This is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt. Not only in regard of his Authority, (for ſo others were his Commands) but in regard of the affection he hath to it, it being moſt pleaſing to him, as ver. 22. intimates. The diſobedience of this Command then is moſt diſguſtful and hateful to him; 'tis his Command, as being the laſt that ever he will give; 'tis a diſpenſation from the rigour of thoſe Commands in the Covenant of Works; but is to be followed with no diſpenſation by any other. The ſin againſt it then is againſt the utmoſt gracious Command that God will ever give. Other ſins are againſt the Precepts of his Soveraignty, this againſt the Precepts of his Grace as well as his Soveraignty. The keeping this Command brings him near to to us to abide in us, ver. 24. the breaking this Command ſets him at a diſtance from us, and makes our perſons and ſervices loathſome to him. Wickedneſs againſt the Goſpel is greater than wickedneſs againſt the Law; becauſe the Evangelical revelation hath more of Grace and more of Glory, the ſin againſt it hath more of contempt and more of heinouſneſs; a ſin againſt that, is a ſin dyed ſeven times blacker, and will have a Furnace ſeven times hotter. 'Tis againſt the Goſpel, which is ſo holy a declaration of God's will that there cannot be an holier; ſo good in it ſelf, ſo profitable for man, that nothing can be better; the ſin therefore againſt it is ſo bad, that nothing can be worſe. The Law or Covenant of Works never diſcovered the Object of Faith, and therefore never enjoyn'd any ſuch formal act of Faith in a Mediator; and therefore takes no cognizance of this ſin of Unbelief. It not making known the perſon to be believed in, cannot make known the ſin of not believing. If the Law commanded Faith in relation to the Object Chriſt crucified, it muſt then acquaint us with Chriſt crucified. It would be an unreaſonable Law to enjoyn an act about ſuch an object, and never diſcover one ſyllable of that object to us. It doth not appear that Adam had any knowledge of Chriſt; the revelation of that bears date after his Fall, at the time of the firſt promiſe. If Unbelief were a ſin only againſt the Law, then thoſe that reject the Goſpel would be liable to no more puniſhment, than if they had been only under the Law; but they will, as will appear in the Sequel of this Diſcourſe. This Faith is the peculiarity of the Goſpel; and when Chriſt is ſaid to come preaching the Goſpel, the matter of it is Repent and Believe: two things that *never entered into the heart of the Law to conceive. 'Tis therefore a ſin againſt the whole Goſpel, ſince the deſign of that is to remove our ſuſpicions of God, and eſtabliſh a truſt in him: upon which account the Gentiles, that are without the Goſpel, are deſcribed by the title of men without hope *. Unbelief is a making our ſelves without ground of hope, contrary to all the encouragements of hope which God gives us in the Goſpel. * Mark 1. 14, 15. * 1 Theſſ. 4. 13.

3. Unbelief is a ſin againſt the higheſt teſtimony. 'Tis againſt the two greateſt Witneſſes that ever were, or can be, viz. the Father, and the Son. The Father in the Old Teſtament, the Son in the new, John 8. 17, 18. I am one that bear witneſs of my ſelf, and the Father that ſent me, bears witneſs of me. What did they witneſs? That Chriſt was the light of the World, v. 12. The Father witneſs'd this in the Scripture, Iſai. 69 4. I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles; and by the works he did, John 10. 37. Chriſt the eternal λόγος (the Word) bears witneſs to his humane nature. Since the teſtimony of two men of credit is worthy of belief, much more the teſtimony of two Perſons in the Deity, infallible in their teſtimony, in whom there can be no ſuſpicion of falſity. Therefore Chriſt ſaith to Nicodemus, John 3. 11. We ſpeak that we do know, and teſtifie that which we have ſeen. [We, i.e. my Father and I.] In anſwer to Nicodemus, who ver. 2. acknowledged him a Teacher come from God: therefore ſaith Chriſt We, God who hath ſent me, and I witneſs this. The Witneſs follows, ver. 15. that whoſoever believes in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. 'Tis a ſin againſt the Witneſs of the whole Bible.

4. As Faith is the choiceſt Grace, ſo that which is oppoſite to it muſt be the greateſt ſin. It hath as high a place among ſins, as Faith hath among Graces, and hath the precedency of all other ſins, as Faith hath the preheminence above all other Graces; and what Faith is in the nature of Grace, unbelief is contrary to it in the nature of ſin. Faith glorifies God, unbelief vilifies him; one juſtifies him, the other
* Gal. 5. 6. condemns him; faith works by love *, excites a love of God, and is excited by it; unbelief works by hatred: Faith is the Spirit that quickens all obedience; all the fruits of the Spirit grow upon the root of Faith; all the fruits of the Fleſh grow upon the root of unbelief: Faith turns common works into acts of Grace, as the Chymiſt doth Metals into Gold; unbelief turns all into Dung and Poyſon. Faith makes every prayer, though weak, an acceptable Sacrifice; our Prayers can no more enter into Heaven by unbelief than the Iſraelites could enter into Canaan.
* 1 Pet. 1. 7. As Chriſt is precious to them that believe *, ſo is he odious to them that believe not; as Faith is a conſent to take Chriſt for an Husband, ſo unbelief is a flat refuſal of him. Faith cuts off all ſelf-exaltation, Rom. 3. 27. boaſting is excluded by the Law of Faith, and by the Grace of Faith too; unbelief ſupports it. 'Tis a keeping up a pride greater than that of Adam's, a pride againſt God: 'Tis indeed the Beelzebub, the Prince of all thoſe Legions of ſinful Devils that quarter in the heart of a natural man.

5. 'Tis more odious and loathſome to God, and hath in ſome reſpect a greater demerit in it than ſins againſt the light of Nature. The killing an Ox is as the ſlaying a * Iſal. 66. 3. man *. Not ſimply the killing an Ox, but by reaſon of the unbelief in the Meſſiah, the ground of keeping up the Ceremonial Worſhip by Sacrifices after the exhibition of Chriſt in the Promiſe, which made a Worſhip formerly inſtituted, as odious as murder, which was a diſparaging the Image of God. Sodom was not defiled by its pollutions, as Capernaum was by refuſing Chriſt. Who can think of the ſin of Sodom without indignation and horrour? Yet the puniſhment of Unbelievers being greater than theirs, implies the ſin to be more grievous; becauſe the unſpotted righteouſneſs of God would not inflict a puniſhment above the merit of the
* Job 11. 6. offence: He exacts no more than iniquity deſerves *. Now it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for a City or perſon that
* Mat. 10. 15. rejects the offers of the Goſpel *. That City was an Epitome of Hell both for ſin and judgment, yet that defiling ſin hath leſs guilt, leſs filth than the rejecting purifying Goſpel Grace. The puniſhment of Sodom ſhould be like that of the Whip, to the puniſhment of Rebels under the light of the Goſpel, which ſhould be as the torment of a Rack. The ſin therefore is of a lighter tincture, like petty larceny to murder. All other ſins indeed ſtrike at ſome one or two Attributes of God, and of God as conſidered as Creator: But this is a formal injury to God in all his perfections, and as appearing in the richeſt dreſs. Other ſins being converſant about ſome created matter, preferring ſome Creature before God; this is a preferring that very ſin, the loathſomeſt thing under Heaven, before a God of Glory and an excellent Saviour. Other ſins are converſant immediately about ſome inferior Object, this ſtrikes directly at God himſelf. 'Tis therefore called the ſin, Heb. 12. 1. Let us lay aſide every weight, and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us. The name of weight is given to other ſins, but unbelief is called the ſin. Moſt underſtand it of Original concupiſcence; but ſince it is the USE the Apoſtle makes of the former Doctrine, Heb. 11. concerning the excellency of Faith, I think it is more conſonant to underſtand it of unbelief, the ſin contrary to that Faith he had been ſo highly commending. This is the provocation, Numb. 14. 11. How long will this people provoke me, and how long will it be e're they believe me? They were guilty of many other provocations; but God reckons their incredulity as the top of all. It flings moſt durt upon all the Attributes of God, and doth not only wrong the Deity ſingly conſidered, but bears a ſpight at all the three Perſons.

Faith

In handling this Subject I ſhall ſhew,

1. What is to be underſtood by Unbelief.
2. Wherein the ſinfulneſs of it conſiſts.

1. What is to be underſtood by Unbelief.

Firſt, Negatively, what it is not.

We muſt not underſtand by it,

Firſt, A want of aſſurance. Drooping Spirits may be Believers; there is a manifeſt diſtinction made between Faith in Chriſt, and the comfort of that Faith; between believing to eternal Life, and knowing we have eternal Life, 1 John 5. 13. Theſe things have I written to you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that you may know that you have eternal Life. There is a difference between a Child's having a right to an Eſtate, and his full knowledge of the Title. There may be a truſt in God where there is a walk in darkneſs, Iſai. 50. 10. If Faith be not aſſurance, Unbelief is not the want of it: If Faith were aſſurance, a man would be juſtified before he believed; he muſt be juſtified before he can know himſelf juſtified. The Object always precedes the knowledge of its exiſtence: the Sun muſt be riſen before I know it is riſen. If the want of aſſurance were this Unbelief, a Child of God, would be an Unbeliever every time God is pleaſed to draw a Cloud between Heaven and the Soul, and deny him the preſent taſtes of the hidden Manna. Unbelief is a ſin, the want of aſſurance is not; to have it is not our Duty, but God's Diſpenſation; he hath obliged the Believer to ſeek it, but not to poſſeſs it. Aſſurance is a Fruit that grows out of the root of Faith: the Fruits in Winter appear not upon the Tree. Becauſe I ſee not a flouriſhing top, ſhall I deny the exiſtence and ſappineſs of the Root? Mary when ſhe wept at Chriſt's feet, had no aſſurance of his Love, yet Chriſt ſends her away with the Encomiums of her Faith, acted before the comfort dropt from his lips *. The Characters of Faith may be written in the heart, as Letters engraven upon a Seal, yet filled with ſo much Duſt as not to be diſtinguiſhed; the Duſt hinders the reading of the Letters, but doth not raze them out. * Luke 7. 48, 50.

Secondly, Not every interruption of the act of Faith. Faith may lye aſleep in the habit, when it doth not walk about in the act. A man upon this account can no more be called an Unbeliever, than a man aſleep can be called a dead man. A Believer may, like Samſon, loſe his preſent ſtrength while he retains his life. Chriſt's Prayer propt up Peter's Faith from failing, when there was as little appearance of Faith in him at one time, as of life in a dead man; yet all that time there was a pulſe of Faith beating in him, which was made ſenſible by his Saviour's look. Faith is the Vital Principle, The juſt ſhall live by faith; and where this is, though in a weak degree, ſuch a perſon cannot be denominated an Unbeliever. Foggs and Miſts darken the Sun, but put not out that eye of the World: The Sun ſhines, though there be an interception of his Beams. Yet this is but temporary; a true Believer cannot be long without acting Faith, no more than a living man can be without breath, and ſome kind of motion. Thomas was not without Faith, though his Faith was at preſent aſleep, and had a defect in it.

Thirdly, Nor doubts, which may frequently ſtep up in the ſoul. Such there are in the beginnings of Faith, when the ſtate of the Soul is like that of the twilight, a mixture of light and darkneſs. Such a condition the ſoul is in, in its firſt converſion, as the Jews were when the Chains of their Captivity were knocked off, Like men in a dream *, ſcarcely believing the performance of that which they vehemently deſired, expected and believed in the promiſe; ſcarce imagining that they, ſo lately dead in a civil ſence, ſhould live and return to their Land. When Men are in a ſtate of Nature, they are moſt ſway'd by ſelf-love and preſumption; when they * Pſal. 126. 6, 7.

they come into a ſtate of Grace, there riſeth up jealouſie and fear, and they think they cannot run far enough from the other extream: This is a jealouſie principally of themſelves, but it redounds upon God. The Mother and Nurſe of it is a ſecret partial infidelity, the ignorance of the promiſe, power and extent of the Mediation of Chriſt. This is not an unbelief habitually ſettled, 'tis rather a misbelief than unbelief, and rather a ſtart of paſſion, a fit of infirmity, as Aſaph, Pſal. 77. 10. This is my infirmity, when he had doubted whether there were any mercy left in God, when he believed God had parted with all his Bowels, it was from a ſudden ſtorm, not a ſettled way of Argumentation. Not only at the beginning of Faith, but after a full grown Faith, there may be ſome doubtings: David was none of the loweſt Form, when in a Fit he gives the lye to God through the ſides of his Prophets, Pſal. 116. 10, 11. I ſaid in my haſte all men are lyars; I did not ſeriouſly and as my judgment ſay ſo. All men are Lyars, the Prophets too, who have brought to me the Meſſage of a Kingdom. He caſts the dint of his paſſion in the face of the Promiſe; this was a pang of unbelief, not an evil heart of unbelief; He was a man after God's own heart in his ſtate, though not in that act. Doubting doth not imply a want of Faith, but a weakneſs of Faith. Chriſt acknowledgeth the few Grains of Peter's Faith, when he reproves him for doubting, Matth. 14. 31. O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? A Divine ſpark may live in a ſmoke of Doubts without a ſpeedy riſing into a flame: When Grace is at the bottom of Doubting, there will be reliance on Chriſt and lively petitions to him. Peter's Faith ſtaggers when he began to ſink; but he caſts a look, and ſends forth a Cry to his Saviour, acknowledging his ſufficiency, Matth. 14. 30. Lord ſave me. Sometimes thoſe doubtings ſtrengthen our truſt, and make us take faſter hold on God, Pſal. 56. 3. What time I am afraid, I will truſt in thee. This was a fear of himſelf or others, rather than a jealouſie of God: Had he had unworthy ſuſpicions of him, he would not have truſted him; he would not have run for remedy to the object of his fear. The waverings where Faith is, are like the toſſings of a Ship faſt at Anchor, (ſtill there is a relying upon God) not like a Boat carried by the Waves of the Sea to be daſh'd againſt a Rock. If the heart ſtay on Chriſt in the midſt of thoſe doubtings, 'tis not an evil heart of unbelief. Such doubtings conſiſt with the in-dwelling of the Spirit, who is in the heart to perform the Office of a Comforter againſt ſuch fears, and to expel thoſe thick fumes of Nature.

Fourthly, Neither are temptations to Unbelief and unbelieving thoughts injected, the Unbelief I mean. If theſe be not entertained, though in regard of their matter they are unbelieving thoughts, yet formally they are not acts of our unbelief. If ſuch thoughts in themſelves were acts of our unbelief while they are diſowned by us, what ſhall we ſay to Chriſt, who had as great incentives to diffidence propos'd to him by the Devil, as are to any of his Members *, who yet was without the leaſt ſpot? The Propoſal is Satan's, the entertainment only makes them ours. A true Believer will not harbour ſuch thoughts of God; they may be forced in and paus'd upon, but they can find no ſtanding credit in the heart, but will be regarded as the hiſſings of the old Serpent. If you receive them as a flaſh of Lightning in your faces, ſhut your eyes againſt them, give them their Paſs, and command them to depart with a Get thee hence, Satan. If you pour out tears upon every aſſault, as Aſaph did after he had had a multitude of them, (Pſal. 73. 21. Thus was my heart grieved, and I was pricked in my reins; his ſoul and all his affections were wounded, becauſe of thoſe fooliſh imaginations of God.) I ſay, if we do thus, and run to Heaven for help, it frees us from the charge of a ſtate of unbelief upon this account. That cannot be unbelief that reſiſts unbelief. Whatſoever votes againſt ſuch thoughts, is not a friend to them. If they be entertained with a temporary delight, unleſs they fully overcome the ſoul, they do not declare us in a ſtate of infidelity. But if they are received, delighted in, applauded and grow to a ſettled and rooted Notion, and ſpread their fruits in the Life, the Perſon cannot be excus'd from the charge of Unbelief.

* Matth. 4. 3.

Fifthly, Nor is it an Unbelief of ſome truths through ignorance, provided they be not fundamental. Zachary was a Believer, and Expecter of the Meſſiah, Luke 1. 6. he could not elſe be ſaid to be righteous, walking in all the Ordinances of the Lord

Lord blameleſs: yet believed not that particular word ſpoken to him by the Angel, v. 20. and the Diſciples believed not the teſtimony of thoſe that witneſſed the Reſurrection of Chriſt, Mark 16. 11, 13, 14. Every error in the head, doth no more deſtroy the truth of faith, than every miſcarriage in the life through infirmity, nullifies the being of grace, or every ſpot upon the face impair the beauty and features of it. The Apoſtles, thoſe glorious Inſtruments of the propagation of the Goſpel, and the firſt commiſſion'd Embaſſadors of Chriſt, believed all the time of Chriſts life, and after his death too, according to the notion of the Jews, that the Meſſiah was to rear a temporal Kingdom. Herein their errors were the ſame with the Jews. But they had a faith in believing this perſon Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, and reſting upon him for ſalvation; ſo that they had an habitual faith in the perſon, with a partial unbelief. The Jews had a total unbelief in the perſon, though an aſſent to, and miſtaken expectation of the promiſe: Nay, after the ſpirit of God deſcended upon them, they would not believe the converſion of the Gentiles. Though the Scripture was more full of promiſes of that than the converſion of the Jews, and they limited that precept of Chriſt of preaching to every creature, as if it were meant only of that Nation; yet thoſe times were the richeſt for the knowledge of Chriſt, and faith in him that ever were: and though before that, they were ignorant of the deſign of the death of Chriſt, and did not believe his Reſurrection upon a declaration of it, yet certainly their habitual faith was not expell'd. Peter's faith did not fail at the time Chriſt lay in the Grave, for both the promiſe and prayer of Chriſt was a bar againſt it. Their faith indeed was ſtupefied, and nonpluſt at preſent; but it is one thing not to believe through weakneſs and ignorance, and another thing not to believe through wilfulneſs and neglect of enquiries. They did not believe the Reſurrection of Chriſt; but Peter when he heard the news of it, did not ſupinely reſt in his unbelief, but ran to inform himſelf *. If a fundamental truth be not believed, be not enquir'd into, if a man is wilfully ignorant of it, I know not how he can be excuſed from unbelief: Nay, if we have a doubt of any truth of God, and cheriſh that doubt with complacency, and are afraid it ſhould be a truth, and wiſh it falſe; I queſtion whether this be conſiſtent with true faith. I am ſure ſuch an one is guilty of unbelief in that act, becauſe 'tis an act of the will delighting in that which is contrary to faith.

* Luke 24. 12.

Sixthly, Nor is it a negative unbelief (carentia ſimplex fidei) which is in the Heathens, that is here to be underſtood. The Schools diſtinguiſh infidelity into negativa and privativa; the one is in the Heathens, who never had the means of faith; the other privative, which is carentia fidei debitæ ineſſe, is in thoſe who are acquainted with the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and therefore are obliged to believe. * The Heathens unbelief, ſay the Schoolmen, is not their ſin but their puniſhment, ariſing from the ignorance of Divine revelation. There is a natural incapacity of acknowledging, and believing that which never was diſcovered to them. A man may ſtudy Sun, Moon, and Stars, yet never learn ſuch a lecture as the death of the Son of God for the redemption of the World. Their ruine is not properly for the ſin of unbelief, but for the ſins againſt the firſt Covenant, and againſt the Law of Nature, known and accepted by them; yet their ruine is for the want of faith, becauſe thoſe ſins cannot be wiped off, but by faith in the blood of the ſecond Covenant; but they are not immediately chargeable with it as a ſin. But the unbelief of thoſe who live under the Goſpel, and believe not the report made to them, either from an affected ignorance, groſs lazyneſs, not enquiring into the truth, or a deſperate contrariety to it, is a ſin for which they are condemned. The Heathens are under a material infidelity, becauſe they are utterly ignorant of the matter of faith, never had any thing of Divine Revelation; yet their ignorance being ſo great, as to exclude faith, it is a true infidelity: But thoſe who have had ſufficient propoſals of the Goſpel, and receive it not in the truth and love of it, are guilty of a formal unbelief. The former neceſſarily want faith, becauſe they want the object of it; the latter voluntarily want faith, becauſe they have the revelation of the object made to them, and will not embrace it. This is not a ſin in the Heathens: If it were a ſin not to believe, the obligation to believe muſt ariſe from the Law of Nature, or from ſome

new declaration: not from the Law of Nature, becauſe that could not inſtruct them in the Doctrine of juſtification by a Mediator. There are notions of morality writ in mens hearts by nature, but none of the Goſpel; and naturally men are obliged to no other Obedience, than what Adam in innocence was bound to; but Adam in that ſtate was not bound to believe in a Mediator, not becauſe of any natural inability in him, but becauſe of the unfitneſs of ſuch a declaration of redemption to him, in ſuch a ſtate which needed no recovery, he then ſtanding by another title. But ſince Adam was obliged as a rational creature, to believe whatſoever God ſhould reveal, and ſo bound to believe in Chriſt, upon the revelation of Chriſt to him, ſuch an obligation indeed lyes now upon all men, as they are rational Creatures, and the poſterity of Adam, to believe when a revelation is made to them; and when ſuch a revelation is made to the Heathens, they would be condemned for not believing, becauſe in Adam they had power to believe, and loſt it. But till that revelation be made, infidelity in the Heathens is not their crime, no more than it is a crime to diſobey a Law, which was never publiſht and made known to the people. They can no more be condemn'd for not believing, than you would puniſh a man in the night, for not ſeeing the Sun before it is riſen, or for not dancing at the ſound of Muſick he never heard. The light of the Goſpel never dawn'd upon them, nor the ſound of it ever arrived to their ears; yet they are condemned for want of believing in Chriſt, as a ſick man dyes for want of a medicine to cure him, but his own ſickneſs is the cauſe of his death. They are only obliged by the Law of Creation; but the Goſpel was not delivered to Adam by the Law of Creation, as he was a common perſon, but after he had put himſelf out of that capacity by his Fall, and the headſhip put into other hands, the hands of Chriſt. The Scripture is clear in this: If it be the condemnation, that light is come into the World, and men love darkneſs rather than light *; the rejecting this light is not their condemnation, unleſs it ſhines upon them. And Chriſt * tells his Apoſtles, that if he had not come and ſpoken to the Jews, they had not had ſin; they had not had the ſin of unbelief, which is the higheſt condemning ſin; they had not been guilty of it, if they had not had declarations of the Goſpel by the mouth of Chriſt and his Miniſters; and though ſome think the Heathens will be judged according to the Goſpel, becauſe of Rom. 2. 16. God will judge all men according to my Goſpel; yet that is to be underſtood only, according as it is reveal'd in the Goſpel; for v. 12. he ſpeaks of the judgment of the Heathens by the Law of Nature, and the judgment of the Jews by the Law of grace: He ſpeaks of their being judged by Chriſt, as it is declared in the Goſpel, but not of the Goſpel as the rule whereby they ſhall be judged who never heard of it; for God doth not bind any to a meer impoſſibility, nor require more of men, than what he hath given man by creation power to do.

* John 3. 18.

* John 15. 22.

Secondly, But poſitively by unbelief we muſt underſtand,

Firſt, A denyal of the truth of the Goſpel. When men aſſent not to the Doctrine of the Goſpel by an act of the underſtanding *; when like Julian the Apoſtate they regard it as γέλωτα καὶ φλυαρίαν, a matter of laughter, a meer trifle; or as the Jews call the Goſpel * a volume of lyes; or as a French Papiſt ſaid of the Epiſtles of Paul, that he believed them no more than he did Æſops Fables: I doubt there may be many ſuch among us. I am ſure the practical unbelief among us, argues this diſſent in the underſtanding, to lurk in more than we imagine, as the foundation of all the other unbelief. The firſt temptation Satan aſſaults the ſoul with, after ſome awakenings of Conſcience, is to queſtion the matter to be believed. If he can hinder men from laying the foundation of truth in their underſtanding, he prevents all the ſuperſtructure, which cannot be raiſed without it. Many there are, who becauſe they cannot comprehend the myſterious ways and counſels of God, which ſeem unlikely and improbable to reaſon, deny the whole word; whereas it would be more ſutable to ſubmit to Gods will than to queſtion it. Such a dogmatical unbelief, which is not very rare among us, is an exploding the whole Doctrine of the Goſpel, which is inexcuſable and irrational, ſince men every day believe other things upon far leſs evidence than they have for the Goſpel, whoſe Divine Authority is witneſſed by the manner of its propagation in all ages contrary to the power, ſtrength, parts, and eloquence quence of the World, and ſupported by a concurrence of providence againſt and under the violences of men.

Secondly, A doubting of the truth of the Doctrine of the Goſpel. Many who will not openly deny it, yet queſtion whether it be true, and think that which is true, uncertain and dubious; this is unbelief. Such a doubtful opinion is no full aſſent, but a floating judgment, a ſuſpicion that it may be true, and a ſuſpicion that it may be falſe, like a pendulous weight which ſwings to and fro as much on one ſide as on the other. There is an uncertainty in the ſpeculative judgment, when a man knows not what he ſhould aſſent to. There is indeed ſometimes a doubting of admiration, which riſeth not from any contrariety in the heart to the matter propos'd, but implys a ſutableneſs of the heart to it; but by the greatneſs of the thing offered, it is dazled, as the eye by the ſplendor of the Sun. Such an admiration was Abrahams at the power of God, to raiſe ſeed out of ſuch a dry root *; ſuch a doubt had the bleſſed Virgin, which was joyned with a modeſt enquiry for better inſtruction ‖, her reaſon being nonpluſt in the manner of the thing reveal'd to her above the courſe of nature. † But where there is a doubt of diffidence of the great truths of the Goſpel, regarding them as of doubtful credit, this is unbelief, becauſe it is a judgment contrary to the Doctrine of faith, for we are not only to believe that the things reveal'd are true, but that they are certain and infallible. As all ſuſpicion is an opinion of evil with light conjectures; ſo a ſuſpicion in matters of faith is an opinion of falſity upon light conjectures: ſuch a ſuſpicion includes a judgment contrary to faith, becauſe without ſome judgment in the caſe, there cannot be an opinion of one thing or other. Since all men are in the rank of believers or unbelievers, a ſuſpenſion of our belief of the Doctrine of the Goſpel cannot be rank'd under the banner of faith; 'tis at beſt, for the preſent, a more modeſt refuſal, rather than a down right rejection: As a man is thought to refuſe a propoſition, when he ſeems unwillingly to comply with it, and will take time to conſider: He that is not with Chriſt is againſt him; he that receiveth him not, refuſeth him. If faith be a certain knowledge, John 17. 8. They have known ſurely that I came out from thee, then an uncertain opinion is unbelief. In many men there is this uncertainty from an acuteneſs of underſtanding, whereby they are dextrous in raiſing objections, as Mark 11, 31. 33. which makes them uncertain how to ſteer themſelves, like a needle between two loadſtones, which refuſeth neither, nor cloſeth with either of them. Such an unbelief there is among many of us, a believing a probability of the Goſpel, not the certainty; nay, ſcarce the probability, but owning it outwardly as they would do a faſhion.

Thirdly, Refuſal to accept heartily of Chriſt upon the terms of the Goſpel, which is oppoſite to juſtifying faith, when there is not a fiducial motion to Chriſt as the Center. There may be aſſent, and, as ſome Divines ſay, upon a Divine motive, yet a man ſtill under the notion of an unbeliever: For a dogmatical faith is not always accompany'd with a juſtifying, though a juſtifying faith always ſuppoſeth a dogmatical, or aſſent to the truth as antecedent and preparatory, or elſe including it in its eſſence. The Devils from evident experience believe there is a God, and believe the principles of the Chriſtian Religion (as we believe the Wind blows, the Sun ſhines, and the Air freezeth) and they have had experience of the power of Chriſt waſting their Kingdom. Both theſe faiths, dogmatical and juſtifying, muſt go together. There is a double act of the ſoul; the underſtanding to propoſe, the will to embrace, ſutable to the double object in the promiſe, which muſt be conſidered as true, and ſo move the underſtanding, as good, and ſo affect the will. This dogmatical faith is neceſſary as a glaſs window that lets in the light. This unbelief is when though men profeſs an aſſent to the truth with their underſtandings, yet they conſent not to it with their wills, and by reaſon of corrupt habits, embrace it not as good: When though there is not an evil head, there is an evil heart of unbelief *. They may well be ſaid not to believe a thing, who though they believe the truth of it, yet have no due eſtimate of the goodneſs of it; when there is a ſufficient evidence made to them, both of the truth and goodneſs of the matter reveal'd, they will not come up to the terms of the Goſpel: Such as thoſe are in every aſſembly, who though they diſſent not from the truth of the Scripture, and the dogmatical points in it, yet they never ſeriouſly reflect upon them, have not valuations of them: they may have approbations of the truth as it is rational, but not an eſteem and application of it as holy; they have no ſence of the need of Chriſt, nor of the worth of Chriſt; value not the commands to obey him, nor the promiſes to rely upon him, nor Chriſt to embrace him, nor the threatnings to fear him. The precepts as well as the promiſes of Chriſt are the objects of faith, ſo the precepts as well as the promiſes are the object of unbelief. The precepts are not the formal object of faith but of obedience, yet he that believes not the precept, believes not the promiſe, which is an encouragement of obedience to the precept. They then are unbelievers, who though they would have the ſafety Chriſt hath purchaſed, will not pay him the ſervice he hath merited; who poſtpone the commands of the Goſpel to the indulgences of the fleſh; who would have ſalvation but reject the yoke: they renounce the Articles of the Goſpel that would preſerve their ſins, which Chriſt principally came to ſave from; and God counts ſuch no leſs unbelievers than he did the Jews, who cryed, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, and would have nothing of the Image of the Lord in their hearts. So then, unbelief is properly a ſin in thoſe places where the Goſpel is preached; they are guilty of it who have heard of the Goſpel: We muſt not caſt it off from our ſelves to the Heathens; 'tis indeed their puniſhment, but our ſin. That is diſobedience to a Law which is againſt that Law, when it is revealed and known; and that is unbelief which is diſobedience to the Law of faith, when diſcovered to men. Denyal of the truth of the Goſpel, or contempt of the terms of the Goſpel, are properly and truly unbelief.

But of this practical unbelief, I ſhall ſpeak further in the ſequel of this diſcourſe. None will deny that the Jews were guilty of poſitive unbelief, who though they did believe the Goſpel, as it was vail'd in their Moſaical Rites, and firmly believed a Meſſiah, yet were oppoſers of him when the maſk was taken off: What they believed in the Old Teſtament, they rejected in the New. So among us, men believe Chriſt to be the Meſſiah; they believe him with their heads, and deny him with their hearts; they aſſent to him in the notion, and deny him in the application; they believe his Perſon, and reject his Doctrine.

2. Wherein the ſinfulneſs of unbelief doth conſiſt.

Firſt, 'Tis againſt God.

Secondly, 'Tis worſe than the ſin of the Jews againſt Chriſt.

Thirdly, It hath many other reaſons of ſinfulneſs in it.

Firſt, It is againſt God.

(1.) It ſtrikes peculiarly at God. Whatſoever is done againſt any inſtitution of God, is interpreted by God as done againſt himſelf. When the Iſraelites, weary of Samuel's Government, deſired his reſignation, and the electing of a King, God calls it a rejecting of himſelf, 1 Sam. 8. 7. that he ſhould not raign over them. The ſlighting a mortal creature in the ends whereto God hath appointed him, being a contempt of God by whoſe authority he acts; a rejecting of Chriſt who is the higheſt ordinance of God, whoſe words are the words of God ſpoken in his name, as God foretells, Deut. 18. 19. is a breathing forth the higheſt diſdain of God; though it be an enmity immediately againſt Chriſt, it redounds to God, becauſe Chriſt is his Chriſt, his anointed; the conſpiracy is joynt againſt both, a taking counſel againſt the Lord and his anointed, to break their bands aſunder, and caſt away their cords from them *. ‖ Let us caſt away the promiſes of an eternal Kingdom, and thoſe threatnings of Hell, whereby they would allure us or ſcare us into an allegiance, to ſubmit our necks to the yoke of their Laws: Let us ſlight all thoſe reaſons, and ſpurn away thoſe vain hopes and fears, thoſe cords whereby they would draw us unto their power. It caſts a diſhonour upon God more than all other iniquities; 'tis a departing from him after the higheſt and cleareſt declarations of his nature, a repreſentation of him under all the diſparagements imaginable, and under all encouragements of complying with him. As thoſe that truſt Chriſt are to the praiſe of Gods glory *, ſo thoſe that diſtruſt him are to the diſhonour of his name.

* Pſal. 2. 2.

* Eph. 1. 12.

1. 'Tis

1. 'Tis the greateſt reproach and undervaluing of God. He calls it a wearying of him more than other ſins, Iſai. 7. 13. will you weary my God alſo? The ſin of Ahaz upon which this ſpeech was uttered, was a diſtruſt of God, not properly this unbelief we are ſpeaking of. God had declared his intent to preſerve Judah againſt the invaſion of the Syrian, and to defeat the counſels of the league againſt them. To ſtrengthen Ahaz his belief in the promiſes, he commands him to ask a ſign as a ſeal of this aſſurance, and gives him the choice of what ſign he pleaſed, wiſheth him to put his power to the utmoſt tryal, either in Heaven or Earth, v. 11. Ask it either in the depth or in the height above. Judgments againſt the Enemies, from the bowels of the deep, to the windows of Heaven. And as he gives him liberty to employ his power, ſo he aſſures him of the tenderneſs of his mercy, v. 11. Ask thee a ſign of the Lord thy God; though thou haſt been ſo wicked an Idolater, if thou wilt repent, confide in me, walk according to my will, I will be a God in Covenant with thee, I will be a God to preſerve thee, and a God to judge thine Enemies; thy Jehovah in being their Elohim, and manifeſting my power for thee againſt them. Ahaz his anſwer ſeems to be a ſtart of a modeſt humility, though indeed it was diſobedience not to do as God commanded him, v. 12. And Ahaz ſaid I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord; he would not tempt God, or as ſome read the word אנסה I will not exalt God, the words import, I will not truſt God, I will ſend to the King of Aſſyria who can better ſave me than the Lord: As he did 2 Kings 16. 7. I will fortify my Cities, train my Souldiers, crave aſſiſtance of my Neighbours. Obſerve, though God in his meſſage to him, offer'd himſelf to be his God in Covenant with him, Ahaz would not accept of the proffer, owns him not as his God in his anſwer, I will not tempt the Lord, not, I will not tempt my God, which had been an argument of his truſt, and ſo had alter'd the tenor of his anſwer to an humble reſignation. Ahaz would not be beholden to God, he would not honour God ſo much as to give him an opportunity to glorifie his great power; if we read the words, I will not exalt the Lord: Upon this God promiſeth a ſign, v. 14. that a Virgin ſhould conceive and bear a Son, and call his name Emmanuel, and this ſhould be a ſign. I will not diſcourſe how this was to be a ſign to Ahaz, or the body of the people then in being; but take notice, every unbeliever is an Ahaz, reproacheth the kindeſt offers of God. God calls to men to turn to him, to place their whole confidence in him; but men reject the offer, run to creatures, and thus weary God. If it was ſo great a ſcorn of God, not to accept his proffer for a temporal deliverance, not to regard any ſign from him, how great is it not to regard the ſign of his greateſt power, wiſdom, and love, which he hath manifeſted in that Son born of a Virgin, who is Emmanuel, God with us? An unbeliever is ſuch a ſcorner of God, that he is not willing that that dirt he hath caſt in the face of God by his other ſins, ſhould be wip'd off; not willing to ſanctify that name by believing, which he hath prophaned by other ſins againſt the Law; will not embrace that Chriſt which God offers him, whereby he may in ſome ſence render him a ſatisfaction for all the wrongs God hath ſuſtained by him. As faith gives glory to God *, ſo unbelief caſts reproach and ſcorn upon him.

* Rom. 4. 20.

2. It robs God of the honour of all his attributes. He that believes not God, doth fling dirt in the face of all thoſe attributes, which were illuſtrious in the work of redemption; of his wiſdom which contriv'd it, of his righteouſneſs which executed it, of his mercy which is infinitely commended by it, of his truth which is engaged to make good the intent and purchaſe of it to every one that believes. Either men believe not that God will perform what he ſaith, and then it is an injury to his truth, or they hope for ſalvation by ſome other means, and then it is a contempt of his wiſdom, or that the things propos'd by him are not amiable and deſireable, and then it is a reproach to his goodneſs, or they truſt to ſome creature helps againſt his command, and then it is a diſobedience to his ſoveraign Authority, or they think him not able to effect the things he hath promiſed, and then it is a diſparaging his power and ſufficiency: Whatſoever attribute in God, is a ground of, or an encouragement to faith, is ſtruck at by unbelief; the grounds and encouragements of faith are theſe: God is infinitely wiſe and cannot be deceived, he is infinitely true and cannot deceive his creature in declaring what is falſe; he is infinitely good and will not deceive his creature, for deceit is moſt oppoſite to love and goodneſs; he is infinitely happy, and hath no reaſon to deceive his creature, which could not add to his happineſs; whereas deceit among men ſometimes improves their intereſt, but deceit in God would diſſolve the Deity; he is infinitely powerful, and well able to make good what he aſſerts, to confer what he promiſeth, inflict what he threatens. As all theſe are indiſputable grounds of faith, and are own'd and honour'd by it, ſo they are blemiſht in their reputation by unbelief, and markt with a baſe alloy; they are all fooliſhly charg'd by it, and made the common ſcoff of it. There is not an attribute but may draw up a particular inditement againſt an unbeliever, for an offence againſt its Crown and Dignity. And as there was not an attribute but God intended to glorifie in Chriſt, ſo there is not one but this ſin doth really vilifie.

3. Tis an undeifying of God as much as lies within the compaſs of a creatures power. He that denies any one attribute of God, ſeems to deny God himſelf, to ungod him, ſtrips him of the glory of a Deity. Take but one pin, neceſſary to the frame of a Watch, and you take away the perfection of it. Thoſe attributes which unbelief ſtabs, are eſſential to the Being of a Deity. God can no more be a God without them, than the Sun can be a Sun without light, or any of us men without a rational ſoul. Unbelief is not ſo indulgent as to deveſt God of the honour of one perfection, but of many; nor ſo mild as abſolute Atheiſm, which denies the Being of a God. It is a leſs ſcorn to deny that ever there was ſuch a man as Cæſar, than to affirm indeed there was ſuch a perſon, but he was a fool, coward, falſe, cruel, and the vileſt man that lived: 'Tis better to deny his being, than to count him infamous. Unbelief ſtrips God of his richeſt Robes, his higheſt Virtues *, which were more ſingularly glorified in redemption, than they were in the creation, or could be in the creation of innumerable Worlds, more glorious than this without the death of his Son for them. Not to acknowledge God in Chriſt, is to deny him that glory that the creation, and common providence cannot afford him. As our Saviour was tormented by the Jews in every part of his body, Head with thorns, Face with ſpittle, Hands and Feet with Nails, and wholly with reproaches in what was deareſt to him; ſo is God diſhonoured by unbelief in every perfection: As their actions denyed Chriſt to be the Saviour of the World, ſo the acts of this ſin deny God to be the God of the World.

* As the word is 1 Pet. 2. 9. ſhew forth the praiſes, ἀρετὰς, the virtues of him who hath called you.

4. It ſtrikes at all the three perſons. As all have an hand in the ſalvation wrought by Chriſt, ſo the rejecting that Redemption daſhes a blot upon all. They all ſat in joynt conſultation about mans redemption; they were joynt in council, joynt in publication of it; the Father in his firſt promiſe to Adam, and in a voice at Chriſts Baptiſm; Chriſt in his perſon, and the Holy Ghoſt bearing witneſs by the gifts conferred upon men after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, which was a teſtimony of his glorious entertainment, Act. 5. 31, 32. And we are his witneſſes of theſe things, and ſo is alſo the Holy Ghoſt which God hath given to them that obey him. The Father ſends, Chriſt dyes, the Spirit offers to apply; the neglect of this is againſt the wiſeſt council, the greateſt perſons in being. The Spirit was the great witneſs after the aſcenſion of Chriſt, by the collation of eminent gifts, whereby a Divine approbation was given to the Doctrine of Chriſt from Heaven: He revealed nothing but what Chriſt had before done, and wrought, and built upon that foundation, John 16. 14. he glorifies Chriſt, for he receives of his. He diſcovers the eternal counſels of God, the depths of Divine Wiſdom, which the heart of man could not conceive, 1 Cor. 2. 9, 10. the Father bears witneſs to Chriſt by undeniable miracles, the Spirit adds his teſtimony by internal operations, and urging the truths of Chriſt upon the hearts of men, Chriſt bears witneſs to himſelf by his obedience and death; ſo then, any ſlight of Chriſt is a ſlight of the Father and the Holy Ghoſt.

But particularly.

Firſt, It blemiſheth the truth and veracity of God. He that believes ſets to his ſeal that God is true *, i. e. he approves and declares ſolemnly the truth of that revelation God hath made *. Men fix their ſeals to contracts to ratifie them; faith is as the ſubſcription to the word of God, proteſting that what God ſpeaks

* John 3. 33.

* Daillé Sermon ſur 3. Jean p. 458.

is

is true: And it is the higheſt glory a Creature can give to the Creator, to acknowledge him a God of eternal and immutable verity. Since Chriſt whom God hath ſent, ſpeaks the words of God *, ſince what he declares is not ſimply his own, but the inſtructions of his Father; the acknowledging thoſe declarations to be true, is an acknowledging the truth of God in Chriſt. Now as the true believer glorifies not only the truth of the Son, but of the Father; ſo the unbeliever outrageth not ſimply Chriſt, but God the Father, whoſe counſels and commands are publiſht by him. As aſſent is a juſtifying God (as the People and the Publicans by aſſenting to the truth, John Baptiſt declared, are ſaid to do *) ſo a diſſent is a caſting an aſperſion of falſity on God. In common ſence, when we ſay, we believe not a man, we declare him to be falſe; and no better a title than that of a lyar doth this ſin give to God, 1 John 5. 10. He that believes not God, hath made him a lyar, becauſe he believes not that record that God gave of his Son. 'Tis as certain that he gives the lye to God, as it is certain God cannot ſpeak a lye to him. Thus men write deceit upon the promiſes when they do not believe them; Though I have redeemed them, yet have they ſpoken lies againſt me, Hoſ. 7.13. כפרתי though I redeem them, though I have promiſed them redemption by Chriſt, yet they ſlander me as if I were the falſeſt perſon in the World. We bely God when we believe not his threatnings, and promiſe our ſelves impunity under ſin, Jer. 5. 12. They have belyed the Lord, and ſaid, it is not he, neither ſhall evil come upon us; as if his promiſes were like the picture of a Sun without heat and light, his threatnings like the ſound of potguns, as if the one were toys, and the other bugbears. This is to repreſent God a couzener, and Impoſtor, though he hath engaged his royal word, to make the whole Bible an heap of fallacies. The glory of a man is his credit; 'tis an honourable character; ſuch a man is a man of his word; 'tis a diſgraceful character of God to fancy the firſt Truth guilty of lying; 'tis a title he hath joyned with his honour as a Creator, that he keeps truth for ever, not to part with it any more than with any other perfection, no more than with the title of Creator, Pſal. 146. 6. Which made Heaven, and Earth, and Sea, and all that is therein, which keeps truth for ever. Theſe repreſent him with no truth to keep, or no heart to preſerve it.

* V. 34.

* Luke 7. 39.

The guilt of it in this regard will appear,

Firſt, 'Tis in this reſpect a greater ſin than deſpair. Deſpair is deſervedly counted an horrid ſin, a wrong to the mercy of God; but this is greater. * Unbelief is againſt a Divine good as it is in it ſelf, for as much as in us lyes, we make God the author of a lye; deſpair is oppoſed to a Divine good as communicable to us, and therefore is a leſs wrong to God: deſpair queſtions not the ſtability of Divine faithfulneſs in it ſelf, but the communicableneſs of that good promiſed to the Soul; but unbelief lays a battery againſt the Divine Nature; deſpair acknowledgeth the truth in regard of the object, but doubteth in regard of the ſubject; they count the Divine Proclamation true, but think themſelves without the compaſs of it.

* Suarez. Vol. 8. Diſp. 16. §. 2. Parag. 3.

Secondly, It ſtrips God of the glory of his nature, who can as ſoon ceaſe to be, as ceaſe to be true. Some ſay, that if God ſhould appear in a humane ſhape, light would be his body, and truth his Soul; ſo eſſential is truth to the Deity, 'tis impoſſible for God to lye *. If we fancy him a lyar, we fancy him no God, becauſe we repreſent him doing a thing impoſſible to the Divine Nature, changing an unchangeable goodneſs into a hateful unfaithfulneſs; what is his power, knowledge, ſufficiency, if truth and faithfulneſs, the glory of all, be wanting? as ſincerity is the beauty of all graces, ſo veracity and holineſs is the luſtre of all Divine perfections. To give the lye is incivility to an inferiour, inſolence to a ſuperiour, a kind of treaſon to a Prince; yet this may be done without unmanning a man, or depoſing a Prince, but it cannot be done to God without degrading him to the condition of thoſe lying vanities we truſt to. 'Tis indeed ſo heinous, as that it puts upon God the character of the Devil, who is called the father of lyes, as though God ſhould be projecting nothing elſe from eternity (as the Devil hath been from the time of his Fall) but to mock and couzen the Souls of his Creatures into everlaſting deſtruction. 'Tis to count him worſe than the Devil, by how much they fancy him more powerful, but equally falſe. 'Tis ſtrange that a man, who knows

in ſome meaſure what God is, ſhould be ſo inſolent and blaſphemous, as vertually to charge him with a diſſembling nature; yet ſo unbelievers do, though not in poſitive opinion, yet by interpretation and practice. And as they make God as bad, ſo they make themſelves worſe than the Devil, who believes the truth of God, though he feels only the terrour of it, and nothing of the comfort.

Thirdly, It makes God guilty of Perjury. God hath not only obliged himſelf by his Royal word, but his ſolemn oath, two immutable things *. His promiſe conſidered alone is of eternal verity, he is true and unchangeable, he doth not promiſe one thing and purpoſe another: To this he hath added his oath, to remove all controverſie, and doubt which may ariſe in the mind; not to believe a man of an honeſt repute, when he ſwears the truth of a thing before a Magiſtrate, is a groſs uncharitableneſs, unleſs we certainly know, or have ſtrong preſumptions that what he ſwears is falſe: How black is it then not to believe God ſpeaking? how much blacker not to believe God ſwearing? As the oath of God, the calling all his perfections, his very Being as a teſtimony to the truth of his aſſertion, is the higheſt ground of aſſurance that can be given, ſo the not believing it, is the higheſt injury that can be offered to a God of truth. He annexeth his oath to his word for the encouragement of ſinners to faith and repentance, Ezek. 33. 11. As I live, I have no pleaſure in the death of the wicked. As I am an eternal immortal being, ſo ſurely do I delight not in the death of a ſinner, but in his converſion and life. How great a charge of perjury doth unbelief bring againſt God, whoſe condeſcenſion hath been ſo infinitely wonderful as to give us his Oath for a Cure of our miſtruſt, to invite men to faith and repentance upon the ſecurity of his own eternal life and Being?

* Heb. 6. 17, 18.

Fourthly, 'Tis aggravated from the clearneſs of the revelation. The higher the revelation is, the ſtronger arguments there are of the Divine Authority, and the greater contempt of the truth and authority of the perſon ſo revealing. If an Angel ſhould bring a meſſage from Heaven, what man would be jealous of the truth of it, when brought by ſo pure a Creature? But this revelation was made by the Son of God, who lay in the boſome of the Father, and is truth it ſelf *; to the propagation of which truth, neither the wit and eloquence, the ſtrength and valour, the wealth and intereſt of the World can lay any claim. It hath appear'd in the whole progreſs with a Divine ſtamp in the forehead of it. The firſt declarations of it were laid in the ſufferings of the publiſhers; could ſuch multitudes be thought to loſe their lives ſo dear to man, for a meer falſity? No man is ſo mad as to invent a fable, and ſtand to it to the loſs of his life, and whatſoever is of moſt account with him in the World. Would any affection to Chriſt have animated them to expoſe themſelves to the ſharpeſt ſufferings, had they had but any jealouſies that Chriſt was an Impoſtor? No, they would rather have expreſt their hatred than their love; (who can love another for a groſs abuſe of him?) or had they been ſo extravagant as to be deſirous to keep up the credit of their maſter, would they for it have made themſelves the publick ſcorn and off-ſcouring of the World? It could not be covetouſneſs or ambition, or any other luſt which could be the principle of their publication of Chriſtianity; the little wealth they had, they forfeited for it. No ambition could build any hopes of worldly honours upon the Doctrine of a crucified Chriſt: The Jews had lately crucified the Maſter, and were not like to honour the ſervants for a charge of murther againſt the Son of God. The Gentiles were not likely to receive it, and applaud them for it by any ſtrength of nature. Ambitious men take rational courſes for attaining honour; but this was againſt the rooted cuſtoms of the World which are hardly parted with; and contradictors of ancient Religions uſe to be violently perſecuted to death for the honour of their acknowledged Gods: But had ſuch principles excited them to a publication of this Doctrine, ſurely they would gladly have deſiſted after they had found their hopes without ſucceſs, when they found blows inſtead of honours; or they would have arm'd the profeſſing multitude, and conquer'd Countries: But they uſed not their Swords againſt their Enemies, but receiv'd the ſtrokes of their Enemies Swords into their own breaſts, for the defence of the Doctrine, and that not for a time, but during their whole lives; not one Sword was drawn in the defence of it by any Votary to it. They reſiſted no force uſed againſt them, though by reaſon of their multitude they were capable of preſerving themſelves, and offending their Enemies. Their Diſcipline was ſtrict, the Maximes of their Doctrines were advantageous to Mankind; they thwarted no Moral Precepts that were amiable by the light of Nature, but highly advanced them; there could not be a way of publiſhing it more clear and full to manifeſt it to be the truth and Doctrine of God than this. Had it been uttered by the voices of Angels in the Air, we might have ſuſpected them to be impure Devils, as ſoon as holy Angels. When the way of the revelation of the Goſpel hath been altogether Divine, without any taint of worldly means for the propagation of it, the not believing it, the not complying with the Precepts and Promiſes of it, is an high contempt of Divine Truth.

Fifthly, 'Tis aggravated from the performance of God's Goſpel promiſes. 'Tis a great ſin not to believe the truth of God when it is declared; but a greater not to believe it when it hath been made good. 'Tis not only a Word, but a tryed Word, as Silver tryed in the fire, which hath been found to be good and ſound Metal, and free from all mixture of baſer Metals, as Lead or Tin with it, Pſal. 8. 30. The word of the Lord is tryed, Pſal. 12 6. and there have been experiences of this in all Ages; not one among all thoſe multitudes that have ſincerely profeſs'd him, could charge him with falſity. God hath given the higheſt evidence of his veracity in making good the promiſes of aſſiſtance to our Mediator in the exerciſe of his Office. The promiſes were made to him as Mediator and Undertaker of that great Work of Suffering for us. The performance therefore of them to Chriſt is a manifeſtation of God's truth to us: for though Chriſt was the immediate Subject of thoſe Promiſes, yet God's Glory in our good was the ultimate intendment of them; and what was promiſed and performed in the Head, is influential upon all the Members, and is the main ground of Faith, and ſo propos'd in Scripture: The Reſurrection of Chriſt is every where ſet out as the ſtrong foundation of Faith in him: God carried him through the Gulph to a glorious Immortality. Since therefore God hath performed the greateſt promiſes, wherein his power could be engag'd, (for his power and truth were then tryed in the higheſt manner) 'tis a great diſparagement to him to diſtruſt his truth in thoſe things which require leſs power to effect them, after ſo great an experiment of his faithfulneſs. Unbelief denies that truth that is crown'd with a rich performance.

Again, This ſin would fruſtrate the truth of God in the Promiſes remaining to be fulfill'd to Chriſt, or but in part fulfill'd: God promiſed him a Seed, a Generation to ſerve him: This was an Article in the Covenant of Redemption, as the great encouragement of Chriſt to undertake that Work. If all were of the Unbelievers mind, would not the truth of this Promiſe lye in the Duſt? Would Chriſt have one Servant, one Subject, one Member knit to him? Every Unbeliever would have it ſo. He is a Child of the Devil, and like him envies God a Glory, the Glory of his truth and power; and like Ahaz, Iſai. 7. 12. I will not exalt the Lord, if the word [tempt] may be ſo read, as ſome read it.

The power of God was the chief ground of Faith in the Promiſe in Abraham's time, Rom. 4. 21. but ſince the performance, not only the power of God, which he had given an evidence of in the Creation, but the truth of God, whereof he hath given an evidence in Chriſt: and in this ſence the Fathers not knowing God by the Name Jehovah is meant Exod. 6. 3. They did know God by that Name: for Abraham calls the Mount Moriah ſo, Gen. 22. 14. But they knew him not by that Name in regard of the faithfulneſs and truth of God, which that Name ſignifies. As the Unbelief of the Jews, after the deliverance from Egypt, where God had manifeſted himſelf Jehovah, was greater than before; ſo it is greater now, becauſe it is againſt the higheſt manifeſtation of God as Jehovah, in accompliſhing his Promiſe in the aſſiſtance of Chriſt, and bringing forth the Mediation promiſed.

Sixthly, This is aggravated from our believing Creatures before God; whereby we leſſen the eſteem of his truth below that of a Creature. Have not we many times truſted the honeſty of man, who in his beſt eſtate is vanity, and given him credit for many Pounds? Not to believe the great promiſe of God in Chriſt, wherein he hath made himſelf in a ſort our Debtor, is to debaſe the credit of the unerring God, below that of a mutable mortal. How corrupted is that nature that will believe man, a wicked man, a lying man, rather than God, who is under ſo many obligations of promiſes and oaths to make good his word; nay, believe mans falſities before Gods verities? Do not men believe often the vain predictions of men, and their promiſes of help and furtherance of buſineſs of concern, and receive them with more gladneſs and confidence, than ever we received the clear promiſes of the Goſpel? The credit of God that cannot lye is of leſs value with men, and hath a lighter influence upon them than the word of a deceivable creature. What a reproach to God is it for a man to give no credit to his word, ſeal'd by the blood of his Son, and confirm'd by various repetitions, and yet will truſt an inconſtant element with thouſands which may be loſt by the fury of Winds and Waves? A Patent of an earthly honour from a temporal Prince is highly valued, when the great Goſpel Charter where the truth of God is engaged for ſecurity, is ſlighted, the higheſt faithfulneſs not eſteemed worth the crediting. When God is not believed, we muſt needs give credit to the Devil; if we believe not Chriſt, we believe the Devil, there being but thoſe two heads, one by Gods Authority, the other by his own Uſurpation. Unbelief then changeth the Devil into a God, a lyar from the beginning into truth, and the truth of God into a lye, and the God of truth into a lyar; it prefers the dictate of the Devil, and ſo owns the faithfulneſs of the Devil above the faithfulneſs of God.

Seventhly, 'Tis the greater contempt, becauſe God doth highly value his truth; yea, above all his name, Pſal. 138. 2. Thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy name. Whatſoever of Gods name ſhould drop to the ground, this ſhall remain glorious in all ſucceſſions of Ages: It ſhall ſtand firmer than the Ordinances of Heaven, without the ſtaggering of one Iota or tittle of it. Nothing is ſo dear to God as his truth: He will fold up the Heavens like a garment, and crumble the Earth to duſt, before one tittle of his word, of his Goſpel as well as his Law, ſhall vaniſh and paſs away *. God values the promiſes of the Goſpel no leſs than the precepts and threatnings of the Law; his truth hath an intereſt with his love in the one, as well as with his authority and juſtice in the other. The wrong is greater to us, when we are ſtrook through the ſides of that which is moſt precious in our eſteem. This ſin therefore, as being againſt the truth of God, is odious to him. As it is irrational not to love the chiefeſt goodneſs, ſo it is irrational not to believe the ſupreme truth. No man but diſeſteems another that will not take his word, when yet himſelf knows he is a mutable creature. How much greater is the offence againſt the God of unchangeable faithfulneſs, to put the lye upon him, by not believing thoſe truths he hath ſo ſolemnly proclaimed, and miraculouſly confirmed? Has not the eternal truth reaſon to be offended with men for not believing him, when he promiſeth and ſwears too? 'Tis ſtrange that if God had a deceitful and diſſembling nature, he ſhould diſcover it at no leſs expence than the Royal Blood of Heaven, and not deceive men without ſuch ſolicitous intreaties of them to believe in him through his Son. To count a man a lyar, is to ſtop all paſſages to a converſation with him; to conceive of God under ſuch a notion, is not only to deny any commerce with him our ſelves, but to count all fooliſh that addreſs to him, or are willing to believe him.

Secondly, It caſts a black aſperſion upon the wiſdom of God. The wiſdom of God appears not ſingly in the Goſpel, but with admirable variety of myſteries and contrivance, Eph. 3. 10. manifold wiſdom of God. A depth of counſel in the forming it, a glorious contexture of means for the compleating it; wiſdom in the drawing out the glory of his grace from the rubbiſh of ſin, in breaking the neck of the Devils deſigns, by thoſe means whereby he wrought our ruine, even by the humane nature, in bringing about mans redemption by the diſgrace, infirmities, weakneſs of humane nature, means ſeeming contrary to ſo glorious an end: the admirable uniting juſtice and mercy in one point, reducing them to one end with an intire conſent, the manifeſtation of the higheſt hatred of ſin, and the choiceſt love to the ſinner by one and the ſame act, all theſe are treaſures of wiſdom open'd in Chriſt. His wiſdom is more glorious in the contriving redemption demption than in laying the platform and model of Creation. That God might create millions of worlds is obvious to the conceptions of men that underſtand him to be omnipotent, and give more ſparkling evidences of his wiſdom in the fabrick: But how he ſhould make juſtice and mercy conſpire together with a joynt conſent, and ſalve the honour of all his attributes in the recovery of guilty man, is an abyſs of wiſdom which tranſcends the conceptions of men and Angels till it be revealed, and after the diſcovery muſt needs leave them in eternal aſtoniſhment; this muſt be no inconſiderable affair which is the object of the higheſt wiſdom in the Deity.

Now unbelief chargeth God either,

1. With folly in regard of the unneceſſarineſs of it. If men think they have ability to ſave themſelves (as all juſticiaries and fondlers of their own righteouſneſs virtually imagine) what a needleſs work was this in God to make his Son a ſacrifice for mans ſalvation? No wiſe man would ſpend his time to contrive a way to make Birds to fly, which have both wings, and a power to exerciſe them to that purpoſe; or to make Cork to ſwim, which hath an aptitude becauſe of its ſpungineſs. What is the ſecret ground of the rejecting Chriſt, but a conceit in man that he hath a power to ſave himſelf without him? for ſince ſalvation is highly deſireable, if we will not accept it from another upon his terms, we imply we can attain it by our own power. What is the language of this, but that God buſied himſelf to no purpoſe, and was employed from eternity in a needleſs affair? which is a moſt unworthy reflection upon God and Chriſt, ſince God being infinitely wiſe, he would not have purpos'd it, and Chriſt being the wiſdom of God would not have debas'd himſelf to Death, had it not been for the higheſt concern both to God and man. It had been inconſiſtent with the wiſdom of both, the one to purpoſe, the other to undertake ſuch a task, but for the moſt weighty neceſſity and the moſt advantageous benefit. It was the will of God that Chriſt ſhould take a body for our ſanctification, Heb. 10. 10. By the which will we are ſanctifyed (i. e. by the will of God which Chriſt came in his body to perform) through offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt. What doth unbelief, but blot out the characters of Gods wiſdom, the orders of his will, accounting it unneceſſary for God, either to prepare Chriſt a ſuffering body, or for Chriſt to offer up himſelf to God in it? It imputes the rejoycing of Chriſt at this body to an ignorance and folly in him, as if it were a folly in God to command it, and a folly in Chriſt to obey ſuch a command, a fruitleſs deſign and an unneceſſary employment. Unbelief indeed is nothing elſe but a cavil with the judgment and reaſon of God; upon this ſcore the Apoſtle chargeth the incredulity of the Gentiles, they counted the Goſpel fooliſhneſs, the choiceſt myſteries of Divine skill, were of no better repute with them than the nonſenſe of fools, and the extravagancies of mad-men, 1 Cor. 1. 23. Unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs.

2. Or if men do account the coming of Chriſt neceſſary, and ſo free God from the charge of folly, they at leaſt charge his wiſdom with a miſtake in the means of ſalvation, as if it were undertaken without precedent conſideration. Either Chriſt hath ſufficiently performed his office, or not; if he hath, why is he not accepted by faith? If he be not accepted, there is a tacit imputation in the refuſal of believing, that the wiſdom of God was defective in the perſon he appointed, that God was fruſtrated in his expectations, that he pitched upon a weak and unworthy perſon unfit for ſo great an honour, and unable for ſo vaſt a weight. Hereby they impair the credit of Chriſt, and prudence of God. It muſt be an act of wiſdom to intruſt Chriſt with the weight of all his glory, ſince God can no more be deceived himſelf than he can deceive his creature: But doth that man think it ſo, that will not truſt Chriſt with his Soul, according to thoſe terms upon which he is offered? Doth he not reproach God of weakneſs by a refuſal to imitate him, and depoſite the concerns of his Soul in the ſame hands, wherein God hath truſted the honour of all his excellent perfections? If God depended upon Chriſt for his richeſt glory (for where there is a truſt repos'd, there is a kind of dependance upon that perſon upon whom the truſt is devolved) doth not that man count himſelf wiſer than God, that will not depend upon Chriſt for the chiefeſt happineſs? He cannot poſſibly be freed from the guilt of accuſing

God of an high imprudence, who will not believe in, and truſt that perſon, to whom God hath given credit for all his glory; that thinks not Chriſt fit to be truſted by him, who hath been truſted by God with that which is of more value than the ſalvation of thouſands of worlds, and by this aſcribes a greater wiſdom to his own reaſon and underſtanding, than he will acknowledge in Gods, when he ſeeth no comlineſs in him, in whom the wiſdom of God beheld the greateſt beauty, and a fulneſs of grace and truth, when that which is gold in Gods eye is dirt in his, and that which is dirt in Gods eye is gold in his.

3. By this ſin the unbeliever doth, as much as in him lyes, fruſtrate the deſign of Gods glorious wiſdom, in not conſenting to that which the wiſdom of God hath contrived. The wiſdom of a man, as alſo the wiſdom of God lyes in chooſing the end and ſuting the means; when we approve not of the one or contradict the other, we deny the fruit of a mans wiſdom to him: In this caſe we do the like to God when we neglect the end of his wiſdom, ſalvation, and reject Chriſt the means and way to it; 'tis to defeat his deſign, and tread under our feet the whole ſcheme of his counſel; for if all men were of the ſame mind, God would have diſcovered himſelf to be an All-wiſe God in redemption to no purpoſe. As faith is a juſtification of God in his counſel, ſo is unbelief a condemnation of Gods counſel, and rendring it vain, Luke 7. 29, 30. They rejected the counſel of God in themſelves. 'Tis ſpoken of the Phariſees not being baptized by John Baptiſt: They did not publickly contemn it, but their non-complyance with it was a rejecting immediately the Doctrine and Baptiſm of John, and ultimately the counſel of God. When God ſaw man ſunk into miſery by ſin, and under an impoſſibility to recover himſelf, God in his boundleſs mercy and infinite wiſdom contriv'd a way of reſtoration, propoſeth it to men, and acquaints them with his reſolve how he would have men ſav'd; when men refuſe it, rebel againſt Gods decree, they reproach his counſel as well as his goodneſs. The word ἀθετεῖν there uſed, ſignifies not a ſimple refuſal, but rejecting a thing with reproach, and a diſſolution of it, a bringing it to nought. As the word is uſed by the Septuagint, Pſal. 33. 10. The Lord brings the counſel of the Heathen to nought: As God brings the counſel of wicked men to nought, diſſolves the whole frame of it, and makes their devices of no effect; ſo doth an unbeliever, as much as it is poſſible for him to do in himſelf, unravel the whole web of Divine counſel, and would make it utterly inſignificant. Againſt themſelves, ſome render it, in themſelves, in their own thoughts by inward pride.

Well then conſider how great a ſin unbelief is in this regard.

* Jenkin. * Here is the wiſdom of God making a match in Heaven between the Divinity and Humanity, Chriſt by the wiſdom and will of God ſtripping himſelf and becoming a worm, that you may be as glorious as an Angel. God might have employed his wiſdom in contriving your ruine, but he ſets it on work to build a ſcaffold for your ſalvation. Shall this wiſdom be deſpis'd, which doth as far ſurpaſs the comprehenſions of Angels, as the apprehenſions of Infants? When a ſcholar hath made a curious Book, wherein he hath wrapt up all his learning, an Artificer a beautiful Watch wherein he hath laid out all his skill, what a contempt of the learning of the one and art of the other is it, to tear the Book and break the watch? Oh how is the workmanſhip of God, which is admired by Angels, daſht by unbelief! How is the unconceivable art of God blotted by the wilfulneſs of man! God may well ſay to us, is the maſterpiece of my counſel, of ſo ſlight a value as not worth your conſent? Have I cauſed the beams of my adorable wiſdom to ſhine ſo bright in the Goſpel, to have no other return but a charge of folly? You ſee what blackneſs there is in the bowels of this ſin.

Thirdly, It ſlights the goodneſs of God. Unbelief vilifies that which God deſign'd to the praiſe of the glory of his grace, and renders God cruel to his own Son in being an unneceſſary ſhedder of his Son's blood. Unbelief conſiſts either in preſumption or deſpair; preſumption on his abſolute mercy, which while it ſeems to magnifie, it doth ſlight the conſtituted methods of his declared goodneſs in Chriſt; and, in a relying upon an undiſcovered kindneſs, impairs his ſoveraignty by preſcribing other ways of communicating himſelf to his creature, than what he hath appointed; or deſpair, which repreſents God under the appearance of a cruel tyrant glad of the deſtruction ſtruction of his creature, and changeth infinite mercy into infinite fury, as if a great multitude of iniquities could throw mercy into the depths of the Sea, inſtead of being thrown by it; as if the Clouds could diſſolve the Sun, inſtead of being melted by him: Preſumption turns mercy into careleſneſs, and deſpair, into cruelty. Unbelief in the general notion of it, caſts a ſcorn before men and Angels upon the unſearchable riches of grace; it would hew in pieces the Throne of Grace, and wipe off the blood of Chriſt wherewith the mercy-ſeat hath been ſprinkled.

Firſt, Thus it is a Diabolical ſin; a receiving the Devils accuſations of God before Gods declarations of himſelf. When the Devil was a murderer, he was a lyar *; he belyed God and murdered man. An unbeliever belies Gods goodneſs and murthers his own Soul. He repreſented God an hard maſter, envying man a felicity belonging to him; an unbeliever comes neareſt his nature; he ſlighted Gods goodneſs in forming man, an unbeliever ſlights Gods goodneſs in redeeming him; the one envyed God the glory of his work, and the other envys God the glory of his grace. * John 8. 44.

Secondly, 'Tis againſt abſolute and ſincere goodneſs. God can have no more addition to his perfections by redemption, than he had by creation, but a more illuſtrious communication of them to his creatures. If he could have any real increaſe, he had not been the chiefeſt good, infinitely perfect: The ſin might claim ſome excuſe, if God had any ſelfiſh aims, if his eſſential glory could have been made brighter by believing. But ſince he requires faith as a neceſſary diſpoſition for receiving the communications of his favour, and what he doth offer is an advantage to the offender, none to the offerer, to convey a goodneſs to us, but not to receive any thing from us, 'tis an inexcuſable contempt of ſincere goodneſs, a hewing at that redemption which grew up like a tall Cedar from the root of pure mercy, when God needed not have ſent his Son to dye, nor a Meſſenger to intreat, but have muſtered up an army of deſtroying judgments againſt ſinners.

Thirdly, Againſt the higheſt goodneſs that ever appear'd to the ſons of men. No greater act of love could ſpring from boundleſs eternity, than the parting with his only delight in Heaven out of his boſome for the redemption of man; ſo that he may well ſay, what could I have done more to my Vineyard? Iſai. 5. 4. Unbelief then is a reproach of that love, which God deſigned to commend to the World in the miſſion of his Son; and therefore the ingratitude in refuſing it, is as unparallel'd in the rank of ſins, as the kindneſs it ſlights, is in the rank of mercy. 'Tis againſt a Law more animated with love than any other diſpenſation of God was filled with; the giving his Son to dye was the moſt ſtupendous evidence of his goodneſs, whence faith draws the higheſt encouragement, and unbelief contracts the moſt diſmal aggravation; and the greater, ſince it is a contempt of a greater kindneſs to us, than what was ſhown to the ancient Patriarchs, who only had a promiſe of the Meſſiah, when we have the performance; yet naturally we do as frowardly reject the thing performed, as they did heartily embrace the aſſurance of it. Chriſt is * a gift, a gift of love ||, the royalleſt gift of God, ſpringing from unconceivable treaſures of goodneſs. Is it a little ſin to turn our backs upon the choiceſt gift that God can beſtow, as though this pearl were of no more worth than a pebble? What really is the language of this ſcorn, but as if a man ſhould blaſphemouſly ſay in ſo many words, God might have kept his gift to himſelf, and never have troubled me with ſuch a preſent? * Rom. 5. 15. || John 3. 16.

Fourthly, A goodneſs ready to flow in upon us. * The boſome of God is opened, the treaſures of his goodneſs diſpenſed, the fountain of his grace running: For men to be as deaf adders under ſuch charms, blind moles under ſuch beams, is as great a wonder of wickedneſs as the mercy is a miracle of goodneſs; and when the tenders of grace are made with that affection and importunity, that love rides upon wings and meets us at every turn; when we cannot open the Scripture, but we ſee a tranſcript of his heart as it breathed towards us from eternity, and view the deep counſels of God, and the tranſactions of old between the Trinity about mans redemption laid open: How great a ſin is this to ſcorn treaſures not only ſtor'd up, but ready to be given out, with the moſt preſſing arguments and ſtrongeſt obligations to an acceptance? * Reynolds Miſt.

Fifthly, And this perpetually. 'Tis an everlaſting goodneſs, a kindneſs firmer than the foundations of the Earth, or the Battlements of the Heaven, which God offers; 'tis an everlaſting mercy *, like Light in the Sun, that is never diminiſhed, the Element of Fire never extinguiſh'd, Water in the Sea never emptied.

* Iſai. 54. 7.

Sixthly, When we have abſolute need of it. How inexcuſable is the contempt, when Rebels in Chains trample under foot Declarations of Pardon! The neceſſity of the Subject, as well as the excellency of the thing, and the unbounded goodneſs of the Offerer; a neceſſity accompanied with an inevitable ruine, without a leap into the arms of this goodneſs, ſtill adds blackneſs to the refuſal. How great a ſin is it then to ſpurn at the beatings of God's heart, to account all the thoughts of mercy, as if they had been thoughts of vanity, to ſpurn at that which Angels wonder at, and Devils wiſh for? This is to treat unſearchable Riches, bound up in Chriſt, as we would do the moſt loathſome Dung. For God to find out this way, to offer his Son, to manifeſt ſuch condeſcending Grace, as to entreat us to believe; and for us to make our excuſes that we cannot come, to reſolve not to handle the Word of Life: this, this is a ſin of the deepeſt Dye, this will at laſt ſilence the voice of Mercy, and rouze up a roaring fury. If we could unhinge the World, caſt a blot upon the whole Creation, raiſe a ſedition of all Creatures againſt God as Creator, daſh in pieces the whole frame, conſume it to Aſhes, that no Reliques of a God ſhould appear in it; it could not be ſo high an indignity as the ſtriking at his Bowels. What is the glory of Creation, but as a mite to that of redemption? What is the deſtruction of the World to the contempt of his Son, the demoliſhing the work of his hands to the ſpurning at that of his heart?

Fourthly, Or, It diſparageth the power and ſufficiency of God. Man is naturally apt to queſtion Gods power, as though he were unable to bring his word into act. God therefore doth preface his Covenant with Abraham by the title of his Almightineſs, Gen. 17. 1. I am God Almighty, walk before me and be thou perfect. All diſtruſt grows up from a jealouſie of weakneſs, or wickedneſs in the Object of it, either that a man is not honeſt, and will not, or weak and cannot perform. Unbelief therefore ſometimes ſtrips God of his power, and repreſents him impotent. It ſcantles Almightineſs according to the narrow apprehenſions of the creature, as they * who queſtioned whether that ſtrength that had ſecur'd them in the Red Sea, and fed them in the Wilderneſs, could conquer the poſſeſſors of Canaan, and give them ſeizin of the Country. As though that God who had bridled the waves, could not as well fell down the Anakims, who breathed by his leave, as well as the waters mov'd by his providence. If there be a belief that God hath an intention to perform his promiſe, the diffidence doth ariſe then from a doubt of his omnipotence; if there be a belief of his veracity, there muſt be a jealouſie of his ability. The Apoſtle bottoms the faith of Abraham, whereby he believed he ſhould have a Son, upon the power of God, Rom. 4. 21. Unbelief is then ſometimes bottom'd upon a ſecret unworthy conceit of inability in God, as if he could not be as great as his word, as if he were like the Idols of men, without eyes to ſee and arms to relieve.

Indeed all unbelief doth intrench upon Gods power and ſufficiency.

Firſt, In not coming to him. 'Tis a departure from God, not ſimply as God, but as a living God *; A God that hath life in himſelf, and is able to communicate it to others; he departs from a ſpring to a puddle, and denys a fulneſs of life and ſatisfaction in that which he departs from. Certainly unbelief as it reſpects Chriſt, is a vertual denyal of his Deity; it diſcards him from being the living God, from having a power and ſufficiency to ſave, and as it is a ſin againſt his Divine Perſon, is a wrong to the power, life, and ſufficiency of God. He that runs from a Prince that offers to protect him againſt his Enemies, declares to all the World, that either the Prince is not ſincere in his offers, or unable to give him the protection he promiſeth. All unbelief at leaſt denys God the honour of his power, and doth depoſe him from the exerciſe of his ſaving omnipotence as to the unbeliever, and declares he can ſhift well enough with himſelf: He could not do any great work there becauſe of their unbelief. If all faith gives glory to the power of God, all unbelief vilifies it. If the power of God, as well as his faithfulneſs, be the Object of faith in Prayer (as it was of the faith of Chriſt, Heb. 5:7. He offered up Prayers unto him that was able to ſave him) then unbelief muſt needs ſtrike at that which is the great ground and Object of the grace which is contrary to it. An unbeliever thinks his Soul ſafer in his own hands than in Gods, and therefore will not commit it to his keeping. This is very viſible in convinced Souls before they come to Chriſt; how often do they cry out, can God pardon? can he remit? are not my ſins too great for him? Upon a diffidence of his power they are loth to lodge their Souls in his arms; they cannot believe he hath an arm ſtrong enough to caſt a blot, and daſh upon all their ſins *, as though a mighty rock could not bear up a bruiſed reed. * S. Bolton.

Secondly, In truſting to ſomething elſe. Man is like a Vine, he cannot ſubſiſt without ſome prop, a truſt and faith he muſt have, if not in God, in ſomething elſe; either in himſelf or abroad: he cannot depart from God, but he hath recourſe to ſomething elſe. Every motion hath a terminus ad quem, a term to which it tends. What then we truſt unto, beſides God and above God, we render in our thoughts more powerful than God. We cannot go to any thing for relief with a neglect of God, but we depoſe the true God, and create a new one: We acknowledge a greater fulneſs in ſome inferiour good, than in an eternal ſpring. A mans own righteouſneſs, weak ordinances relyed on with a neglect of faith in God upon his own terms, are as well deifyed as the belly is made a god by a glutton, or money by a covetous perſon.

Thirdly, It receives an aggravation from the demonſtrations of Gods power exerciſed about Chriſt the object of faith. Unbelief is a contempt of all thoſe attributes which were ſignally manifeſted about the effector of our redemption, whereof the power of God in aſſiſting him in his whole courſe, and unlooſing the bands of death, and ſetting him at his right hand, was none of the leaſt glorified in our redemption; ſince the power of God in raiſing Chriſt is ſet forth to us as a ground of faith for the imputation of righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 24. If we believe on him who raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead. His doing the greater work in the reſurrection of Chriſt, wherein infinite power was manifeſted, conſidering what a charge of imputed guilt Chriſt lay under, is an evidence of his ability to do that which is leſs. Since it is thus, unbelief is a reflection upon this power of God, depriving it of the due glory which belongs to it. God hereby ſhewed himſelf willing to be our God upon our faith, as he ſhewed himſelf the God of Iſrael, in bringing them out of Ægypt, and doth frequently upon their incredulity and murmuring, mind them of his power manifeſted in that deliverance, as if in all their infidelity and unbelief, they did unworthily reflect upon the glory of his ſtrength in that work. And certainly, ſince we are commanded to believe in him, who by the power of God raiſed the dead to life, reſtor'd ſight to the blind, conquer'd the legions of Hell, who hath done things impoſſible to be acted by the ſtrength of men or Angels; one that hath made the power of Princes, and the wiſdome of the World to bend to him, and lye proſtrate before him, and come under his footſtool; the not believing in Chriſt is a denyal and contempt of all this power, or a tacit aſcribing thoſe acts to ſome occult cauſes rather than the power of God: This is the language of unbelief. If thoſe things were acted by the power of God, why do we not firmly, really believe, and act according to ſuch a faith? If we do not, 'tis evident that we do not think ſuch things were acted, or that the power of God was engaged in them. What an unworthy charge is this upon God, when we will believe man who is able to do nothing without God, and will not believe in God who hath manifeſted himſelf able to do all things by his own arm without any partner?

Fifthly, It ſtrikes at the ſoveraignty and authority of God. 'Tis a debt we owe as ſubjects to God as our ſoveraign, to give credit to what he doth reveal, and to obey what he doth command. There is not only a revelation to encourage faith, but a command to enjoin it *. If men believe not, they pretend ſome reaſon for their unbelief; whatſoever any mans reaſon is, it depoſeth God from the ſoveraignty in his Soul, becauſe it hath a greater power over him to cauſe him to refuſe God, than Gods word and command hath to make him accept his Son. He that comes not for ſhelter, recovery and protection to that Head God hath * 1 John 3 23.

hath exalted, diſowns the Authority, as well as the Wiſdom of that Perſon who conſtituted him in that Office and Dignity. Since Chriſt is enthroned by God, and exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour *, and acts in it as Vicarius Dei, God's Vicegerent, he that refuſeth to be gathered under his Wing, caſts a contempt not only upon the Perſon of Chriſt, but the Authority of God, who fixed him in his Royalty. Murder is a defacing the created Image of God, Unbelief is a contempt of the natural Image of God, a Treaſon againſt the Head of the redeemed World: it implies either a ſupremacy over God, or an equality with him; either that he hath not power to make a Revelation a Law, or to enjoyn a belief of it, and obedience to it.

Firſt, 'Tis a contradiction to the reſolute and fixed Will of God. All Unbelief is a diſlike of God's terms, Rom. 10. 3. a non-ſubmiſſion to the righteouſneſs of God, affecting a power of choice our ſelves, debaſing the Royal Authority to our Demands, and that not to the Demands of our Reaſon, but of our Luſt. 'Tis to make the Lord of Glory kiſs the Scepter of our Wills, and his Sheaf bow down to ours. We would be blotting out what Articles he hath drawn, and putting in what Conditions we pleaſe, when we conſent not to what he propoſeth, and ſubmit not to what he commands. Is not this to pull down his Colours, and ſet up our own? 'Tis not a ſimple diſobedience, but an invaſion of his Authority, not to acquieſce in and comply with his Conditions, impoſing our own upon him, and indenting with him: we will have ſo much of Chriſt, and ſo much of our own righteouſneſs to join with him. Other Sins are againſt his Soveraignty as a Creator and a Law-giver, this againſt his Soveraignty in a merciful deſign to reduce his Creature to its happineſs as well as Duty. This Sin therefore implies a denial of God's Dominion. or having any thing to do with his Creature. It oppoſeth the return of the Soul under his Scepter, and would keep man at an irreconcileable diſtance from God. How malicious would this contradiction be, if our Redemption had proceeded from ſome other hand! Such an efflux of Goodneſs in reſtoring from ſlavery upon ſuch light Conditions, would have deſerved from us an intire ſubjection. Such a mercy had merited an abſolute Soveraignty. How much more malicious is it againſt God, who beſides the Authority merited by this mercy, has naturally an abſolute Supremacy over us.!

Secondly, 'Tis an imitation of Adam's rebellion againſt God. In being a God to our ſelves, or chuſing another. God will have the Soul of man in a ſtate of dependance on him: It cannot be otherwiſe, unleſs man were a God. To make an independent Creature is a contradiction; for that is to make a God. Adam's Sin ſeem'd to be an affecting an equality with God, to be God's Companion and Equal in Knowledge, which would inſer an equality in every thing elſe, Gen. 3. 5. You ſhall be as Gods, or Elohim, as God; not as the Angels, for God interprets it an affectation of equality with himſelf in the Ironical Speech, ver. 22. The Lord God ſaid, Behold the man is become as one of us. Unbelief would ſtill keep up this independency which Adam aimed at, and whereby he quench'd his own happineſs, and that of his Poſterity, and attempts a ſalvation by his own righteouſneſs, which God denied him when he drave him out of Paradiſe, that he might not invade the Tree of Life, after the New Covenant made with him of Faith in Chriſt, and ſo have any hope to attain Eternal Life by any other means than what God had propoſed. This Sin is an approbation of Adam's act, in an imitation of it. Pride againſt God doth as neceſſarily attend Unbelief now, as it did then. Unbelief was the firſt ſin, and Pride was the Firſt-born of it; Adam firſt caſts away his belief of the Precept, and flung away humility at the heels of it.

Thirdly, Unbelief renders, God as much as in it lies, unworthy of any Soveraignty. It doth not only deny his Authority, but it repreſents him as falſe, fooliſh, careleſs, cruel to his own Son, and ſtrips him of the honour of his Truth, the Glory of his Wiſdom, the deſigns of his Grace, the Arm of his Power, and ſo repreſents him unworthy of obedience from the Unbeliever himſelf, or from any elſe; for who can be obliged in reaſon to obey a God ſo coloured as Unbelief repreſents him, one that is not to be credited, that is miſtaken in his Contrivances, that hath no thoughts of goodneſs, that is too weak to protect his Creature? Nay, God himſelf would not judge himſelf fit to be obeyed, if he were any of thoſe which this ſin would faſten upon him; ſince all the perfections in God which are abuſed by it, are declared in Scripture as inducements to obedience: And God makes appeals to the reaſon of men to judge of his faithfulneſs, righteouſneſs, wiſdom and goodneſs in them. To call a Prince a fool, is by the Law of ſome Countries made high Treaſon, becauſe ſuch language concludes the Prince uncapable of Government. The wiſer Heathens looked upon the fabulous Gods of the vulgar, being repreſented vitious, unworthy of any acknowledgments, and ridiculous Deities. Unbelief renders God ridiculous to the World, and more among us than among the Heathens, who have abſolutely denyed Chriſt to be the Redeemer and Son of God; for they own not the revelation from God, and therefore caſt not that imputation upon him, as the practical infidelity of thoſe that believe it to be Gods revelation doth; for they acknowledge it in a pretended opinion to be the revelation of God, yet act as though there were nothing but falſity, folly, and unrighteouſneſs in the whole deſign.

Sixthly, It affronts the holineſs and righteouſneſs of God. If the ſetting forth Chriſt to be a propitiation for ſin, was to declare his righteouſneſs, Rom. 3. 25. i. e. his holineſs as well as his juſtice; what doth unbelief ſignifie, but that this act was unrighteous in God, that God was not holy and righteous in puniſhing his Son as our ſurety? Continuance in a ſtate of nature by unbelief, after the revelation of Gods holineſs in ſo eminent a manner, is an approbation of that ſin Chriſt ſuffered to expiate, a preferring it before the imitation of Gods holineſs, ſo much glorified in the death of his Son; an affecting that which is the juſt object of Gods diſaffection, ſince God in the higheſt manner that poſſible can be, yea more than in the damnation of the whole World, hath manifeſted his hatred of ſin in the death of Chriſt. The keeping up notoriouſly groſs practices, or unbelief, though attended with morality, is a valuing a ſtate of nature, againſt which God hath manifeſted his hatred; and therefore unbelief after the declaration of Chriſt, draws a greater guilt upon a man, than all ſins before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, and the declarations of the Goſpel.

Seventhly, 'Tis a ſtripping God, as much as lies in man, of all his delight. The ſervice Chriſt did, which was delightful to God, is contemptible to an unbeliever. Gods delight and his ſtand in direct oppoſition; 'tis a repreſenting God cruel to the Object of his delight; it makes God a murderer of his Son; it taxeth him with the greateſt act of cruelty in ſacrificing his obedient Son, the Object of his delight, and renders that act of God which was the greateſt pity to ſinners, and the glory of his mercy wherein he rejoyceth, not only a vain and a fruitleſs, but a tyrannical execution.

Firſt, It is a refuſal of Chriſt. The man that is Gods fellow *, his daily delight †; 'tis contrary to that which is moſt dear to God, ſlights that which is moſt precious in his eſteem. It was all Gods aim in all his actions in the World, ever ſince the firſt promiſe, to magnifie himſelf in his Son The revelation of his righteouſneſs in and through him, and the complyance of men with it, was the chief end of God in the manifeſtation of Chriſt to the World. The converſions of men to him are his pleaſure, Iſai. 53. 10. The pleaſure of the Lord ſhal proſper in his hand: What then is this ſin, but a thwarting God in his main end? robbing him of the fruit of his counſel, the incomes of his love, making him a loſer by his grace, depriving him of a joy in his works, by ſlighting Chriſt who is the center of his delight, the joy of his heart, the top of his glory? chaſing away all gladneſs from his Soul, that he ſhould have no pleaſure in that which he hath contrived with ſo much wiſdom, effected with ſo much power, but have an eternal grief in the miſcarriage of his work. 'Tis true, this cannot be actually done, the counſel of the Lord ſtands firm, the delight of God is above the injuries of men; but this is in the nature of unbelief; and if this ſin ſhould have raigned in Adam, and every branch of him from the beginning of the World to the laſt man born upon the earth, would not this be the effect of it? Therefore every unbeliever as to his part, doth that which would really be the iſſue, if all the Sons of Adam were in his ſtate. It fruſtrates the expectation of God, becauſe God in ſending Chriſt had an expectation that men would lay down their arms, accept of peace, reverence his Son, and manifeſt a joy

* Zach. 13. 7.
† Proverbs 8.

in

in the reception of him sutable to the joy of God in his Mission, Mat. 21. 37. But last of all he sent his Son, saying, they will reverence my Son.

Secondly, It is a privation of Faith, a grace so pleasing to God. Next to the delight God hath in Christ, because of the glory accruing to him by it, he hath a delight in faith, because it owns the glory of God in the redemption by his Son, and honours those Attributes in a peculiar manner which were eminent in it. Is there any grace he is more pleased with than Faith? Is there any grace he hath put such a dignity upon? 'Tis call'd a justifying faith *, a kind of an incommunicable Attribute of it; other graces are the attendants, this the Mistress. God is so infinitely pleased with it, as it stands in relation to the object Christ Crucified, that upon the appearance of it with a Christ lifted up in its hands, God blots out all the sins that stand upon Record, accounts the Soul righteous, opens his arms to embrace it, and seems to own it as a recompence for all the wrong he hath sustain'd. And what a delight it is to Christ, I shall have occasion to shew afterward. The Soul that draws back by Unbelief, affords God no pleasure, Heb. 10. 38. If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. It deprives God of all pleasure in his Creature; it disturbs the rest of God; this is spoken of those that were within the Church, and made profession of Christianity.

* Rom. 5. 1.

Thirdly, As 'tis a refusal of his mercy in Christ. Because mercy is the perfection he delighted to manifest in Christ ‖, it bars all Communications of it to such a Soul, because he hath linkt his mercy only to Faith in Christ where the Gospel is reveal'd. So that when Christ is not believ'd in, the Unbeliever, as far as in his power, frustrates the end of God in sending Christ, deprives him of that delightful glory he intended by his Sons Death, makes void the merciful contrivance of God from Eternity, which was the stupefaction of Angels, the envy of Devils, the expectation of the ancient Fathers, and the satisfaction of Believers, and above all, the delight and glory of God. So that you see what a vast injury Unbelief offers to God.

‖ Micah 7. 18.

Secondly, 'Tis a sin peculiarly against Christ. 'Tis a piercing him again, Zach. 12. 10. Some think this Prophecy respects as to the time the Day of Judgment, others, the time of Christs being upon the Cross: It respects I suppose some time between. The Prophet speaks of Christs piercing as a thing past, and at the time of his Passion there was not such a mourning among the Jews as is here describ'd; neither doth it respect the times of the day of Judgment; the mourning then of the condemn'd World shall not be from a spirit of grace and supplication; but from a spirit of horrour and despair. The result will be, since those that had not an hand in the Death of Christs Body, are said here to pierce Christ; it must be understood of a piercing by unbelief, which is an approbation of the Jews Cruelty towards him. Any man is guilty of an act who doth approve an act, though he was not formally an agent in it: and indeed the Jews did not actually pierce him, but the hand of a Roman Souldier, yet they are said to do it, because they consented to the act. 'Tis a piercing of Christ *: An Unbeliever is a Jew in his heart and life, though a Christian in profession; though he doth verbally acknowledge the coming of Christ, he doth really deny it. 'Tis an unworthy usage of Christ; it is a using him, as he speaks of himself in the Psalm, as a worm and no man, trampling upon him with more violence and contempt than they would upon a Worm. The vilest man in the World never suffer'd so many reproaches, as Christ hath suffer'd by notional and practical incredulity, since he went to Heaven. Judas that betray'd him was never so much hated by the highest Professor and sincerest Christian, as Christ betrayed by him is slighted by Unbelief, as if he were set up for a sign to be spoken against. As his visage was marr'd more than any mans while he was upon the Earth ‖, so his glory is stain'd more than any mans since he went to Heaven; the natural darkness of men is so thick, that instead of being dissipated by the light as other darkness is, 'tis so obstinate that it excludes all the divine brightness of Christ from the understanding and Consciences of the most part of men *: It contemns by a desperate ingratitude the person of the Son of God, the truth of his Word, the bowels of his Love, the power of his Miracles, the ministry of his Death, the glory of his Ascension, and the majesty of his Offices: and accounts the whole History of the Gospel no better than a Narration of lies.

* נקב which signifies perforare, is put for βλασφημεῖν, Levit. 24. 11. Grotius in 12. Zach. 10.

‖ Isai. 52. 14.

* John 1. 5. The light shines in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. Amyrant. in loc.

And

And though men never ſaw the perſon of Chriſt, yet they offer violence to it, by ſlighting the marks of it he hath left in the World. * As a man is guilty of treaſon by abuſing the ſtatue or image of the Prince, by defacing his Seal, though he never ſaw the perſon of the Prince; he violates his authority that regards it not, owns not any act of grace from him, though he never ſaw his face; ſo are men guilty of trampling on the blood of Chriſt, when they count it as a trifle, and unprofitable for their ſalvation, though they never ſaw Chriſt, nor ever had any communion with him, Heb. 10. 29. when they count the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing.

* Maccov. Metaphyſ. l. 1. c. 12.

Firſt, 'Tis a nullifying the work of his mediation and death. It denys him the honour of his meritorious paſſion, vilifies the glory of his mediation, from the firſt counſel to the laſt act, ſheds his blood afreſh, and pours it ſlightly upon the ground, and tramples that ineſtimable ſacrifice like dirt under the feet. No ſin doth ſo immediately oppoſe Chriſt as Mediator: This is the great Antichriſt in the World; though this ſin among Chriſtians at large, denyes him not in his perſon, it doth in his offices. As faith puts a value upon the Prieſthood of Chriſt, eyes his death as a perfect atonement, leans upon him as a ſacrifice upon the Croſs, and an Advocate in Heaven; ſo unbelief being contrary to this grace, undervalues all that faith eſteems. It fruſtrates the end of his coming, which was to reduce us to God, from whom we had receded by unworthy jealouſies of him.

Firſt, It renders the deſign of his coming a vanity, when it receives not the fruits of it. As he that will not uſe the creatures for thoſe ends for which God created them, that ſhuts his eyes againſt the Sun, that ſtops his mouth wilfully againſt his appointed food, writes a vanity upon the creation of God; ſo he that doth not receive Chriſt upon thoſe terms God offers him, and for thoſe ends God ſets him forth, writes vanity upon the whole work of redemption, and makes the grace of God to be in vain *. Neither the pains of Chriſt, the blood of Chriſt, nor the righteouſneſs of Chriſt attain their end in ſuch a perſon, who offers to him the indignity of unbelief, and makes him ſpend his ſtrength in vain and for naught, Iſai. 49. 4 Some think it is Chriſts complaint of the incredulity of the Jews, and it will extend to all men that make no account of the travel of his Soul, his unwearied pains and bloody paſſion, whereby they argue him to be a fruitleſs and a needleſs Mediator, working miracles, and ſhedding his blood to no purpoſe; and fix themſelves in a ſtate, as if Chriſt had never dyed in reſpect of benefit, though not in regard of guilt.

* 2 Cor. 6. 1.

Secondly, Its a vilifying the price of redemption. * Accounting that blood wherein Chriſt was ſanctifyed, demonſtrated to be the Son of God and Saviour of the World, and for which he was abſolved from guilt, and counted righteous before God *, and advanced that he might ſave them that come unto God by him, a common, an inefficacious thing.

* Cocceius de Fœde. Theſ. 200.

* Heb. 9. 28.

Thirdly, Yea, a regarding it as the blood of a malefactor. 'Tis impoſſible that an unbeliever can regard it only as the blood of an innocent man, that may cry for vengeance like Abels, and be as weak as Abel's blood to purchaſe ſalvation for the Soul; 'tis impoſſible that this, though bad enough, in denying the efficacy of his blood can only be the reflection: But he muſt needs regard it as the blood of the higheſt malefactor that ever yet was in the world: In not accepting it as the blood of God, he renders Chriſt more criminal than Judas, and chargeth him with a falſity in declaring himſelf to be the Son of God, and the mediator of the World. If Chriſt be the Son of God, and the Mediator of the World, why is he not cordially owned to be ſo? if he be not accepted heartily under thoſe notions, the refuſal of him declares he is not the perſon and officer of God, as he affirmed himſelf to be, and ſo renders Chriſt, not only void of innocence, but guilty of the higheſt affront to the Majeſty of God. He that refuſeth him, diſowns his filiation, denys him to be the Son of God, ſees not a glory in him as of the only begotten of the Father *; what faith the Apoſtle aſſerts, unbelief denys; an unbeliever implys the truth of what the Jews falſely writ to the Synagogues after the death of Chriſt, that he was ἄθεος καὶ ἄνομος, an Atheiſt *.

* John 1. 14.

* Grot. in Mat. 27. 33.

Thus do all perſons that think to attain ſalvation by any righteouſneſs of their own. Whoſoever thinks he is able to enrich himſelf with ſpiritual bleſſings, to weave a covering of his own righteouſneſs, and make payments of his old debts by a heap of good works, deſpiſeth Chriſts payment, ſlights the righteouſneſs of the God of Heaven, abuſeth that Saviour who came to knock off our bolts, heal our wounds, and cloath our Souls. He that thinks to enter into Heaven, and not by him, is a thief and a robber; he robs God of the honour of his own conſtitution, and Chriſt of the glory his mediatory office, and the right of his purchace. And thus do all perſons who walk contrary to the end of Chriſts coming, who are enemies to that ſpiritual life Chriſt came to ſet up, and friends to that ſenſual life he came to pull down; ſuch may pretend friendſhip to his perſon, but are enemies to his Croſs * ; they defame the end of his ſuffering, as much as the Jews defam'd him in it.

* Phil. 3. 18, 19.

Secondly, 'Tis a denying the love of Chriſt. 'Tis a ſtab at his heart, an outrage of his tender bowels: He ſuffered willingly all thoſe torments which were inflicted on him, to remove from us the neceſſity of ſuffering, which ſin had involv'd us in, had he not ſtept in to take our burdens upon his own ſhoulders. If we will not believe in him, we deny thoſe choice affections which engag'd him in the undertaking, and were illuſtrious in the execution. 'Tis as if we ſhould think the Covenant of Grace more ſevere than that of Works; as if Chriſt were our Enemy rather than our Redeemer, and came rather to kindle a Hell for our torment, than to quench Hell for us by his Blood, as if he came to ſuffer for our miſery and not for our happineſs. Was there any need of his coming to make us more miſerable than we were before? Did it conſiſt with the goodneſs of God to expoſe his Son to ſuffering, to make the Creature more wretched ſince the miſery we were ſunk into, was more than we were able to bear? If it were an act of love in Chriſt, why is he not embraced by the choiceſt and moſt affectionate faith? If he be not thus embrac'd, it clearly implys that you have no imagination of any affection in him, that he is rather a formidable Perſon than an affectionate Saviour. 'Tis as great a ſlight of his love, as if he ſhould open Heaven, and make the proffers of the Goſpel from thence. If Chriſt ſhould ſpeak from Heaven in an audible voice, and propound the Goſpel Articles in the moſt affectionate ſtrains, would not the contempt of it be judged by all men to be an ungrateful ſcorn of his love? He doth ſpeak from Heaven in his word as really as he bled upon the Croſs in his Perſon (Heb. 12. 15. If we turn away from him that ſpeaks from Heaven) and unbelief doth inſolently abuſe the riches of his unſpeakable goodneſs, and ſlight the blood ſhed with an adorable love, without which the anger of God could not be appeaſed, not the fire of Hell prepared for ſinners, extinguiſht, without which the filthineſs of the Soul could not be cleanſed, nor the glories of Heaven opened; in deſpiſing this love, we deſpiſe all the fruits of it which the believer enjoys. Since Chriſt was ſo willing to offer up himſelf to death that we might be freed, and the power of the Devil put to an end in us, the keeping up the power of the Devil in its full ſtrength, as unbelief doth, is a ſlighting the main kindneſs our great Benefactor intended to beſtow upon us.

Thirdly, It denys the wiſdom of Chriſt. It chargeth him with folly and inconſiderateneſs, in undertaking a task that was not worth his pains, in ſuffering for the purchace of pardon and ſalvation, which might be gain'd without ſo much ado; what did Chriſt aim at in the ſhedding of his blood, but the appeaſing of the wrath of God, ſanctification of the Souls of men, the opening the gates of Heaven, which juſtice, provoked by ſin, had barr'd againſt them? If men do not believe, certainly they have ſome conceits, that either theſe benefits are not deſirable and worth the enquiring after, and labouring for, or that they may be procured by other means at an eaſier rate than faith in the Blood of Chriſt. And is not this a charge of folly brought againſt Chriſt, who paid ſo dear for that, which they ſuppoſe they can have upon a cheaper account, and without being beholden to him? Thus ſome interpret that place, Iſai. 42. 19. Who is blind as my Servant, or deaf as my Meſſenger that I have ſent? who is blind as the Lords Servant? As if God ſhould introduce the unbelieving Jews, charging Chriſt with blindneſs and folly, who is the wiſdom of God, and regarding that as contemptible, which was honourable in Gods account. And indeed it ſeems

to be the true ſence of the place, ſince all the foregoing part of the chapter is a proclaiming of Chriſt, who v. 1. is particularly call'd Gods Servant. An Unbeliever injures the wiſdom of Chriſt in not following his pattern; he truſted God upon his bare word, and Oath, and promiſes of aſſiſtance in his work, and a good iſſue and ſucceſs; he that will not give credit to the promiſe of God for Salvation by Chriſt, implies that God is unworthy to be truſted, that his word is of no value, that all that truſt him are unwiſe, and conſequently that Chriſt himſelf who exercis'd the greateſt truſt of any in the World, was the moſt unwiſe of any. When we follow not the practice of another, we imply ſome defect in the wiſdom of that perſon we refuſe to imitate. This is truly the language of Unbelief; and the Gentiles at the firſt Preaching of Chriſt were ſo beſotted with their own imaginary wiſdom, that they thought the Preaching of the Croſs Fooliſhneſs, and a meer extravagancy of man.

Fourthly, It wrongs the authority of Chriſt. It receives an aggravation from the greatneſs of the perſon that publiſht the Doctrine of Faith. All Laws are to be attended with a greater veneration, by how much the more eminent the wiſdom and authority of the perſon is. It was the Son of God who died by the Command and Commiſſion of the Father. It is the Son of God that hath left the Command of Faith upon Record; it is the Son of God who is the object of that Faith we are commanded to have and exerciſe. The not believing therefore is a crime of the higheſt nature, in denying all the authority deriv'd to Chriſt from the Father. Upon this ſcore Chriſt chargeth the unbelieving Jews, Joh. 5. 43. I am come in my Fathers name, and you receive me not. * You have evident marks of a divine authority in me; but becauſe my Doctrine accords not with the intereſts of your ambition and imperious Luſts, therefore you receive me not. If another ſhall come in his own name, who ſhall flatter your Ambition, and preſerve the Dominion of your beloved Luſts, him you will receive. Thus is the authority of Chriſt ſlighted by this ſin, when the terms upon which he offers himſelf are diſlikt, when we would bring down Chriſt from his Throne, to condeſcend to the conditions we would impoſe upon him; when we ſet the Crown upon the head of ſome darling ſin, which we ſhould ſet upon the head of Chriſt.

Fifthly, It denies the excellency of Chriſt. To work Faith there is neceſſary, Firſt, a clear propoſal of the object ſupported with ſuch reaſons and allurements that have a ſtrength in themſelves to work upon the mind. But Unbelief denies any ſuch attractives in the nature of the object preſented to move the will to the embracing of it. It ſees more righteouſneſs in a Barabbas, Soul-Murdering Luſts, than in a Soul-ſaving Redeemer. When all the labour, ſtudy, thoughts, are for the pleaſures of ſin, the ſatisfaction of ſelf, the increaſe of profit, and Men ſcarce let Chriſt have a thouſandth part of the thoughts. If draff and ſwill be preferr'd before a Pearl, it is becauſe a Swine ſees no excellency in it. As Faith counts all things dung for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt ‖. So Unbelief accounts the perſon, offices, Doctrine and Laws of Chriſt dung and droſs in compariſon of the excellency of Self-righteouſneſs, Self-wiſdom, Self-dependance, pleaſing temptations and gilded nothings As Faith accounts all things droſs to Jeſus Chriſt, ſo Unbelief accounts Chriſt droſs to Self. How injurious is this to the worth of an Heavenly object! to value a Feather above a Mountain of Gold, a Box of Poyſon before a Pearl of the greateſt price, when nothing can come in competition with him, but what is infinitely inferiour to him. This Unbelief ſees no glory, taſts no pleaſure, conceives no fullneſs, in that which God hath furniſht with an unconceivable glory, and reſts in with an eternal delight; It repreſents Chriſt empty whom God ſtor'd with a communicable fullneſs; a poor nothing, who is a rich treaſure. It eſteems Chriſt who is an over-flowing Fountain, as if he were no better than a broken Ciſtern. 'Tis moſt certain, that while God is not chiefly affected, whatſoever is in eſteem above him, is valued as more excellent than God; ſo when Chriſt is not truſted, but a Creature hung upon as the object of relyance, that Creature ſo receiv'd is more excellent in eſteem than that Chriſt who is refus'd.

Sixthly, It denies the ſufficiency of Chriſt. The greatneſs of his Prieſthood, the fullneſs of his ſatisfaction, the ſufficiency of him as the Son of God to make a prevailing interceſſion, as if he had not a fullneſs of living Waters to beſtow, or not goodneſs enough to communicate them; as though he were too ſcanty to free us from all miſery, and fill us with all felicity; where no truſt is repoſed in him, it implies that no benefit can be expected from him. The ſatisfaction of Chriſt was more efficacious to take away ſin and pleaſe God, than the ſin of man had guilt to diſpleaſe him, and of more value to outweigh the ſins of the whole World, than they had weight to preſs man down to the Lake of Fire; Becauſe of the Marriage between the divinity and the humanity; whereby that perſon who was man, was infinite in regard of his divine nature. Faith owns the fulneſs of this ſatisfaction, pleads it to God, acquieſceth in it. What doth Unbelief? It either thinks the ſatisfaction too ſhort, or that a man hath no need of it, or that he hath ſome other invention to content the Creditor. But the firſt is as likely as any elſe; for ſince Abrahams Faith reſpected the *power of God, Unbelief queſtions the ability of God. The Apoſtle preſſing the Jews with many Arguments to make them ſenſible of the ability of Chriſt to ſave them to the utmoſt ‖, witneſſeth that the ſecret ſentiment in the heart of this ſin is the inſufficiency of the bloud of Chriſt for this great end of Salvation: that it is of no more efficacy to the purging away of ſin, than the bloud of Bulls and Goats; nor can reach the Soul any more, than the Waters of a River can purge the filthineſs of the Spirit. This ſin therefore receives a mighty aggravation from the dignity of Chriſts Perſon, whereby he was able to make a valuable ſatisfaction and actually did ſo. 'Tis a light eſteem of the rock of ſalvation, Deut. 32. 15. יְשׁוּעָתוֹ of his Jeſus, who conducted them in the Wilderneſs; As if the Rock of Gods Salvation had no more ſtrength than a feeble pebble. It diſgraceth his power in the whole Web of his deſign, as if his merit were not ſtrong enough, his ſatisfaction full enough to procure our diſcharge, but we muſt have ſomething of our own to eke it out. The Bloud of Chriſt cryes to us, we regard it not. It ſtreams out freſh from his heart in the virtue of it, and flows through the Pipes of the Goſpel in the offers of it, yet Unbelief ſtops the Ears againſt the Voice, ſhuts the heart againſt the approach of it, as if the Sacrifice of Chriſt were a Sacrifice of no value. And ſince this ſin denies the virtue of the Sacrifice of the Son of God for the expiation of ſin, the juſtification and ſanctification of the Soul, it would expoſe him to another Death to make his bloud efficacious; ſince there is no means imaginable for the attaining thoſe ends, but the death of the Son of God.

* Rom. 4. 21.

Seventhly, It denies Chriſt his right and reward. The reſtoration of Souls is a part of his reward for his work, Iſay 53. 11. He ſhall be ſatisfied with the travel of his Soul: God promis'd it to him. Unbelief would make Chriſt a loſer, as well as God a Lyar; for if this Leproſy did totally overſpread the hearts of every Son of Adam, all the travel of Chriſts Soul would have been in the ſervice of the Devil. Chriſt would take the pains, and the Devil have the Harveſt. What an injury is this, to ſteal Chriſts reward from him to beſtow it upon his Enemy? to gratify the deſtroyer, as though they envied the honour of the Redeemer! 'Tis his glory to have a numerous poſterity; when he was taken from priſon and judgment, who ſhall declare his generation? Iſay 53. 8. Generations in Scripture are put for a People or Family; the Generations of Adam, the Generations of Noah, i. e. the poſterity of Adam and Noah. 'Tis the glory of Chriſt to have his dying body ſpring up into a multiplied Seed, Joh. 12. 23, 24. the hour is come that the ſon of man ſhould be glorified. How? In his dying that he may bring forth much fruit, as v. 24. intimates. The occaſion of our Saviours Speech was the deſire of ſome Greeks to ſee him, v. 20. and in his anſwer, he intimates, that the Converſion of the Gentiles after his Death was part of his glory, and the end of his death was to draw a train of believing Diſciples to him. v. 32. If the Faith of men makes the thoughts of Chriſts Death pleaſant, and the death it ſelf glorious to him, Unbelief doth in its nature ſnatch this honour from Chriſt, and would hale him down from Heaven, to ſtake him in a humiliation-ſtate for ever, to continue him the ſcorn and deriſion of men, which, as it is injuſtice in depriving him of his right, is alſo ingratitude to him who hath done ſo much to make himſelf dear to men. If the hire of a Labourer was to be given him the ſame day, and the Sun was not to go down upon it, because he had set his heart upon it, and lest he cry against thee to the Lord, and it be sin unto thee *. If the depriving a labourer of his hire for a small time is a sin God marks, how black is that sin in the eye of God, which hath not once, but often defrauded Christ of the hire he laboured for, both in his life and death, and will not return the Soul to him for whose welfare he travelled? What is this but to defeat him of the fruit of his sweat, pain, Blood and Death, to disappoint him of the satisfaction he hath set his heart upon: Or, as it is in the Hebrew, Lifted up his Soul unto, has a vehement desire for. What made him bear up in his dreadful sufferings, but the joy and hopes of having a Generation to serve him? It was to this purpose he did groan and bleed. But unbelief would have him an unattended Redeemer, a man of sorrows without a spark of joy, when it will not come to Christ that the Soul might have life, and Christ might have glory.

to

* Deut. 24. 15.

Eighthly, It puts Christ to the greatest grief. His Soul was never more deeply impreſt with grief before the hour of his passion, than when he saw men would not come to him that they might have life. That his Table was spread, and his invited Guests would not accept of his Feasts, did both grieve and incense him. When he gave his Disciples so sharp a check, and calls them fools, it was not for their timorous and ungrateful forsaking him, but for their slowness of heart in believing *: Not their leaving him in the hands of his Enemies, or their present charging him with Imposture, but their not giving credit to what was predicted of him by the Prophets. It was not the buffets he received, the thorns whereby he smarted, the reproaches of his Enemies, the wounds from the hands of the Souldiers, which did so much damp his Soul, as the unbelief of his Disciples; he seemed not to be afflicted with them, so much as with this: this seems as grievous to him as the wrath of his Father, not to be trusted, and to be charged with falsity; to be ungratefully dealt with, is more bitter to a generous spirit than death. This grieved him before ever he came into the World, when he conducted the incredulous generation of the Israelites through the Wilderness; it may now grieve him more, since it is against more incomparable marks of his kindness. Is there any Grace that Christ doth more earnestly enquire after than that of faith? If he finds it, he regards nothing else, John 9. 35. when he had found him that was excommunicated by the Pharisees, he saith, dost thou believe on the Son of God? He enquires not after this poor mans zeal in defending him so strenuously before the council, v. 30,31,32,33. Dost thou believe? is the only question he asks him in order to his admission into his Family. What other grace doth he admire in the Centurion, Mat. 8. 10. Humility marching in the first rank, I am not worthy, &c. seems more obvious to view: But Christ looks at the faith which gave birth to his humility. If faith be the grace on which he fixeth his eye with affection and delight; unbelief must be the object of his greatest grief as well as anger; 'tis a grieving him after God hath wip'd tears from his eyes.

* Luke 24. 25.

Heb. 3. 10,17. I am grieved with this generation. And forty years was he grieved for their unbelief, v. 19.

3. As unbelief is an injury to God, as it is a particular injury to Christ, so 'tis also a wrong to the spirit of God. It slights the witness he bears by his common illuminations to the dignity of Christ and the truths of the Gospel; and therefore when men refuse to yield obedience to the terms of the Gospel, they are said to resist the Holy Ghost, Acts 3. 51. 'Tis a sin more against the spirit of God than any; 'tis not the sin against the Holy Ghost; but the sin against the Holy Ghost may be without many other sins, as it was in the Pharisees who were free from many immoral vices; but it cannot be without this as the main ingredient: 'Tis a sin more against the Spirit of God than any, because it is the peculiar office of the Spirit to receive of Christ's, and show it to men, to declare of the things of Christ, to bring the truths of Christ to a remembrance, to convince men of the necessity of Christ and his righteousness. Unbelief crosseth all those purposes of the holy Ghost, the end of his coming into the World, writes vanity and folly upon his mission, by not subscribing to his motions. As it reflects upon the Father for sending Christ, so it reflects both upon the Father and the Son for sending the Holy Ghost: The more honourable the messenger is, the more base is the affront both to the messenger and to him that sent him. This sin as it is

againſt Chriſt, is alſo againſt the Spirit of God, becauſe Chriſt was fitted by the Spirit, and furniſht with all fulneſs in his humane nature for the accompliſhment of his work in the World. It was by the ſtrength of the Spirit that he firſt enter'd the Liſts with our great Enemy, who had firſt mov'd the rebellion of man, Mat. 4 1. and the ſame ſpirit acted Chriſt in the whole courſe of his prophetical Office. It was through the eternal ſpirit that he offer'd up himſelf a propitiatory Sacrifice for our Sins, Heb. 9. 14. But it is alſo more immediately againſt the ſpirit exhorting to Faith, preſſing the Doctrine and truths of Chriſt upon the Souls of men, repeating again and again the things which concern Salvation, offering himſelf to change the Soul that is without form and void, into a comely and beautiful Workmanſhip. How great is this ſin then that gives the ly to the ſpirit of truth, who is infallible himſelf and cannot deceive, nor could no more be employ'd about a trivial and unworthy affair, than Chriſt about an unneceſſary redemption? And ſince this ſin is that which the ſpirit directs his battery againſt, it is more peculiarly a maintaining the Fort againſt the power of Heaven, and the Summons of that Spirit, whoſe leaſt motions we ought to obey to a full Surrender. To caſt away his ſollicitations, to put Bars in his way to hinder him an entry, is to quench the ſpirit, 1 Theſſ. 5.19. as if the reſiſting his office were a blowing out his life, and as much a ſtifling of him in the Soul, as when the Jewiſh Fury Crucified Chriſt upon the Croſs. This is as great a ſin, as appears by the puniſhment of the Jews, who were not caſt off ſo much for the Crucifying the Lord of Life, as for reſiſting the ſpirit, who would have applyed for their Cure that Bloud they had ſhed in their Madneſs. Thus Stephen charg'd them when they ſton'd him, ye always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt. The Spirit is the Embaſſador of the Father and the Son too, he is ſent by the Father, Joh. 14. 26. whom the Father will ſend in my name. And ſent by Chriſt, Joh. 15. 26. whom I will ſend unto you from the Father. To ſtand againſt an Embaſſador, that repreſents two States or Princes, is more than to reſiſt him that repreſents only one. Chriſt was ſent by the Father, and it is no where in Scripture ſaid that the ſpirit ſent Chriſt, though it was given to him not by meaſure, for the fitting him for his mediatory work, and ſo it is againſt the Spirit, as furniſhing Chriſt with gifts and graces for his employment. But there is a further aggravation in its redounding upon the Holy Ghoſt, as authoritatively ſent both by the Father and the Son, to build upon that foundation which Chriſt laid.

The ſecond thing in the demonſtration of the ſinfulneſs of this ſin was, That it is as bad, or worſe than the ſin of the Jews in Crucifying Chriſt.

'Tis as bad as the Jews Crucifying Chriſt. 'Tis as if we had been Partners with that Curſed Generation at Jeruſalem, that ſtain'd their hands in the Bloud of the Son of God. There is a ſpiritual Crucifixion of Chriſt as well as a corporal one, Revel. 11. 8. and their dead bodies ſhall ly in the ſtreet of the great City, which ſpiritually is called Sodom and Ægypt, where alſo our Lord was Crucifyed. 'Tis a Speech concerning the Death of the Witneſſes, and a Deſcription of Rome the Seat of Antichriſt: as it is ſpiritually called Sodom, and ſpiritually called Ægypt, ſo the Crucifixion may be underſtood ſpiritually. Though there be ſomething alſo literal in it, for Chriſt may be ſaid to be crucifyed at Rome, not in regard of the place where Chriſt never was, but in regard of the Roman Authority whereby he ſuffered, all power of capital Puniſhment being taken away from the Jews after their ſubjection to the Roman Empire. The crime pretended againſt him, was againſt Cæſar the Roman Magiſtrate; he was Crucifyed by Pilate a Roman Preſident, and Crucifixion was a Roman Puniſhment. 'Tis called Sodom becauſe of Luxury and Luſt, in regard of the Idolatry of it, which is ſpiritual uncleanneſs, (as Jeruſalem is called Sodom in regard of her filthineſs, Iſai. 1. 10. Iſai. 3 9. Ezek. 16. 49, 50.) and called Egypt in regard of Idolatry, and in regard of the ſimilitude between the oppreſſions of Iſrael in Egypt, and Chriſtians under the Roman Juriſdiction. Now as the name of one place is metaphorically tranſlated to another, becauſe of the likeneſs of their ſin, ſo by the ſame rule, the ſimilitude in ſin tranſfers the name of one ſin to another. Chriſt is Crucifyed by the Romiſh power, when he is deprived of the honour of his Mediatory Office, by juſtling in the interceſſions of the Virgin and other Saints, of the glory of his ſatisfaction in mingling

with

with it the merits of creatures; in his Kingly Office, by aſſuming the power of diſpenſations for ſin, and pardoning the puniſhment due by his Laws to it. And Chriſt is as much Crucifyed by an Unbeliever, when he rejects or doth not accept him as a ſufficient Sacrifice, a propitiating Prieſt, a commanding King, and a teaching Prophet. A man is as deeply guilty of Crucifying Chriſt in a ſpiritual manner, as the Jews were in the reproaches and ſcoffs of him, and the nailing him to the Tree. As there is a ſpiritual entertainment of Chriſt, and ſupping with him by believing, and a ſpiritual bringing forth Chriſt in the womb of a Soul, as a Mother doth an Infant; ſo there is a ſpiritual lifting up Chriſt upon the Croſs, and piercing his Side.

Another place which proves this, is 1 Cor. 11. 27. Whoſoever ſhall eat this Bread and drink this Cup of the Lord unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord. If a man hath the guilt of any known ſin upon him unrepented of, if he comes not with a ſutable frame, when he hath no high thoughts of the excellency of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, he is partaker of the Jewiſh crime inſtead of a Saviours merit, and acts as one that nail'd him to the Croſs, and pierc'd his Side: As an affront to the picture or ſtatue of a Prince, is interpreted an affront to his Perſon. Now if the unworthy receiving the ſigns of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, when a man hath no formal intent to be guilty of ſo great a crime in his approach, but he hath ſome pretences of holy ends, and addreſſeth himſelf to it with ſome kind of ſeeming ſeriouſneſs, make him guilty of the Death of Chriſt, how much more muſt he be guilty of it, who hath no value for it, doth not accept of it as the Death of the Son of God, and Mediator of the World*? He intimates that Chriſt did not ſuffer as a propitiation for ſin, but as a Malefactor, and ſo is like to them that Crucified him. So that there are other ways of being counted before God the Murderers of Chriſt, than if our hands had been as deeply imbrued in the Blood which ran in the veins of his Body, as the hands of the Jews were. 'Tis true, all had a hand in the Killing Chriſt, * for our ſins arm'd the hands of the Executioners; they put the Hammer into the right hand of the inſtruments, and the Nails into their left hand; and as it were compel'd their Curſed hands to pierce his Body. Our ſins demanded the Death of the Son of God. But only Unbelievers are guilty of his Death, becauſe they make that Bloud to be ſhed again in vain, which they ſhed when he was Crucifyed for them.

* Vatabl. in loc.

* Nerimberg. de Adorat. lib. 1. cap. 7. pag. 48, &c.

(1.) Unbelief is as bad as the Jews act in Crucifying him.
(2.) 'Tis worſe.

[1.] 'Tis as bad. In being a vertual approbation of what they did. Every voluntary ſin is a juſtification of all acts of the ſame nature done in the World. The ſin of the Jews was a juſtifying the ſins of Samaria and Sodom, Ezek. 16. 51. Thou haſt juſtified thy Siſters in all thy abominations; thoſe Siſters, v. 46. were Samaria and Sodom.

(1.) It comes from the ſame root. There is the ſame diſpoſition of Soul in one as in the other. They were no more of Adams deſcent than we are, and no more corrupted in their nature than any other Nation: We have no more good naturally, than was to be found among them, and they had no more evil naturally, than what is to be found among us. Unbelief was the Principle from whence all their rigour againſt him did ariſe, and had they not firſt been Unbelievers, they had not been the Redeemers Murderers.

If there be the ſame diſpoſition, and an interpretative approbation of an act, there is the ſame guilt in the exact eye of Gods juſtice; for God doth not judge by outward fact, but by the inward frames of the heart, and diſpoſitions of the Soul. The Blood of all the Prophets, from the Blood of Abel to the Blood of Zacharias, was to be required of that generation of the Jews in whoſe times Chriſt lived, though not a man of them had ever known Abel or Zacharias, but by the Hiſtory of the Scripture, Mat. 23. 35. Luke 11. 51. yet Chriſt tells them, they had ſhed the Blood of Abel, and all the reſt to Zacharias: Neither did they formally approve of thoſe actions; no doubt but they would in words have teſtifyed an abhorrency of Cain, as well as many among us will their indignation againſt the Traytor Judas, and would have diſowned the wicked and cruel facts of their Anceſtors, who had died their hands over and over again in the bloud of the Prophets, and Meſſengers of God: yet they were ſtill guilty of all that bloud, becauſe they had the ſame diſpoſition of heart, by their Unbelief, to do the ſame act as Cain did, who was the head of the Unbelieving World; and they did imitate Cain in his hatred of his Brother, by hating Chriſt, who was to be the grand Sacrifice typified by the Sacrifice Abel offer'd, and by Abels bloud too; and having ſuch a frame, would have uſed the ſame perſon with as much rigour, were he then alive, as Cain did. So no doubt but there is the ſame diſpoſition in every Unbeliever to uſe Chriſt as cruelly, were he now alive upon the Earth, in the ſame ſtate as then he was, and ſhould fall foul upon the raigning ſins of mens hearts, as the Jews did then uſe him: for the reaſon is the ſame; if thoſe Jews, notwithſtanding all their glavering affection to the Prophets that had been ſlain by their Anceſtors, would have handled them as ſharply, and perſecuted them to the Death, had they been alive in their time, and had as faithfully perform'd their office and meſſage as they did then: no doubt but men having the ſame diſpoſition would do as much to Chriſt; and having the ſame root in them, and bringing forth the ſame fruit, where it is in their power, they would do the ſame to Chriſt, or any other object, if it were as obvious to them, as that which is the mark of their fury. As thoſe Jews had the ſpirit of their murdering Fathers in them, though themſelves did not believe it: So every Unbeliever hath the ſpirit of the crucifying Jews in him, though they themſelves think no ſuch thing, and would with as much abhorrency deteſt ſuch a fact, as the Jews did that of their Fathers. There is ſtill the ſame rancorous root of bitterneſs latent in the heart and nature as was in theirs.

(2.) It hath the ſame object now, the perſon of Chriſt though in another manner. Whatſoever is done againſt the Commands, and Doctrine, and People of Chriſt, againſt his inward Motions in the Soul, is done againſt the perſon of Chriſt, Acts 9. 4. why perſecuteſt thou me? How could the perſecution of Believers by Saul be more againſt the perſon of Chriſt than Unbelief, the root from whence that furious zeal did branch? As the Father appear'd principally in the Creation of the World forming the deſign of it, and upon that occaſion ſetled the Law as a rule of mans Obedience, every ſin againſt the Law is an offence againſt him, a blaſphemy of the Father. But redemption being the work of the Son, by his Suffering and Reſurrection, and the Son being the matter, and ſubject of the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and ſet forth as an object of Faith, and appointed by the Father the Lawgiver of the World, the Goſpel refers properly to the perſon of Chriſt, and Unbelief is a ſin committed againſt the perſon of the Son, and an outraging him. Apoſtaſie and denying Chriſt to be the Meſſiah is by the Apoſtle call'd a Crucifying to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, Heb. 6. 6. they crucify to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to an open ſhame. 'Tis ſuch an act as is by interpretation a Crucifying the perſon of the Son of God; 'tis a rejecting his perſon and offices, and counting him a Deceiver, as the Jews did, Mat. 27. 63. and not the Son of God: for if we do count of him as one ſent from God, why do we not believe in him? why do we run from him? Ἑαυτοῖς, to themſelves, or in, or with themſelves, as much as in them lyes: all his common works which were upon their hearts they kill, which is as much as a killing his perſon; what they do to his truth, and the Convictions they have, they would do to his perſon were he in their power. They put him to an open ſhame; for as he was derided, and reproached as an Impoſtor when he was upon the Croſs; ſo men by their Unbelief ſhame him before the Eyes of men: the action in refuſing him and departing from him aſſerts, that there are no allurements in him, nothing worthy of love, but worthy of that reproachful uſage he had among his Crucifyers. As Apoſtaſie is attended with this guilt in the account of the Apoſtle, ſo is all Unbelief according to the degrees of it more or leſs, (becauſe 'tis a vertual denyal of Chriſts being, what really he is, the Son of God, and Saviour of the World; which was that the Jews denied, and therefore Crucified him) and therefore is a ſin againſt the perſon of Chriſt as well as theirs. As Faith pitcheth upon the perſon of Chriſt as its proper object, ſo the refuſal of the perſon of Chriſt is that which doth conſtitute this ſin of Unbelief.

(3.) It

(3.) It hath the ſame end, the indulgence of ſome carnal luſt, and end. Is not our love naturally as ſtrong to thoſe corruptions which ly nuzling in our natures? are we not as fond of them, as indulgent to them, as the Scribes and Phariſees were to theirs? They did not pay a greater homage to their beloved ſin, and adore their heart Idols with a greater veneration, than every one of us endeavour to pleaſure ours naturally: and this is the main end of every unrenewed Unbeliving perſon. Therefore if Chriſt were among us in the ſame Garb as he was among the Jews, and ſhew'd his diſlike of our Vices and Corruptions, and laid the Axe to the Root of them, though edg'd with ſo many Miracles as he did among them, what reaſon have we to think that he ſhould not meet with the ſame rude entertainment among us as he did among them? Our nature is no better than theirs, our Luſts as dear to us as theirs, principles of education as ſtrong in us as theirs; we have the ſame ſpiritual Progenitor by nature as they had, even the Devil, and his Luſts we do as well as they, John 8. 44. Eph. 2. 2, 3. the ſpirit that works in the children of diſobedience (ἀπειθίας, unperſwadableneſs) among whom alſo we had our Converſation in times paſt, fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind; and are as much guided by his inſpirations as they; for the Apoſtle pronounceth it of all, of himſelf and the Gentiles, as well as Chriſt had before of the Jews. Would we not befriend our Father, eſpecially when he would put forth his utmoſt power, and malice in us upon ſuch an occaſion, as he did at that time in them? And we rather ſhould uſe him more deſpitefully, becauſe if he did come in the fleſh, it would be contrary to expectations, whereas they expected the Meſſiah, and gloried in the promiſe of his coming. Had any told them before, that they ſhould have us'd him ſo barbarouſly as they did, they would have thought themſelves wronged and defam'd. What, to Crucify him whoſe coming they long'd for, and had expected in their ſucceſſive Generations, from the time of Adams being caſt out of Paradiſe? Yet for all this you know how they uſed him, becauſe he came in another Garb than they expected. They look'd for him to come as a Conquerer; and he came as a perſon not knowing where to lay his Head. And what Unbeliever is there among us that can aſſure himſelf he would not do the like, were Chriſt in perſon preſent, and ſtruck as croſs a blow at his darling corruptions, as he did at thoſe of the Jews in that time? What Phariſees would not ſwell againſt him, if he ſhould tell them of loading men with grievous Burdens, and charge them with their Hypocriſy and formal Devotions, and thunderingly tell them they ſhould dy in their ſins? Is there not the ſame reaſon? Have not men the ſame love to their Vices as they had then? What can alter their affections? Nothing but Faith. While men therefore remaining in Unbelief have the ſame Diſpoſitions, the ſame ends, and the ſame motives to Unbelief as they had, they would do the ſame acts againſt Chriſt, out of the ſame diſpoſition, and for the ſame ends, which managed them in all that Tragedy: they would ſtill fullfil the deſires of the fleſh and of the mind. Thoſe that Sacrifice the Truths, Precepts, Ordinances of Chriſt to their Dalilahs, would Sacrifice Chriſt himſelf, whoſe Truths, Precepts, and Ordinances they are. If Chriſt were again upon the Earth in the ſame ſtate, he would be as faithful to his Fathers Inſtructions as he was then; and Unbelievers would be as faithful to their Fathers the Devils Inſtructions, as the Jews were then.

As we ſee in what ſence Unbelief now is as bad as the Jews Crucifying Chriſt, as having the ſame diſpoſition, being ſet againſt the ſame object and guided by the ſame ends and motives: So we ſhall ſee that

[2.] Unbelief now is worſe than the Unbelief of the Jews, and worſe than that act of Crucifying Chriſt, and more grievous to him. They Crucifyed him by the authority of Pilate, and pretended a Law among them whereby he ought to die. But what pretence can there be for any mans Unbelief among us? Our Unbelief at the laſt day will be an excuſe of theirs. * The Jews reſiſted a truth offer'd to them. But we reſiſt the force and power of that truth which in the notion we own; while we receive it in our aſſent, we reject it in our conſent; we profeſs him to be the Son of God and Saviour of the World in the Doctrine, and proclaim it a meer impoſture in our practice. Theirs was a rejecting him, ours a ſcorn and mocking of him. Beſides, we by our Baptiſm are oblig'd Votaries to him;

* Zanch. in Decalog. cap. 12. de Origin. Thel. 8. p. 245.

him; we have given up our names to Chriſt in an outward profeſſion, and promiſed Faith in him, and Obedience to him. The Jews did not formally ſo, though implicitely they did, as the doctrine of it was contain'd in the Ceremonies of the Law of Moſes, and the Writings of the Prophets. But our Unbelief is manifeſted after ſolemn promiſes to ſtick to him.

(1.) Our Unbelief is againſt the ſpiritual diſcovery of Chriſt, theirs was not. Their ſin was againſt his perſonal diſcovery, ours againſt his ſpiritual, in the miraculous appearance of the ſpirit in the Apoſtles Preaching. The coming of the ſpirit depended upon Chriſts glorification, John 7.39. their ſin therefore could not be ſo great as ours, it being againſt a leſs, and ours againſt a greater diſcovery of Chriſt by the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt 'Tis a contempt of Chriſt after a full Revelation. The Jews had better excuſes to plead for the mitigation of their crime, the Prophecies concerning the Meſſiah were obſcure till clear'd by the event, and deliver'd in ſuch expreſſions that a natural underſtanding might conceive them to be meant of an outward ſplendour, rather than a ſpiritual glory: the condition of Chriſt was ſo mean, and diſguis'd in the World, that they could ſcarce diſcern the Lord of Glory for the mask of infirm fleſh; could not tell how to imagine him to be the Son of God, who was meaner than an ordinary man in his outward appearance. There were indeed ſome ſparks of his Divinity flaſht out in his words and actions, but ſhort of thoſe illuſtrious Beams wherewith he afterwards chas'd away the darkneſs of the World, ſhort of that power whereby afterwards he broke open the Gates of Hell, and hurl'd Satan the Prince of it from his long-poſſeſſed Throne. They Crucified him, when as yet the Spirit had not ſpread the light abroad, diſcover'd the reaſon of all the foregoing methods, had not yet ſhow'd him to be the Lord of Glory, nor animated ſome men to preach him in the World, and bear witneſs to the truth of his Miſſion, againſt their Worldly intereſt, and whatſoever was dear unto them there: Not a Nation in the World had then ſubmitted their Scepter to the Son of God; the World as yet lay ſteept in Idolatry, and wallowed in the ſink of Hell. But our Unbelief being after the cleareſt diſcovery of him, and his appearance in the power of his Royalty, ſince he hath a long time reign'd in the midſt of his Enemies, is rendred more vile, unreaſonable and inexcuſable. The Spirit doth not ſpeak of Chriſt to come in an obſcure ſtile, as the Prophets did, but manifeſts things paſt, things accompliſht in unvail'd, and clear expreſſions, and with an undeniable light. He diſcovers not Chriſt on Earth in a mean fleſh, and form of a Servant; but in the glory of the Son of God, and as a Mediator for man inveſted with the Government of the World, and hath ſeal'd the truth of his Miſſion with the Converſion of many Nations, and ſpread it over all parts of the World, contrary to humane methods, whereby falſe Religions, and Errours have been propagated in the Earth. The promiſe of the Spirits Miſſion, made by our Saviour on Earth, being perform'd, is an evidence of the acceptance Chriſt finds with the Father, and of the ſtability of all his Declarations as a foundation of Faith. 'Tis againſt this appearance of his our preſent Unbelief is, which makes it more criminal than that of the Jews, in Crucifying him when he was under a Vail. We have ſeen the Conqueſt he hath made by his Spirit, for ſo many Ages ſince his being upon the Earth: how prodigious then is our heart-refuſal of him after ſo many Records of his Power, and Troops of Miracles wrought by the ſtrength of his name!

(2.) They crucifyed him when he was in a ſtate of humiliation, our Unbelief is againſt him, ſince he is exalted at the right hand of his Father. There is a great deal of difference between the contempt of one upon a dunghil, and upon a Throne. They ſin'd not againſt a Chriſt Crucifyed for them; he had not then dyed for them, when they apprehended him and ſought his Death: Theirs was againſt Gods act in ſending Chriſt, ours againſt Gods act in ſending him, and glorifying him alſo; theirs was againſt Chriſt in his low eſtate, ours againſt Chriſt in his exalted nature; theirs againſt Chriſt as a man on Earth, ours againſt him as the Son of God in Heaven, and in his approaches to the fulneſs of his Kingly Authority in judging the World; they crucifyed his Humanity, and we in a manner his Divinity; they believed not in him when he was clouded in the form of a Servant, we believe not in him when he hath reaſſumed the glory of the Deity.

He

He was as a contemptible ſhrub among them, making no appearance of riſing into a full grown Tree, there was not that manifeſt grandeur wherein he ſeemed to be promiſed; he appeared not in ſuch a garb as to ſeem deſirable to them, Iſai. 53. 2. He was as a root out of a dry ground: But we have heard of him in his glory, mounting above the violences of men, dropping off the infirmities of the fleſh, ſhaking off the fetters of Death by a victorious Reſurrection, and triumphant aſcending above the Heavens to live for ever; and all this, that he might be believed on, confided in as the Redeemer of the World: Judge then which Unbelief is more ſinful? They crucifyed him whom they ſuppoſed to be a Man and a Malefactor, we crucifie him who was glorifyed after he was crucifyed for us; we crucifie him ſince his Divinity hath been manifeſted above his Humanity; they when his Humanity had vail'd his Divinity. * Which of the Jews that ſhould have ſeen Chriſt at the right hand of God, as Stephen did, would have dar'd to utter thoſe words, Crucifie him, Crucifie him? Every Unbeliever that dares not ſpeak it, dares do it. They will be confounded, when they ſhall ſee him glorious whom they have pierc'd. Many of them bewailed their crime when they believ'd his Reſurrection; we reproach him while we pretend to believe him glorious, and crucifie him again by rejecting his promiſes and precepts, whom we confeſs to be riſen from the Grave. * Had the Jews had the Meſſiah only promis'd them by the Prophets, and had not believ'd it, it had not been ſo great a ſin as not to believe him after he came, and prefer Cæſar an earthly King, before him, and the life of Barabbas a murderer, before his. It was an higher ſin to refuſe him, not only ſince he was promis'd, but was come, and had preach'd and wrought Miracles among them, and had lived holily; yet it was a greater ſin than crucifying of him, not to believe on him after he was dead, rais'd again, aſcended into Heaven, had ſent the Holy Ghoſt and converted a World. Peter denyed Chriſt, Judas betray'd him, Pilate condemn'd him, the Jews crucifyed him, but not one of them had then ſeen him dead, raiſed, and aſcended into Heaven, and ſending the Holy Ghoſt, as we have full evidences of. As, if the Jews did not believe Moſes, when he pretended in Ægypt to deliver them, by taking the Iſraelites part, and killing the Ægyptian, it was no ſuch great thing: But after he had been, as it were dead by his abſence, and returned again, by a courſe of Miracles knock'd off their Chains, brought them through the Red Sea, for them then to carry themſelves ſo to him, as if he had not delivered them, was a great injury to God and him. So it is a greater injury, ſince Chriſt by his Death hath freed us from evil, brought the Kingdom of Heaven his Goſpel among us, and that for many Years, that we ſhould not heartily comply with his terms, but behave our ſelves towards him, as if he were a meer man, an unworthy man, had done nothing for us, had not been taken notice of by God but in a way of Puniſhment; ſo to carry our ſelves after his high exaltation, is unparallel'd, even among Devils, and by the ſin of the Jews in crucifying him. And our notional owning him, or aſſenting to the Articles of the Creed concerning his Death, Reſurrection, Aſcenſion, and ſitting at the right hand of God, and his coming to judge the Quick and the Dead, is ſo far from alleviating the crime, that it renders it more baſe and unworthy, not to caſt our ſelves upon him for ſalvation, reſign up our ſelves to be ſaved in his way, and guided by his Precepts, after our acknowledgments of his Death and Exaltation; I ſay, it renders it more unworthy than the Jews murder, or the preſent Unbelief of their poſterity, becauſe it is a contradiction to our own profeſt ſentiments.

(3.) Our Unbelief is more palpably againſt the offices of Chriſt than theirs was. It was not of that black hue then. Chriſt had not a full inveſtiture in his offices, he had not all Royal Power ſetled upon him, till after his ſacrificing himſelf. For the full exerciſe of thoſe offices belonged to his ſtate of exaltation, and he was not perfected till he was offer'd up, Heb. 5. 9. 'Tis now againſt his Prieſtly Office ſetled upon him for ever, and againſt a ſpecial part of it, his interceſſion. They ſin'd againſt Chriſt ready to offer up himſelf a ſacrifice; we againſt Chriſt who hath offered himſelf a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to God: We ſin againſt him as an Advocate ſetled at the right hand of God: 'Tis true Chriſt did intercede before his coming in the fleſh, and evidences of it there are in Scripture, but that was not evident to the Jews. It was then upon the account of what he was by compact to ſuffer, it is now upon the account of what according to that compact he hath ſuffered; 'tis a ſin therefore more peculiarly againſt his Prieſtly Office, in his pleading for all the fruits of his oblation, and appearing in the preſence of God for us, as well as appearing for God to us; theirs was againſt the latter, and ours againſt both: theirs was againſt Chriſt, when as yet the contract was to be performed; ours againſt him, when, according to the contract, the price and ranſome is paid; theirs was when the Debt due to God remained unſatisfyed, ours when God hath given Chriſt an acquittance for the payment of it, and made him King, Prieſt, Prophet, Prince and Saviour, and for ever inveſted him in each particular Office. It was not by any force, but with the greateſt willingneſs that he offer'd up himſelf to deſtroy the works of the Devil, 1 John 3. 8. and to be in all reſpects an officer of mercy at the right hand of his Father. If we ſhall endeavour to preſerve him, whom Chriſt came to caſt out by his Death; if we preſerve any of thoſe works by Unbelief, Chriſt came to deſtroy; if we continue the Scepter of Satan in his hands by our want of Faith; nay, if we preſerve that Unbelief, which was the firſt work that the Devil fram'd in our firſt Parents by his ſubtilty, we do that which hinders the glory of his offices, and that which is more contrary to his honour than the Death the Jews inflicted on him; * his Death did not diſcontent him, he was highly willing to bow down his head under it, it was the way to the glory of all his offices; he was to paſs through the Croſs to the Throne, and be firſt a Sacrifice before he could be an Advocate, and yield up the Ghoſt before he could ſend the Spirit; Unbelief then which would deprive him of the glory of all this, is more injurious than thoſe Jews were which nail'd him to the Croſs, and more grievous than the ignominious Death he ſuffered.

* Jackſon. Vol. 3 Fol. p. 343. changed.

(4.) Our Unbelief is againſt Chriſt after he hath finiſhed his work, their act was againſt him when he was moving towards the performance of it. He had not then manifeſted the grandeur of his affection; he had indeed taken humane nature, and humbled himſelf to the infirm condition of our fleſh: But his Death, which was the commendation of his love, and the diſcovery of his affection in redemption, was not then ſuffered, their ſin could not be againſt this, becauſe it was not yet manifeſted; they made way by their ſin for a diſcovery of that love we ſin againſt. They ſin'd againſt Chriſt as he was preparing himſelf to be a ſacrifice for them, and ſanctifying himſelf to be an atoning offering; we ſin againſt him as already conſecrated by his own blood, and conſecrating for us by his own fleſh a living way, Heb. 10 20. In the crucifying of him they ſin'd againſt Chriſt as the Son of God, but not againſt Chriſt as a ſacrifice; they rather contributed, though not intentionally, to this oblation of himſelf: But we ſin againſt the only ſacrifice for ſin which hath been offer'd for us, ſo that there is a greater ingratitude and contempt in our ſin than theirs; neither the Prieſts, nor People, Pilate, nor Judas had ſeen Chriſt dead for them, before their own act in crucifying him. Judas betray'd him, the People voted him, and Pilate condemn'd him to Death; but an Unbeliever betrays, votes, condemns the Death of Chriſt to Death; he betrays the ends of it, condemns that to a nullity, which God accepted as a price, and votes againſt thoſe offices which were founded upon his Death, and which he could not have exerciſed if he had not dyed, and thereby virtually pulls him from his Throne, unto which he was to paſs by the Croſs; for ought not Chriſt firſt to ſuffer, and ſo to enter into his glory? Luke 24. 26.

(5.) Our Unbelief is againſt a more ſignal manifeſtation of Gods attributes in their higheſt perfection. God had not open'd the treaſures of his wiſdom to man till the ſufferings of Chriſt were over, nor was his love manifeſted in the higheſt manner till our Saviour bled, nor his juſtice diſcover'd till the ſtroke was given, nor did his power triumph, but in the Reſurrection of our Saviour; the glory of thoſe Attributes lay hid, and wrap'd up in him, till Chriſt came down from the Croſs, and roſe from the Grave. We ſin againſt that goodneſs which pitied us more than it ſeem'd to pity his own Son. We ſin againſt that juſtice that ſheath'd a Sword in his Bowels to ſpare our Souls. We ſin againſt that blood that ſeal'd our Pardon, againſt that truth, which had brought the Promiſes upon Record for ſo many Ages, to an happy accompliſhment, and made them Yea and Amen, fully irreverſible by our Saviours Blood; againſt a wiſdom that aſtoniſhed Angels, more than that in the whole Creation, and againſt an Almighty ſtrength that never bar'd its arm ſo much as in raiſing our Surety loaden with our guilt. Since nothing of thoſe appear'd ſo eminent but in and after the Crucifixion of Chriſt, their ſin could not ſo fully the honour of thoſe which did not then appear. They were ignorant inſtruments in the hands of God to promote, rather than violate the honour of thoſe Attributes. But doth not our Unbelief endeavour to take off the Wheels of their triumphant Chariot, and lay the honour of them in the duſt? The Jews indeed after the Death of Chriſt ſin'd againſt all theſe in their brightneſs, as well as any of us; But not in the very act of Crucifixion: becauſe by the Death of the Son of God theſe excellencies were brought in all their glories to our view, which had elſe lain inviſible in the ſecret place of the moſt high, and never ſhould have ſhown their Faces to the Sons of men. Without it neither men nor Angels could have had any proſpect of them. And though we imitate not the Jews in the act of Crucifixion, 'tis not for want of natural diſpoſition, but for want of opportunity. Chriſt is not here in Perſon to be Crucifyed by us; but we tread in the ſteps of the Jewiſh Unbelief, which was more groſs after the Paſſion of Chriſt than before; and we Crucify the glory of thoſe Attributes of God, which received their Life from the bloud of the Redeemer.

(6.) Our Unbelief is aggravated from the accompliſhment of the promiſes and threatnings for Unbelief, which their ſin was not againſt. We have greater aſſurances ſince Chriſts Aſcenſion of the performance of Promiſes, than they had before. The Goſpel hath according to the Prediction of Chriſt, from a Grain of Muſtard-Seed, riſen up to a mighty Tree. It hath been by various Providences carried into remote corners, ſpread further than the Roman Eagles. It hath been made known in the then unknown parts of America. It hath viſited all Nations, Mat. 24. 14. and a great Harveſt hath ſprung up in all Ages ſince, from the Seed of our Saviours Body caſt into the ground, according to his Prophecy, John 12.24. We have known the Jews ſinking under the truth of his threatning, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the fatal place of his ſuffering. * We ſee them to this day ſtript of the badges of Gods ancient favours, without a King, or Prince, without a Sacrifice, without Image, Ephod or Teraphim. We ſee the ſcars of Gods juſt anger upon them, for above 1600 Years, not yet ſeeking the Lord their God, and David their King. Hoſ. 3. 4, 5. And beſides, we have known Churches degenerate in their Faith, and (as the fruit of it) laid in the duſt; the Tabernacle of God remov'd from them, their Lands deſolated, and their poſterity laid in thick darkneſs. How have we known him in the glory of his mercy and truth, and the rigours of his juſtice? Have we not ſeen him with his Iron Rod cruſhing his beloved People, and alluring with his golden Sceptre, Nations alienated from the life of God and Strangers to the Covenant of Promiſe? There hath not fail'd one word of all his good promiſe which he promis'd by the hand of Moſes, the Prophets, and his own Son, 1 Kings 8. 56. No nor one word of all thoſe ſad threatnings, which were thundred out againſt that Unbelieving Nation: who ly yet under that wretched diſtemper of ſlighting the Son of David, the promis'd Seed, and under the fearful Curſe of Gods Oath, that they ſhall not enter into his reſt, Heb. 3. 18, 19. And is our Unbelief, that ſpurns at all thoſe evidences of his truth or faithfulneſs, and his wrath againſt incredulity, leſs criminal than theirs was? They ſin'd againſt the word of his promiſe and threatning, and we againſt the work and performance of both. They believed not, when no Nation had been caſt off, nor could be caſt off for that ſin. But we believe not, when we know that for this ſin God hath taken away the Birthright from the Jew. Our ſin is therefore againſt the mercies which Believers upon Record have had for their Faith, and againſt the Judgments God hath pour'd out on the Jews and others for their Unbelief. How grievous is it to commit that ſin, for which perſons bear the tokens of Gods wrath before our Eyes? And never palliate the buſineſs by pleading, that none of us are as the Jews, becauſe we profeſs Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, and own him to be the Son of God, and the Redeemer of the World; our Unbelief is worſe than theirs, becauſe we orally own him, and cordially deny him. 'Tis the ſame with theirs in the the inward diſpoſition, though not in the outward profeſſion.

(7.) Our Unbelief is againſt greater knowledge than theirs was.

(1.) The Act it ſelf. They put him to Death through ignorance, whom, if they had known in the excellency of his perſon, they would not have crucifyed, 1 Cor. 2. 8. Peter bears the ſame witneſs, Act. 3. 17. *I wot that through ignorance you did it, as did alſo your rulers; and Chriſt himſelf in his dying prayer bore witneſs to this, Luke 23. 34. They know not what they do. They Crucifyed him when his Divinity was under a Vail, and therefore there are milder expreſſions of their Crucifying Chriſt, than there can be of ours. Would the Apoſtles ſpeak truth were they living, and ſhould utter the ſame expreſſions of our infidelity, had they known him, they would not have ſlighted him: or can Chriſt put up the ſame Prayer now for thoſe that contemn him under all the glorious marks of his Deity? Can he ſay, Father they know me not, have not had any Revelations of me to be the Son of God? without queſtion, No. It muſt be thus, Father they have ſeen the trophies of my Death in the World, they have known the tranſcendent effects of my glorification, they have read, and read again in the Records of Scripture (which they confeſs they do not queſtion) the Conqueſts I have made, the multitude of Diſciples I have gain'd, and the treading Devils under my feet; yet remain worſe Devils than thoſe I have ſubdued. We do Believe his Aſcenſion and Seſſion at the right hand of God, and anſwer not the ends of them. We refuſe Chriſt againſt knowledge, which they did through ignorance. It was a mitigation of Pauls ſin that he perſecuted ignorantly in unbelief, 1 Tim. 1. 13. he did not believe Chriſt to be that perſon that really he was. Theirs, as well as his, was an ignorant Unbelief, ours a knowing one; theirs was a Crucifying Chriſt ignorantly in Unbelief, ours a rejecting Chriſt knowingly in Faith, i. e. we conſent not to that, unto which we profeſs our aſſent. They thought him to be meer man, and a Criminal, and did not aſſent to the dignity of his perſon; we acknowledge him to be God and Redeemer, but we conſent not to the reaſonableneſs of his terms. The guilt is greater when it is againſt clear manifeſtations, gracious offers, ſweet wooings, multiplyed Eſſays of Love and Power, than when againſt ſome few taſts; and to heighten it, a guilt under a Self-Condemnation.

(2.) The examples of Converts more. The examples of Converts in the time of Chriſt were produc'd as living Witneſſes againſt the Jews in that time, Mat. 21. 32. Publicans and Harlots believ'd John, and you, when you had ſeen it, believ'd not; and no doubt but they will be brought as teſtimonies at the laſt day. Was it ſo high an aggravation then, and is it leſs now againſt thoſe who have had not only thoſe teſtimonies upon Record, but many other teſtimonies of Faith in the Ages ſince, and their own Age; Yea the turning the Scales of the whole World, and the glorious Conqueſts of Chriſt by ways different from the methods of men? The Unbelief after the ſight of Chriſts converting power upon any heart, is a charge as great, if not greater than the refuſing to believe upon a ſingle Declaration of the Doctrine. Becauſe every Converſion in our ſight is an evidence of the power of Chriſt, and the end of his coming and ſuffering. Such works are his ſtanding Miracles now, which bear witneſs of him. The evidences whereby Chriſt chargeth the Jews Unbelief with a greater guilt, come ſhort of thoſe which we have had, John 10. 25. The works that I do in my fathers name, they bear witneſs of me. 'Tis in this reſpect againſt greater Miracles than Chriſt perform'd among them; for greater works were done by the Apoſtles, than by Chriſt, John 14. 12. which muſt be meant of the Converſion of men, and the great ſucceſs they had in that work, more than Chriſt while he was upon the Earth in his Perſon. The Jews had great means, the power of his Miracles, the ſweetneſs of his Converſation to aſſiſt againſt their infidelity; yet they vilified his perſon, miſinterpreted his Doctrine, aſcrib'd the ſparks of his Divinity to the powers of Hell, and the ſtrength of Belzebub, and at length expos'd him to the Croſs. Is not our Unbelief a vertual approbation of all that they did againſt thoſe hints and means, which might have perſwaded them to another kind of Carriage? But ours hath ſomething to make it more baſe and unreaſonable, it being againſt the power of his Doctrine in converting a World, and ſupporting myriads of Martyrs in bearing their teſtimony to his truth, under the flames and ſevereſt puniſhments. The Converſions in the days of his fleſh were ſome few ſprinklings within the compaſs of Judea and Samaria; the evidences we have had, have been whole ſhoals upon the ſurface of the earth: The Miracles he wrought were unanſwerable teſtimonies of his miſſion, but all together not ſo great as that of his Reſurrection, which was a Miracle after they had put him to Death; 'tis this we ſin againſt, which they did not in the crucifixion of him.

(3.) Theirs was againſt a ſhorter time of inſtruction than ours. It was but between three and four Years, about three Years and a half Chriſt taught among them. 'Tis ten, twenty, or more Years Chriſt hath been pulling at our hearts, and propoſing the terms of the Goſpel. We ſin againſt the inſtructions they had, for we have them tranſmitted to us by faithful Witneſſes; againſt the teachings of the Apoſtles, which were comments upon the Goſpel, againſt multitudes of Sermons ſounding in our ears. What is the crucifying Chriſt after three Years hearing of his Words, and ſeeing his Miracles, to twenty or thirty Years vilifying his Perſon, and diſparaging his Office, and treading under foot the Son of God?

(4.) Suppoſe they had known what they did, yet their crucifying of him was but one act. But ſince every act of Unbelief, and every ſingle refuſal of his gracious terms, is a crucifying the Son of God afreſh; is the guilt of multiplyed acts put together leſs than one ſingle one, eſpecially when every act hath a knowledge to aggravate it?

(8.) They in crucifying Chriſt did what God had determin'd, what Chriſt was willing to, but 'tis not ſo in our Unbelief. I do not intend this to leſſen their ſin (for they had no reſpect to the decree of God in the execution of Chriſt) but it aggravates ours. God is ſaid to deliver up Chriſt (Acts 2. 23. Him being delivered by the determinate counſel of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain) not only as an act of his preſcience but his counſel, and that determinate, i. e. ſtable and irreverſible; he makes a diſtinction between thoſe two acts; in God it was an act of counſel, in them an act of wickedneſs, by wicked hands; there was a previous act of counſel, and after that an actual tradition, Rom. 8. 32. He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. God decreed the ſufferings of Chriſt, but he never poſitively decreed any mans Unbelief, though he decreed to permit it.

(1.) It was neceſſary. It is not imaginable that the Death of Chriſt could be brought about, but in ſome ſuch way as it was, by the wickedneſs of man, to anſwer all the gracious purpoſes of God. There was a neceſſity of it to the ſatisfaction of his juſtice, in regard of the ſanction of the Law, and the inability of any or all meer Creatures to reſtore the damag'd honour of the Law. He could not in his own Perſon deſerve Death; for could it be ſuppos'd that our Saviour could be guilty of any capital Crime, whereby according to the righteouſneſs of the Jewiſh Laws he had forfeited his life, the whole frame of redemption had crackt aſunder, the perſon wanting that innocence in himſelf, which was neceſſary to make ſatisfaction for others. Had God put him to Death by ſome remarkable ſtroke from Heaven, without the intervention of man, the voluntarineſs of Chriſt, which was neceſſary to the perfection of his oblation, had not been evident, his innocence would not have been aſſur'd to us; the remarkable ſtroke would have preſented him to man under the notion of a notorious ſinner, that Heaven could patiently bear no longer; the Goſpel could not have been propagated; who would have entertained that Perſon as a Saviour, whoſe innocence could not be clear'd? none, who according to the common ſentiments of men appear'd as a Malefactor, would have been embraced as a Redeemer. If it be ſaid, God might have rais'd him again after ſuch a ſtroke, and his Reſurrection would have made him entertainable as one beloved of God; but what evidences could there have been that it was a Reſurrection, or that he had been really dead? But in this way of Gods procedure, the innocence of Chriſt, his freeneſs to ſuffer, the reality of his Death and Reſurrection, are undeniably aſſured to us. There was therefore a neceſſity of the Death of Chriſt, and in ſome ſuch way as that whereby it was executed, both in regard of the counſel of God, and the fulfilling of the predictions which had foretold the circumſtances: But our Unbelief is in no manner necessary, either necessitate pacti, by necessity of contract, as that was, or necessitate medii, of means, as that was to the salvation of men. For this sin is point blank against any Covenant of God, and renders Damnation certain, and Salvation impossible. The Death of Christ was necessary for the satisfaction of Gods Justice, though it was not formally necessary that those very persons should Crucify him. The sufferings of Christ were necessary to his glory; his Heel was to be bruis'd by the Devil, as well as the Devils Head by him. But Unbelief is not a due to him as a means for the glory of his person, he was to suffer: for ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? But ought cannot be set on Unbelief: It cannot be said, ought not Christ to have been rejected, contemned, and so to have entred into his glory? His Death was necessary in order thereunto, but not our Unbelief.

* Jackson. Vol. 3. Fol. p. 343. changed.

(2.) Besides, * There was an obedience unto death enjoin'd to Christ, and his will complyed with it, both his divine and humane will, his will as he was the Son of God, and his will as he was the Son of David. But his will neither as he is the Son of God, nor as he is the Son of man, is for Unbelief. Since he was to be obedient to Death, the suffering the Death then inflicted on him was a part of his obedience; But the suffering a new Crucifixion and disparagement by infidelity, since he went to glory, is no part of the obedience owing by Christ to his Father. We do that in not believing, which doth more displease him, and is more against the interest of his glory, than they did in putting him to Death, to which his will, with the greatest freeness, and the impulse of a divine Law in his heart, perswaded him; and which indeed was the chief end of his coming.

(3.) If we may judge of sin by the consequences of it, our sin is far greater than theirs. The Salvation of man, the glory of Gods Love, Justice, Wisdom; the glory of Christs Patience, tenderness, the mission of the Holy Ghost, the accomplishment of Promises, Prophecies were the consequents of this; not simply fruits of the Jews action, but of Christs Passion; not the consequents intentionally in them of their wickedness, but of Gods Grace. God extracted this glory to himself, and an immense good to man, from the malice of the Devil and the Jews. Can any mans Unbelief since Christ hath suffer'd, be ever an occasion of so great a good? It cannot be imagin'd how the infinite power of God can make any mans Unbelief instrumental to such glorious ends; unless he should send a Saviour to suffer the same Tragedy over again in his own person. Nothing but the glory of Gods Justice, the manifestation of his truth in his wrathful threatnings, the satisfaction of the Devils malice, and the eternal misery of the immortal Soul, can be the consequents of present infidelity. Their sin was a means order'd by God to do that, which procur'd the most inestimable blessings for us; But our sin is against all the blessings purchas'd by that Death, and all the tokens of Christs love bestow'd upon the World at his Ascension.

3. The third thing in the sinfulness of this sin was, Besides the sinfulness as it respects God, and as 'tis as bad and in some sense worse than the sin of the Jews; so there are many other reasons which manifest the sinfulness of this sin of infidelity.

(1.) This sin of Unbelief is much of the same nature with the first sin of the Devils. 'Tis probable by the Scripture that pride was the sin, 1 Tim. 3. 6. not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the Devil. If we take it passively, lest he fall as the Devil fell by his pride against God; there is indeed pride in every sin, but the formality of the Devils sin seems by this place to consist in Pride, who being puft up with his dignity in the Creation, was hurl'd into a Lake of Fire. What was the occasion of his Pride, or the particular formality of his Pride, is not easily determinable.

* De Lingendis Tom. 2. Concio 59. p. 585.

* There are four wayes of his sinning conjectur'd by men.

[1.] That seeing himself the highest of created beings, and most approaching in likeness to God, he affected an equality with God, Ezek. 28. 12, 13, &c. ad 17. which though literally it be spoken of Tyre, yet some understand it allusively of the chief Angel. Because he speaks of his being in Eden, the Garden of God, an anointed Cherub that covers, and was upon the holy Mount of God, perfect in his wayes, till iniquity was found in him, he set his heart as the heart of God, his heart was lifted up because of his Beauty, and he corrupted his wisdom by reason reaſon of his brightneſs, wherein, ſay they, the ſin of Tyre, as well as his excellency, is compar'd to the excellency of the Devil in his Creation, and his ſin at his fall.

[2.] That the Devil endeavour'd to obtain a bleſſedneſs by his own ſtrength without dependance on grace. As if he had been ſufficient to make himſelf happy by the ſtrength of thoſe natural perfections God had firſt endow'd him with at his Creation. He apprehended nothing elſe needful for him but the Portion at firſt beſtowed upon him, and truſted to obtain that by himſelf, which he could only have by the grace of his Creator. He would be like God in being the Fountain and principle of his own happineſs, and equal himſelf to God in deſerting any dependance upon Gods ſufficiency to rely upon his own.

[3.] Others ſay, that the Devil affected a pre-eminence over every Creature, and ſeeing the Legions of Angels Created with him, and himſelf in the higheſt rank, he would be ſingular, ſubject to none, and Ruler over all; chuſing rather, ſaith Auſtin, to delight in the ſubjection of others to him, than in his ſubjection to God; affecting that Royal Dignity which was only due to the Son of God, and would not be a miniſtring ſpirit to the Heirs of ſalvation, creatures of an inferiour rank and baſer alloy than himſelf, over whom he expected an abſolute authority, when all the Angels without exemption of any were deſign'd to this office, Heb. 1. 14. are they not all miniſtring ſpirits? as the elder Children are order'd to take care of the younger in a Family. He envyed Chriſt the dignity of being ſet in the humane nature above principalities and powers, Eph. 1. 19,20. This hath a likelyhood in it, ſince he ſets himſelf chiefly againſt Mankind, as having a particular enmity againſt them, whoſe dignity in the hypoſtatical Union was envyed by him, which was his ſin, and the cauſe of his fall. Men always have the greateſt animoſity againſt them, upon whoſe account and occaſion they ſuffer.

[4.] Others ſay, That the ſin of the Devil was a refuſal to be ſubject to Chriſt, when the revelation was made to him and the other Angels of his future incarnation, Heb. 1. 6. And again, when he brings in the firſt begotten into the World, he ſaith, and let all the Angels of God worſhip him, πάλιν εισαγάγῃ. The particle again they join with Brings in, and the Greek favours this, when he again brings his firſt begotten into the world; ſignifying that he had brought his Son into the World before as an object of worſhip, by a particular revelation made to the Angels, and requir'd the worſhip of him in a peculiar manner, not only as one with himſelf in the Deity which they could not be ſuppos'd to refuſe; but under another relation, as the head of their Confirmation, and the Fountain from whence they were to derive their bleſſedneſs. God intended to gather in one all things in Chriſt, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him, Eph. 1. 10. this being propos'd to them was refus'd by Satan and his adherents, glorying in their own natural perfection, and conceiving they had ſtrength enough of themſelves, and needed no additional grace, and were loth to be ſubject to a nature inferiour in natural perfections to their own, and worſhip an inferiour nature to theirs in union with the Son of God; Let all the Angels of God worſhip him, is as much as to ſay, Let all the Angels of God follow his direction, which upon the account of their natural perfection they refus'd to ſubmit unto, becauſe they were then to be ſubject to the humane nature.

In all theſe wayes Unbelief has a reſemblance to the Devils ſin; it affects an equality with God in a ſelf-dependance, reſts in the ſufficiency of its own righteouſneſs, without bowing down the will to the acceptance of grace, delights not in ſubjection to God, refuſeth Chriſt the Head and Mediator of Gods appointment. In all which Pride is ſignal, and indeed Pride of reaſon, and Pride of will, are the two arms wherein the ſtrength of Unbelief lies.

This latter way whereby the Devil is ſaid to ſin, ſeems to be more probable. They are ſaid to fall through Pride; not a Pride of aſpiring to be equal with their Creator; for they being Created with the cleareſt intellectuals, and knowing themſelves to be Creatures under an Almighty Power, would not attempt that which they could not but know, at the firſt appearance, to be an utter impoſſibility. This would ſuppoſe an errour in their underſtanding, which their perfect nature could not encline to. 'Tis not therefore likely, that their ſin was to deſire the Godhead, or to be partaker of the nature of God in an equality with him. Nothing in God or his nature could diſpleaſe them, or be any occaſion of their pride; and they had power over corporeal things: but there might happen ſomething in the diſpoſal of the lower things of the World, which might not be ſo agreeable to them, and therein their deſires might be averſe from that which was the deſign of God; and ſo it is eaſie to conceive, that a revelation of the incarnation of Chriſt being made to them, and the humane nature being deputed in that union, to rule over the Angels, this might diſpleaſe them; for among all objects, whereby any occaſion of averſion from God might ariſe in them, this is moſt likely: It was the moſt conſiderable thing to preſide and rule over mankind, and Gods diſpoſing of it otherwiſe in ſubjecting them to that nature, which becauſe of the excellency of their own nature they expected to rule over, is the moſt probable ground of their averſion. It was pride, and pride immediately againſt God cannot ſo eaſily be ſuppos'd, as pride upon this occaſion we have ſpoken of.

And that ſuch a rejecting Chriſt might be their ſin, may have ſome reaſons for it, however they will evidence this ſin to be a conformity to the Devil.

(1.) Becauſe of the conſtant and uninterrupted oppoſition he has always manifeſted to the Son of God. He hath always diſcover'd more enmity to the nature and mediation of Chriſt, and the Faith of men in him, than he hath againſt the nature of God: He never ſo much oppos'd the notion of one ſupreme God in the World; the ſupremacy of one God was acknowledged by all the Heathens; but he endeavoured to block up any way of their entertaining the true Mediator, by filling them with notions of many Mediators between God and Mankind, in which rank all the Deities they worſhipped, were accounted by them, and look'd upon but as Mediators between the one ſupreme God and his Creatures in the World. He hath always ſet himſelf in oppoſition to Chriſt, both among Jews and Gentiles, that he might not be believ'd to be the Meſſiah. Though he be againſt the whole Trinity, yet he ſeems to have a more particular ſpite againſt the ſecond Perſon, as if he had ſuffered more upon his account, for ſome crime againſt him, than againſt any other of the bleſſed Perſons in the Trinity: He rais'd up perſecution againſt him from his coming into the World; he ſets Herod againſt him when he was an Infant; the Rulers and Rabble of the Jews, when he entred into his Office; ſingles him out to ſhoot his greateſt temptations againſt, acted Judas to betray him, rais'd ſtorms againſt the Apoſtles and his Diſciples in all parts of the World; broacht errors againſt his Deity, againſt his Humanity, and corrupted his Ordinances: ſo that Chriſt in his Doctrine hath not been at quiet from this great Enemy, ſince he came firſt into the World, upon which account Chriſt and Satan are ſet in direct oppoſition in Scripture; Chriſt is called the Son of Man, as being the friend of man; the Devil is called Satan, as being the adverſary of man; he endeavours to deſtroy man, and Chriſt came to deſtroy the works of the Devil; he is the accuſer of Man, and Chriſt the Advocate of man. Upon the account of this oppoſition he is ſaid more particularly to work in the firſt time of the Goſpel, Eph. 2. 2. Now works in the children of diſobedience; now the Goſpel is come, and a crucifyed Saviour preach'd as the Mediator between God and Man, and the fountain of grace, he works with more ſtrength and vigor than before: he had his Empire formerly in the World; but now he works as if he had not wrought at all before; now he works in the Children of diſobedience, (or ἀπειθίας, of unperſwadableneſs,) to hinder them from the embracing Chriſt. The Angels are the Miniſters of Chriſt in his mediatory Kingdom: if the ſervice of Chriſt be the Office of Angels, 'tis probable, the refuſal to ſerve Chriſt in that Office was partly the ſin of Devils.

(2.) Satan is the head of the unbelieving World. And men are ſaid to be the Children of the Devil with a reſpect to this particular ſin, John 8. 44. You are of your father the Devil, and the luſts of your father you will do; he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, becauſe there is no truth in him: And the firſt murder committed in the World, by the power of the Devil in the heart of man, was in contempt of Faith and the Object of it, as viz. the murther of Abel, by Cain the head of the unbelieving World. They had been diſputing againſt the Doctrine of Faith which Chriſt had preached to them, v. 12. and v. 24. and with reſpect to his diſcourſe with them, and their unbelieving diſputes againſt him, he tells them they were the Devils Children, and they did his luſts. The luſts of the Devil were ſutable to the luſts the Phariſees then acted in this diſpute; he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth; he was a moral murderer of the Angels that adhered to him, and were ſollicited by him to a revolt and mutiny; he brought them as well as himſelf into a ſpiritual Death; he abode not in the truth, the truth which the Phariſees now oppos'd, and which Chriſt had heard of God, v. 40. and when they charged him that he had a Devil, v. 48. he renders a reaſon why he had not a Devil, v. 49, 50. becauſe he ſought not his own glory; intimating thereby, that the Devils ſin was a ſeeking his own glory: and certainly he may be well ſaid to ſeek his own glory, that reſolves to ſtand by his own natural righteouſneſs. This place doth intimate to us, that the Phariſees in their oppoſition to Chriſt, ſinn'd that ſin which the Devil ſinn'd from the beginning, i. e. the beginning of his ſin; and that ſin muſt be a reſemblance to this of the Phariſees, which was an unwillingneſs to own Chriſt as their Head to ſtand by. And the whole maſs of Unbelievers are included in Satan as their Head, Gen. 12. 3. I will bleſs them that bleſs thee, and curſe him that curſeth thee. Them, in the plural number, Him in the ſingular. Him reſpecting Satan curs'd in that firſt promiſe, as oppoſite to the ſeed of the Woman in a peculiar manner; this him the Jews underſtand of Satan; he was the firſt Unbeliever in the World, who draws a train after him, and propagates that intereſt of Unbelief among the Sons of men. He is the Curſer of all thoſe that have any Faith in Chriſt, and may well be counted the head of all Unbelievers, as he was the firſt broacher of that ſin of Unbelief which is directly contrary to the bleſſing of Abraham. And in regard of this Unbelief in Chriſt, Judas is call'd a Devil, Joh. 6. 70. I have choſen you twelve, and one of you is a Devil. He hath the Devils nature and ſpirit in him in this ſin.

(3.) The peculiar ſenſe and reflexion the Devil hath upon himſelf at the appearance of Chriſt, ſeems to intimate this, Mat. 8. 29. they cryed out ſaying, what have we to do with thee, Jeſus thou Son of God, art thou come to torment us before the time? They intimate their great ſin in a ſlighting of him, what have we to do with thee, which is a Speech of contempt and indignation, as 2 Sam. 16. 10 what have I to do with you, ye Sons of Zerviah? ſo Joſhua 22. 24. what have you to do with the Lord God of Iſrael? They could not endure the ſight of that perſon they had peculiarly refus'd, and for the refuſal of whom they were involved in their miſery. The expecting a ſignal torment at his hands upon his appearance, implies that their ſin was more particularly againſt him; it flying in their face at that time, and filling them with a freſh expectation of indignation at the ſight of the Judge, whom they had offended, by refuſing his Headſhip and direction.

Now this ſin of the Devils, which ſeems to be this of refuſing Chriſt as the foundation of their ſtanding, and which was anciently generally ſuppos'd to be their crime, is not formally the ſame with our Unbelief, but materially it is. They rejected not Chriſt as Redeemer, becauſe they ſtood in no need of Redemption, having not then ſinn'd, but rejected Chriſt as Confirmer, chooſing rather to ſtand upon their own bottom and righteouſneſs than have any aſſiſtance from Confirmation by Grace in the method of Gods propoſing.

So that Unbelief,

(1.) Is firſt an imitation of the Devils ſin. 'Tis a particular invaſion of the rights of God as a Governour and Benefactor, who hath power in both regards to appoint his own wayes and methods of doing his Creatures good, and directing them how they ſhould ſerve him, and be preſerved or ſaved by him; ſo it is an imitation of the Devil who would not be ſubject to Gods directions, but either not ſerve him, or elſe ſerve him according to his own underſtanding; we are like him in this, when we would ſave our ſelves according to our own methods. If the ſin of the Devils were a priding themſelves in their own created excellency, as their chief good, and ultimate end, depending upon thoſe admirable perfections of their nature by Creation, and refuſing the Grace offer'd to them for their continuance in their created happineſs; then Unbelief is ſtill the ſame with the ſin of Devils; becauſe the root of it is a ſeeking our own glory, a glorying in our own natural or moral perfections, or ſinful affections; and thereupon refuſing to come under the rule of God, and ſubmit to his grace diſcover'd in Chriſt; the building our ſelves and hopes upon our own righteouſneſs, is equivalent to that of the Devils reſting upon their own natural perfection in a way of independance upon God. But howſoever, ſince the firſt ſin the Devil diſcover'd upon the Earth after his fall, was a queſtioning the truth of God which he particularly contradicted in his Diſcourſe with Eve, faſtning a ly upon God, Gen. 3. 4. You ſhall not dy; our Unbelief is a reſemblance to him in this, which though it ſlights all Gods Attributes, yet ſtrikes ſoreſt at his truth, both in his Promiſes, Precepts and Threatnings.

(2.) 'Tis an obedience to Satan. The Devil rules in every Unbelieving perſon, His luſt we do in this ſin, Jo. 8. 44. And this ſin is his ſtrong hold whereby he governs men according to his pleaſure. 'Tis Faith he chiefly aſſaults in the Believer. The truth of Gods Commands he diſputed with Eve; and the truth of the Goſpel Promiſes, he diſputes with every true Chriſtian. He put it into the heart of Judas to betray Chriſt, and he obey'd him; he puts it into the heart of every Unbeliever to contemn Chriſt, and he ſubmits to him. Every ſin indeed is an obedience to the Devil; but ſince the height of his malice is to caſt dirt upon Gods Glory in the work of Redemption, Infidelity is a complyance with him in his principal deſign. He aim'd at nothing more in his firſt temptation of man, than to draw him into an ill opinion of God, and deſigns nothing more than to keep him in it.

All his endeavours were to hinder the redemption of man by the Son of God; Since he hath fail'd in that, his skill and pains are employ'd to ſtop the application of it, and ſtave men off from the acceptance; to that purpoſe he ſollicites men to continue under his Banners with hopes of better pay than under the Standard and Yoke of Chriſt. Every Unbeliever implicitely ſwears an Allegiance to him; there are but two Heads, Diſobedience to one, is Obedience to the other; he that is not with Chriſt is againſt him; he that comes not under his Government, is a ſworn Vaſſal of the Devils.

(3.) 'Tis like the ſin of Devils in the manner of their ſinning. They ſinn'd in a ſtate of intire felicity, we ſin in a capability of the higheſt happineſs in regard of divine offers. They forſook their own habitation with God, Jude 6. and we contemn a return to the fruition of God after many experiences of the miſeries of our fall, and the gracious indulgence of our offended Creator. And by how much the more unmerited the grace is, and the leſs claim can be pretended to it, by ſo much the more contemptuous is the violation and refuſal of it.

(4.) 'Tis a ſin greater than that of Devils. They refus'd the Headſhip of Chriſt over them, when they had no experience in themſelves or others of the miſeries attending their refuſal, till their loſt happineſs was paſt recovery; we refuſe it, when we know in ſome ſort what Devils ſuffer, and Unbelievers will ſuffer for their contempt. How may the Devils plead, Lord we ſinn'd but againſt one Covenant, we never were under a Covenant of Grace, we were offer'd to come under the head of thy appointment, but our Pride ruin'd us. Howſoever, this head never aſſum'd our nature, nor was puniſhed in our ſtead; we were left to the doleful ſound of our own Chains, while thoſe had liberty again and again proclaim'd to them: thou didſt ſtand ready to ſtrike off their Fetters and faſten ours: had we had the mercies offer'd us which thoſe Wretches have deſpis'd, and had we had hopes after ſome Ages to be deliver'd from our puniſhments, we ſhould have liv'd joyful in our future hopes, though in preſent miſery. Our ſins were not at ſuch a rate as the ſins of thoſe guilty Unbelieving Souls. We did indeed refuſe the covert of the Wings of the Son of God. But we never refus'd a Chriſt bearing our ſins in our nature, for none was offer'd to us, after the experience of the miſery of our firſt contempt. Can any ſuch Plea be made by an Unbeliever under the ſound of the Goſpel?

* Nirembrg.de Adorat. lib. 1. c. 7. p. 45.

* The Devils never ſinn'd againſt God, that was made an Angel for them; nor ever experimented ſo great a goodneſs; they never ſinn'd againſt a God that converſed verſed with them thirty three years in the midſt of ſorrow and miſery, repeating inſtructions to repentance, and encouraging them with hopes of pardon: But our Unbelief is againſt a God who hath multiplyed his goodneſs, lamented our ſins in the Garden, and bore the guilt of them upon the Croſs. The contempt of ſuch aſtoniſhing goodneſs, renders our unworthy carriage towards him more inexcuſable than that of Devils.

(2.) 'Tis of the ſame nature with the firſt ſin of Adam and Eve, which ſo highly provok'd the anger of God, and brought ſuch a deluge of miſeries upon Mankind; and in ſome regard 'tis greater than theirs.

[1.] It was the firſt ſin of Adam. Not that it appears that Adam had the ſame formal Object of Faith as we have, viz. Chriſt a Mediator; ſince there appears no diſcovery of Chriſt, till after the fall, in the promiſe of the ſeed of the Woman to bruiſe the Serpents head. Some indeed ſay, that Chriſt was typified by the Tree of Life in Paradiſe, becauſe he is called in Scripture the true Vine, the Bread of life; and by the Tree of Life, Revel. 2. 7. and 22. 14. they underſtand Chriſt the foundation of all happineſs of man in innocency. This ſeems to have no foundation in the Hiſtory of Adams Creation and Fall, yet I know not what may be in it upon the ſuppoſition of many, and moſt of the Schoolmen, that the Devils ſin was, as hath been ſpoken before, a pride againſt Chriſt as their head; and perhaps had Adam waited, Chriſt had been revealed as head of his ſtanding. But this is clear, that Adam endeavoured to ſtand upon his own bottom, to be a rule of righteouſneſs, and of the knowledge of good and evil to himſelf, and was not content to wait upon God in the way of his Precept, for a further revelation from him of his mind and will. To wait upon God in the revelations he hath made, and believe his veracity in his promiſes and threatnings, is one part of Faith; not to depend upon him, but chooſe a dependance on our ſelves, to turn our backs upon his revealed will to be our own carvers, is Unbelief, which Adam was highly guilty of. The firſt poyſon which was diffuſed by the breath of the Serpent, brought forth this curſed Monſter, Gen. 3 1. Yea, hath God ſaid, you ſhall not eat of every Tree of the Garden? exciting Eve to a diffidence of the mind of God, that he had not ſo contracted a goodneſs, and ſo little love to his Creature, as to deny him the enjoyment of that fruit which ſeem'd ſo good for food, and pleaſant to the eyes above any Tree of the Garden; that ſince God had created Paradiſe for man, and put him in poſſeſſion of it, man ſurely miſtook the ſpeech of God to him, and was a wrong interpreter of Gods intentions. Afterwards the Serpent deſcending from a queſtion, v. 1. Hath God ſaid? to a plain aſſertion v. 4. Ye ſhall not ſurely dye, engenders Unbelief, and conſequently the miſery of all Mankind. Some anciently did *, and the Papiſts now do aſſert, the firſt ſin of Adam to be pride, who hearing from his Wife, that upon eating that fruit he ſhould be as God, conceived aſpiring thoughts in his own mind, affected a ſelf-excellency and dependance, and left waiting upon God to bottom upon himſelf; for unleſs he had aim'd higher than he ought to aim, he had continued in his innocent ſtate. But what was the cauſe of this pride? Was it not giving credit to the words of the Devil before the command and commination of God, regarding the precept as a falſity, and the threatning as a bugbear? * The firſt ſolicitation was to doubt of the veracity of God in his threatning, which they greedily ſwallowed without any reflections upon the word of God ſpoken to them before; whence there was firſt an error in the underſtanding, before there was a corrupt appetite in the will: for ſince the Devils aſſertion that they ſhould be as Gods, was contrary to Gods threatning, that they ſhould dy, they could not receive that aſſertion for a truth, unleſs they firſt doubted of the truth of the divine threatning, or had quite forgot it. So that it can ſcarce be imagin'd, how Adam ſhould have a proud appetite without ſome act of infidelity preceding: Though after that pride grew up to ſome ſtrength, the infidelity and averſion to God was increas'd; Pride and Unbelief do mutually ſupport and prop up one another. The firſt bait the Devil laid was for Unbelief, v. 4. Ye ſhall not dy. And Pride follow'd upon the heels, v. 5. Ye ſhall be as Gods. Pride had ſcarce roſe ſo high, had not infidelity firſt given it a lift. Now when the fallen ſpirit had got more credit with man than the Creator, and had had inſtill'd into him a falſe notion of God, nothing appear'd as a bar to any Rebellion: when infidelity had ſet foot in the breach, it prepar'd the way for all the black Legion which follow'd; then the Dominion of God is ſlighted, the Law of Creation broken, dependance on God rejected, man would be his own Lord, his own all, and God ſhould be nothing to him. And upon the account of this Unbelief, and the conſequents of it in Adam, he is not reckon'd among thoſe Heroes commended for their Faith, Heb. 11. not that Adam was void of Faith in the promis'd Meſſiah; for had he not believed that promiſe of a Redeemer, he would not have been careful to have tranſmitted it to his poſterity, nor have taught Abel to ſacrifice, who was inſtructed by his Father in that religious ſervice, as typical of the Mediator, ſince we read of no new revelation made to Abel about him. * And it appears that God had inſtructed Adam in the offering of of him; whence ſhould he be cloathed with the skins of Beaſts, without the killing them, and that not for food, (ſince no licence was for that granted that we read of, till after the deluge) but for ſacrifice: and it cannot be ſuppoſed, that Adam ſhould be one hundred and twenty nine Years, without regarding the great type of the Mediator in ſacrifices; for in that Year it is ſuppos'd Abel was killed, becauſe Seth was born the one hundred and thirtieth Year of Adam, Gen 5.3. * But the reaſon perhaps is, becauſe his firſt Unbelief, whereby he was the Author of the ruine of Mankind, obſcur'd the glory of his after-Faith, the Scripture continually ſetting him forth as the original of all our miſeries, and oppoſing him to Chriſt, the reſtorer, Rom. 5. 14. Death raign'd from Adam, 1 Cor. 15. 22, 45. as alſo becauſe the Scripture records no perſonal act of Adam after his Fall, whereby his Faith is evidenc'd to us. Unbelief was the ſin of Adam, and Faith the Grace of Chriſt. Adam did not believe either the neceſſity of the precept, or infallibility of the threatning; our Saviour believ'd the precepts both of the moral and mediatory Law to obey them, and the promiſes of God in the Covenant of redemption to reſt upon God in them. And by the way, we may ſee a reaſon why God will recover us in a way of Faith; becauſe we firſt apoſtatiz'd from him for want of it: he will have his honour reſtor'd by the Creatures believing him, as it was firſt ſullied by the Creatures belying him.

[2.] Our Unbelief is greater than Adams, either than that before his Fall, or in any act of it after the promiſe of redemption, or greater than his could be, ſuppoſing him to be a total Unbeliever.

(1.) Greater than that before his Fall. His was againſt a threatning, for we read of no promiſe made him before, though a promiſe is implyed, Gen. 2. 17. Of the Tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou ſhalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely dye, and he was to live by his Obedience; ours againſt threatnings and promiſes alſo; his ſin was againſt creating goodneſs, not againſt a crucifyed Saviour; that was ingratitude to God as Creator, ours ingratitude to God as Creator and Redeemer; our Redemption was with greater difficulty than our Creation; this was done by a word, and it was a verbal declaration Adam denyed credit unto; but the other was not without the Death of the Son of God, a real teſtimony of Gods veracity, ſuperior to a bare verbal one. The Creation met with no reluctancy in any attribute of God; this, according to the ſcheme of Divinity, for our more clear apprehenſion of the order of Redemption, met with a reluctancy from juſtice. It could be no ſpot on the honour of God to create, it was a manifeſtation of his goodneſs without any appearance of contradiction: it might ſeem a blot upon his honour and kindneſs to his Son, to prefer the rebel World before the Life and Peace of his only begotten: his goodneſs to his Creature ſeems to interfere with his goodneſs to his beſt beloved. Our Unbelief and ſin againſt the Goſpel, is of a more griſely hue in this reſpect than his, becauſe againſt a manifeſtation of greater goodneſs. Ours is againſt a better Covenant; and if that brought confuſion on the World, much more will this increaſe our confuſion, as well as our ſin. That was but againſt one threatning, ours againſt many threatnings and promiſes; that, when the only perſon he had to converſe with, viz. Eve, perſwaded him to it; ours, when many diſſwade us from it; not but that Adams ſin was very great, he not having a corrupted nature, the task appointed him being not hard, abſtinence from one Tree only only enjoin'd him, with more eaſe to be kept than broken. * To break it therefore was a preſumptuous ſin, which is aggravated in that he receiv'd the reſtraint immediately from God, which Eve did not; neither doth God ſpeak with an audible Voice from Heaven to us, but by the mediation of his word tranſmitted to us from Age to Age; yet in the former reſpects our Unbelief is of a deeper aggravation than his.

* Kallet Miſcel. l. 1. c. 4. §. 7. p. 68.

(2.) Greater than any act could be after his fall, or ſuppoſing him to be a total Unbeliever. It had been ſtill only againſt a word, and ours againſt a Deed. It had been againſt the Mediator in a Promiſe, ours againſt a Mediator on the Croſs, and on the Throne. It had been againſt God promiſing, ours againſt God performing: His had been againſt God aſſuring it, ours againſt God acting it: His had been but againſt one Promiſe, ours againſt many. It had been when there was not one to give him an example of Faith; ours is when we are encompaſſed with a cloud of witneſſes, Heb. 12. 1. referring to the Catalogue of Believers, mention'd in Chap. 11. Indeed Adams Faith, and the Faith of Believers in the old World, condemns our want of it. He believ'd, when he had no experience of the performance of any truth but that in the threatning, nor the experience of any other that went before him: but we have had the experience of Gods making good his Promiſe, and maintaining his Goſpel. We find the Promiſe made to Adam, and all thoſe concerning the Meſſiah made to the Fathers, eminently perform'd; the threatnings of God upon the Unbelieving Jews, the Crucifyers of the Redeemer, Executed; additional incentives to believe more than Adam had. We read but of one Promiſe Adam and Abel, and the reſt of the Patriarchs before the Floud had, and we find not any one Promiſe upon Record made to the old World, beſides that firſt to Adam; and therefore ſuppoſing Adam and the reſt had been Unbelievers, their Unbelief had not been ſo black as ours, becauſe we have ſo much more encouragement than they had, by how much a real performance doth exceed a verbal Promiſe.

Conſider then upon the whole. That every act of Unbelief in us, is an acting over the ſin of Adam, an approbation of his miſcarriage, which provoked God to pour down ſo many miſeries upon the corrupted World. 'Tis a ſin indeed of that magnitude, that it equals every thing in greatneſs, but that infinite mercy which can pardon it, and embrace the returning Penitent.

(3.) Unbelief is a ſin againſt the Law of nature. There are two principles evident to man by the natural Law.

1. That God is to be believ'd.
2. Our happineſs is to be deſir'd and ſecur'd.

[1.] As Unbelief is againſt a divine Revelation, 'tis againſt the light of nature. Though nature cannot aſcend to many truths before a Revelation by God, yet when the Revelation is made, and reaſon ſees the Characters of divine Authority upon it, or hath no cogent arguments againſt it, to deny it to be the mind and promiſe of God, not to believe it, is a violation of the Law of nature; becauſe the pooreſt reaſon dictates this, that ſuppoſing God hath made a Declaration of his will in any Promiſe, or Precept, or threatning, man is to believe what God promiſeth or Commands: Becauſe reaſon will tell him, that God cannot deceive, that veracity or truth is a neceſſary perfection of the divine nature; that God is able to perform what he promiſeth, and therefore man is bound to believe what God promiſeth, aſſent to it, accept of it; and believe what he Commands, aſſent to it, and obey it. No reaſon can be rendred to prove any thing in the World ſo certainly true as this principle, that I ſhould believe God; if I do not believe him, I offend againſt the moſt indiſputable principle of reaſon, againſt that which nature dictates. As no Nation changeth their Gods which they think to be Gods, Jer. 2. 11. So no people can ſlight that which they think to be the mind of their God, without making a breach upon their own reaſon. In this caſe Faith is to be conſider'd two ways; As it is an aſſent to a Revelation of God, or as it is a ſpecial inſtrument of apprehending, and laying hold on Chriſt for juſtification, &c. In the firſt ſence Faith is a vertue we are oblig'd to, by the light of nature. In the ſecond ſenſe, 'tis purely an Evangelical Grace. Now the Law of nature tells us, our Creator is to be credited in any Propoſition he makes; that our belief of him is a

Carriage

Carriage due to him; that it is infinite goodneſs, he will condeſcend to reveal himſelf in ways of mercy to his Creature; and that this divine goodneſs requires an anſwerable and ſutable return; that whatſoever is reveal'd ought to be entertain'd by all the faculties of the Soul, believ'd in the underſtanding, embrac'd by the will, and welcom'd by all the affections; for all the faculties of the Soul being Created by God, ought by the Law of their Creation to riſe up in a due reſpect to every thing that flows from him. If ſo be then, men do aſſent to the Goſpel to be of divine Revelation, and pretend to believe the Promiſes, Precepts, and threatnings contain'd therein, to have the ſtamp of a divine authority upon them, and yet riſe not up in a heartily welcoming the terms of it, and pay not a ſutable Allegiance to that which they account the will of God, they muſt needs conſider themſelves as Violaters of the Law of nature, and have reaſon to be ſenſible, that the Law of the Creation will ſtrengthen the Evangelical ſentence againſt them. For it is againſt the nature of a rational Creature to neglect that, which he is ſatisfied the Author of his reaſon doth propoſe to him. And thoſe that are not allur'd to God by that which they think to be an act of his love, are worſe than Beaſts: they are not men, becauſe they neglect that love which is the cord of a man, proper for the drawing him to God. Unbelief is a plain contradiction to divine revelation. If a man think the Goſpel to be of divine authority, his not embracing it ariſeth from a conceit, that the things propos'd in it are not neceſſary to the attaining of happineſs, or that they are not as conducing to it as other means of his own invention; that they are either uſeleſs or not neceſſarily uſeful; and in this he contradicts the law of nature, which preſcribes an acquieſcence in, and veneration of any thing, which we have ground to think is of divine authority.

[2.] As it is againſt the principles of ſelf-love. Since God hath reveal'd the way of the Goſpel, and men fancy to themſelves either that they are not miſerable, or that they can have ſome other remedy for their miſery; they offend againſt that natural principle of ſelf-preſervation, and that in the higheſt concern imaginable, their eternal happineſs and avoiding an eternally doleful miſery. In the Goſpel there are ſet forth Pardon, Peace, Bleſſedneſs in Heaven to the Believer; Death, Hell, Judgment to the Unbeliever. The natural principle of ſelf-love, if liſtned to, will direct a man to dread the miſery and thirſt for the happineſs. There is ſo much light in every man, as to affect and deſire a bleſſed immortality; for he believes there is a God, he believes that his Soul is immortal, he hath natural arguments to evince, that there is a ſtate of happineſs or miſery after this Life. He may know, that he could never come out of Gods Mint in ſuch a rude and filthy poſture wherein he finds himſelf; that he was Created for higher ends than thoſe he doth commonly purſue. That there is no bleſſedneſs but in the enjoyment of ſome higher good than any he finds in the World; that this bleſſedneſs doth conſiſt in the fruition of God; that there muſt be ſome way of attaining this, Pſal. 4. 6. There be many that ſay, who will ſhow us any good? Who will free us from this Labyrinth of miſery wherein we are involved? is the Voice of ſenſible nature. Then natural reaſon may ſtep in and conclude, that this way propos'd in the Goſpel is the moſt rational way, and though there be ſome myſteries in it above the ken of natural reaſon, and too dazling for it, yet taking it in the whole combination, it gives a fuller content to natural and unbyaſs'd reaſon, with Salvoes for the honour of God, and means for the happineſs of the Creature, than any Religion doth. Now when the Goſpel propoſeth things naturally deſirable by man, with means to attain thoſe good things, and motives, from the tranſcendent love and grace of God to the Creature, to excite his induſtry; for a man not to believe, is to put himſelf in a way of contradiction to his own natural deſires, to croſs his own happineſs, fall out with himſelf, and ſtifle that principle of ſelf-preſervation, which is natural to him, with all other Creatures in their ſeveral kinds; and this principle is contradicted in every ſtep Unbelief takes in the World. I do not by this Diſcourſe aſcribe any clearneſs to natural reaſon in the things of the Goſpel, or that man hath by nature a principle of a ready complyance with it. But that the happineſs the Goſpel propoſeth is naturally deſirable and deſir'd by all men, but it is not entertain'd by men, becauſe of their natural enmity againſt

it,

it, not againſt the good things propos'd in it, but againſt the means and methods, which God hath order'd for the attainment of them, viz. by a way of Faith, a principle the Pride of reaſon cavils with. 'Tis mans enmity and not his ignorance makes him reject that in the Goſpel, which he deſires by his natural Conſtitution as a rational Creature. And this is ſuch a folly which admits of no excuſe, to refuſe thoſe things, which are the moſt gratifying excellencies in themſelves, for a vaniſhing traſh, a luſt, which is but a Magazine of Torments, and treaſury of everlaſting wrath.

So that to conclude this, ſince it is confeſt, I ſuppoſe, by all of us, that the Goſpel is of divine Revelation; that the happineſs the Goſpel doth propoſe, is deſirable: if we do not heartily embrace it in the terms of it, we contradict the two cleareſt principles, acknowledg'd by all men in the World by the light of nature; we practically deny, that what God reveals ought to be entertain'd, and we act againſt that natural love to our ſelves, which is the rule of the love we owe to others, and which is ſo riveted in the Creature that it cannot ceaſe, but with a diſſolution and annihilation of its being; it can never be blotted out of the damn'd in Hell; and in both reſpects we violate the cleareſt dictates of nature.

(4.) Unbelief is the cauſe of all the abominations, and neglects of God committed by men under the Goſpel. Beſides, that Unbelief hath been the cauſe in Adam of all the ſins whereby the Law is violated, and God grieved; 'tis the cauſe of all ſins where the Goſpel is Preached. As man firſt fell, becauſe he did not believe Gods threatning; ſo ſince the Revelation of Chriſt, he continues in ſin, becauſe he will not believe Gods Promiſes. He is not like to be controul'd by any reaſon, or diverted from letting looſe the reins to any Luſt, who will not give any credit to God, either promiſing, commanding, or threatning. For as Faith unites us to an holy God, and a ſpotleſs Saviour, whereby we become holy; ſo Unbelief unites us to an impure Devil, who, by the help of this, engenders monſtrous iniquities in the Soul; ſo that it may be ſaid of this as the Apoſtle James 3. 6. ſaith of the tongue, 'Tis a fire, a world of iniquity, it defiles the whole ſoul, ſets on fire the courſe of nature, and it is ſet on fire of Hell. 'Tis the Ring-Leader of all ſin in the World, and the common Incendiary that puts to the fire, when any Bullet is ſhot againſt God; and therefore hath a ſinfulneſs in it above other ſins, becauſe it gives life and ſpirit to them all. * The reaſon is plain, becauſe the will moves to the embracing of things according as the underſtanding judgeth them to be good, and refuſeth them as the underſtanding judgeth them to be evil; If the motion of the will therefore be not towards God, but to the filth of the World, 'tis becauſe the underſtanding is erroneous, not fully poſſeſſed with a Belief that God is, and that he hath promiſed thoſe good things declar'd in the Goſpel: for the will cannot have any motion which is not one way or other determin'd by the underſtanding; and when the underſtanding is poſſeſſed by ill notions of things, it is as an Ignis fatuus, and the will is apt to be mis-led by it into any ſlough.

* Muſtret. Sermon 5. ſur. 3. Hebr. p. 222.

Which appears ſeveral wayes.

[1.] Faith is the root of all other graces, Unbelief muſt therefore be the foundation of all other ſins *. Faith and Unbelief are contrary, and therefore have contrary effects; fear of God, or Faith in God, is the beginning of Wiſdom, Prov. 9. 10. Infidelity is the Floud-Gate through which all impiety enters. When we want Faith to give credit to God, we ſhall have enough to give credit to the Devil, who ſuits our humour. By Faith Abraham obeyed God, Heb. 11. 8. Had not Abraham had Faith in the Promiſe, he had never obey'd God in ſacrificing his Iſaac; and where there is a want of Faith in God, there will not be a ſacrificing one Iſaac for him. Not one ſin but will be engendred in the Womb of this, as well as not one grace but grows up from the Womb of Faith. As Faith purifies the heart, ſo unbelief fills it with loathſome gueſts. No grace can be planted where Unbelief is rooted, no more than Corn can thrive where the ground is overgrown with Weeds. Branches may as well flouriſh without a root, as any grace be planted without Faith. An Unbeliever is a dead man, depriv'd of the image of God, and liable to all kind of putrefaction, bearing the mark of the Devil upon his Soul, void of the ſpirit of God, which is the principle of Life. As it is the property of Faith to work by love, ſo it is the contrary property of Unbelief to work by enmity to, and hatred of God; as Faith is a going out of our ſelves to God to pleaſe him, ſo Unbelief is a departing from the living God to our ſelves, and every thing that is at variance with him.

[2.] If we conſider every particular ſin, this of Unbelief will appear to be the cauſe of it. Why are men proud? becauſe they believe not God reſiſts them. Why are men covetous? becauſe they believe not that God abhors it at the ſame rate with the ſin of Idolatry. Why are men uncharitable to others in their neceſſities? becauſe they believe not, that he that gives to the poor, lends to the Lord. Why are men ignorant? becauſe they believe not the word concerns them, therefore Ignorance and Unbelief are put together, 2 Cor. 4. 3, 4. Why are men lull'd in ſecurity in their treacherous ways with God? becauſe they bely the Lord, and count the Prophets words no firmer than wind, Jer. 5. 11, 12, 13. Why do not men fear him? becauſe they believe neither his goodneſs, nor juſtice. Why do not men ſeek after God? becauſe his judgments are far above out of their ſight, Pſal. 10. 5. they believe not their march towards them. What is the reaſon men neglect addreſſes to God, or pray ſo rarely or coldly? becauſe they believe him not to be a God hearing Prayer, or believe not Chriſt to be an Advocate. Why do men make ſhew of Religion to ſerve an intereſt or luſt? becauſe they believe not God to be a ſearcher of the Heart, and a tryer of the Reins. Why did Sarah laugh and mock at the promiſe of God? becauſe ſhe conſidered more the weakneſs of her age than the faithfulneſs, and power of the promiſer, Gen. 18. 11, 12. She firſt imagined the promiſe falſe, that God mocked her; thence ſhe fell to mocking God, and then to lying. Why did the Iſraelites murmur againſt God? becauſe they did not believe him for all the ſigns he had ſhown among them, Numb. 14. 11. Do not our hearts in afflictions ſink into fears, becauſe we believe not Gods ſoveraign Wiſdom and fatherly Love in the ordering of them? Why do we fear man that ſhall dye? becauſe we forget the Lord our Maker, Iſai. 61. 12, 13. And why do we ſeek unlawful means to help our ſelves? becauſe we believe not either the tenderneſs or all-ſufficiency of his Providence. What is the reaſon men are unreaſonable and wicked, always perſecuting them that would live godly? becauſe they have not Faith, 2 Theſſ. 3. 2. Apoſtaſie and hardneſs of heart are the births of this fruitful Monſter, Heb. 3. 12, 13. the evil heart of Unbelief cauſeth to depart from the living God: he that undervalues the promiſe will not cleave to the precept, and makes no ſcruple to hurl away that which he believes not to be true, and change Religion as the State changes profeſſion. All miſcarriages may be traced to this as their prime ſpring; 'tis therefore called not ſimply Unbelief, but an evil heart of Unbelief, that which gives advantage to the Devil to pour all the floods of wickedneſs into the heart. What Rebellions againſt God, reſiſtance of the Spirit, contempt of Ordinances, will he not engage in, who believes God a lyar? Not any ſin in the World but may be found in this ſink, I may therefore call it the original ſin under the Goſpel, as Infidelity was the original ſin in Adam under the Covenant of works. Where this Unbelief is partial, all defects in Believers themſelves muſt be aſcribed to it: whatſoever deviations there are from the precepts of the Goſpel, are either from an habitual Unbelief, or the remainders of it in the Heart; they are either from a want of Faith in the habit, or in the act. Chriſt evidenceth this in his Prayer for Peter, that his Faith might not fail, Luke 22. 32. where Faith fails, the Soul will ſink into any ſin; his weakneſs of Faith was the cauſe of his ſad Fall; and a total want of it, had kept him under the power of it for ever as well as Judas: and though a total diſſent from, or a contradiction to the truth of the Goſpel, as conſidered as truth, be inconſiſtent with the nature and temper of a true Chriſtian, yet there is too often ſuch an Unbelief, which is a want of a due eſteem and value of the things of the Goſpel, which is the wicket and breach whereby ſin enters, and plays Rex ſometimes in them.

[3.] Unbelief ſlights that which can only enable us to conquer ſin. The end of Chriſts coming was to finiſh tranſgreſſion, and to make an end of ſin *, to ſtop the flood of iniquity, which had overflowed the World from the day of Adams Fall, to reſtrain it from exerciſing that Empire and Authority it had uſurpt in the Earth. Though this was not the motive to God to ſend Chriſt, yet it was a

main end of his miſſion; for it conſiſted not with the holineſs or ſoveraignty of God, to have a ſatisfaction made for ſin, without a deſtruction of the body of ſin. It had alſo been a deſign below the love the Redeemer bore to his Father and to us, to free us only from our guilt, and let us remain under the power of our ſin; and indeed Chriſt freed us from the curſe of the Law, that we might with more cheerfulneſs walk in the precepts of it; and reconcil'd an offended God, that we might be capable of a new and ſpiritual ſervice of him. Faith is the firſt grace wrought in the Soul in purſuance of the end of the Death of Chriſt, to pull down thereby the corruption which had ſway'd the Scepter ſo many Ages: Unbelief then being contrary to this, ſlights all thoſe helps and aſſiſtances againſt tranſgreſſion, and preſerves ſin in its full authority and command in the Soul. It keeps a man from complying with this deſign of God in Chriſt, and ſtakes the Soul down in its ſlavery to ſin. An Unbeliever cannot perform any real ſervice to God, becauſe where the Tree is not good, the Fruit cannot be good. He is off from, and hates the root which can only convey ſap to him for the bringing forth ſuch Fruits which are acceptable to God, John 15. 3, 5. without me you can do nothing, nothing ſavoury to God. As the branch cannot bring forth fruit, except it abide in the vine, and partake of its juice. They cannot pray, which is a main help againſt the power of ſin; for how can they call upon him in whom they have not believ'd? Rom. 10. 14. It keeps in vigour all the Principles of ſin, encourageth and welcoms all the motions to ſin, though it doth not always put them forth viſibly into act, becauſe of ſome external impediments. It bars the heart againſt true principles of ſervice, and the aſſiſtances the Holy Ghoſt profers, and thwarts God in that which was one of his principal deſigns. It repels thoſe promiſes and threatnings which are the arms of the Goſpel; Promiſes of life to the Believer, and denuntiations of Death to the Unbeliever, Mark 16. 16. whereby Souls are conquer'd to a ſubmiſſion to it, and a War againſt their Luſts. The promiſes are alluring, the threatnings affrighting, both ſuted to the nature of man for the reſtoring his affections: Unbelief now diſparageth the promiſes of the Goſpel, ſlights the threatnings of the Goſpel, pulls back from any conſideration of them, whereby they loſe their edge and efficacy. Who will ever ſpend time in the conſideration of that which he thinks to be falſe? As the life of grace lies in conſideration, ſo the life of ſin lies in a neglect of it, which is occaſion'd by Unbelief. 'Tis by the means of the promiſes the heart is cleanſed, 2 Cor. 7. 1. and by the not believing them the heart is kept ſtufft with that filth it had. * For it ſuppoſeth a want of Faith, that intrinſick principle whereby we can only obtain help and remedy againſt ſin. The word cannot be operative, becauſe there is not Faith to Believe. Had not Adam believ'd that promiſe God made him, after his firſt infidelity, of the Seed of the Woman, he had approv'd of his former Unbelief, and rejected Gods deſign of reſtoring him to his ſervice and duty, which every Son of Adam doth, that complies not with the performance of that Promiſe. Gods end in ſending Chriſt was to bruiſe the Serpents Head; Unbelief would either ſhield his Head, or apply a Plaiſter to it for a Cure.

* Suarez.

[4.] Unbelief maintains every ſin in ſtrength. Unbelief being a departing from the living God, the further the ſeparation from God, the ſtronger the Empire and Tyranny of ſin. For as grace is moſt vigorous, when Faith is moſt firm; ſo on the contrary ſin muſt be ſtrongeſt, when Unbelief is moſt powerful. 'Tis the great ſupport and Pillar of the Devils Kingdom, which muſt totter and fall to the ground, if this did expire. So much ſtrength therefore as Unbelief hath in any, ſo much ſtrength hath every ſin, which either the conſtitution enclines to, or the temptation allures to. 'Tis the Protector of every ſin, which would elſe ly bare to the ſtrokes of the ſpirit. As Faith is a ſhield againſt the darts of the Devil, Eph. 6. 16. So this is a ſhield againſt the Sword of the Spirit. Faith is the victory whereby we overcome the World, 1 Joh. 5. 4. Unbelief is the Victory whereby the World and every ſin overcomes us. There is no Unbeliever, but being in his natural condition hath the ſtrength of all ſin in his heart lying in Garriſon. Where Unbelief reigns, the heart is evil, Heb. 3. 12. though this ſtrength is not always in exerciſe, as the Forces of a Garriſon are not always in action; reſtraining grace may check it, but nothing but Faith can kill it. Not one ſin could maintain its ground without Unbelief. This as a ſtout General, ſpirits the whole Army. No ſin can receive its Deaths wound till this Goliah be laid groveling in the Duſt; then doth the Army of the Philiſtins loſe both their hopes and courage. Sin indeed may ſuffer ſome damage by moral conſiderations, and the Soul be wrought upon by ſome affectionate Diſcourſes: But as long as this Champion ſtands in defence, ſin will not be utterly defeated; it will rally and recover its ground: for while the main cauſe of drawing back from God continues, the effect will follow upon occaſion. And therefore when men after much profeſſion, glowing affections, and godly reformations, and continuance ſometime in them, fall back again to their old ſtyes; you may conclude they never had Faith, which would have wounded their Luſts with a deadly blow as well as moral conſiderations curb'd them with a weak Bridle. Such reformations proceed from a work upon the affections, not upon the judgment, which perhaps hath a ſuſpicion that the things of the Goſpel may be true, but never was poſſeſs'd with an entire Belief of the truth of them. Unbelief is the Purveyor to feed ſin, and the Protector to defend it. As Faith grows, all other ſins decay; as Unbelief grows, all other ſins, by virtue of that, maintain their ſtanding.

[5.] It excites all kind of ſin in the heart. As the Goſpel received by Faith oppoſeth all ſin, teaching us to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, Tit. 2. 12. ſo this principle oppoſite to the Goſpel, teacheth us to cheriſh all ſin. As the more Faith is exercis'd, the more other graces traverſe the Stage: (For as they depend upon Faith in regard of their being, ſo they do alſo in regard of their exerciſe.) So the more Unbelief is exercis'd, the more all kind of ſin is ſtirred up and quicken'd in the heart. As the Goſpel is enricht with all motives and directions to what is righteous before God, and comely before man, wherein whatſoever hath moral beauty, or is of honourable eſteem among men, that deſire to walk according to right reaſon, is commended and preſſed with the higheſt injunctions; which if obſerv'd by men under the Goſpel, would make the Earth a Paradiſe, reſtore the honour of God, and the beauty of the Creation: ſo Unbelief diſgraceth theſe principles, degrades them from that eſteem they deſerve in the hearts of men; diſcountenanceth that which is ſpiritually noble and worthy, alarms the corrupt nature, brings the force of it into the Field againſt the principles of the Goſpel. Therefore where the Goſpel doth not refine and reform men by the operation of Faith, men are rendred worſe, more aukward towards God, and ſpiritually wicked by the operation of Unbelief, which is, per accidens, the effect of the Goſpel. As Phyſick that doth not work and expel the humours, gives them advantage to rage more in the body. As the Goſpel profits when mixed with Faith, ſo 'tis wholly unprofitable when mixed with Unbelief. Sin thereby draws rather an encouragement from it, and takes occaſion from thence to become more furious; hence is that rage commonly againſt the Goſpel, when it comes into any place where before it was not. The Devil works by the Unbelief of man to excite all the ſtrength of corrupt nature againſt it, to ſtop the courſe of it; and what hath been done in the World in the times of the Apoſtles, and will be done to the end of the World, is a Picture of what men do ſecretly in their own hearts againſt the principles of it, by the ſtrength of their infidelity, which ſtirs up all the Serpentine principles in the heart againſt it.

[6.] It denies all that evil, which God hath teſtified that there is in ſin. When God by the ſending of Chriſt hath witneſſed to the World what a boundleſs filth there is in ſin, that could not be waſht off by Oceans of Bloud, or purg'd by the firing of the whole World, or pardon'd upon the ſollicitations of Men and Angels, no nor can by the interceſſion of the Son of God, without his Death too. As Faith by cloſing with Chriſt, and the terms of the Goſpel, acknowledgeth all this evil in Sin: So Unbelief by rejecting him avows the contrary, regards that as good which God declares to be the greateſt evil; reſpects that as comely which God hath declar'd to be moſt loathſome and monſtrous; prefers its own judgment of ſin before the holineſs and judgment of God, which he hath manifeſted of it in the Death of Chriſt.

(5.) Unbelief poſſeſſeth the choiceſt faculties of the Soul. Other ſins are more ſeated in the ſenſitive appetite; this in the underſtanding and will: other Vices may ariſe from the humours of the body; anger and pride owe their birth to a predominant choler; wantonneſs and luſt to a fulneſs of blood; lazyneſs and idleneſs ſtream from a lake of phlegm; fearfulneſs, jealouſie, covetouſneſs, and envy from a dusky melancholy: But Unbelief ariſeth from the ignorance of the underſtanding, and perverſity of the will, and moſt from the latter, where it hath its principal ſeat, John 5. 40. You will not come to me that you might have life. In the propoſal of the Goſpel there are two things to be conſidered, the truth and the goodneſs; under which double conſideration it is propos'd; as it is true, Faith embracing it, and Unbelief rejecting it, are in the underſtanding; as it is good, Faith entertaining it, and Unbelief refuſing it, are in the will. The falſity and ignorance of Unbelief is ſubjectivè in the mind; contraries are converſant about the ſame ſubject: Faith is in the underſtanding, and therefore infidelity, which is oppoſite to it, is in the ſame ſubject; the malice of Unbelief is in the will, as the principal act of Faith, whereby it receives Chriſt, is in the will: a mans wilfulneſs is the cauſe that he doth not believe; he doth not believe becauſe he will not believe; that is a great ſin which poſſeſſeth the ſupream faculties, and taints them more than any; and the more of the will is in any ſin, the blacker is that ſin.

(6.) 'Tis moſt odious to God. If he delights in them that hope in his mercy, Pſal. 33. 18. he muſt abominate them that think ſcorn to entertain it. It would bar God from all opportunities of diſpenſing his chiefeſt goodneſs; the fulleſt Fountain would run in vain, and the richeſt Feaſt be in vain provided. Without Faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11. 6. though a man had the quinteſſence of all the moral virtues that any Heathen was ever enricht with; no man can pleaſe God but by Chriſt; no man can have Chriſt but by Faith: Thoſe therefore that hear of Chriſt, and embrace him not in the whole latitude, as he is propos'd as an Object of Faith, are the higheſt diſpleaſers of God. Without ſome ſort of Faith it was impoſſible to pleaſe God, even in a ſtate of innocence; Adam could not obſerve a precept, fear a threatning, nor hope in a promiſe, unleſs he believ'd him: * But Unbelief, ſince Chriſt is propos'd, contains in it the greateſt ingratitude to God, when God prevents the Creature by the offers of love; and when God is offended, yet ſeeks reconciliation, not only with thoſe who have offended him, and begin to ceaſe from it, but with thoſe that actually offend him, while he is ſeeking peace with them, when we were yet ſinners, Rom. 5. 8. men are called while they are actually in Arms. Chriſt doth moſt reprove his Diſciples for this: they had ambition and paſſion, many infirmities; yet we find our Saviour chiding them for nothing but their Unbelief, or at leaſt, not ſo ſeverely, Mark 16. 4. and 9. 19. Luke 24. 25. He upbraids thoſe Cities wherein mighty works were done, becauſe they believed not. God was moſt angry with Moſes for his Unbelief; this affronts God moſt; this is the object of his greateſt anger, and greateſt hatred, and therefore the greateſt ſin.

* Lingend. Tom. 3. p. 250.

Uſe. If Unbelief be the greateſt ſin.

1. Of Information.

1. We may here take a view of the infinite patience, and condeſcending grace of God, to thoſe that have a weakneſs of Faith, with a great mixture of Unbelief.

(1.) His patience. This ſin being ſo black as hath been deſcribed, a reproaching him in all his attributes, and Chriſt in his gracious deſign, worſe than the Unbelief of the Jews, much of the ſame nature with the firſt ſin of the Devils: 'Tis a wonder of patience that God ſuffers ſuch a mountain of ſin to cumber the ground, ſince it reacheth as high as Heaven, and dares the glorious Throne of God; that God ſhould not cut of thoſe Thorns which are continually galling him, and fling them into the Fire. Man is not ſo impatient under any thing as diſgrace; God bears infinitely more reproaches by this ſin, than all the men in the World ever bore; yet he hath as infinite a patience to bear them, as he hath power to puniſh them. None but a God could ſpare ſuch affronting ſinners, and endure ſo many ſcorns without evidences of wrath, and have an unwearied patience under ſuch a wearying ſin, Iſai. 7. 13. Will you weary my God alſo? which is ſpoken

ſpoken of Ahaz his Unbelief, as was explain'd in the beginning of the Diſcourſe.

(2.) His grace and condeſcenſion,

[1.] In the continuance of his gracious offers where the Unbelief is total. Aſtoniſhing kindneſs! that after the firſt refuſal of Chriſt, and repeated acts of infidelity, God ſhould ſtill call and cry, come down from Heaven and knock, that grace ſhould ſtill ſollicite the Sinner, when that, and all the train of Attributes attending it, are thruſt off and violently ſtruck at by this ſin. The firſt offer of Chriſt is a fruit of amazing grace, but the repetition after ſuch indignities is more Hyperbolical, when he quickens his ſollicitations of men under a ſin of ſo high a provocation. Not any man poſſeſs'd with the grace of Faith, but hath withſtood many invitations, diſgrac'd the wiſdom, faithfulneſs, goodneſs, and holineſs of God; accus'd him of the greateſt falſity, repreſented him more baſe and deceitful than the worſt of Men or Devils; and this after God hath rais'd the ſtrongeſt Bulwark againſt it, and given the fulleſt aſſurance to make void their ſuſpicions of him; himſelf contriving redemption, his Son acting it, his Spirit applying it, as if all their employment were about this affair; yet they have maintain'd their incredulity; when we conſider this and the doubts and jealouſies, when we firſt ſet foot toward Heaven, we cannot ceaſe from wonder, that ever God ſhould receive us.

[2.] In his gracious communications where there is a partial Unbelief. 'Tis admirable, that when this, though partial, is ſuch a reflexion upon God, that he doth not alter his Methods, forbear the Communications of his grace, when we are often doubting of the ſtability of that grace. He is firm to his truth in the midſt of mens falſeneſs to him, Rom. 3. 3. the Unbelief of men ſhall not make the faith or fidelity of God of none effect. The Unbelief of that Nation did not hinder his entruſting his Oracles with them. As the truth of God was immutable to thoſe that believ'd of the Jewiſh Nation, though the Unbelief of the moſt was very groſs: So he will be faithful to the Believer, though there be a mixture of the ſin contrary to that Faith wherewith he is endow'd; Moſes and Aaron believ'd not God to ſanctify him, Numb. 20. 12. Moſes his Unbelief was great in ſtriking the Rock twice, when he ſhould have but ſpoken to it; yet God was ſo gracious as not to deny that effect to his Unbelief which he had aſſur'd to his Faith; he ſtopt not the influence of his power, though Moſes had weakned the hand of his Faith; he caus'd waters to guſh out of the rock abundantly, v. 11. When this hath put forth it ſelf in act, God hath been ſo indulgent as to repeat his promiſe for the ſtrengthening of a fainting Faith. When Abraham after a twofold promiſe, Gen. 12. 2. Gen. 13. 16. began to queſtion Gods truth, becauſe he did not yet ſee the Seed promis'd him, and his Years increas'd, Gen. 15. 3. what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? a querulous Speech diſcovering an act of infidelity immediately after a third gracious promiſe from God, v. 2. Fear not Abraham, I am thy ſhield, and thy exceeding great reward. To this his anſwer ſeems to be: What reward wilt thou give me ſeeing I go Childleſs, and the Saviour of the World is not like to come out of my Loins, ſince I have not that Seed promiſed ſo long ſince? God doth not chide him for this ſo ſevere a charge, but graciouſly renews his promiſe and ſtrengthens his Faith, v. 3, 4, 5, 6. He that ſhall come forth of thy own bowels ſhall be thy heir, and thy ſeed ſhall be as the number of the ſtars. And when after this no Seed came ſo ſuddenly as he expected, he liſtens to Sarahs Counſel, and goes in to Hagar, Gen. 16. 4. as if he was reſolved to wait upon the promiſe no longer: yet God is ſo far from ſtripping him of that glorious title of Father of the Faithful, that he condeſcends to ſhoar up his Faith by a new Promiſe, Gen. 17. 1, 2, &c. and the more to ſtrengthen his drooping Faith, changeth his name Abram into *Abraham, which ſignifies a Father of my People; that he might remember the Promiſe every time he ſhould think of his name. It was given him after his diſtruſt of the former Promiſes in the buſineſs of Hagar. David takes notice of the indulgence of God to him in this Caſe, when his diffidence of God hath hurryed him ſo far as poſitively to aſſert, that he was cut off from before the eyes of God, Pſal. 31. 22. that God had no more kindneſs for him, or remembrance of his own Promiſe, yet, nevertheleſs thou hearde ſt the voice of my ſupplications, cations. Though he had had ſo many Promiſes from God of a Kingdom, yet he ſaid in his haſt all men were Lyars, Samuel too, and in that reflected upon God, whoſe errand Samuel deliver'd; ſome of thoſe Weapons brandiſht againſt me, will one time or other reach me, and little hold is to be taken of the words of the Prophets, which are but a pack of lies; yet as long as he left not praying, God left not Anſwering. Scarce a gracious Anſwer a good man hath, but he may put a neverthleſs to it, becauſe of that diſtruſt of God which is mixt with his Petitions. When by a partial Unbelief, ſtarting from us, we queſtion his truth, beſpot his wiſdom, forget his kindneſs, have low thoughts of his ſufficiency; yet all the aggravations in this ſinful act (if there be a true Faith, as a grain of Muſtard-Seed) ſilence not the voice of his Bowels, dam not up the torrent of his love, he will take occaſion from thence to magnify his Grace. When Peter ſeem'd to have had his little Faith cover'd with the rubbiſh of his Unbelief, and the Faith of the Diſciples ſeem'd to be dead and buried, with the apprehenſion of Chriſt by the Jewiſh Officers, he was then going to pay their Debts, redeem their Souls, bind up their Bones, and make an everlaſting Peace between God and them. And when Thomas perſiſted ſtill in his infidelity of the Reſurrection of Chriſt, he doth not only ſhow himſelf to him with particular evidences of the reality of his Reſurrection in the marks of his hands and feet; but inſpires him with a particular ſentiment of his Deity, which no man before did ſo explicitely acknowledge, Joh. 20. 28. My Lord, and my God; not that Unbelief is a motive to Chriſt to do ſo, but he will take occaſion from it to make his grace triumph over the worſt of ſins. Since the nature of this ſin is full of ſo horrid a malignity, it makes the condeſcenſions and indulgence of God appear more admirable.

2. Information. Here is a high encouragement to faith and acceptance of Chriſt. We cannot ſin worſe by coming to him, than by not believing in him. How many ſtave themſelves off from an acceptance of Gods offers by a ſenſe of their own unworthineſs? Suppoſe it were an offence to approach to him with a humbled unworthineſs, can there be that blackneſs in it, as there is in drawing back from him? We do not then fling dirt in the face of thoſe Attributes which were illuſtrious in the work of Redemption; we do not then blemiſh his truth, and repreſent him as one that hath no care of his royal word; we debaſe not the credit of his Promiſe, nor do we caſt any aſperſion upon his wiſdom, or go about to fruſtrate the deſign of his contrivance, nor do we vilify his grace, or ſpurn at his beating heart, nor count the unſearchable riches of his mercy, as loathſome dung. Nor do we diſparage the power of God, as if he could not be as great and as good as his word; nor do we declare that we can ſhift well enough without him, neither do we ſtrike at his Soveraignty in contradicting his fixed will and royal law of Faith, nor do we rob him of his delight; nor do we pierce our Saviour afreſh, nor vilify the price he paid for our Redemption; we deny not his love, his wiſdom, his excellency, ſufficiency or reward; we caſt no dirt in the face of the Contriver and Executor of Redemption. But all this we do in as groſs a manner, as if we ſhould verbally diſown him, if we believe not. Nor can our ſins be diminiſht one Article in their guilt by keeping from him. Can we pay the Debt out of our ſmall Revenue? A Farthing a year cannot pay the intereſt of a thouſand pound, much leſs the Principal. Doth God Command us to Believe in Chriſt? Why ſhould we diſobey our God, add a greater weight to our Load? Have we not ſinn'd againſt juſtice, wiſdom, common Providence? Shall we draw the black colours of Unbelief over all the reſt, and deſpiſe all his Attributes in a higher manner by refuſing the bloud of his Son, which his love offers us? Can we leſſen our ſins by turning our backs upon his Bowels, and have the fruit of the Death of Chriſt by endeavouring to diſappoint him of the end of it? Is it not then an encouragement to us to come over to Chriſt by Faith, ſince in doing it we come out of the Territories of the moſt malignant ſin, and the moſt deſperate Enemy of God, and pay the honour which is due to his glorious perfections from every Creature?

3. How unworthy is the carriage of every Unbeliever? He is digging at the very foundation of the Throne of Grace. The delights of Chriſt were among the Sons of men, yet naturally we run from him, as if it were a Death to be with him; as if he were our greateſt Enemy. We cannot pull God out of Heaven, we cannot nail Chriſt again to the Croſs, we cannot pierce his Heart with a Spear, we cannot revile him to his Face as the Jews did; but ſlighting the purchaſe of his Death, deſpiſing the Conditions upon which it is to be enjoyed, diſowning his Authority granted by Heaven over us, is the only thing, and it is too much that we do againſt him; this every Unbeliever doth; he deſpoils him as much as in him lies of his reward, fruſtrates the deſign of his ſuffering, the expiation of ſin, the propagation and obſervation of his Evangelical Law. He that diſowns and would deſtroy the deareſt thing Chriſt hath left in the World, that which he gave the greateſt charge for the preſervation of, would act all the villanies againſt his Perſon were he again in the World. He doth as much as the Devil himſelf can do; all that he can do is to trample upon his Law, encreaſe the Unbelief of men in the World; he can do no more, and every Unbeliever doth as much: The luſts of your Father you will do, John 8. 44.

The dignity of Chriſts Perſon greatens the enormity of Unbelief, becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God, John 3. 18. * It outrageth not a man, nor an Angel, but the only Son of God, in the truth of his Word, the Majeſty of his Perſon, the greatneſs of his undertaking, and the kindneſs of his ſufferings. God hath but one Son, and him it deſpiſeth, and in his Perſon contemns the Father. 'Tis no leſs than marriage to his Son that he propounds when he offers Chriſt; and who would not contemn the carriage of a beggar, that ſhould refuſe being a Prince's Spouſe? This is to refuſe the imitation of Angels who worſhip him, for the imitation of Devils who hate him.

*Daillée in loc.

Now the carriage of Unbelief to God in Chriſt is,

1. Irrational.
2. Ingrateful.
3. Inexcuſable.
4. Miſerable.

(1.) Irrational, 1. In thoſe that own not the Goſpel as a revelation of God, which many of the Heathen Philoſophers regarded as a piece of folly, to the Greeks fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. 1. 23. they could not imagine a crucified God, or ſo little affection in God to an only Son, as to let him be put to Death, and an infamous Death too: But alas! they had more unreaſonable notions of their gods than this could poſſibly appear to be: 'Tis true their notions are exploded out of the World, but we may thereby ſee how unreaſonable men are in the rejecting the Goſpel upon any Principles whatſoever. They talk of their adulterous Gods, their cheating Mercury's, hectoring Mars's, and luſtful Venus's, and of Gods wounded in Battels. Is not a dying God for the ends of Virtue, more reaſonable than an adulterous God for the ends of Vice? Is not a God pierc'd for the happineſs of Mankind, and preſervation of Humane Nature, more reaſonable than a God wounded in skirmiſhes? Is it not as reaſonable to be believed that God ſhould become man, as a man become a God? which was a notion frequent among them in their Deifying men; but none now have ſuch groſs conceits of the Divine Majeſty. But as ſome ſcarce own the Being of a God, ſo they quite diſown the deſign and reaſonableneſs of the Goſpel, which is as ancient as the World within a few Hours, tranſmitted from one Age to another by a ſucceſſion of Promiſes, frequency of Prophecies, all centering in, and receiving their accompliſhment in Chriſt: So that if any will receive the ancient teſtimonies of the Prophets, which no reaſonable man can deny (there being more clear evidence of the antiquity of the Books of the Old Teſtament, than for any writing whatſoever, own'd by the Heathens to have ſomething Divine in it, and preſerv'd by the Jews, Enemies) or that which they repreſented, and repreſented ſo clearly, that whoſoever ſhall read of a Meſſiah to be cut off after ſixty two weeks, Dan. 9. 26. from the building of the Temple, and that to make an end of ſin, to make reconciliation for iniquity, to bring in everlaſting righteouſneſs, to put an end to any Prophecy of the Meſſiah (the Jews not being able to ſhow one Prophet ſince the crucifying of Chriſt) Whoſoever ſhall read the 53 of Iſaiah, of the tender plant without comlineſs, deſpiſed and rejected of men, acquainted with grief, carrying our ſorrows, bearing iniquity, oppreſt and not opening his mouth, making his grave with the wicked wicked, and the rich in his death, making his ſoul an offering for ſin; and after having a Portion divided with the great, becauſe he pour'd out his Soul to Death. Whoever ſhall read the Prophecy of one pierc'd, one born in Bethlehem, whoſe goings out were from everlaſting, Mic. 5. 2. and afterwards conſider the ſtory of our Saviours Life and Death, cannot reaſonably deny that this is the very perſon deſcrib'd in the Prophecy; * whoſoever ſhall conſider the Prophecies of the deſtruction of the City of Jeruſalem, and the Sanctuary with a Floud of deſolation, Dan. 9. 26. after the cutting off the Meſſiah, and ſee that People now without a King, without a Prince, or High-Prieſt, an Image, an Ephod, without a Sacrifice, Hoſ. 3. 4. more years than ever both their Temples ſtood, muſt reaſonably conclude it a fruit of their own wiſh, that the bloud of him whom they would not own as their Meſſiah, might be upon them and upon their children, Mat. 27. 25. One great reaſon men do not believe the Goſpel, or believe in Chriſt, is, becauſe they are unacquainted with the Prophetick part of Scripture. Buxtorf in his Synagoga Judaica Conjectures this is a great reaſon of the Jews obſtinacy, they are ſo intent upon the Law, that they ſcarce mind the Prophets; and Chriſt himſelf in his rebuke of his Diſciples intimates this, Oh fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all which the Prophets have ſpoken, Luke 24. 25. To deny a Goſpel that hath been propagated with a glorious ſucceſs, confirm'd by a train of Miracles, acknowledg'd in the Writings of the Heathens that liv'd in the Primitive Times, witneſs'd by the Bloud of Martyrs, and thoſe of the wiſer and learneder ſort, who could not all ſurely be a parcel of Melancholy Fools! And ſhall this have no better a reception, than if it were a meer Romance, and an impertinent Fable? Common reflections upon our ſelves after this revelation, will lead us to think ſome divine ſtamp upon it. 'Tis obvious to a conſidering Rationaliſt, that man is not upon a right baſis, that he is ſtrangely amiſs, that it is inconſiſtent with the goodneſs and holineſs of God, to let man come in ſuch a poſture at firſt out of his hands. He ſees how little he can determine any thing with certainty in his underſtanding, that he hath not that affection to God, which nature will teach him he ought to have, that he doth not glorify God as his own reaſon will inform him he ought to do; he muſt conclude, that if ever divine goodneſs hath deſign'd and reveal'd a way for the reſtoration of man to his ſervice, the reſtoration of the World to the end of his glory, for which it was created; he can find nothing that doth propoſe it, promiſe it, and aſſure it, but the Goſpel. But let ſuch that diſown the Goſpel conſider (and though perhaps there are none here that opinionatively are Infidels, yet there is no man but hath ſome motions ſometimes againſt the authority of the Goſpel, as well as Atheiſtical thoughts againſt the Being of a God, which need ſometimes ſome conſideration to ſtop the Tide) I ſay, let them conſider, that thoſe things they prefer before the Goſpel, are not in their own account of any great, and durable worth, they cannot attend any beyond the Gate of Death; ſome thing there is of concern in another World; the opinions they entertain, have as little ground of certainty, as any thing elſe which the Goſpel doth not declare. The beſt account of things, with the moſt likely reaſon that ever was extant, is in the Scripture; for there is nothing ſeems to be wanting for the glory of God, and the duty and happineſs of a Creature: and therefore 'tis but a reaſonable propoſal that we ſhould entertain that, and conform our judgments and practices to it; till we meet with a better account, that makes more for the divine honour, and the Creatures welfare. If any Scheme more ſatisfactory for ſuch high and glorious ends can be propos'd; tis fit it ſhould be entertain'd. But till ſuch an one be found out, and have as many, and as manifeſt Confirmations as this hath had; 'tis reaſon that till then this ſhould have the pre-eminence. Who that were under a raging Diſeaſe would not uſe the beſt Remedy he could find, till he met with a better? For as it is unreaſonable for any man to deny that Debt of Obedience he owes to God as Creator; ſo 'tis unreaſonable to deny a rule to guide him in the way of Obedience to, and worſhip of God, till he can find one more rational in it ſelf, more honourable for God, and more ſerviceable to the Creatures intereſt. Is it not unreaſonable to require the ſame evidence in things of Faith as in matters of nature? is it not unreaſonable to deny that which hath ſtronger arguments to back the authority of it, than what can be drawn from ſence and reaſon, for the proof of the being of any thing in the World? Is it not unreaſonable for us to follow our own humours, fancies, purblind reaſon, groping for happineſs in other things, while we refuſe the way that hath the cleareſt Characters upon it of any thing in the World? It were worth our knowledge, what Religion ſuch men would have, who will not believe the matter of the Goſpel, a Religion 'tis ſuppoſed they would have if they own the Being of a God; for a religious worſhip is a natural conſequence from ſuch an acknowledgment: The worſhip of the Heathens cannot but appear ridiculous; there is not a manto be found, unleſs among the more ſtupid ſort of Nations, that will Apologize for that. The Jewiſh cannot according to the rules of that Religion, be practiſed; for they cannot Sacrifice, ſince they have no Temple wherein to perform that ſervice. Beſides, Sacrifices being practis'd in all Nations, for the expiation of ſin, it cannot be ſuppos'd, that the bloud of any Creature can make atonement for the ſin of the Soul, or outward purifications by Water, waſh off the impurities of an immaterial Spirit. The Mahometan is too ſenſual for any rationaliſt to embrace. There is none then left but the Chriſtian to be embrac'd: the great Command of that, is Faith; it forbids all thoſe ſins, which moral nature loaths, and Unbelief beſides. The rule of it is the Scripture, and whatſoever is not according to that, whatſoever worſhip or doctrine men Coin, that is not according to that rule, is not Religion, is not Worſhip, 'tis no Revelation of God.

(2.) No leſs irrational is it in thoſe that own the Goſpel to be a divine revelation for ſuch high ends, and do not in heart and practice ſubſcribe to the goodneſs and methods of it. For men that hear the language of God, pretend they believe the voice of the Goſpel to be the voice of God, that Chriſt is the Son of God, that he ſhed his bloud for a ranſom for Souls; yet not to accept of this ranſom, to ſlight the benefit of it, not to conform to one of thoſe conditions upon which it is offer'd; not leave a Luſt for Chriſt, or forgo a pleaſure for him; to believe no more than agrees with their humour, intereſt or fancy; this is a moſt unworthy Carriage to God, and to a mans ſelf, to pretend one thing and do another; to profeſs an acknowledgment of it in our underſtandings, and refuſe a ſubſcription to it with our wills. 'Tis a thouſand times better for a man to ſtrip himſelf of the name of a Chriſtian, than to have a practical Unbelief inconſiſtent with the truth of a Chriſtian. With what Face can a man profeſs Chriſt to be his Lord and Maſter, and yet regard not any order he gives? The Heathens will ſtand up in judgment againſt ſuch a Nation, for they will confide in their Idols, believe and conform to their Oracles. All people will walk every one in the name of his God, Micah 4. 5. and ſhall we deal worſe with God, than Heathens did with Idols? Shall we believe wicked men? Why elſe do we make contracts and bargains? Shall we believe the Earth? why elſe do we ſow? Shall we believe the Winds and Waves? why elſe do we traffick? And is it not more reaſon to give credit to an Infallible God? 'Tis a great madneſs not to come up to the terms of that, which we confeſs is ſeal'd by the bloud of Chriſt, confirm'd by the power of Miracles, proclaim'd by the Apoſtles, admir'd by the Angels, and confeſt too by the Devils themſelves to be from God. What more unreaſonable than to profeſs that Chriſt was appointed by God to remove our Miſeries, relieve our Wants, purchaſe our Happineſs, expiate our ſin, procure our Peace, which we could not find a way our ſelves to obtain, had we been befriended by the wit of Angels; yet not comply with any one condition upon which he offers thoſe tranſcendent bleſſings? Profeſſion of him without a ſound Faith in him, is like the Phariſees garniſhing the Tombs of the Prophets, while they hated the Redeemer they Propheſied of. Gilded Bibles will not ſerve the turn with leaden hearts. And is it not as unreaſonable in an humble Soul to doubt of Mercy? Surely as unreaſonable as in an impenitent Sinner to preſume upon it. What hath God commended more than his Mercy? What pleaſeth him more than an humble confidence in it? What offends him more than for ſuch an one to diſtruſt it? Have we not in Chriſt the greateſt encouragements to Faith and Confidence, ſince he is ſo near us, of the ſame nature with us, and came from Heaven on purpoſe to take not the nature of Angels, but the ſeed of Abraham, Heb. 2. 16. and felt the miſery of our nature, Heb. 2. 18. to the very end that he might have compaſſion on us, and hath offer'd himſelf up as a Sacrifice for our

ſins? Shall not then that Unbelief, that kicks againſt thoſe foundations of hope, and diſparages that which hath letters of commendation from Heaven, be accounted an unreaſonable thing?

2. 'Tis alſo ingrateful. What elſe is it, to fly in the face of that love, which hath wrought out the way for us by Blood? To ſlight him that would relieve us, wound him that would cure us, to live as if Redemption had never been wrought, and diſobey him for ſhowing love to us is an ungrateful Phrenſie. When the Jews preferred Barabbas before Chriſt, and Judas valued thirty pieces of ſilver above him, was it not an ingratitude as well as an indignity? And is it not as great, to value a Soul-murdering luſt above him, to be allured by a beaſtly pleaſure to offend him, rather than by the Heart-Blood of the Son of God to pleaſe him? How often do we ſee, when the Sun riſeth to comfort the drooping Earth, the Earth ſends out vapours and miſts, as if it ſcorn'd any aſſiſtance from that Heavenly Body, and would ſtrip it both of its life and influence, ſo neceſſary for the Fruit it bears, and the Inhabitants it nouriſheth? Do not men ſend out the black Vapours of their Enmity and Unbelief, at the appearance of the Sun of righteouſneſs, as if they had a mind to choak in him all ſentiments of kindneſs to them? Is not this unworthy, to diſhonour him that would honour us, ſmite him who hath been wounded for us, pierce the Heart of him who hath bled for our Health? for by his ſtripes we are healed, Iſai. 53. 5. as if the Cup he had drunk for us, were not bitter enough. What wounds he received, were for the ſatisfaction of Gods juſtice, which was arm'd againſt him; what wounds our unthankful Unbelief gives him, is to the diſparagement of that ſatisfaction. God did not ſtick to ſend his Son, but the World ſticks at receiving him. The World is loſt in Adam, by the Blood of his Son he finds them when they do not ſeek him, Iſai. 65. 1. and the unthankful World will not receive him when he offers himſelf to them, nor refuſe it with a common civility, not ſo much as a No I thank thee in the caſe, which is common among men upon refuſal of an offer'd kindneſs.

3. 'Tis inexcuſable. There is no plea for it. The Jews had ſome plea for theirs; he that was cloathed with infirmities, and had no outward form or comlineſs, nor any beauty and glory according to their expectations, might better indeed be deſpiſed and rejected of them, Iſai. 53. 2. 3. What plea can we have, ſince he hath ſhaken off his infirmities, aſcended to Heaven in his Majeſty, hath propagated his Goſpel, and hath been honour'd one time or other in every part of the then known World. They were under a Law of riddles, could not well tell the meaning of the types that repreſented him; nor were the things the Prophets ſpake, clear to themſelves, 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11 much leſs to the People. The curtains now are open'd, the vail remov'd, the dusky cloud hath ended in a clear Day; yet the ancient Iſraelites and Patriarchs had many of them ſo much Faith, as will render our Unbelief without any ground of Apology. If thoſe that liv'd under ſhadows, and the ſtar-light of Ceremonies, had ſo much ſight, and ſo much Faith, as is reckon'd, Heb. 11. and propos'd to us for an example and encouragement to run our race, and lay aſide that ſin of Unbelief, which doth ſo eaſily beſet us, Heb. 12. 1. what plea can we have for our Unbelief, ſince the Sun of righteouſneſs hath ſcatter'd the ſhadows of the night, clear'd up the face of the Heavens, accompliſht what they believ'd and wiſh'd for, deſtroyed him that had the power of Death, rooted up the foundation of the Devils Empire, and brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel? 2 Tim. 1. 10. Their Faith under ſhadows will render our Unbelief under ſubſtance, inexcuſable.

4. How great will be the miſery of Unbelievers! The greatneſs of the miſery will be proportionable to the greatneſs of the ſin; 'tis a ſin both againſt the Law and againſt the Goſpel; by the Law we are bound to believe God, and whatſoever revelation he makes; we are bound to truſt him as he is a God of truth: By the Goſpel we are bound to believe, that Chriſt came into the World to lay down his life as a ranſom. If the breach of the Law makes us eternally miſerable, the rejecting the Goſpel makes the wound the deeper, and the ſmart the ſharper: no man refuſeth the remedy, but he ſharpens his wound. If the ſins of men, who have no knowledge of the Goſpel, condemn, how much more ſhall

the ſins of thoſe who ſin both againſt Law and Goſpel, have a ſeverer recompence of reward, for neglecting Salvation, and ſo great Salvation? Heb. 2. 2, 3. How ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great Salvation, which at the firſt was ſpoken by the Lord? Refuſing the Covenant of Grace, he puts himſelf upon the Tryal by a Covenant of Works; and what hope an exact law often tranſgreſt can give a Malefactor, is eaſy to imagine: Millions have periſhed by it, none can be ſecure in it. There remains no more Sacrifice for ſin, if this be ſlighted, Heb. 10. 26. They are not in ſo good a ſtate as they had been, if Chriſt had never died; but worſe, for they have his bloud to anſwer for, as well as ſins againſt the natural and written Law; and render themſelves utterly unworthy of that grace they diſparage. Becauſe of this, the Jews were broken off, the refuſing this Corner-ſtone was the cauſe their Foundations were tore up, and they hurl'd down from being a people to become the reproach of the World. Though God puniſhed them for their ſinful Idolatries, yet he never rejected them till they rejected his Son; and then wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſ. 2. 16. And our Unbelief comes not ſhort of theirs, but exceeds it. If we deny Chriſt, 'tis juſt he ſhould deny us, Mat. 10. 33. 'Tis an equitable Law, to have the ſame meaſure meted to us, that we mete to others. If Unbelief oppoſe God, no wonder God will oppoſe and puniſh Unbelief. No man can imagine, but that God will be ſenſible of the wrong done to his bleeding Son, and our dying Redeemer. How can he be regardleſs of the contempt of his glorious nature, and let a final indignity to his Majeſty paſs with impunity? An inditement will be brought againſt ſuch by every abus'd attribute of God; all will condemn them, ſince all have been condemned by them, not one will appear as an Advocate for them; holineſs muſt hate him that is filthy, and will not be otherwiſe; truth will be glorified in the Execution of the Goſpel threatning, ſince the Sinner would blemiſh it in not reſting upon the Promiſe, and obſerving the Precept; Juſtice will puniſh ſuch as will not accept of the ſatisfaction appointed to be applyed by Faith; Wiſdom will frame a Hell for them that deſpis'd the great Maſter-piece of it: Power will be glorious in keeping them for ever under that puniſhment, and burning up the ſtubble, that would riſe up againſt it. As there is a Power to ſave, ſo there is a glorious power to deſtroy, 2 Theſ. 1. 9. when Wiſdom, Holineſs, Juſtice, Grace, Truth ſhall not be own'd in the glory of them in Chriſt, they ſhall make themſelves glorious upon him to the coſt of the Unbeliever; for God hath a ſoveraign right to the glory of his Attributes; ſince the Creature will not actively honour him, God will make him paſſively to glorifie the perfections diſparag'd by him. The bloud of Chriſt ſhed by this ſin, in regard of an implicite approbation, cryes with as loud a Voice to God for Vengeance, as Abels bloud did againſt Cain, and to as good purpoſe; for he that heard the Voice of the one, will not be deaf to the cry of the other. It ſpeaks the language of mercy to him that receives it, and the roaring of Juſtice to him that refuſes it.

2. Uſe of Exhortation.

Let us be ſenſible of the malignity in this ſin. It being a ſin againſt the Goſpel, we ſhould be more ſenſible of it, than of ſins againſt the Law. Thoſe are tranſgreſſions againſt a rule, this a tranſgreſſion againſt a rule and a remedy. There is more reaſon we ſhould be ſenſible of this, than if we had ſhed the moſt innocent blood, raviſh'd the chaſteſt Bed, or made an explicite compact or Covenant with the Devil; theſe are ſins mankind generally frown at, and think ſuch perſons fit to be thrown out of the Society of Mankind. Yet behold here an evil worſe than all thoſe ſingly or jointly conſider'd in themſelves; theſe are againſt the ſoveraignty of God; but not as this, a trampling upon the bloud of his Son, infinitely above the moſt innocent Creature: Thoſe againſt the authority of God, this againſt his Commanding Authority, and his condeſcending Grace; thoſe againſt common ſentiments of nature, this againſt ſpecial revelations of a rich goodneſs. A Murderer ſlays a Man, an Unbeliever Crucifies a God; a Thief robs a man of Worldly Goods, an Unbeliever ſtrips a God of his greateſt glory; an Adulterer defiles the Bed of his Neighbour, an Unbeliever defiles a Soul which is courted to be the Spouſe of God. Beſides, Unbelief is the breeder and fomenter of ſuch ſins, which are committed by any under the light of the Goſpel.

1. Believers

1. Believers ought to be ſenſible of it. True Faith is always attended with a ſenſe of Unbelief, a wearineſs under it, a longing to be rid of it. The poor man in the Goſpel own'd his Faith, and yet confeſt his Unbelief with tears in his Eyes, Mark 9. 24. And are there not heaps of infidelity lie in our Breaſts? Is not the power of God ſometimes diſtruſted? His goodneſs unregarded? Is Chriſt valued according to his tranſcendent worth? Do we always reliſh the excellency of the Goſpel? Do we never value and love a Creature almoſt at the ſame rate we do the Creator and Redeemer? Are we not often more forgetful of God than we are of our ſelves? Is not the word and oath of God too little ſometimes to prop up a tottering Faith? Are we not often more confident of men than we are of Chriſt? and beſtow more credit upon the promiſes of men than we do on the promiſes of God? Do we always pay as much reſpect to God as we do to our ſelves, as we do to men that ſhall die? How often do we find Chriſt complaining of the littleneſs of his Diſciples Faith, and the ſlowneſs of their hearts to believe, which were the only Chriſtian Church then in the World? And are any of us yet got beyond the merit of ſuch rebukes? Are there no ſcents of this ſin in the moſt cleanſed Veſſels? Have not the beſt here a partial Unbelief? and can there be one Grain of it in the heart without a proportionable ſinfulneſs of it? The leaſt Unbelief hath the ſinful nature of Unbelief, as well as the leaſt grain of Poyſon hath the nature of Poyſon. So much as we want of a perfect Faith, ſo much we ſtrip God of the glory of his nature, blemiſh his truth, aſperſe his Wiſdom, ſlight his Goodneſs, diſgrace his ſufficiency, ſnatch away his delight; ſo much as we want of a perfect Faith, ſo much we pierce the Redeemer, null the work of his mediation, undervalue the price of Redemption; ſo much we deny thoſe choice affections which engag'd him in the undertaking, and were illuſtrious in the Execution; ſo much we deny the excellency of his perſon and deſign; ſo much we grieve him, ſo much we diſhonour him. If all this be clearly in a total Unbelief, 'tis in ſome degrees in a partial Unbelief, and every act of it. And ought this to be ſuffer'd in the heart without ſenſe, ſhame, confuſion and deep humiliations? Let us pour out our tears for it, as we have pour'd out our Saviour's bloud by it. The fat of a Sacrifice, which was a part without ſenſe, was to be conſum'd by Fire; ſo ſhould we endeavour that our inſenſibleneſs ſhould be wholly burnt up by the ſpirit.

2. Thoſe that are yet in a ſtate of Unbelief ought much more to be ſenſible of it. That we may not deceive our ſelves, and raiſe hopes contrary to the word; to bleſs our ſelves when God curſeth; without a ſenſe of this, there is no meeting can be between Chriſt and us. 'Tis as much a bar to any gracious work in our Souls, as it was in the days of his fleſh, to many mighty works in his own Country, Mat. 13. 58. Every man that ſits under the Goſpel, is bound to believe the divine truths reveal'd therein: He is bound to believe his infection by original ſin, and that the Curſes of the Law are due to him. He is bound to believe, that God hath ſent his Son to be Crucified for the ſins of men that believe in him; that repentance and turning from ſin, is a neceſſary duty; he is bound to repent, forſake ſin, and with a contrite heart caſt himſelf upon Chriſt, expecting Salvation from him, and reſolving ſincerely to obſerve his Commands, renounce his own Righteouſneſs, and rely upon his Power; and therefore ought to be ſenſible of this obligation, and of that which is contrary to it, and keeps him from performing it. A ſenſe of this ſin will lead the way to a ſenſe of all the reſt: this once quell'd, the other expire; the Death of the Mother Viper is the deſtruction of the young Litter.

(1.) Chriſt was moſt ſenſible of this ſin in others; ſhould not we then be ſenſible of it in our ſelves? It was a great part of his ſorrow, that men refus'd him, and would not accept of him, and Salvation by him, Luke 19. 42. It made him ſigh more pathetically, and made him ſpeak as if he were weary of all his pains, Luke 9. 41. Oh faithleſs generation, how long ſhall I be with you? His anger was for the moſt paſt rais'd againſt this, and this only, and ſtill it muſt upon the ſame account be more painful to Chriſt than all the Thorns which were upon his Head, and wound him more deeply than the Nails did his Hands and Feet: ſhould we not then write after our Maſters Copy?

difficult. Sin in the nature makes us ſuſpect every approach of God to be for our hurt, Luke 5. 8. Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man: the beſt have not been free from unbelieving ſtarts againſt God; David had a deſperate reflexion on God, 1 Sam. 27. 1. that he ſhould one Day periſh by the hands of Saul. Though God had aſſured him of the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, and daily experiences of Gods Providence in his preſervation under the purſuits, and Armies of Saul, might have confirm'd him, yet he fear'd that ſome of the ſtones flung at him, might reach him; and make him uncapable of the deſigned Royalty. Aſaph too in regard of his ſpiritual condition, queſtions the mercy and faithfulneſs of God, Pſal. 77. 3, &c. 8. Is his mercy clean gone for ever, doth his promiſe fail for evermore? The Interrogation is at leaſt a queſtioning of it, becauſe v. 10. he acknowledgeth it to be his infirmity, which he would not have entitled his ſubſcription to the eternal mercy of God, and the truth of his Promiſe: We ſhould therefore be ſenſible of that Unbelief, which yet remains in our natures, that we may be preſerv'd againſt the encroachments of it.

(3.) No man can labour for Faith, till he be affected with the ſinfulneſs of Unbelief. The ſence of this is the firſt ſtep to Faith: We cannot have a ſight of the amiableneſs of a moral Virtue, till we are ſenſible of the deformity of the Vice which ſtands in oppoſition to it. A conviction of the ſinfulneſs and miſery of Unbelief, will make us endeavour after the Grace and Happineſs of Faith.

(4.) Nor can any reformation ſecure us, while we remain inſenſible of the evil of this. Conviction of other ſins leaveth a man in his natural ſtate as it found him; all men that are not ſenſible of this, though convinc'd of all their other guilt, are in a ſtate of ſin; 'tis the work of the Spirit to convince men of it, if they do not believe. Reformation takes away the ill ſavour of our lives, which made us ſtink above ground; yet the life may be reform'd, and the ſtate not chang'd, but be as deplorable as before. Though Atheiſm and Prophaneneſs may be left, yet a man by that is no more a Member of Chriſt, and of the Family of God without Faith, than he was when he was beſmear'd with his groſſeſt Vices; no more than the moral Jews were, to whom Chriſt denounceth a dying in their ſins, becauſe of their Unbelief, John 8. 21. The guilt of all former ſins cleaves to the Soul under a new life, till upon Faith in the Blood of Chriſt it be wip'd off. We are ſtill in Gods Debt-Book, without one farthing of our ſcore croſs'd out; for God muſt have his ſatisfaction either from Chriſt or our ſelves: he hath none from Chriſt for us while we remain in Unbelief, 'tis not applyed to us or pleaded for us; no remedy for this Diſeaſe, but in the Blood of Chriſt, and no way of having that Blood ſprinkled upon us but by Faith. Reformations garniſh our lives, but the Soul remains ſtill unſanctifyed, if Unbelief raigns; that clears the outward rubbiſh, but doth not cleanſe the inward ſink: No true ſanctification without Chriſt, for in him we are ſanctifyed, 1 Cor. 1. 2. Faith only is the band that unites us to him, whereby we get cleanſing virtue from him. As Faith only ingrafts us into Chriſt, ſo Unbelief alone keeps us off from that bottom; as by this engrafting, our actions become good, ſo without it, our beſt actions are bad. An ignorant Heathen may as well pleaſe God as a painted Unbeliever, Heb. 11. 6. this ſin makes us utterly uncapable to pleaſe God. The World is apt to lye under this error, becauſe they have amiable qualities in the eye of man, they think they have no ſpot in the eye of God; but alas, this doth render us more deform'd in the eye of God, than all outward reformations can render us beautiful.

2. As we ought to be ſenſible of it, ſo we ſhould watch againſt it. This is a Leſſon for Believers. 'Tis eaſie to diſtruſt God, our own Hearts have dealt treacherouſly with him, and therefore we think he will requite us in our own kind. Let us watch againſt the firſt motions of it, becauſe the Devil by them endeavours to draw us to it; as all good works ſpring from Faith, ſo all evil works from a defect in it. If there be a diſturbance in the Heart, other Members cannot well do their Office. Habitual Faith lays the firſt ſtone of a Heart ſanctification, their hearts purifyed by Faith, Act 15. 9. and every act of Faith raiſeth it higher. So much of Unbelief, ſo much of Impurity: watch therefore againſt every thing that may weaken the foundation of your ſanctification. Unbelief only makes us ſink under a temptation: Jacob wreſtled with an Angel, or with the

the Son of God; yet ſtill kept up his Faith in Gods Promiſe againſt the fear of his Brother, and became a Conquerour, Gen. 32. 24. &c. Hoſ. 12. 4. * Jacobs fight was a corporeal conflict, becauſe his thigh did ſhrink with his wreſtling; but it was alſo a fight of Faith: why elſe ſhould the Angel ſo value a corporeal wreſtling, as to give him a new name thereupon, and call him Iſrael, becauſe he had prevail'd with God? Beſides, who can think a poor mortal could overcome an Angel with an aſſum'd body in a corporeal wreſtling? It was an internal conflict of the ſpirit of Jacob with God, and the external wreſtling was only a ſymbol of the inward conteſt. As he wreſtled againſt a man by the ſtrength of the Body, ſo he wreſtled againſt diſtruſt by the ſtrength of his Spirit. For Jacob hearing of his Brother Eſau's march againſt him, and remembring his cruel threatning upon his foreſtalling the bleſſing, he was afraid of the ruine of himſelf and Family; and conſequently that the promis'd Seed ſhould be extinguiſht; and therefore wreſtleſs with God upon the account of his Promiſe, deſiring him to defend his Family from Eſau's Fury. Unbelief ſinks us under Devils, Faith makes us wreſtle with God. In caſe of any fall into ſin, watch againſt this *maſter ſin. Though our fall calls for ſorrow, it calls not for Unbelief. To throw off an humble Faith, is to gratify the Author of ſin, the Devil, by deſpair and Unbelief, but doth not pleaſe him that wrought the Redemption; this is to heap a Mountain of ſin upon the former. If a man ſin, 'tis not ſaid preſently, we have a Devil to deſtroy, but an Advocate with the Father, who is the propitiation for our ſins, 1 Joh. 2. 1. Watch therefore againſt every ſtirring of it upon all occaſions, and the more, ſince you have found how gracious Chriſt hath been, and that your former Unbelief could not diſpute away his grace, and ſend it back to Heaven from whence it came. Let not a diſtruſtful heart have more credit with you than a Saviours Promiſe. And that we may watch againſt it, let us think meanly of our ſelves. He that eſteems himſelf ſomething, will quickly eſteem Chriſt as nothing. Regard the things of the Goſpel as the moſt ſubſtantial things, of the greateſt moment. Let the word dwell more richly in us, than the notions of Nature. Meditate often on it. Reſt not upon the knowledge we have by Education, conſider things in their reaſons, not by intereſt or affection, without Scripture reaſon; work ſuch arguments upon the mind, as may ſtrengthen the aſſent to the word; weak conſents of will ſpring from imperfect aſſents in the underſtanding. The deeper truths are in our underſtandings by an explicite, and formal, and renewed aſſent; the warmer and ſtronger will they be in our affections and will; every wind or violent ſtorm will blow down a Houſe that is weak in its foundation. There is an aſſurance of underſtanding precedes the acknowledgment of the myſtery of the Goſpel, Coloſſ. 2. 2. The fuller the aſſurance of underſtanding, the cloſer the affiance of the will: a floating Cork cannot be ſtable. Be well acquainted with the nature, terms, and riches of the Covenant of Grace, the mediation of Chriſt, his Offices, the ends and fruits of his Death. This is the way to watch againſt Unbelief, ſo great a Sin. This is neceſſary. As Chriſt will do no more Miracles without Faith, ſo the Devil can do no miſchief without Unbelief. The more of Faith, the cloſer our Union, and the fuller our Communications.

3. Let ſuch as are in a ſtate of Unbelief, endeavour to come out of it. We ſhall then lay by the moſt offenſive ſin, the object of Gods greateſt hatred, the diſhonour of his Attributes, the main prop of the Devils Empire. We ſhall not till then, pleaſe him, nor will he ſheath his Sword, nor open his Bowels. We then approve of the Counſel of God, who is as tender of the honour of his Son as of his own. For he will have all men honour the Son as they honour the Father, Joh. 5. 23. It will be the beſt return we can make to Heaven for the Meſſage or Joy Heaven hath ſent to us in the Goſpel. The ſucceſs of the Goſpel in the heart doth chear the heart of Chriſt in his Exaltation, as well as the news of it did in his humiliation, Luke 10. 21. he rejoyced in ſpirit. This is the way to add another Throne for him to ſit upon (as every believing heart is) inſtead of pulling him from what he had. None but an Unbeliever is deſpis'd by God; no man but an Unbeliever ſhall ever taſt of his fury. Hath not God often by his ſpirit intreated us to conſider what is for our Peace? Hath he not met us, and inſtead of offering to kill us, as the Lord did to Moſes, he hath open'd his heart, ſhew'd us the wounds of his Son, deſir'd nothing of us, but that we would believe he had a deſign of kindneſs for us, and that we would give him ſuch an entertainment as his affection doth deſerve; that we would give credit to his aſſertion, and walk according to it? He complains only of your drawing back from him; he never quarrels with any man for ſucking the Breaſts of his goodneſs: his only grief is, that you will not come, that you might have life: and can the ſpurning his grace be a means to our bleſſedneſs, or this deſperate ſin inſtate us in the glory of Heaven? Shall the Lyons be aſhamed to tear Daniel, and an Unbeliever not aſham'd ſpiritually to tear his Redeemer? Shall the Ox know his Owner, and Man not know his Crucified Saviour? Shall the ſtones rend in pieces at his Death, and our hearts ſtand unſhaken at his ſufferings for us? Doth not God denounce a wo to them that remember not the afflictions of Joſeph? Can any leſs be expected by thoſe that increaſe the afflictions of Chriſt, and kick againſt the greateſt deſign God had to honour himſelf? Doth not our nature gaſp for a felicity? Is it not the ſole inquiry of man, who will ſhew us any good? and when the Goſpel preſents us with the moſt ſatisfactory bleſſedneſs, ſhall we reſiſt it, and ſhut our Eyes againſt the light that would conduct us to bliſs? If we will diſhonour God by Unbelief, we ſhall vilify our hopes; were the Goſpel of no concernment to us, yet Unbelief in regard of the Author of it, were a ſin worthy of the ſharpeſt reproof. A Belief of him we owe to him as Creatures; but when it is of the greateſt moment to our Souls to believe the Goſpel, as that whereupon depends eternal happineſs or miſery; ſhall any of us that acknowledge it to be of God, that have been bred up in the midſt of its light, be ſo cruel to our Souls, as to make light of the conditions of it? 'Tis unreaſonable, as it diſhonours our Creator, for whoſe glory we were made; as it diſgraceth our Redeemer, by whoſe bloud we are ranſom'd; Uncharitable to our ſelves by murdering our Souls, to which we owe the greateſt care. Or dare any perſiſt in this way, and venture Heaven and Bleſſedneſs upon a conceit that the Goſpel is not true? What hurt can there be in believing it? An eternal miſchief may be in refuſing it. There is no diſhonour to God by believing it; we own one God by acknowledging it; we own whatſoever is comely, and praiſe-worthy, by the rational ſentiments of Mankind, in regard of the Precepts. By caſting it behind our backs, we hazard our ſelves, if it may be true; we deſtroy our ſelves, if it be abſolutely true. A reſolution to perſiſt in Unbelief, is ſuch, that no man in his wits would ever think of.

4. Let ſuch as are got out of the ſink of this ſin, bleſs God and prize their Faith. God only diſpers'd that Cloud of Darkneſs which had ſeiz'd upon you, and drew you out of that mire, hateful to Heaven, wherein your hearts were ſoakt. What a Gulf hath God deliver'd you from! He might have left you in that ſtate, ſo reproachful to himſelf, and ſo dreadful to you. Prize your Faith above all your Treaſures; above all keeping, preſerve and ſtrengthen it. Before, you could not but diſpleaſe him, now you may be a pleaſure to him; before, you Warr'd with every perfection of his nature, now you join iſſue with him in the exalting of them. By this you are intereſted in the fruit of his glorious Counſels, the Bloud and Mediation of his Son, the glory of his Attributes. By this he ſnatcheth you from a League with Hell, ſets you above the Head of the Captain of Unbelievers; knits your hearts to himſelf, and fits you to be Monuments of his Grace, to be placed with him for ever in Heaven.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE OF THE MISERY OF UNBELIEVERS.

John III. 36.

He that believes on the Son, hath everlasting life; and he that believes not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him.

THese words are a part of the Discourse of John Baptist to his Disciples, which contains a Summary of the Gospel, and treats of the dignity of Christs Person. The occasion of the Discourse is a question stated between the Disciples of John Baptist, and the Jews about Purification, v. 25. there arose a question between some of Johns Disciples and the Jews about purifying; what the question was, is not fully and plainly recorded: some think the Ceremonial Purifications appointed in the Mosaick Law, were the subject of the contest. But the next verse (v. 26.) intimates the question to be concerning the Baptism of Christ, and John Baptist, which of them was the most efficacious for Purification; some preferred Johns Baptism, in regard of his priority of time, he being first sent to Baptize, and in regard of Christs receiving Baptism from his hands: the other might assert the Baptism of Christ to be as purifying as the other, because of the many Miracles wrought by him to confirm his Mission; which seeing the Baptist wanted, (for he wrought no miracles, John 10. 41.) Johns Disciples being jealous of their Masters Glory, and troubled at the lessening his authority, in the heat of their contest address themselves to John, to be an Arbitrator in this affair, as being best able to judge of that for which he was commission'd, v. 26. and they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness; behold the same baptizeth, and all men come to him. The contest it seems had engendred in their hearts an envy against Christ, because of the multitude of his Followers above what their Master had, who they saw was decreasing upon the others rising, as the light of the Stars is obscur'd by the appearance of the Sun. They frame their relation to John with a contempt of Christ, and a charge against him, as if they intended to incense their Master against our Saviour. The contempt is in the Title

they give him; when they ſpeak of their Maſter, 'tis Rabbi; when they ſpeak of Chriſt, 'tis he that was with thee beyond Jordan; not vouchſafing to name him. How apt is man by nature to have low and mean thoughts of Chriſt in his heart! The charge here is double:

1. Uſurpation. He baptizeth, he invades thy Office, and takes upon him that function, which belongs properly to thee, and after he ſeem'd to enter himſelf thy Diſciple by receiving Baptiſm at thy hands, now is ambitious of an equal authority with thee, without a Call, or any Order from thee, and Baptizeth in his own name.

2. Ingratitude. He to whom thou bareſt witneſs, and by that Elogy gaveſt him an Authority among the People, who rely'd upon thy word; now he endeavours to obſcure thy glory, and hath forgot the obligation he had to thee, by giving him ſo worthy a Character. They thought John's commendation of Chriſt aroſe from his humility, and not from a knowledge of the excellency of his Perſon. And they urge it with the ſucceſs of Chriſt, all men come to him. He makes ſo great a progreſs, that he will draw from thee all thy Diſciples, and diminiſh that honour thou haſt gain'd among the People. By this means they endeavour'd to enflame the Baptiſt againſt our Saviour, and cauſe him to change his note, and give ſuch a Character of him, as might leſſen his growing reputation. But they found their expectation defeated by the modeſt anſwer John returns to them.

Obſerve,

1. How do pride and paſſion often ſway in the hearts of Profeſſors! The Baptiſts Diſciples fear any diſgrace of their Maſter ſhould redound upon themſelves, and therefore endeavour to embroyl him in contention. The Diſciples of Chriſt were not free from the like taint, when they were angry with one mans caſting out Devils, becauſe he did not follow them, Luke 9. 49. John by his humility rejoyces at the appearance of Chriſt, v. 29. But his Diſciples Pride robs God of his preſent praiſe for ſending the Meſſiah; we can never value any mercy of God, while we value our ſelves too much. What need have we to lay ſhackles upon the pride of nature, to watch over our Paſſions, and reſtrain them within due bounds, that they may be ſerviceable to God, and not to Satan? Grace muſt be upon its guard againſt the deſigns of the old Adam in us. The Devil directed ſtrong Engines againſt the Baptiſt, in the hands of his Diſciples; enough to batter him, without abundance of Grace, and an awakened exerciſe of it.

2. How often have pride and envy been the ſprings of the Churches Calamities! Theſe two have been the Incendiaries of the Church as well as of the World. Pride in Adam over-turn'd the worſhip of God in the World juſt after the Creation; and Envy in Cain made the firſt diviſion after the Promiſe, which led him to murther the holieſt Man, and afterwards drave him out from the preſence God. How little did thoſe poor Diſciples think, that in this they imitated the fallen Angel! He envyed God a ſervice from Man, and thoſe envy Chriſt a glory from the Creatures. How far will Envy proceed, if God do not ſtop it? Envy in Cain at the appearance of his Brothers Sacrifice, firſt broacht his Brothers Bloud.

* Communitus. * 3. How forward are men to be drawn from Chriſt by an admiration of the gifts and graces of the Saints! They admire here the ſervant above the Maſter; how long hath it been that the value ſet upon the Saints, thruſt almoſt out any eſtimations of the mediation of Chriſt? Prayers to the Virgin are become more numerous, than ſupplications to the Son of God.

4. How dangerous is contention about ungrounded opinions! Had not John interpos'd, with what animoſity againſt Chriſt had his Diſciples hearts been filled upon this conteſt? The Weeds would have grown ſtrong, and taken deeper rooting, without a ſpiritual prevention. What is Johns Anſwer to this report? Religious, humble, and modeſt, v. 27. John anſwer'd and ſaid, A man can receive nothing except it be given him from Heaven; He is not inflam'd with any Pride and Paſſion, but aſcribes to God the glory of his Soveraignty, and to Chriſt the dig-

* Illyric. nity of his Perſon. * The words of John may be form'd into this argument, Every one is to be honour'd in the place wherein God hath ſet him; God hath placed him, you complain of, in the higheſt dignity: You are therefore to count

him for your Lord, and me for his Servant. Do not think that that person you charge, doth invade this Office without a Call; he could not have this success, without the singular Providence of God; you must regard the Author and Original; things are not in our own Dispositions; whatsoever blessing is receiv'd, is dispens'd by a Soveraign Authority; Do not think therefore, that I will arrogate that honour to my self, which God never assign'd me.

Observe,

1. God is the soveraign author of all good to men, James 1. 17. Every good and every perfect gift is from above, and comes down from the father of lights. All comes originally from him, whatsoever the Chanels of conveyance are, as Rivers from the Sea, whatsoever Veins of Earth they are strain'd through; all our Springs are in God. Rest not then upon any thing below, though it be never so choice a mercy, 'tis from above: Dart your Eyes upward to the Spring; what is not the source of our blessings, should not be the prop of our Souls. Trust in other things hath a quite contrary effect to Trust in God; the more we trust other things, the sooner we lose them; the more we trust God, the fuller we enjoy him. God will strip us of the comfort we take in them, when we strip him of the glory due to him. Praise God alone for any mercy; 'tis not fit the Creature should run away with the praise of that, which we enjoy at the cost of Heaven. What stock could any have, if God had not set them up? Fear not man. whatsoever is from above shall prosper. If God gives the Gospel, man cannot stop the progress of it. Heaven is able to maintain its own Grants. It wants no more a power to preserve it than goodness to bestow it.

2. The suggestions of Satan, and our own corrupt hearts to pride and envy, are to be bridled by the consideration of the soveraign disposal of God. This is the intent of the Baptists Answer. How loose and shaking would those Lusts be in our hearts, if we were practically setled in this truth, That all dispensations are the fruits of the divine Soveraignty? In envying man, we envy God the disposal of his own gifts; we invade his propriety, as if we had been Gods Partners in his own possession; we would bring God down to our humours, and make our fancies the rule of divine actions. We intrench upon his wisdom, as though he were not wise enough to dispose of his own goods; as though he should have askt our Counsel, before he made a distribution of what is solely his own. 'Tis a presumption to prescribe Laws to our Lawgiver. 'Tis contrary to his goodness, as if we would ty the hands of his universal goodness, that it should run only into our Cisterns. The consideration of the soveraignty and wisdom of God, would hinder us from being envenom'd by this fiery Dart.

3. Every man ought to be content in the place where God has set him. The will of our Soveraign ought to be our rule; we are not our own Carvers; let us rather bless God for what we have, than murmur that we have no more; since all are his gifts, he can better chuse for us, than we for our selves.

4. How doth the wise God defeat the Devil and extract the greatest good from his worst intentions, and the sins of men! The Devil by Gods conduct doth us good against his will. His tempting those Disciples, is the occasion of this excellent summary of the Gospel, which we might have wanted, had the Devil restrain'd his temptation. The Passions of those Disciples are the occasion to produce the fullest testimony out of the mouth of John, of the Dignity of Christs Person, the truth of his Commission, fitness for his work, the necessity of address to him, the means of enjoying the benefits purchas'd by him. Thus the Devil tempted Christ to conquer him, and God order'd it for fitting of our Saviour to relieve us with more compassion from an experimental sence of his subtlety, and our misery. Joseph's slavery in Ægypt by his Brothers sin, is the preservation of the Church in Canaan. And the Crucifying the Son of God, the redemption of the World. Why should we distrust God, who can use the sins of men to clear up the way of Salvation, both to our selves and others?

After this introduction, the Baptist more particularly instructs them, v. 28. Ye your selves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him, and opposes to their ambitious emulation his former testimony of Christ, and the Doctrine they had heard from him, acknowledging him the Messiah, and himſelf but the Herald or Harbinger to prepare the way before him. I have often told you, as well as others, that I am not the Chriſt, intimating thereby that he it was, whoſe glory was to outſhine that of all the former Prophets, ſince he was the grand Prophet promiſed to the Church. He retorts upon them their accuſation of the ingratitude of Chriſt to him, ſince I have given him ſuch a teſtimony as you well remember, that I did but baptize with Water, but one coming after me was to baptize with the Holy-Ghoſt; 'tis he you complain of, is the perſon I meant; 'tis he to whom God hath given the ſpirit not by meaſure; 'tis he that is the Lamb of God, that takes away the ſins of the World; you cannot think I ſhould be ſo Fooliſh, as to deny my words. If you had reſpect for me, and good will to your ſelves, you would have believ'd me and believed in him, ſince it is neceſſary for you ſo to do.

Obſerve,

How hard a matter is it to change the falſe opinions we have erected? Theſe Diſciples had entertain'd a notion that their Maſter was the Meſſiah; they dreamt of an Earthly advancement by him, though he had made Declarations to them, and in their hearing, to a Committee ſent from the Sanhedrin, that he was not the Chriſt, Joh. 1. 19. 20. yet that ſentiment ſtuck in their Heads. Pride makes men foſter opinions againſt the glory of God, when they ſeem to conduce to their own intereſt; we are loth to ſubmit our reaſons to the wiſdom of God. Man is a Creature naturally apt to hold faſt any thing, but divine truth. Bran will remain in the ſieve, when the fineſt flower will drop through. The Diſciples of Chriſt would not part with the ſweet thoughts of an earthly grandeur, under their Maſter, though he had ſo often given notices of his violent death. Let us examine every thing well by the word, before we lodge it as a notion in our Heads, and meaſure every propoſal by the reſpect it bears to the glory of God, as well as to our own advantage.

He proceeds further to ſhew the difference between Chriſta nd himſelf, (v. 29. he that hath the bride is the bridegroom, but the friend of the bridegroom, which ſtands and hears him, rejoyceth greatly becauſe of the bridegrooms voice; this my joy therefore is fulfilled,) as much as there was between a Bridegroom, for whom the Spouſe is adorn'd and prepar'd; and a Friend which ſerv'd him in that occaſion, who rejoyceth that he hath contributed to the ſatisfaction of his Friend. I have prepared the people as a Spouſe for him; 'tis to him therefore they are to have recourſe, him they are to love and honour; and it is my joy that I have rendred him any ſervice according to the Commiſſion I receiv'd from Heaven: intimating thereby, that they ſhould follow his example, and be ſo far from envying the glory of Chriſt, which they imagin'd to be the obſcurity of his, that they ſhould rejoice, as he did, in hearing the Bridegrooms Voice. Some underſtand it of the Marriage between the divine and humane nature of Chriſt; the Divine being the Bridegroom, the humane the Bride, which the divine nature aſſum'd into union with it ſelf. Moſt underſtand it of the Marriage of Chriſt with the Church, which was promiſed.

Obſerve,

1. Some evidence of the Deity of Chriſt. He is the Bridegroom that eſpouſeth the Church to himſelf. A thing promiſed by God to be done only by himſelf, Hoſ. 2. 16, 19, 20. 'tis Jehovah, the Lord ſaith, I will betroth thee unto me for ever, Jer. 3. 14. The Scripture often compares the union of the Church with God, to that of a Marriage, and never gives the name and quality of the Spouſe of the Church, to any but the true God.

Daillee in loc.

2. The end of Chriſts coming into the world. To form a Church, to make a ſpiritual Marriage between himſelf and the Souls of men. The Church was not fit for his embraces, being defil'd, polluted, of a corrupt extraction; but Chriſt takes fleſh, makes himſelf a ſacrifice for her, pours out his own bloud to waſh her, and render her fit to ly in his Boſom, Eph. 5. 25, 26, 27. What love is this, to bring filthy man into a perpetual band of love with him! He bore our ſins that defil'd us, he is ſenſible of our afflictions that trouble us, he communicates his goods to enrich us, he took our nature that he might communicate his own, he is become one nature with us, that we might become one ſpirit with him. Never did did loving Husband do so much for his Spouse as Christ for his Church. How should we love, honour, serve, and adhere to so good a Saviour, and pay him that Reverence and Faith which is due to him?

3. Ministers are and ought to be the servants of Christ, to wooe for him, to perswade men to be espoused to him, by declaring their misery without him, their happiness with him, his willingness to entertain them. They are Instruments to bring them to Christ, and after they are brought, to perswade them to keep the Conjugal Covenant with Christ. This ought to be our highest desire, and our chiefest joy; this my joy is fulfill'd, saith John, since I have now attain'd the end of my Embassy.

He then comes to make this conclusion, quite contrary to the intention of his Disciples, and resolves to exercise his Humility where they would have excited his Pride, v. 30. He must increase, but I must decrease. He must grow up in Authority; the opinion that I am the Messiah must fall, that he may be own'd to be the only person of Gods designation. The Person of Christ could not receive an increase, being infinitely great and glorious: Nor was there any diminution of the dignity of the Baptist, who lost nothing, but gain'd much by the appearance of our Saviour; his Glory increas'd with his Humility, and his honour of being the forerunner of Christ remain'd, though his Office expir'd; but the increase and diminution was in regard of the exercise of their Offices, (the Moon is to rule the Night, and the Sun the Day) and in the opinion of the People, who ran after John as the Messiah, who must learn that the honour of that Office only belong'd to Jesus *. John decreased, as the Stars may be said to do when they are obscured by the Sun; not that their native light is taken away from them by the presence of the Sun, and they lighted up again as a Candle, when the Sun sets; but because men need not the light and direction of the Stars in the midst of the Sun Beams *: Christ then increaseth in our Hearts, when our knowledge of him, affection to him, and valuations of his Person, rise to a taller stature in our Spirits.

* Daillée in loc. p. 450.

* Illyric.

Observe,

1. All the glory, greatness, and righteousness of men, ought to vail to the glory and honour of Christ. We should become nothing for Christs honour, as Christ became a Worm for our benefit. The Baptist was willing to be obscur'd, that Christ might fill the World with a Spiritual and Divine Glory; 'tis observable, that a little after this, John was cast into Prison by the Providence of God, when his Authority did clash with the Authority and Glory of Christ in the esteem of the People; that the Baptists Disciples being deprived of their Master, might fly to the Messiah, whose Messenger their Master was: 'tis a comfort in the afflictions of Gods Servants, that they make to the glory of Christ as well as the benefit of their Souls. What Herod and Herodias did, out of enmity to John, God ordered for encreasing the Authority and Glory of the Messiah. Let us never value any thing as a comfort, that is a rival with our Saviour.

The Reasons why he must increase, he delivers from v. 31. all which he lays down also as grounds of Faith to build that conclusion on, which he makes in the Text, and contains the marrow of the Gospel.

1. In regard of the difference of their Originals, v. 31. He that comes from above is above all, he that is of the Earth is Earthly, and speaks of the Earth. He is from above, Heavenly in his Original; I am of the Earth, Earthly, born according to the Law of Adam, by natural Generation; what I speak therefore, is mean in comparison of the Declarations, which shall be made by one of so illustrious a Descent *. As his Original is from above, so his Authority is above all; but I am meerly of a humane descent, and have nothing in my nature but what is common common to Mankind. I have made no other Revelations, than what other men have made by the influence of God upon them; but he of whom I ſpeak, is above all, in the dignity of his Perſon, the excellency of his Office, the height and clearneſs of his Knowledge, the purity of his Graces, the extent of his Authority. 'Tis fit therefore that I ſhould decreaſe, that he ſhould increaſe; Earthly things are to give place to Heavenly; his being from above, notes his divine Original, as the others being of the Earth, notes his Earthly Original. 'Tis not ſaid, He was above, but is above all. He loſt nothing of the rights of his dignity, by aſſuming our humanity; he was above all in reality, though a worm in appearance.

* Amyraut in loc.

Obſerve,

1. The Deity of Chriſt is aſſerted, in regard of his original, he comes from above: In regard of his dignity, He is above all. In regard of his Original, he is oppos'd to all men, who are from the Earth in regard of Generation. He was firſt in Heaven, before he was upon the Earth; he could not come from above, if he were not firſt above. * 'Tis not therefore meant of his miraculous Conception only made by the Power of Heaven, and not from any Earthly Cauſe; becauſe the Fleſh of Chriſt was never in Heaven, when it was Conceiv'd by the Holy Ghoſt, in the Virgins Womb; nor till after his Reſurrection, when he aſcended in his humane nature far above the Heavens. Though Adam was form'd immediately by the hand of God, yet it was never ſaid, that Adam deſcended from Heaven. But he is called earthy, 1 Cor. 15. 47. The firſt man is of the earth earthy, the ſecond man is the Lord from Heaven. If there had been nothing Heavenly in Chriſt but his Conception, he might be called Earthy as well as Adam. Nor can it be meant only in regard of his gifts; for the gifts of John Baptiſt, and all the Prophets were from above, from the Father of Lights; yet he calls himſelf Earthly, he diſtinguiſheth himſelf as he was by nature, from what he was by Grace; John was from Heaven in regard of his office, from Earth in regard of his original. But Chriſt was from Heaven in regard of Original as well as Office. He comes from above, not by a change of place, for his divine nature fills all things; but in regard of manifeſtation, diſcovering his Divinity, which before was manifeſt only in the Heavens, as God is ſaid to deſcend from Heaven, when he manifeſts himſelf in ways either of ſignal mercy or juſtice. * In regard of his dignity, he is above all, above all Creatures, and therefore God. None but God can be above all, and have the title of Supremacy; as much above all Angels and Men, as the Heaven, from whence he came, is above the Earth, to which he deſcended, for the manifeſtation of himſelf in our fleſh; it could not be ſaid of any Angel that he was above all. If therefore Chriſt be above all, we muſt pay that reverence and veneration to him, that is due to his Deity, and infinite Superiority. He that is above all, muſt have our affections and our ſervices above all things, according to the excellency of his Perſon, and dignity of his Office.

2. The higheſt Saints muſt be ſenſible of original corruption. The being of the Earth is not only meant by John of his humane condition, but his corrupted condition; as he deſcended in a way of ordinary Generation from Adam. Behold here one greater than the Prophets, Mat. 11. 11. the immediate Harbinger of the Redeemer of the World, honour'd with an imployment above any that went before him, to prepare the way before the Meſſiah; a burning and ſhining Lamp, one ſanctified in the Womb, rejoycing at the approach of a Saviour before he ſaw the Light, acknowledging the depravation of his nature, as he was the Son of Adam; humbling himſelf under the conſideration of it. Was there ever any elevated Soul but complain'd of it? David in the Old Teſtament, of his being ſhapen in iniquity, Pſal. 51. 5. Paul in the New, groaning under his body of death. Were this more in our thoughts, Pride would not be ſo fluſh in our hearts and actions. * John expreſſeth here his humility by conſidering himſelf as Earthly, which includes the miſeries that follow an Earthly Extraction, viz. Corruption, Blindneſs, Rebellion againſt God. He doth not aſſert his Baptiſm, and the Doctrine he preacht, to be Earthly. They were from Heaven, and our Saviour gives that teſtimony of him; but he pronounceth what himſelf and all men are in and by themſelves, not what they are by the gift and grace of God.

3. Where

3. Where is perfection to be found? When ſuch a perſon as John, the greateſt among thoſe born of a Woman, endued with ſuch honour, as to be the Herald of the King of Glory, confeſſeth himſelf Earthy, and ſpeaking of the Earth, i. e. his words ſavouring and ſcenting of the corruption of his nature. Shall men of a leſs ſtamp ever lay claim to that, which ſo humble, and holy a perſon, one ſo Character'd by Chriſt could not challenge? If ſuch a burning and ſhining light were not the poſſeſſor of a perfect ſtate in this life, where is the man, that is inferiour to him in his other Titles, that can count himſelf ſuperiour to him in this?

4. The Goſpel and word of Chriſt is worth credit. 'Tis not the word of a corrupted man, but of an Heavenly Off-ſpring. Who ſhall we hear, if Heaven can find no credit with us? Are we fit to enjoy the happineſs of the place, if we will not receive the Precepts of it? He is from above, he is above all, his words cannot be falſe, while Heaven is true.

2. Reaſon. The manner of the knowledge of Chriſt, or the communication of the doctrine to him, v. 32. what he hath ſeen and heard, that he teſtifies. John was inſpir'd, but our Saviour had not only heard but ſeen what he teſtified; and in this reſpect he is ſuperiour to all men. The Prophets ſaw the things upon Earth, Chriſt hath ſeen them in Heaven. They ſaw them in Streams, Chriſt in their Fountain; they ſaw the Image of ſome things, but Chriſt hath ſeen the eternal models of all. He was in the Boſom of the Father, and drew all that he knew from the depths of infinite Wiſdom. Yet though the things he ſpeaks, are ſo plain and clear, few receive his teſtimony. So great a Perſon, ſo fully underſtanding the myſteries of God, cannot find a reception among men; very few believ'd in him, like the gleanings of a Vintage after the gatherings of the Grapes.

Obſerve,

1. The fitneſs of Chriſt for his prophetical Office. He hath ſeen things in the Boſom of the Father, heard things from the mouth of the Father, he hath them not by Revelation; but, as the Son of God, was intereſted in the debates and reſults of the Trinity. He was by the Father, when the foundations of the World were laid, and the courſe of all things Order'd, Prov. 8. 27, 28, 29, 30. nothing is unknown to him, that is known to the Father: As he only knows him, ſo he only hath ability to declare him. The things which Paul ſaw were unutterable, he wanted ability as well as authority to declare them, 2 Cor. 12. 4. Chriſt hath both, he hath ſeen and heard, and can and did teſtify, what he ſaw and heard; it was his Fathers mind he ſhould do ſo. How worthy is God of all our praiſe for his Wiſdom in appointing, and his love in ſending a Perſon ſo fully accompliſht, to make known his eternal Counſels concerning the Pardon of Sin, and conferring eternal life on the loſt Sons of Adam? How inexcuſable doth it render the conditions of thoſe that will not hear his Voice, believe his Word; ſince he witneſſeth the things he hath ſeen and heard, in and from his Father?

2. From thoſe words, no man receives his teſtimony, the paucity of Believers is aſſerted; few in compariſon of thoſe that receive him not. Let not the general Unbelief of men diſcourage us from Faith. It was foretold by the Baptiſt; forewarn'd forearm'd. The Devil is the God of this World, he influenceth moſt men, Chriſt is a Mediator for thoſe that are not of this World. All in the World enjoy ſome benefits of his Mediation, but not the ſaving benefits of it. 'Tis dangerous to go with a multitude. Let no man plead, ſuch wiſe and learned men are of this or that opinion. If we follow the example of the moſt, we cannot be Believers.

The Baptiſt makes a digreſſion to deſcribe the nature of Faith, and the excellency of it, v. 33. he that hath receiv'd his teſtimony, there is the nature of Faith, hath ſet to his ſeal, that God is true; there is the excellency of Faith.

1. The nature of Faith. 'Tis a receiving the teſtimony of Chriſt in the certainty of it, and in the extent of it. The teſtimony of Gods promiſes to encourage us, of his precepts to direct us, of his threatnings to awe us, and make us adhere faſter to him: A reſting in this teſtimony as certain, as the Center of our Souls, the only foundation of our hopes. God is the ultimate object of Faith, Chriſt the immediate object of Faith. Chriſt gives the teſtimony, God is the ſubject of that teſtimony.

mony. When the witneſs Chriſt gives of the things he hath ſeen and heard, is received to be reſted in as the ground of our hope, and the rule of our walk, this is Faith.

2. The excellency of Faith. It owns the truth of God, he ſets to his ſeal, that God is true. A Metaphor taken from contracts, to which men teſtify their approbation by fixing their Seal. Thus we honour God, when we ſet to the Seal of our Faith, to juſtify the truth of his word. No man that owns a God, did ever abſolutely doubt of his veracity. But the truth here meant, is the fidelity of God in performing the Promiſes of the Goſpel, in ſending the Meſſiah: he owns God to be as good as his word, in ſending a perſon every way compleat for the Office he had undertaken, to effect our Redemption. God Seals his Covenant to us in the Bloud of his Son, and by Sacraments; Faith is a Sealing the Counterpart to God. We acknowledge his truth in what he hath done, and rely upon his truth in what he hath promiſed yet to do; and the hearty acknowledging his veracity, in what he hath already perform'd, is the ground of our relyance on him, in what is yet to be perform'd. If we believe not the firſt, we cannot reſt upon him for the latter. We cannot honour God more than by owning his truth. The glory of it is the deſign of the whole Scripture, from the firſt promiſe to the cloſe of the Book. He that denies the manifeſtation of Gods truth in his Son, either opinionatively, or practically, denies the authority of the whole Book, makes God as bad as the Devil, accounts him a greater Lyar than any Creature, 1 John 5. 10. As Faith gives God the greateſt honour that a Creature is capable to render; ſo Unbelief fixeth the greateſt diſgrace upon him.

3. In regard of the authority of his miſſion, v. 34. he whom God hath ſent, ſpeaks the words of God. He is ſent of God, which is alſo an encouragement to Faith in him: The Prophets were ſent of God but as Servants, Chriſt as a Son; he came out from God as a Beam from the Sun, the Prophets came from God as matter kindled by a Sun Beam; he was ſent by God with an immenſe fulneſs of Spirit, the Prophets were ſent by God with ſome parcels of Grace. The firſt act of Faith is to believe that God hath ſent him, John 17. 21. That the World may believe that thou haſt ſent me. He ſpeaks the words of God, ſo did the Prophets; Chriſt always ſpeaks them, the Prophets ſometimes, as they were inſpir'd according to the pleaſure of God. Whatſoever Chriſt ſpeaks, is the Word and Will of God: The Prophets ſpake to the Ear, Chriſt can ſpeak with efficacy to the Heart; he can give Eyes to ſee, Ears to hear, and a Heart to underſtand; he ſpeaks to the Ear, and imprints upon the Heart. * He ſpeaks the Word of God with ſuch an evidence, and certainty of truth, than which, if God himſelf ſhould appear, there could not be greater.

* Amyraut in loc.

4. In regard of his excellent fitneſs. Another motive to Faith, for God gives not the Spirit by meaſure to him, v. 34. He hath the Spirit in the full ſource, the Prophets in ſome little ſtreams; he poſſeſſeth all the treaſures of the Spirit, the Prophets ſome grains and leſſer parcels. This was the foundation of his fitneſs, for the diſcharge of his Prophetical Office, as he was to ſpeak the Words of God, Iſa. 61. 1, 2, 3. The fulneſs of the Spirit he had not at the firſt beſtowed upon him, in regard of the gifts of it (though he had the fulneſs of it for the ſanctification of his humane nature) but it was communicated to him proportionably to his age and private ſtate, whence he is ſaid to grow in Wiſdom, Luke 2. 52. But when he was to enter upon the diſcharge of his Office, it was given without meaſure at the time of his Baptiſm, and this inward donation of the Spirit of God to the Perſon of Chriſt, was ſhadow'd by the appearance and deſcent of the likeneſs of a Dove upon him, to which the Baptiſt might refer in this expreſſion.

Obſerve,

1. Chriſt hath an abundant fitneſs from God for the diſcharge of his Office, and an abundant fulneſs for his People. God did not meaſure to him a certain quantity of the gifts and graces of his Spirit, but pour'd it upon him without ſtint: Beſides, the fitneſs of Chriſt, by virtue of the hypoſtatical Union, whereby the Divinity ſupported the Humanity in the whole work, there was a fitneſs by the grace of Unction, when he was anointed with the Oyl of gladneſs above his fellows, lows, Hebr. 1. 9. The end of giving the ſpirit in ſuch a fullneſs, was to communicate to his people, that we might receive of his fullneſs, Joh. 1. 16. It was given not as a Treaſure, to be preſerv'd in a Cabinet, but as a Fountain, to ſend forth freſh ſtreams for ſupply. Our Joſeph hath the Corn, not only for himſelf, but the ſupply of the People, that come to him. And thus is Chriſt fitted to be an object of Faith; he only is fit for this, that hath abundance of ſpirit; a fitneſs to relieve us, a fulneſs to ſupply us; our Faith were elſe in vain, no man would truſt in a perſon, of whoſe ability as well as ſincerity, he were not aſſur'd. He is faithful in ſpeaking the words of God, he is able in having the ſpirit of God without limitation. * And there is good reaſon it ſhould be ſo, becauſe there is a ſpecialty between God and him, the relation of Father and Son. He hath choſen us according to his pleaſure, for the glory of his name; but he is the Son of God, and therefore the object of his unſpeakable love. Hence is the 5 and 6 Reaſon, viz.

* Amyrat in loc.

5. In regard of the ſpecial relation of God to him, as a Father, and his affection to him, v. 35.

6. In regard of the full power given him over all things, v. 35.

Obſerve,

1. God has a ſpecial love to Chriſt in his office of Mediatorſhip. He loved him from Eternity, as he was his Son by Eternal Generation; he loves him as Mediator, by ſpecial Conſtitution; and bears this love to him as Mediator, as thoſe words are underſtood, Joh. 17. 24. For thou lovedſt me before the foundation of the World, and the words in this verſe are meant of a love to him under this conſideration. The gift of all things to him, and appointing him Heir of all things, is a fruit of this affection to him, as undertaking the work of Redemption. God loved him in his Perſon, he loves him in his Office; he is his beloved Son, as he is ſent as a Prophet to be heard and obeyed, Luke 9. 35. He loves him for undertaking our Cauſe, for interpoſing for our Peace. As he was the Son of God, he was hæres natus; as he is the Son of God in our nature, he is hæres conſtitutus, Hebr. 1. 2. He is the principal object of Gods love, he loves none but in him, as he choſe none but in him by his Eternal Decree, Eph. 1. 4. Who can we then truſt better than him who poſſeſſeth the love of the Father? We approve of the Fathers affection to him, by beſtowing our Faith and Love upon him. How highly do we pleaſe God, when our affections are pitch'd upon the ſame object with his, and run to the ſame term? If he love the Son, he will love every one that loves him, and hate every one that contemns him. How comfortable is this love of the Father to Chriſt as Mediator! He loves all for whom Chriſt doth exerciſe this Office, all that believe in him; and his love is as unchangeable to the one as the other. Our ſecurity is founded upon the love of God to the Son, which is immutable, and conſequently to all that are embraced in that Office by him. God will not repent of what he confers upon us, becauſe he gives it for the love he bears his Son, which love redounds to his Seed. As that love will never fail, ſo his grace and favour to a Believer will never fail.

2. Chriſt is entruſted with all things neceſſary to our ſalvation. Some therefore interpret it, he hath given all things to man through his hand, he hath the poſſeſſion, but for the Believers uſe. God hath given all things into his hand, all Creatures to rule them, all Treaſures to beſtow them, all Power to protect his People; he hath given him the World of Men and Angels to govern, the World of his Elect to redeem; he hath put all things under his feet, and made him the head over all things for the Church, Eph. 1. 22. The conſequence of the Baptiſt in the next Verſe, of Believers having eternal life, would not be valid, if he had this power only for himſelf, and not for their uſe. How comfortable is this! things were given into the hands of Adam, for his own uſe and his Poſterity; but he loſt them, undid himſelf, and drew with him all that were in his Loyns. They are now given into the hands of Chriſt for our uſe, who cannot loſe them, and therefore we cannot be loſt if we believe in him. 'Tis our happineſs they are in his hands, and not in our own; in the hands of one who cannot loſe them by ſin, as Adam did, becauſe of the permanent holineſs of his nature, having the ſanctifying graces of the ſpirit without meaſure; nor by the craft and power of the Devil, becauſe of his infinite ſuperiority above him, and having the enabling gifts of the ſpirit without meaſure: His humanity was oppos'd, but not conquer'd; he hath an holineſs infinitely diſtant from ſin, and a wiſdom to defeat the ſubtlety of the Serpent.

We know alſo where to go for the Alms we want; Chriſt is Gods Almoner to us, and our Advocate to God; a Mediator between God and us; he hath a Commiſſion to aſk, and a Promiſe to receive, Pſal. 2. 8. We may be ſure to receive if we believe; the unchangeable God will ſtand to whatſoever his Son doth; he will not diminiſh his love to his Son, nor deny his own grant to him. The gift given, is without Repentance in the Father, and the management of the truſt without deceit in the Son: We have not what we want, becauſe we go not to the Officer God hath appointed for diſtribution; a treaſure is depoſited in his hand, but for want of Faith we want the Comfort. We diſhonour the wiſdom of Gods choice, as well as the pleaſure of his Will, and deny the Authority our Saviour is inveſted with, by neglecting him, and not believing in him. Oh wonderful goodneſs! to put our concerns into the ſure hand of his Son, which were loſt by the weak hands of Adam.

Upon all this Diſcourſe, John Baptiſt founds this concluſion, v. 36. He that believes on the Son, hath everlaſting life, and he that believes not the Son, ſhall not ſee life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. Though all power be given to Chriſt, and he hath authority to diſpenſe the treaſures of God, whereof everlaſting life is the chief, yet none can expect to enjoy it but upon the condition of believing in him: 'Tis very reaſonable, that whoſoever expects the bleſſings he is intruſted with, ſhould aſſent and conſent to Gods choice of him, and the conditions of enjoying them.

The Text is made up of a motive to Faith, and a diſſwaſive from Unbelief.

1. The motive is drawn from the reward everlaſting life; ſpiritual life de facto, eternal life de jure; one in hand, and the other in hope, Rom. 8. 24.

2. The diſſwaſive from the miſery, which is double:

1. Excluſion from life; ſhall not ſee, or enjoy life, or ſhall not have ſo much as the leaſt ſence of it.

2. Permanency of wrath; the wrath of God abides on him.

Thus after the deſcription of Chriſts Perſon, Dignity, and Power, the Baptiſt directs his Diſciples, who at firſt made the complaint of our Saviour, to a belief in him, by the moſt forceable arguments: He being ſo great as I have deſcrib'd, can give eternal life to his followers, and being ſo dear to God as he is, the wrath of his Father will remain upon his rejecters; and therefore if the happineſs of eternal life be deſirable, and the terrors of Divine wrath formidable, be ſure that you receive his teſtimony, that you may acquire the one, and eſcape the other.

He notes the ſpecial and immediate object of Faith in both his concluſions; believes on the Son, and believes not the Son; Chriſt as the Son of God, and ſent by God, is the object of our Faith.

The word tranſlated, believes not, is ἀπειθῶν, which ſome render, He that obeys not; the word properly ſignifies diſobedient and obſtinate, but in the Scripture it is often render'd as it is in the Text, Unbelieving: which is not without precedent in Heathen Authors *. It may well be render'd, he that believes not, becauſe 'tis oppos'd to believing in the firſt part of the Verſe, and may be meant of final Unbelief, where there is not a ſimple ἀπιστία, but an obſtinacy and unperſwadableneſs againſt the Goſpel. 'Tis not ſaid the wrath of God ſhall come upon him, but abides upon him. Either,

* Stephanus Theſaur. cites Heſychius explaining ἀπειθὴς in Sophocles by ἄπιστος.

1. To ſhow mans miſery by nature. Every man is born in a ſtate of wrath, and remains under wrath, unleſs ſome expiation be made for his ſin. Now ſince there is no relief againſt this ſtate, but by the Blood of the Son of God, which was ſhed for propitiation; if this be refuſed or neglected, the Soul lies under that curſe Original Corruption plac'd him in, and which he hath ſince frequently merited by an addition of many actual ſins. The debt due to the Law muſt be paid, either by believing in him who hath paid it, or by ſuffering it in our own perſons; 'tis Faith only makes us paſs from that Death our natural ſtate hath

hath subjected us to, unto that life which God hath provided in and by his Son, Joh. 5. 24. He that believes, is passed from death to life.

2. Or to distinguish it from the momentaneous wrath which sometimes lights upon a Believer, which is called a little wrath, Isa. 54. 8. There is a wrath which breaths upon a man like fire, which doth not destroy but refine; but this is a permanent wrath, which punisheth and preserveth the subject for ever under it. 'Tis a wrath that will not pass away, whereby the Eternity of punishment is at least implyed; it shall never depart from him. In other expressions of Gods anger, there may be a mixture of tasts of comforts; but here wrath encompasseth, and overflows like a Sea of Gall, without a tast of joy, o a touch of blessedness.

The Doctrine I shall insist on is this: Continued, and final Unbelief renders a man infallibly an object of the eternal wrath of God. The Communication of the life of God was broken off by the sin of man, to which we are restored only by Faith in the Redeemer; and without Faith we are at a distance from God, the Fountain of Life, and remain under that wrath the state of nature put us into. As Faith unites us to God, so Unbelief separates us from God. Whatsoever righteousness there is in a man without Faith in Christ, is vain and perishing; 'tis as stubble, or a paper Wall, which cannot defend any man from the flaming Sword of Gods Justice. 'Tis of no efficacy of it self to Eternal Life; it may render the wrath and punishment less sharp than anothers, but cannot remove it, and put a man into a state of Life. 'Tis not all kind of Unbelief, or dissent from some particular truth, that subjects a man to eternal wrath; but Unbelief that despiseth the Son of God, that refuseth to receive his testimony. 'Tis by this, men perish under the Gospel, and not for want of Declarations of divine goodness, or want of provision in Christ. Those that refus'd the invitation to the Supper, so incens'd the King, that he pronounceth an irrevocable sentence against every man of them, that they should not tast of the dainties he had provided, Luke 14. 24. And our Saviour in the direction to his Apostles for preaching the Gospel, orders them this Theme, Mark 16. 16. He that believes and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believes not, shall be damn'd, as the immutable Decree of God, concerning the state and condition of Mankind, as to Life or Death; the latter follows upon the former; for if he that believes shall be saved, then the contrary to Salvation will fall upon the Unbeliever; and not only a bare privation of Salvation, and exclusion from the blessed Vision of God; but a sharper sentence of misery, according to his ingratitude, in refusing the riches of divine grace, offer'd to him in the Gospel.

1. Unbelief is not the only sin that damns. Other sins will condemn as well as that. Adams first disobedience was the ground of Adams Condemnation. Man was condemn'd by the Law, before Christ was promised in the Gospel. The World had come short of the glory of God, before Christ took the infirmities of our nature for suffering. He came to save, which supposeth man in a state of Damnation; he came to redeem, which supposeth man in a state of Captivity; he came to bring us to God, which supposeth our distance from God; he was Incarnate to free us from the Law, which supposeth our being under the Curse of it.

2. Yet 'tis that sin without which no other sin would damn a man that hath heard the Gospel. If a man be found guilty of Felony, for which the Law allows him the mercy of the Book; if he can read, he prevents the sentence of Death; if he cannot, he sinks under the penalty of the Law: his Felony, and not his ignorance, is the meritorious cause of his Execution. The Case is much the same; Men are Condemn'd for other sins, which misery would have been prevented by Faith; yet it differs in this, that Unbelief is our sin; 'tis our duty to believe, since God hath authority to reveal his truth, and command us to acknowledge it; but the Prisoners not reading, is his misery, not his Crime. * The sickness a man lyes under would not have kill'd him, if he had taken the Physick offer'd him; though the Disease were mortal in it self, it might have been expell'd by that Sovereign Remedy. The refusal of the Medicine may be counted the formal, or moral cause of his Death, though the Disease be the procuring or natural Cause of it. A Malefactor is caſt into Priſon for Treaſon, a Pardon is offer'd and refus'd; had it been accepted, he had not undergone the penalty due to his crime. No ſin could deſtroy us, if Unbelief did not reign in us. Faith would inſtrumentally remove the guilt of all other ſin. Upon the embracing the Expiatory Sacrifice of the Goſpel, our other Debts would be Cancell'd; upon a refuſal, our guilt ſtands upon Record, and charged upon us in full vigour, and receives a greater aggravation, by the rejecting the moſt obliging Revelation of God, and counting the remedy for ſin in the merit and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, a triſle. Other ſins condemn meritoriouſly, and this formally, ſay ſome. Though all graces are in a Believer, yet his Salvation is principally aſcrib'd to Faith in the rank of Grace, Eph. 2. 8. By grace you are ſaved through Faith. So though a man be guilty of all ſins, yet his Condemnation is attributed to his Unbelief. The guilt of the moſt monſtrous enormities would not be laid to any mans charge, if he did by Faith and Repentance turn to God; and the moſt glittering Righteouſneſs, with Unbelief, will not prevent his being fuel for wrath. Who are excluded from the Boſom of Abraham? the Sons of the Kingdom bred up and nouriſhed among the Ordinances of God, but neglecting or refuſing a Saviour. And who are entertain'd there? Gentiles beſmeared with the mire of Idolatry, yet expiated by the Mediator they believed in, Mat. 8. 11, 12. 'tis upon the occaſion of the Faith of the Centurion, that Chriſt ſpeaks of the happineſs of the Gentiles, and miſery of the Jews. Men ſtrangers to God for ſo many Ages are engrafted by Faith, and prepar'd for Heaven, while thoſe entruſted with the Oracles of God, are diſinherited by Unbelief, and made Veſſels of wrath. In regard of merit, every ſin is the cauſe of Condemnation; in regard of Execution, Unbelief is the ſole Cauſe. * Shimei reviles David, is Pardon'd by him, and his Pardon renewed by Solomon, but with a condition that he ſhould not go out of Jeruſalem; he breaks this Condition, is according to Solomon's word Executed. The true Cauſe of his Death, is his reviling of David; had he not been guilty of that, Solomon had had no ground of offence, nor had impos'd any condition upon him. But when he violates that condition, and goes out of Jeruſalem, againſt the Command of the King, Solomon takes occaſion to puniſh him for his former Crime. Shimei might have avoided the puniſhment, by obſerving the condition commanded. Men are Condemned by the Law, and Executed by the Juſtice of it; the Condemnation of the Law would not take place, if Faith, the Cure of guilt, had poſſeſſion of the Heart. No ſin can condemn, if Faith be preſent; and no righteouſneſs can ſave, if Faith be abſent. While Unbelief remains, all ſins are retain'd; when this is remov'd, all ſins are remitted. All that periſh, periſh either by or for this not believing; thoſe to whom the Goſpel is not reveal'd, periſh by reaſon of their not believing, through ignorance; 'tis by reaſon of that, the wrath of God abides on them; and when there is but one Medicine to Cure a Diſeaſe, the ignorant Patient periſheth for want of the knowledge of it; the knowing Patient periſheth for want of applying it. * This the Schools underſtand, when they ſay, the Heathens that never heard of Chriſt, periſh ratione infidelitatis; thoſe that hear of him, periſh propter infidelitatem, in a ſtate of infidelity, though not for it.

For the evidence of this Doctrine, let us conſider ſome Propoſitions.

1. All men by nature are under condemnation. The inſenſibleneſs of this, is the cauſe of Unbelief; and without a due conſideration of this, there can be no entertainment of the Goſpel. Chriſt himſelf preacheth this Doctrine, Joh. 3. 18. He that believes on me is not condemn'd, but he that believes not is condemn'd already, becauſe he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. He is condemn'd already, not ſhall be, but is, i. e. he is in a ſtate of Condemnation. The Sentence is pronounced by the juſtice of God againſt every Son of Adam. Death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned, and judgment came upon all men to condemnation, Rom. 5. 12. 18. All the branches of Adam were adjudg'd to eternal Death, by that Law, which he, by his original Apoſtaſie, tranſgreſſed, and they, by their repeated offences, have further violated. All are the Children of wrath, all are become guilty before God. Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them, Gal. 3. 10.

The

The whole race of Mankind was bound up in that Sentence pronounc'd againſt Adam, upon tranſgreſſing the Law, which God had Enacted, Geneſ. 2 17. Thou ſhalt dye the Death: by the ſame act of juſtice which caſt Adam out of Paradiſe, were all his Poſterity expel'd. We are an accurſed Generation by the Covenant of works; our Hands and our Heels are lifted up againſt our Soveraign Lord; we are utterly naked of Original Righteouſneſs; all the ſins we have committed, have every one damnation at the Heel: We are expoſed to the curſes of the Law, the fury of God, the ſcoffs of the tempting Serpent; there is but an inch between us and devouring Flames; all are condemn'd, though all are not yet executed; God yet gives reſpite to man to lay hold upon his mercy in the Goſpel. If a man dye without Faith in the Son of God, he is as ſurely undone, as if he were under the full execution of all the threatnings of the Law at this inſtant. He is condemn'd already, i. e. he hath the cauſe of condemnation in himſelf, the ſharp points of the Law are full againſt him. As a Malefactor in the Gaol for ſome Capital Crime, may be ſaid to be condemn'd already, in the nature of the offence he hath committed, by the equity of that Law he hath violated. There is a double condemnation, one by the Law, another by the Goſpel; all men are in nature condemn'd by the firſt, all Unbelievers by both; they are condemn'd at the Tribunal of the Law for tranſgreſſing it, and even at the mercy-ſeat of the Goſpel for rejecting it: none are exempted from it but by Faith in the Goſpel, which is the only way to eſcape the ſeverity of the Law. When a man appeals from the Tribunal of the Law, whereby he ſtands condemn'd, to the Throne of Grace, wherein mercy ſways the Scepter dipt in the Blood of Chriſt, caſting himſelf upon the merit of that Blood, and reſolving to obey the voice of a Redeemer; he comes forth from his Priſon, and the darkneſs of Condemnation, into the light of life. He is condemn'd already: Every elect Perſon is thus in a ſtate of Condemnation, while he remains in a ſtate of Unbelief; for if there be no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt, Rom. 8. 1. then there is nothing but condemnation to them that are yet out of Chriſt; and if a man depart out of the World in that ſtate, he for ever lyes under the irrevocable ſentence of the Law, for ever curſed, becauſe for ever guilty; And the reaſon is rendred, becauſe he believes not in the name of the only begotten Son of God: He refuſeth the only remedy God hath provided, and excludes himſelf from the Life, Salvation, Righteouſneſs, and Happineſs which Chriſt hath purchaſed, and therefore lies under the judgment of the old Sentence, by refuſing the Grace of the new Adminiſtration, and acquires a new guilt; for the more excellent the Perſon that is neglected, the only Son of God, the greater puniſhment is deſerved. * He further deſcribes to us, that Faith, which brings us out of that natural condemnation, he doth not ſay, becauſe he hath not believed that the only Son of God is come into the World, which is a Faith that many reſt upon; this would exclude only abſolute infidelity, and diſſent from the Doctrine of the Goſpel, but becauſe he believes not in the name of the only begotten Son of God: He receives not his Word, relys not upon his Office, ſubmits not to his Authority, for Name ſignifies this, and much more in Scripture. A man may believe the Son of God is come, yet place no confidence in him, nor pay any Obedience to him: A man may believe ſuch a man to be a Phyſician, and able to cure, but if he uſeth not his medicine, he ſhall be never the better for his skill.

* Muſcul. in loc.

2. Man being thus naturally condemned, his Unbelief binds all his guilt upon him, John 8. 24. I ſay therefore unto you, that you ſhall dye in your ſins; for if you believe not that I am he, you ſhall dye in your ſins. In the Illative, therefore, he notes their natural condemnation, becauſe they were of this World, v. 23. And there is no remedy to prevent this Death, but to believe that I am he, the Meſſiah, the Perſon appointed to bruiſe the Serpents Head, appointed to be the Saviour of the World. All ſins are ſealed up in a bag, Job 14. 17. recorded with a Pen of Iron, and the point of a Diamond, Jer. 17. 1. Every Inditement remains in force, nothing but Faith in the Blood of Chriſt can cancel the Writing, deface the Seal, take the accuſation off the File. * Unbelief therefore locks all other ſins like ſhackles upon the Conſcience, which otherwiſe by the help of Chriſt

* Reynold's Life of Chriſt, p. 496.

Chriſt might eaſily ſhake them off; all Men's violations of the Law ſtick to them, and the wrath due to them hangs over them. When a Prince pardons all Miſdemeanours by his Proclamation upon eaſy conditions, and ſwears, that if there be not an acceptance of it, the refuſer ſhall anſwer the Law for all his guilt: If a man will not ſue out his Pardon, will not perform ſo eaſy a condition, he continues the weight of all his former guilt upon him. The firſt promiſe was made after the fall, to take away the guilt of tranſgreſſions againſt the firſt Covenant, Heb. 9. 15. If the Promiſe be not receiv'd, the Mediator applyed, the guilt of thoſe tranſgreſſions endures. We are condemn'd upon the breach of the firſt Covenant, and can only be reſtor'd to a ſtate of life, by embracing the new. Sin remains in its vigour, as a Diſeaſe upon a Patient, by refuſing the only Phyſician able to Cure it. It faſtens guilt the more, becauſe it is an approbation of all the iniquities committed againſt the Law; and encreaſeth the guilt of thoſe ſins he was guilty of before, becauſe he manifeſts a greater fondneſs of them, a ſtronger unwillingneſs to part with them. It leaves the Unbeliever naked to the ſtroke of divine juſtice, without a refuge to cover him. He that refuſeth ſhelter againſt a potent Adverſary, expoſeth himſelf to his fury. There is no pleading the Covenant of works, that hath been tranſgreſt, and proclaims only puniſhment not Pardon: nor the Covenant of Grace, the Sanctuary of that he refus'd to enter into. So that he is not only as a Heathen, in the ſame condition as if Chriſt had never ſuffer'd, in regard of want of relief; but in a worſe, in regard of ſharpneſs of puniſhment: he hath not only no more title to happineſs than if Chriſt had never died, but a ſtronger title to puniſhment becauſe Chriſt did die. His ſin remains in more vigour againſt him, becauſe the only remedy is refus'd by him. The weight of guilt is not remov'd, and the hour of puniſhment is reſerv'd for ſuch an one.

3. The Covenant of Grace, in the hand of a Mediator, is the laſt Covenant that God will make. The times of the Goſpel are called the laſt times, the laſt dayes, Iſay 2. 2. Hebr. 1. 2. no other relieving adminiſtration is intended by God, or can be expected by us; this contains the whole and utmoſt counſel of God, about the Salvation of men, Act. 20. 27. An Anathema is poured out againſt any that preach another Goſpel, Galat. 1. 9. no more ſacrifice remains for ſin, Heb. 10. 26, 27. There is but one Sacrifice for expiation, but one Mediator for Interceſſion, but one ſpecial Officer appointed by God, under whoſe Wing we can be ſafe. 'Tis a Covenant of infinite Grace, there can be none above it, becauſe there cannot be grace above infinite. There can be no refuge but in mercy; if mercy refuſe, what can ſtep in for our relief? Mercy is the only Bar to Juſtice; if the Bar be removed, what ſtop to the overflowing Sourge? This Covenant is ſetled, that no man ſhall enjoy the benefit of the ſatisfaction the Surety hath made, without the conditions of Repentance and Faith. If this Law ſtand of force, it cannot be ſuppos'd that there can be any Salvation without a ſatisfaction for the breach of this Covenant, as well as a ſatisfaction was neceſſary for the breach of the firſt; for the honour of God will as much or more require a ſatisfaction for the breach of this, as being a greater contempt of him, than for the breach of the firſt Covenant, wherein the contempt of him was leſs, and ſo many Attributes were not diſparag'd by it. This ſatisfaction muſt be by a ſtronger Surety than our ſelves; for our ſelves, we are as unable to return a recompence for the violations of the ſecond Covenant, as we were to do it for the firſt. So ſtrong a Surety we cannot have, unleſs the Son of God ſhould be ſent to ſuffer again, only upon this condition, that the Sinner ſhould be diſcharg'd without any thing done on his part: But as to the firſt, the ſufferings of the Son of God muſt never be repeated; he was to bear ſin but once, his ſecond appearance is to be without ſin unto ſalvation, Heb. 9. 28. the Salvation of Believers, the Damnation of Unbelievers. No more Sacrifice remains for any ſin in the World. Nor, ſuppoſe Chriſt were ſent to bear ſin, and be again the chaſtiſement of our Peace, after the violations of the ſecond Covenant, it cannot be upon ſuch terms, that upon the account of his ſufferings, without any thing done on our parts, we ſhould be diſcharged. It ſeems not congruous to the honour of God, to ſend his Son to ſuffer again, or if he did, to impoſe no conditions upon thoſe that ſhould enjoy the benefit of thoſe ſufferings.

ſufferings. There can be no leſs requir'd than is now, which is no more than the receiving the atonement, Rom. 5. 11. a conſent to it, and acceptance of it. Nor is it conſiſtent with the holineſs of God, to diſcharge men upon the ſuffering of a Surety, who will perſiſt in that ſin for which the Surety ſuffer'd, and make uſe of a Saviour to be free from ſuffering, but not free from offending. No more is requir'd now; in this conſiſts Faith and Repentance; and no leſs can reaſonably be thought to be requir'd, if Chriſt ſhould again be expos'd to ſuffering. What leſs can any Prince, any man require, for any favour he doth, but acceptance and gratitude? So that though the tranſgreſſion againſt the Covenant of works is reliev'd by the Covenant of Grace; yet the tranſgreſſions againſt this can have no relief but in it. For it is the laſt, and if it were not, you cannot ſuppoſe any Covenant to ſucceed upon lighter terms than the Grace is offered in this. To ſuppoſe a Covenant without conditions, is as much as to ſuppoſe man to be Created without a rule of Obedience; and this is to ſuppoſe God without an exerciſe of his Soveraignty, and a Creature without ſubjection; both which are Impoſſible.

4. 'Tis impoſſible, according to the Oeconomy of the Goſpel, that an Unbeliever can be ſaved by mercy. A man muſt either be ſaved by juſtice or mercy; by juſtice he might in the firſt Covenant, had he not provoked it; by mercy in the ſecond Covenant, he may, if he doth not refuſe it. Now juſtice cannot ſave him in the firſt Covenant, becauſe he wants a righteouſneſs of his own; mercy cannot in the ſecond, becauſe he will not accept the conditions of it, which is, the receiving the righteouſneſs of another. Other ſins offend juſtice, but this provokes mercy, which is the ſevereſt Attribute, when provoked, as the ſweeteſt, when receiv'd. 'Tis not fit indeed that mercy ſhould ſave an impenitent, Unbelieving Sinner. God having appointed a Mediator, for the content of his mercy, as well as the ſatisfaction of his juſtice, (that mercy might not complain for the ſevere deſtruction of Mankind) and mercy fully acquieſcing in the reaſonableneſs of the conditions of Faith and Repentance, propos'd in the Goſpel; Juſtice and Mercy having met together upon thoſe Articles, and ſtruck hands in a full Agreement, 'tis not fit Mercy ſhould entertain an Unbelieving Sinner, who refuſeth the terms infinite Mercy hath been ſatisfied with, in the compact between its ſelf and Juſtice. If Mercy ſhould offer to embrace ſuch a one, it would not be true to its own condition: As if Juſtice ſhould not puniſh the tranſgreſſions of the Law, it would not be true to the Law, and conſequently not true to its ſelf, becauſe it is the rule of the Law. Mercy to ſuch an one after this agreement, would be an unequitable Mercy. We muſt not fancy a weak and diſhonourable Mercy, a God unrighteous in his acts of compaſſion. Mercy cannot but be offended, to ſee the conditions it gain'd in its Suit, and which it was fully contented with, deſpis'd, and trod under foot. Mercy can no more ſave any that remains an object of revenging Juſtice, under the firſt Covenant; than Juſtice can condemn one that is an object of Mercy, by receiving the bloud of the ſecond. The Attributes of God cannot invade one anothers rights. 'Tis fit he ſhould be left to the hands of Juſtice, that will not ſtand to the terms and Covenant Mercy made for him.

(1.) This is not conſiſtent with the truth of God. When God made the Law, he annext Promiſes and Threatnings, and his truth was bound to make them good upon the ſutable behaviour of man: though we find only a threatning upon record, yet that implyes a promiſe, Gen. 2. 17. If Death be threatned upon tranſgreſſion, life is implyed upon Obedience. But when man broke the Law, Truth was engaged on the ſide of Juſtice, and had nothing to do in a legal way with Mercy; for man by his ſin had rendred himſelf fuel for Juſtice, and had entail'd upon himſelf the horrour of the threatning. But in the work of Redemption, Mercy and Truth, which ſin had ſeparated in regard of any joint acts towards man (asking truth to be a ſecond to the juſtice of God) met together, Pſal. 85. 10. Theſe Attributes which were ſever'd, were joined again in an indiſſoluble knot, Mercy to the Sinner, and Truth to the threatning; Mercy took mans part, and deſired Peace; Juſtice took the Laws part, and requir'd puniſhment: neither Mercy nor Juſtice could loſe their nature; ſin had ſever'd them, Chriſt reunites them, and truth now is engag'd on both ſides. If an Unbeliever therefore in that ſtate thinks to be ſaved, Mercy and Truth muſt be ſever'd; but this happy Union cannot be diſſolv'd for the ſake of Rebels againſt both. * As the Power of God, though infinite, is regulated by his will; ſo the mercy of God, though infinite, is regulated by his truth: he hath made Faith an unalterable condition of the Covenant; and God cannot deny his Covenant, becauſe he cannot deny himſelf. The truth of God is engag'd to damn ſuch a man more than before; 'tis as well engag'd to make good the Evangelical threatning, as it was before to make good the legal. Juſtice will condemn both by Law and Goſpel; 'tis reaſon, that Juſtice ſhould ſatisfy it ſelf upon that man, as far as he is able to give ſatisfaction, who will not be contented with that which infinite Juſtice was ſatisfied with. Mercy will condemn him; that hath no reaſon to afford any relief to that man that deſpiſeth the Evangelical conditions which fully pleaſed it, and re-united it with Juſtice and Truth. God hath confirm'd thoſe terms by an Oath, that thoſe that believe not, ſhall not enter into his reſt, Heb. 3. 18. * But he never took an Oath, that he that obſerv'd not the Covenant of Works, ſhould not enter into his reſt. Though Adam was under a Covenant of works in his innocent ſtate, yet he was not in ſuch a ſtate, as to be under an utter impoſſibility of Salvation upon the tranſgreſſion of it, becauſe God had provided a remedy in his Son. But he is now under an Oath to puniſh every man that doth finally reject that remedy. The higheſt truth cannot deny one tittle of his word and Oath.

*Bolton Direct. for walking with God, p. 387.

* Hooker's Effectual Calling, p. 366.

2. Nor is it conſiſtent with his wiſdom. 'Tis not agreeable to the wiſdom of a Prince, to be reconcil'd to any Rebels, that will not ſuffer themſelves to be reduc'd to their former Obedience.

If God ſhould change his diſpenſation, it muſt be becauſe the terms are too hard, or the benefits not valuable enough; neither of thoſe can be, the conditions are moſt reaſonable, the benefit the moſt precious, that God in the conjecture of any Creature can give. It had been no act of Wiſdom to ſend his Son to ſatisfie his juſtice, if mercy ſhould be ſo cheaply proſtituted; if Rebels could enjoy the favour, while they cheriſhed their Rebellions; if the purchace ſhould be given to thoſe that diſhonour'd the purchaſer, and ſalvation confer'd upon thoſe that contemn'd the Saviour. The wiſdom of God would ſuffer in undervaluing the meritorious Blood of his Son, if he confer'd the ſame favour upon thoſe that deſpiſe it, and thoſe that eſteem it, and plac'd ſwine that trample his Jewels in the dirt, in the ſame happy condition with thoſe that lodge them in their deareſt affections. What ground of praiſe for that manifold wiſdom, ſo much celebrated in Scripture in the miſſion of Chriſt, if any could be admitted into Heaven, without Faith in him, and love to him? God would declare his Death, to be rather an act of cruelty to him, than kindneſs to us, ſince if any were ſaved without Faith in him, it would be evident, that his death was unneceſſary, ſince we could be as happy without him, as by him.

(3.) Nor is it conſiſtent with the honour of Chriſt. The very end of Chriſts Death is croſſed by Unbelief. He ſuffer'd the puniſhment due to our ſins, that ſin might not reign in us, as well as that the puniſhment might not reign over us. What benefit can we reaſonably expect by his Death, if we will not believe in him, and renounce our ſin, which is contrary to the end of his Death? God would act contrary to the end of our Saviours Death, in giving to the Goats the benefits his Son purchas'd for the Sheep, John 10. 15. and beſtowing upon his Enemies what he deſign'd for his Friends, John 15. 13. and ſprinkling that blood upon thoſe that tread it under foot, which was ſhed for the gathering together the ſons of God, Joh. 11. 52. and imputing the merits of it to impure Wretches, that was intended for the purifying a peculiar people unto himſelf, Tit. 2. 14 When Chriſt died only for Believers, in regard of the actual communication, and application; 'tis a diſparagement unto him, and a making his Death in vain, to let the deſpiſers of it have an equal ſhare in the benefits of it, and make it as much a Savour of life to them that will not value it, as to thoſe that do. What King that offers reconciliation to Rebels, by the interceſſion of his Son, demanding the conditions of a truſt in his Son, and Obedience to him; promiſing them not only upon it, the pardon of their crimes, but the inveſting them with new favours, would not diſhonour his Son, as well as himſelf, if he admitted any one perſon of that rebellious pack, without without that truſt and obedience to him upon which the pardon was offer'd. Let us then appeal to our own Conſciences, and ask them the queſtion, whether they think it comely and worthy of God, to ſave any againſt his word, his Oath, his threatnings, the intention of the Death of Chriſt, againſt all thoſe terms upon which he is profer'd to man?

(4.) Juſtice cannot but puniſh an Unbeliever. As Goodneſs cannot but ſmile upon an innocent Creature, Mercy cannot but hold open its arms for a believing Penitent; ſo Juſtice cannot but flame out againſt an obſtinate Rebel. As Goodneſs would not be Goodneſs, if it rejected an holy Soul, Mercy would contradict its own nature, if it thruſt back a Penitent Believer, the proper object of it; ſo Juſtice would be Injuſtice, if it ſpared a final Unbeliever. And as the firſt, viz. to act contrary to his goodneſs, is impoſſible in the nature of God; the ſecond, viz. to act againſt his Mercy, is impoſſible in the ſetled method of God; ſo the third, to act againſt his Juſtice, is impoſſible in the nature of God, ſay ſome, with much probability; but certainly impoſſible, according to the revealed will of God. As the holineſs of God cannot but hate ſin, ſo the Juſtice of God cannot but puniſh it; it would be ſome degree of love to impurity, wholly to ſpare it. That God ſpares a Sinner for a time, is for the manifeſtation of his Patience, but eſpecially upon the account of the mediation of Chriſt; for as by him the World was Created, ſo after ſin, by his mediation it did conſiſt; without this the World could not have ſtood under the Curſes of the Law. But to ſpare an obſtinate Rebel for ever, would evidence an approbation of his ſin, as well as an affection to his Perſon. God therefore having manifeſted, that he will have ſin puniſhed in the Sinner, or the Surety, and that he will not pardon it without ſatisfaction; the puniſhment of an Unbelieving Rebel will be as unavoidable, as the puniſhment of Chriſt after he had enter'd himſelf as our Surety. Since God did not ſpare the Son that he loved, when he would ſtand in the ſtead of Sinners, can he ſpare the Unbeliever that he hates, when he ſlights the Son that he infinitely loves, and thereby dares the Juſtice of God which he hath ſeen ly ſo heavy upon the Son of his affection? Could any diſpenſation from ſuffering have been granted, his only Son, a ſpotleſs Surety, ſhould have enjoyed the benefit of it; but that could not be in regard of his immutable Juſtice, after he was accepted by him in that quality. Since it was neceſſary his only beloved Son ſhould be expoſed to ſufferings for the remiſſion of the ſins of others; 'tis as neceſſary the final Unbeliever ſhould be expos'd to dreadful puniſhments for his own tranſgreſſions, and the ſlighting ſo great a remedy. * The juſtice of God is inflexible in the puniſhment of ſin, when the Sinner remains obſtinate and impenitent: the inflexibility is declar'd in the ſufferings of Chriſt, which were neceſſary for remiſſion. And though his ſufferings, and the ſatisfaction thereby, were of infinite value, yet they are wholly uſeleſs for the eternal benefit of thoſe that wrap up themſelves in their infidelity and impenitence; Faith and Repentance being requir'd as neceſſary conditions for the enjoyment of the fruit of theſe ſufferings. When this mediation and ſatisfaction of Chriſt is wholly refus'd, or not embrac'd upon the terms on which it is offer'd; the only bar to the inundation of Gods juſtice is taken away, whereby the Soul lyes naked to the over-flowings of it.

* Amyraut ſur. 6. Heb. p. 108, 109. improved.

(5.) That perſon which was the offer'd Saviour, ſhall be the judge and condemner of ſuch as neglect the terms of ſalvation by him. What Sanctuary can an Unbeliever have, when the Mediator of Mercy appears as the inflicter of puniſhment? He appears the ſecond time to the ſalvation only of thoſe that look for him, Heb. 9. 28 *. (that affectionately look for his appearance) of thoſe whoſe ſins he bore upon the Tree. Chriſt did never obtain any Peace and Pardon for thoſe that perſevere to the end in their infidelity. Such Chriſt is ſaid not to know, Mat. 7. 23. I never knew you. Not to pray for, Joh. 17. 9. I pray not for the world, i. e. for ſuch as remain in their ſin, and are ſeparated from God by their Unbelief. God hath promiſed to make all his Enemies his Footſtool; and as he hath confer'd upon him a power of asking for his people, ſo he hath given him a power of deſtroying his Enemies, and committed all judgment to the Son, Pſal. 2. 8, 9. Thou ſhalt break them with a rod of iron, is the fruit of Chriſts asking of God. As he gives him bleſſings for thoſe that truſt in him, v. 12. ſo he gives him judgments for thoſe

that ſet themſelves againſt him. Gods Mercy will not relieve any that are mortally wounded by his Son; and he that gives Chriſt the whole World upon asking, will not contradict him in his ſevereſt acts of daſhing his Enemies like a Potters Veſſel. As he had a love to ſhed his bloud, ſo he hath a wrath to burn them that kiſs him not with a kiſs of homage. They are ſo far from having any ſhare in his interceſſions for mercy, that they have a dreadful intereſt in his pleas for wrath. He indeed pray'd upon the croſs for the forgiveneſs of ſome, he prays alſo for indignation to be pour'd out upon others, Pſal. 69. 23, 24. 'Tis the cry of him to whom they give gall for meat, and in his thirſt, Vinegar to drink, v. 21. His bloud hath a Voice for the forgiveneſs of ſome, and for the puniſhment of others; it hath as loud a cry againſt them that undervalue it, as it hath for them that do apply it. He cannot intercede for any but upon the account of his bloud; his interceſſion is no other than the voice of his bloud which ſpeaks in Heaven. His bloud will no more ſpeak for them that ſlight it, than Abels bloud did for Cain that ſhed it. It ſpeaks better things than the bloud of Abel, but only for thoſe that are come to the Mediator of the new Covenant, and the bloud of ſprinkling, Hebr. 12. 24. Nay Chriſt is not able to ſave any but thoſe that believe. He is able to ſave, but with a reſtriction; Thoſe that come to God by him, Heb. 7. 24, 25. Not able morally; as it is ſaid, 'tis impoſſible to renew Apoſtates from the Goſpel to repentance, Heb. 6. 4. 6. Not but that God can by his abſolute power renew one that doth totally apoſtatize from the profeſſion of the Goſpel, but in regard of his wiſdom and righteouſneſs, it is impoſſible. So Chriſt is able to ſave none but thoſe that come unto God by him. God hath put ſuch a limitation in the Covenant, agreed between himſelf and our Saviour; thoſe only are to be juſtified that have the knowledge of his righteous ſervant, Iſa. 53. 11. He ſaves only his Seed, thoſe that are begotten to a lively hope, by the Reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead. He can ſave only thoſe that are his Members, and Faith only gives us an union to Chriſt, and ſo entitles us to Salvation. Chriſt can never run counter to his Goſpel, and bleſs them whom the Goſpel Curſeth, or ſave them whom the Goſpel condemns. This would be a contradiction, to confirm the Covenant by his Death, and break it by his Life. To walk according to the Counſel of God when he was in the fleſh, and defeat it when he is upon his Throne. He that gave Mercies according to mens Faith, when he was upon the Earth, will not give Salvation to Unbelief, ſince he is aſcended into Heaven. His uſual Language was, Be it unto you according to your Faith. Go in Peace, thy Faith hath ſav'd thee.

(6.) That which makes the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt unpardonable in this World, makes final Unbelief unpardonable in the other. A denial of Chriſt is join'd with the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, Luk. 12. 9, 10. Not that Unbelief, and the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt are the ſame; for the one is pardonable in this life, and the other not. The ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt is, I ſuppoſe, accounting Chriſt an Impoſtor, or a total Apoſtaſie from the Doctrine of the Goſpel, after ſome approbations of it, and taſts of its ſweetneſs in the underſtanding, Heb. 6. 4, 5, 6. But the final Unbelief of thoſe that ſit under the Doctrine of the Goſpel, puts them in the ſame ſtate with the other, Mark 3. 28, 29, 30. He that ſhall blaſpheme againſt the Holy Ghoſt, hath never forgiveneſs, but is in danger of eternal damnation: becauſe they ſaid, he hath an unclean ſpirit. * "All manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be for-
* Amyraut ſur. 6. Heb. p. 114, &c. "given unto men, Mat. 12. 31. i. e. may be pardon'd, there is nothing in the "Oeconomy of God to hinder it. The tranſgreſſion againſt the Law was a tranſ-"greſſion properly againſt the Father, to whom the Creation is aſcrib'd, and who "ſetled the Law upon that occaſion: Nothing in the wiſdom of God repugns, "but that the pardon of this kind of ſin may be preſented to men, and a Re-"deemer may be appointed to make a ſatisfaction to the Father for it, and the "benefit of it may be enjoy'd by men, upon their turning to God from whom "they had revolted (and upon leſs conditions than this, no benefit could reaſon-"ably be expected by it, as was ſhown before.) As Creation is aſcrib'd to the "Father, and conſequently the Law, ſo Redemption is appropriated to the Son, "and conſequently the Goſpel; by his ſufferings he paid the price, and by his "reſurrection he receiv'd the diſcharge, and an approbation of his ſufferings, and "of the conditions upon which the fruit of them was to be receiv'd by men. Un-

"belief

" belief is a sin properly and immediately against the Son; as Christ is the im" mediate Object of Faith, so he is the immediate Object of Unbelief. The sin " against the Father is clearly more pardonable, according to this dispensation,
" than the sin against the Son, because here is a satisfaction made to the Father
" for the sins against the Law. But though it be made and offered to men, yet
" they may give no respect to it, and by reason of the natural darkness of their " minds, not understand the high concern of it. But when the Spirit doth by a common work enlighten their minds, and make them in some measure see the comeliness, excellency, and necessity of the things the Redeemer hath done and suffered; if after this they prefer their trifling pleasures before him, and will finally deny him in opinion, profession, or practice, what help can be expected? The justice of God required satisfaction by Blood for the breach of the Law, because the Law was, in the Day thou eatest thereof thou shalt dye the Death; the Son therefore relieves men by his Death for transgressions committed against the Father. The Law of Christ requires belief in the satisfaction he hath wrought, Faith is called therefore, Faith in his Blood, Rom. 3. 25. The Spirit presseth men to accept of this satisfaction made by the Son, doth accompany the ministry of the Word, gives some touches to men, instils some motions into them, and this frequently; for the Law of Christ is not as the Law at the Creation was, the very Day wherein thou neglectest, or refusest to accept of this satisfaction, thou shalt dye the Death; the patience of God concurs with the offers made by Christ, and gives time of respite; and the Spirit falls in to inform men of their undone condition, and perswade them to comply with the design of God: If then the new order of the Father, the satisfaction of Christ, the perswasions of the Spirit in the Word are all set at naught, what help can be looked for? There is not a fourth Person to step in with any operations. The whole Trinity and their personal operations are particularly offered and slighted; the mercy of the Father, the satisfaction of the Son, and the importunity of the Spirit; since therefore there is no other God, no other Father, no other Son, no other Spirit superiour to those, no other World under the Government of another God, that any man can transport himself into (as a man may do upon the Earth, pass into one Country, when he hath offended the Laws of another) where is there any relief? It must be in acting those methods over again, exposing his Son again to suffering, and that doth not consist with the Wisdom and Majesty of God: But suppose he should do so, there is as little hopes that a man will accept of it then as now, considering the natural enmity against God. And upon the same account, that he should dye a second time, there would be no end put to the re-iteration of his sufferings: Besides (as was said before) the conditions cannot be more favourable; for God hath condescended to the lowest terms that you can suppose, not only an infinite Majesty, but a Prince, nay, an inferiour Person can condescend unto, in the case of the revolt of a Subject or Servant. But the Scripture concludes the contrary; and therefore there must be a new Scripture, a new Declaration of God, to give you intelligence of any design of God to reverse the sentence of this. When the Law was broke, he made but one promise of the Seed of the Woman; and all the other Promises in the Word, are but Streams flowing, and Chanels cut from this Fountain; upon the breach of that Law the Redeemer stood between consuming Vengeance, and the offending Creature, and God was willing to repair the breach of the first Law, by the Grace of a second, and sent his Son to close the gap, and re-unite Him and his Creature: But where is there any provision made for the retrieving the final contempt of this? No Revelation of God ever acquainted us with one counsel, or thought of God about it; 'tis denyed by the mouth of our Saviour. If there were any other remedy, the wrath due to the contempt of this would not abide; but because it abides, therefore there is no remedy.

To conclude this and the rest; a man can expect no relief from any Attribute of God: A man must have a bar put to it, either by justice or mercy; by justice he cannot, because he despiseth that wherewith justice was satisfied, and puts from him that screen God placed between the flames of his wrath, and the fuel of a Sinner: By mercy he cannot, for he hath sinn'd against the highest pitch of it, and refus'd the terms wherewith Mercy is contented. The wiſdom of God cannot relieve him, for he hath rejected that which was the Birth of an higher Wiſdom than ever was diſcover'd in the Creation. His Wiſdom is as much bound to keep up the honour of his Juſtice and Truth, as the honour of his Mercy. Shall he have it from Patience? Patience and long-ſuffering are not in the very notion of them, eternal but temporary. Shall he fly to goodneſs? Juſtice is a part of Gods goodneſs; for he were not good, if he were not righteous. The truth of God to ſuch is a very comfortleſs Attribute, that turns the edge of all the threatnings againſt him, who hath deſpis'd his veracity in his promiſe. Is there any more hopes in the power of God? 'Tis that people frequently talk of, God is ſufficient and able: 'tis true, he is able to do more than any Creature can conceive. But though God hath a natural power, he hath not, we may ſay, a moral power after his word is paſt; he would not be juſt, if he uſed his power againſt his truth; as we would not count a man juſt, who would do that by ſtrength, which he could not do with honeſty. The great reaſon of mens ſecurity is their ſingling out one Attribute of God, without conſidering the concurrence, and combination of the reſt.

* Burgis Vindiciæ Legis, p. 262.

(7.) The Law ſtrengthens the ſentence of the Goſpel againſt an Unbeliever. * The moral Law condemns every man that doth not believe what God reveals. We are to have no other Gods before him, nor ſet up any graven Image, nor fancy any way and means of Salvation, than what God hath Ordain'd. The Goſpel reveals the object of Faith, the Law then ſteps in and enjoins an entertainment of it, becauſe it is the revelation of God. Chriſt tells the Jews that Moſes accus'd them, Joh. 5. 45. Do not think that I will accuſe you to the Father, there is one that accuſeth you, even Moſes, in whom you truſt, i. e. There is no need for me to charge you before God, you have one whom you think is your Defender, will be your Accuſer, for not believing in me. Moſes i. e. the Law of Moſes, meant properly of the Ceremonies prefiguring him, and the Prophecies in the Books of Moſes predicting him. But the Law taken ſingly for the Law of nature, enjoins to believe whatſoever God diſcovers; and the condemnation of men for Unbelief will be by the Law of nature, not as ſingly conſider'd in it ſelf, becauſe it can ſo condemn only for the neglect of what it diſcovers; it doth not diſcover Chriſt the object of Faith, and therefore of it ſelf cannot condemn for the neglect of Chriſt; It judgeth men only for the violation of the immediate precepts of it; nor can the Conſcience of the beſt Heathen, that never heard of Chriſt, accuſe him for not enquiring after Chriſt, nor ever did, which doth accuſe him for the breach of thoſe rules which are evident by the light of it. But it condemns in concurrence with the Goſpel; when the object of Faith is diſcover'd by that, and the evidence appears to be of divine Authority, the Law of nature urgeth the command to believe, both as we are bound to believe, and obey the ſupream Governour; and alſo to preſerve our ſelves. And as it ſtrengthens the command, ſo in the condemnation it ſtrengthens the ſentence: the Law is quickned and ſpirited more by the Goſpel in its Curſes againſt an Unbeliever. He muſt needs be miſerable, which is condemn'd by the Law, for the violation of its immediate Precepts, and condemn'd by the Law, in concurrence with the Goſpel, for the refuſal of that.

(8.) God hath diſcover'd his anger more againſt this ſin of Unbelief, than any, both in his own Children, and in the Jews.

[1.] In his own children upon an act of Unbelief. Moſes was barr'd out of Canaan for one act of diſtruſt of God; and he whoſe Prayers had prevail'd for the reprieving a murmuring Nation from deſtruction, was not heard for himſelf becauſe of his Unbelief. God refuſeth in the leaſt to liſten to him, but commands him ſilence, when he did but deſire to go over Jordan, to ſee the good Land, Deut. 3. 26. Let it ſuffice thee, ſpeak no more to me of this matter. This reſolution God backt with an Oath, Deut. 4. 21. The reaſon is expreſt to be, becauſe he believed not God, to ſanctify him in the eyes of the children of Iſrael, Numb. 20. 12. Moſes had not ſuch a firm Faith, but he did ſometimes ſtagger at thoſe great things which were predicted to him. But this act of diſtruſt being publick, ſtriking the Rock when he ſhould have but ſpoken to it, might have encouraged the infidelity of the

the people, to which they were prone enough, without the example of their Governour, to support them in it. This Unbelief of Moses kindled Gods anger against him. Before, God patiently bore all his excuses, when he first appointed him to deliver his people Israel, and answer'd his Pleas, Exod. 3. 11. Exod. 4. 1, 10, 11, 12. But when after all he desires God to stretch out his own hand, as he had promis'd, Exod. 3. 20. I will stretch out my hand, * which is the meaning of Exod. 4. 13. Send by the hand of him whom thou wilt send; send by that hand that thou wilt send or stretch out; stretch out this hand of thine, for the hand of man is not able to perform it, wherein saith Dr Lightfoot, he denied the mystery of Redemption, which was to be wrought by a man, the Godhead going along with him; Upon this, the anger of the Lord was kindled against him, v. 14. But his Unbelief still took its Progress, in taking Zipporah and his Children along with him, which he would not have done in that condition, had he believed the promise of God, Exod. 3. 12. that the people should come to that place where he then was in Midian, and serve God upon that Mountain. Had he believ'd that Promise, he would have left them still with Jethro till his return. For this distrust God sought to kill him, Exod. 4 24. and not for the delay of Circumcision, as some think, since God bore with the Israelites in the Wilderness so long in the neglect of this Ordinance, because of their frequent Travel. If a particular distrust of God doth so incense him against his People, how must a Gospel Unbelief enflame him, which is a refusal or neglect of his Son, and the riches of his grace in him?

* Lightfoot's Gleanings on Exod. 4. 24.

[2.] In the misery of the Jews. Why were they broken off from the root? Because of their Unbelief, Rom. 11. 20. Not the Crucifying of Christ, which was but a fruit of this sin: had they believ'd after that guilt of bloud, they had enjoy'd the fruits of the mercy of God, by their Faith in the Redeemer. This was the sole reason their Ancestors were shut out from the typical Canaan. Not for their murmuring, Idolatry, and multitude of provocations, but for their Unbelief the root of the other sins; no mention is made of their other Rebellions, this only is the ground of Gods Oath against them, Heb. 3. 18, 19. So then we see that they could not enter in because of Unbelief. What priviledges had those people who are now cut off for this Sin? They were chosen to be Gods Inheritance and Portion, his Vineyard, his Spouse; he had chosen them above all people upon the face of the earth, to be a special people unto himself, Deut. 7. 6. Them he had known of all the families of the earth, Amos 3. 2. He was their Lawgiver and their King, had nourish'd them in his Bosom as a Father, conducted them into Canaan, prescrib'd them a peculiar form of Worship, secur'd them from their potent Enemies round about them; overturn'd Ægypt for their deliverance, gave Æthiopia for their ransom, defeated the designs of their Enemies against them. When God sent Enemies to oppress them for some grievous crime committed against Heaven, as when they fell into Idolatry, and fill'd Jerusalem with the bloud of the Prophets, and for that were carried Captives to Babylon, yet after they repented and sought his Face, he was gracious to them, repented him of the evil, restor'd them to their Inheritance, rebuilt their Temple, made their Enemies to be their Friends, provided a succession of Prophets to acquaint them with his will, yea left them not without Prophets in the time of their greatest desolations. He had besides this chiefly promis'd the Messiah to this Nation, of the Seed of their Fathers. His first intention of sending him was to them, Mat. 15. 24. the word of God was first to be spoken to them, Act. 13. 46. Christ did come of them according to the flesh, liv'd among them, distil'd his Doctrine in person for three years space upon them, when he taught the Samaritans but two days, John 4. 40. chose the Apostles out of that Nation that were to spread the Gospel over the World. But since they would not believe in the Messiah, neither by his own Sermons, nor the Sermons of the Apostles, their own Land hath spued them out. They are expos'd to the Miseries of the World, the derisions of men, their Temple, and with that their main worship destroyed. And though they have sought him in their manner, a longer term of years than ever they were a people, before the coming of Christ (they came out of Ægypt about the Year of the World 2470. were destroyed about the Year 3990. So that there were about 1520 Years from the time of their coming out of

of Egypt to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem) yet they have no voice to relieve them, no Prophetical Meſſage to comfort them, the Face of God is vail'd from them, as their Hearts are vail'd from him, no Nation hath been deſtroyed for them as before, but they are harraſt by all, not the leaſt dawn of deliverance appearing to them; all the Covenants and Agreements made with their Fathers, ſeem at preſent to be cancell'd, and from their rejection, God took occaſion to call the Gentiles, and to engraſt the wild Olives into the Covenant of Salvation. The deſtruction of their City was remarkable; God pickt out one of the moſt merciful Emperours that ever ſway'd the Roman Scepter, to be the inſtrument of his juſtice, rather than ſome notorious Tyrant ſteep'd in Blood, and flesht with Slaughters, that the Puniſhment might more evidently appear to be the hand of Heaven, and not the effect of the cruelty of man. * This Heathen Emperour took notice of the anger of God againſt them, by many Prodigies, ſo that he ſaid, he fear'd God would be angry with him, if he ſhould ſpare them; and when he ſaw the Blood ſpilt in Jeruſalem, and the heaps of Carcaſes, he lifted up his Eyes to Heaven, calling God to witneſs, that it was none of his work and deſign to have ſo much Blood ſhed. Eleven hundred thouſand periſhed by the Sword and Famine, ninety thouſand were ſold for Slaves; never was the Hand of God ſo heavy upon any People, as upon them, and this for their Unbelief. And whereas their other Captivities were not above twenty, thirty or forty Years in the Book of Judges, and ſeventy Years in Babylon, they have now lain above one thouſand ſix hundred Years, as a forlorn and forſaken People; wrath is come upon them to the utmoſt, 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. he hath ſet on fire the foundations of the Mountains, and ſpent his Arrows upon them, Deut. 32. 22, 23. What did their Adoption, their Glory, the Law, the Divine Oracles depoſited among them, the Promiſes to the Patriarchs profit them, after their Unbelief? If God ſpared not the natural branches, ſhall he ſpare the ſtrange branches that believe not? Rom. 11. 21. How ſharp will his Eternal Wrath be upon the Unbeliever, ſince his Temporal Wrath upon the Jew hath been ſo dreadful? He will pour out his indignation, and his wrathful anger ſhall take hold of them, Pſal. 69. 24. This diſcourſe about the Jews, proves our Saviour to be the Meſſiah, as well as the provocation of Unbelief. This puniſhment muſt be for ſome grievous Crime, greater than the cauſes of their other Captivities. After their return from Babylon, they were not guilty of Idolatry, or the ſlaughter of the Prophets, till Chriſt came, whom they uſed worſe than any of the Prophets that went before him; and all this is come upon them, not ſimply for the crucifying Chriſt, but not knowing or believing the things which concerned their peace, Luke 19 42. And they are in that deſtruction ſet forth as an example of the Eternal wrath of God upon all final undervaluers of Chriſt, and neglecters of the things that concern their Peace, as well as Sodom and Gomorrha in their temporal puniſhment, and deſtruction of their Bodies by Fire from Heaven, are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 7. In the Scripture there are always ſome things of a greater and eternal concern, coucht under the Hiſtorical part of it. Who in reading the ſtory of Melchiſedeck's coming to congratulate Abraham for his Victory, would have thought him to be ſo great a type of Chriſt, had not David, Pſal. 100. and after him the Apoſtle, Heb. 7. inform'd us of it? Who would have regarded the deſtruction of Sodom, but as an effect of Gods temporal juſtice, had not the Apoſtle here inform'd us of its being a type of Eternal Fire? In like manner this deplorable deſolation of the Jews, is but a type of the miſerable deſtruction of Unbelievers to Eternity, whatever priviledges they might have enjoyed on Earth, and howſoever dear to God they might have imagin'd themſelves.

* Ficinus de Relig. Chriſtian. c. 29 p. 51.

2. Why doth final Unbelief render a man infallibly the object of the wrath of God.

1. Becauſe of the greatneſs of the ſin. 'Tis greater than any breach of the Covenant of Works can be.

(1.) 'Tis a more manifeſt enmity to Gods Government of the World. When the Covenant of Works was tranſgreſt, God as the Rector, requir'd ſatisfaction by Death and Blood, according to the tenour of the violated Law, and as a tender der

der Father provided a Surety to give a ſufficient one, whereby to preſerve his own rights which had been invaded, and relieve his Creature which had been ruin'd. In not accepting the Surety God hath procur'd, we deny him the honour of his Soveraignty, and the reſtoration of the rights of his Government. We count him unworthy of any ſatisfaction, maintain our Rebellion againſt him as juſtly grounded, and account our ſelves innocent when we are criminal, ſince we will not own the ſatisfaction he hath procur'd, as if no ſatisfaction were due to him; which muſt imply, that either we account our ſelves no Offenders, or God none of our Governour, or that we are able to make him a requital our ſelves, which is alſo a contradiction to his rights of Government, ſince he hath an authority to appoint what ſatisfaction he pleaſeth, according to the Law which was ſetled by him, and broken by man. Since God provided a Surety for us, wherein he could acquieſce, he had a double right, both as Rector and Benefactor, to appoint what conditions ſhould be perform'd by the Creature, before he ſhould be admitted to the benefit of this Charter he had ſeal'd by the bloud of his Son. The not accepting theſe conditions is a manifeſt injury to him, as he is his Governour, and a gracious Governour, becauſe it is againſt not only a Soveraign Command, but a Command of Grace; 'tis as much his Command to us to believe, as not to commit Murther and Adultery; and the breaking this Command, ſpeaks more of enmity to him, than the breaking the others. He hath ſetled it as an eternal Law, and his full reſolve, that all men ſhould honour the Son, as they honour the Father, John 5. 23. That every man without exception ſhould honour the Son in the work of Redemption, as the Father in the work of Creation; and he that honours not the Son, honours not the Father which hath ſent him. He that denies the honour of Faith to Chriſt, denies the honour of Homage and Fealty to God, and diſparageth the Government of his Father, who as Rector of the World appointed him, and under the ſame quality accepted him. Chriſt is the immediate repreſentative of God, the Image of the glorious God; the Laws of God and the Laws of Chriſt are the ſame, Pſal. 2. 3. the Cords and Bands belong jointly to the Lord and his Anointed; to reject the Laws of the one, is to violate the authority of the other. What is done againſt the repreſentative, is againſt the majeſty of the perſon repreſented by him. The Lord and his Anointed can no more be ſeparated in there authority, than they can in their eſſence. If the Father be in the Son, and the Son in the Father, John 10. 38. the reproach caſt upon the one redounds upon the other, as well as the entertainment of the one is ſaid to be the reception of the other, Mat. 10. 40. He that receives me, receives him that ſent me. If God pleads the cauſe of his Servants, if thoſe who riſe againſt Moſes are ſaid to ſpeak againſt God, Numb. 21. 5. and the murmurings againſt him are called the murmurings againſt the Lord, Exod. 16. 2, 7. and the rejecting of Samuel was a rejecting the Government of God, 1 Sam. 8. 7. Can leſs be ſaid of the neglect of him whom God hath ſent, not as a Servant from a Lord, but a Son from a Father? What greater evidence of a rooted enmity can there be againſt the Soveraignty of a Prince, than after multitudes of Rebellions, tenders of gracious terms, a long ſeries of invitations to accept of him, a deſire that they might be reſtor'd to the happineſs they had forfeited; after all this, not to be reduc'd to his Sceptre? The caſe is the ſame with us, God hath provided all means neceſſary to our reſtoration; nothing is wanting but our own concurrence with it; the enmity is the greater, ſince there is no failure on Gods part, ſince he hath done more than he was bound as a Creator to do, or had need to do; and is it not juſt, that obſtinate Rebels, who will not obſerve the rules of his Government, ſhould fall under the rod of his wrath?

(2.) 'Tis a high ingratitude. The tranſgreſſion of the Law was againſt the authority and goodneſs of God; this againſt his authority, and againſt a goodneſs of an higher elevation, ſpringing up in bowels of compaſſion, ſpreading its arms wider than in Creation, and offering to confer a more excellent and durable happineſs. 'Tis againſt the tenders of remiſſion in the bloud of the Son of God, which in the firſt tranſgreſſion man had no knowledge of: (for there was nothing of Grace mention'd in the firſt Covenant) And who will not judge it more criminal in it ſelf, to ſlight or neglect the Grace of a Prince in Conjunction with his authority, authority, than to violate only the authority of a Prince in breaking his lawful and juſt Command? would it not be a crime worthy the indignation of all men, if twice, thrice, nay innumerable times, the ſincereſt tenders of the greateſt good ſhould be refus'd? who would have compaſſion for ſuch a refractory Perſon? Is not Unbelief the more horrible crime in them, who acknowledge Chriſt for the Son of God, the Mediator between God and them, whereby they are ſo far from rendring it in the leaſt manner excuſable, that they highly aggravate it?

[1.] Conſider the greatneſs of the mercy. God prevented us by his love, 1 John 4. 10. Not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins: Procur'd a ſurety for us, who valued our Redemption above the pleaſure of the Body he aſſumed, and appointed him for us when we had a deſire to perſiſt in our Rebellion; not only after we had offended him, but when we were in actual offences ſtill againſt him, Rom. 5. 8. when we were yet ſinners; not only when we had ſinn'd, but when we were ſtill adding one crime to another: And this Surety hath expended his treaſures to purchaſe our deliverance, hath ſubmitted to Death to prevent our ſuffering of it; he hath aboliſhed death, and brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel, 2 Tim. 1. 10. He deſtroyed Death that had a power over us by the immutable ſentence of the Law, took away the right it had, deſpoil'd the Law of its power to condemn us, by condemning ſin by the effuſion of his Blood on the Croſs, whereby the Law had acquired a right of condemning us, and diſcover'd the way to an immortal life, which we were eſtranged from by the darkneſs of ſin, brought a Meſſage of Peace from the boſom of the Father, whereby we might be eternal gainers. 'Tis ſuch a free mercy, that if it had not been manifeſted, not God but we ſhould have been the only loſers; no mercy like it, no mercy can exceed it, no other mercy can equal it; ſo God loved the World, that he ſent his only begotten Son, John 3. 16. A ſo beyond expreſſion, a ſo beyond imagination, nothing can ſurpaſs it but the ſending him again to ſuffer, and this only would be in circumſtantials of repetition, not in the eſſentials, and nature of the mercy.

[2.] From hence meaſure the greatneſs of the ſin. The height, depth, length, and breadth of the mercy, is the only rule to meaſure the dimenſions of the ſin againſt it by. The ſtronger and louder the bowels of mercy are, which are ſlighted, the greater and blacker is the ſin of deſpiſing him: The goodneſs of God in procuring, and the grace of God in accepting a ſurety, are denied by this ſin. Every act of it contemns the proviſions of Grace, and contentments of Juſtice, the attendances of Patience, the tenderneſs of Bowels, and the ſatisfactory Blood of the Son of God. Is it not a ſtrange carriage, that when God is ſo merciful to offer remiſſion, man ſhould be ſo obſtinate as to refuſe it? and would rather dye in his ſin, hateful to God, and miſerable for himſelf, than live by the Son of God, ſo acceptable to God, and beneficial to man? And when beſides the outward preaching of the Goſpel, there have been, by the common Grace of the Spirit, ſome inward ſtirrings and approbation of the terms, which yet have vaniſhed into a non-compliance. The frequenter thoſe motions, the greater the ingratitude, added to the debts of all other ſins contracted before. This unthankfulneſs for ſuch a benefit, is alledged as the cauſe of mens condemnation, John 3. 19. When light is come into the World, men love darkneſs rather than light. When God hath provided a way to remove the guilt of their Sins, the World will not part with the pleaſure and profit of their ſins. Can there be a baſer requital than to be a partner with Judas in betraying him, with Pilate in condemning him, with the Jews in crucifying him! What do we elſe but approve of all the barbarous uſage he met with from the Jews, when we deſpiſe his Authority in his Evangelical command, refuſe his Perſon in his gracious proffers, and undervalue his ſufferings by not applying them?

Is not then a dreadful Puniſhment of this ſin very righteous? By the Law of Nature, the greater kindneſs a Creature receives, the greater Puniſhment he doth deſerve if he prove ungrateful. Since Goſpel Grace exceeds all the benefits of Creation, 'tis reaſonable that the neglects of it ſhould be attended with the greater Puniſhment. When men will refuſe the acceptance of it, and conformity to the will of God, which can only fit them for true happineſs, a fuller meaſure

of wrath is due to them that slight the fullest expence of mercy. Justice would not be justice, if it us'd not them with the greatest severity, that abuse Grace with the greatest indignity; what is greatest in the rank of sins, deserves the greatest misery in the rank of penalties. The greater benefit is confer'd, the greater guilt is contracted by the neglect, and a stronger subjection to Punishment in the order of justice. If it be a crime deserving a severe reflection, to outrage an innocent Person that never did us wrong, 'tis much more to spurn at a person who hath laid the foundation of our greatest good, and offereth that good to us upon the easiest terms. Such a Carriage to a Prince, would be a greater indignity. How unconceivable a crime is it then against the King of kings, the Lord of Glory, God blessed for ever, under all those unexpressible circumstances of innocence in his person, flames in his affection, kindness to the last drop of Bloud, and continued Patience in waiting for our receiving the atonement! The Rebellion of all other sins is wrapt up in this, Joh. 15. 22. If I had not come, and spoken unto them, they had not had sin; so the Gall of all other miseries is distill'd into the punishment due to it. 'Tis fit the Furnace of wrath should be heated, to answer the flames of love, which have been shooting towards them.

[3.] Tis a sin against a clearer and fuller light and undeniable revelation. The Gospel hath been first publisht by the Son of God in Person, spread over the World by his Apostles, and their Successors, as the Commissioners of Christ, entertain'd by multitudes in all Ages since, transmitted to us in Writing, deliver'd down to us by the contentions of our Ancestors for the Faith, and the bloud of Martyrs; nothing we believe in the World, but it is upon less reason than we have to believe this: the belief of other things for which we have little reason, and in some no reason, will aggravate our Unbelief of those great things, for which we have so much reason.

(1.) Heathens have had a less light, and abus'd it, and shall not escape punishment. This way of argument the Apostle useth *, Rom. 1. 16, 17, 18, 19. to assure Unbelievers of a dreadful vengeance; though the design of the Gospel be nothing but righteousness, life and salvation to the Believer, yet it breaths as much wrath against the neglecter, as it doth happiness to the Embracer, and without any charge of injustice upon God. For others who had a less light than that of the Gospel, which discover'd to them the power and eternity of God, it rendred them without any Apology for themselves. The closing their Eyes against that natural light, or abusing of it, and keeping natural truth in unrighteousness, i. e. lying in their sins against all the beams of light from the Creation, will subject them to eternal punishment. The Heathens had nothing but the dim light of nature, the effluxes of divine patience, but they could not read the Covenant of Grace in the motions of the Heavens, and orderly Seasons of the Year: they could not behold the Sun of righteousness in the material Sun in the Firmament; the Heavens discover'd the glory of a Creator, but not the grace of a Redeemer. There were Characters of divine Wisdom and Power in the frame of the World, but nothing of his grace and pardoning Mercy. Therefore they are not Condemn'd for not believing in Christ, since a Mediator was not made known to them. They were bound to no more than Adam was, but Adam was not bound to believe a supernatural mystery till God had reveal'd it: And it cannot be expected, that they who never had an account of Christ, should believe in him. How can they believe in him, of whom they have not heard? Rom. 10. 14. and if they be under an impossibility of believing for want of a Revelation, how can they be Condemn'd for not believing? But the Sentence against them is grounded upon their despising the Voice of the works of nature; the common mercy of God and his Patience manifested in them, whereby he called them to some reflection upon themselves, and repentance for their iniquities. * Since the Law of nature was given man as a rule in Creation, they shall be examin'd whether they have done the things agreeable to the Law, written in their Consciences; and they shall be judged according to the several measures of the light of reason, which they had: for it cannot be suppos'd, that the barbarous Nations that lived in a thick darkness, and had not the advantage of a polite, and learned Education, to improve their reasons, shall have the same measure of judgment with those who had the waterings and dress-ſings of a ſounder Education. (But neither one nor the other ſhall be judg'd according to the Goſpel, which exacts Faith in the Redeemer.) And according to this rule not a man of them can eſcape; and if it were the only rule to try all men by, not a man from Adam to the laſt that ſhall be born upon the Earth by natural Generation, can avoid the juſt Condemnation of God; becauſe not a man of them but hath one way or other, and that ſeveral times tranſgreſt that Law; for all are become guilty before God.

(2) The Jews have had a leſs light than thoſe under the Goſpel, though clearer than that of the Heathens, and upon the abuſe of this they ſhall not eſcape. The Jews who dyed before the coming of Chriſt, ſhall be tryed according to the Law of Nature expreſt in the Decalogue, and that particular Law of Ceremonies given to them, wherein the Mediator was vail'd. The Jews had the Goſpel Printed in Types and Allegories, wrapt up in the pillar of a Cloud; Chriſt was not come in the Fleſh, nor the Spirit pour'd out upon the World, they could not ſee the Beauty of a Redeemer for the ſmoak of their ſacrifices, nor have a full proſpect of his Face through the Grates and Lattices of the Ceremonies. * There were alſo different meaſures of light among them, which may mitigate the condemnation of ſome, but not be a ſufficient bar againſt a ſentence of Death. For thoſe of the Jewiſh Religion, that did not believe in thoſe Promiſes or Prophecies of the Meſſiah, in the time of the firſt entrance into Canaan, ſhall not have ſo great a Puniſhment as thoſe that lived after, when clearer Prophecies were added. All judgment ſhall be according to the meaſure of light afforded, according to the meaſure of it God expects a ſutable return; for to whomſoever much is given, of them ſhall be much required, Luke 12. 48. Nor ſhall thoſe that dyed in the Wilderneſs, or firſt entred into Canaan, have ſo light a ſentence as thoſe of the old World, with whom the Spirit of Chriſt ſtrove, but upon the account of one ſingle Promiſe given to Adam; whereas the other had an increaſe of Promiſes to Abraham, deliverances to themſelves, an addition of Types to repreſent the things promiſed, and the intention of them to their Eyes, which were ſtronger and more unanſwerable grounds upon which the Spirit did ſtrive with them in thoſe times. Thoſe of the Jews who had the leaſt light of Revelation, ſhall have a ſmarter Puniſhment than the Heathens, who had the ſtrongeſt light of Nature; Tribulation and anguiſh upon every Soul of man that doth evil, of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile, Rom. 2. 9. As the Jew had the priority in Priviledges, ſo he ſhall have in the anguiſh prepar'd for the wicked. And many of them in the Days of Chriſt in the Fleſh neglected him, not ſo much wilfully as out of ignorance, and prejudicate opinions of a conquering Meſſiah. If they could eſcape upon the witneſs of Paul, or rather upon the witneſs of the Holy Ghoſt, they ſhould find relief; Paul would not deny his own writing, nor the Holy Ghoſt his own enditing, 1 Cor. 2 8. Had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory: No nor Chriſt his own teſtimony upon the Croſs, that they knew not what they did, Luke 23. 34. But can we call the Holy Ghoſt, or the Redeemer to witneſs for us, if we believe not?

* Amyraut in ſymbol. Apoſtolic. p. 226.

(3.) We have a clearer light than any of them had. It was indeed by his own Son that God ſpoke to the Jews, Heb. 1. 2. but he did but begin to ſpeak it; the ſtronger confirmations were afterwards by the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt pour'd out upon men, Heb. 2. 3, 4. God bearing witneſs from Heaven to the truth of his Doctrine. We have the Light of Nature to anſwer for, we are bound to this as much as the Heathen, they had no more of the Light of Nature than we have; the Jew had leſs underſtanding of the Ceremonies than we have, they ſaw the Types, and we have the manifeſtation of the Subſtance, we have Chriſt in a plain Letter and fairer Print; we have the light of Heathens, the light of the Jews, and a glorious light ſuperadded to both thoſe.

Now 'tis according to this light God doth proportion the Puniſhment of Unbelievers under the Goſpel. The judgment according to the Apoſtle reſpects two ſorts of Perſons, 2 Theſſ. 1. 8. Thoſe that know not God, and thoſe that obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. The Heathens that knew not God, when they had light enough in the Creation to know him: And they that obey not the Goſpel, whether vail'd or open; as vail'd, it takes in the Jews before Chriſt; as open, it comprehends comprehends all to whom the Gospel is Preach'd. The question shall be askt such persons, whether they did believe in the name of the Son of God, as the only Mediator; and those that shall be convinc'd of a final Unbelief, or Disobedience to the Evangelical Declarations, shall incur the more grievous Condemnation: Because to the transgression of the Law of nature, will be added over and above, the transgression of a special Command of God, respecting their recovery, according to the rule of Justice it must exceed the Condemnation of the rest: Since they have liv'd in the Bosom of the Church, and besides the neglect of that common to them with the Heathen, have rejected the Mediator made known to them, and not to the Heathen. If the light of the darkest of them be sufficient to convict them before God, without any excuse; much more must the light, reveal'd by the word, aggravate the guilt of men, that close their Eyes against it. They have not only the discoveries of God in nature, but the discoveries of God in Grace to answer for. The more excellent the truth is, that is disobeyed, the greater the sinfulness of the disobedience, Hos. 8. 12. I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were accounted as a strange thing. If the choicest Revelation that God ever made, did not aggravate the punishment, why should the Apostle say, 2 Pet. 2. 21. It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness; if they were in the same condition, wherein they were before they knew it? But how reasonable, and righteous is the misery of those, who have not only had the outward Declarations of the Gospel, but some common illumination of their minds, some motions of the spirit, some approbations of the Doctrine? If Paul had mercy, because his Unbelief was in ignorance, what mercy can they expect whose Unbelief is with knowledge? 1 Tim. 1. 13. Not that his ignorance deserv'd a Pardon, for who can ascribe any merit to ignorance? The Crucifying of Christ, the most horrid wickedness that ever the World saw, heaps not that guilt upon men whose hands were red with his Bloud, that Unbelief doth upon men, who in opinion pretend to acknowledge him. The Crime of the one was extenuated by their ignorance, and the Crime of the other aggravated by their knowledge; as also by the frequency of the impressions made upon them by the word. Well then, if Heathens shall be Condemn'd, who had only the material Heavens, and the sensitive, and insensitive Creatures upon the Earth preaching to them, who had only God in his works; and the Jews who had God speaking to them in legal Ceremonies; what will become of those who have had the Voice of God, Christ, and redeeming Bloud calling to them in the word, and neglected all?

(4.) This sin is a refusal of the only way of expiation of sin. When the Law was violated, a relief was provided in the Gospel. Because the Law utter'd not one syllable of forgiveness, the transgression of the Law was not an offence against pardoning Mercy, as the Unbelief of the Gospel is. This relieving Mercy could not have appear'd in the World, in a contradiction to the justice of God; this (to speak according to the manner of men) would have made a War in the divine nature, without the Sacrifice of the Son of God in our nature. For because he assum'd not the nature of Angels, the fallen Spirits are expos'd to the rigours of Justice, without any relief of Mercy. If Adam had truly repented of his Crime, he could not have obtain'd Pardon without the satisfaction of the Law, which was as silent in the command of Repentance, as it was in the Declaration of a Pardon. When therefore there is a remedy provided, and no other remedy but this, nor can be any other remedy, since no valuable Sacrifice can be imagin'd for the taking away of sin but this; those that neglect it, render themselves uncapable of security, by shutting themselves out of the only refuge. * In all humane contracts, a promise is only receiv'd, by assenting to, and believing it. Though something may be taken from a man unwilling to part with it, yet nothing can be given to a man unwilling to accept it; what right soever is transfer'd by the Donor, in a way of promise, is established by the others assenting to it. If a Prince promises a Courtier a gift upon the performance of easy conditions, and he will not believe the word of the King, nor perform the reasonable conditions; the promise is not only void in it self, but the Prince justly offended with his behaviour. Had the terms of the Covenant been very hard (provided they they had not been impoſſible) the Damnation had been juſt, had they been willfully neglected; but they are as reaſonable as can be, Repentance and Faith. Is it not fit the Juſtice of God ſhould be acknowledg'd in its Equity, and the Holineſs of God in its Beauty, by a ſenſibleneſs of our Crimes; his grace in its freeneſs by an acceptance of its proviſion; and his Soveraignty acknowledg'd by the payment of an homage to him? Who would not count that Rebel a ſufferer by a double Juſtice who refuſeth the pardon of his great Rebellions, which he might have only for the acceptance of it, a ſenſibleneſs of his offence, and a ſincere promiſe of his utmoſt ſervice? They are ſuch reaſonable conditions, that the honour of God as well as the honour of a Prince, would not be provided for, or have a ſalvo without them. If men will ſell themſelves to the ſlavery of a condemn'd ſin, and a Conquer'd Devil, they can charge none with boring their Ears to a perpetual miſery, but their own folly. He that will choſe to die by the ſting of a fiery ſerpent, rather than live by the ſight of the brazen one, can impute his ruine to no other but himſelf.

Chriſt hath made an expiation for ſin, quencht the flaming Sword that ſtopt the entrance into Paradiſe. If men will not ſet their feet in that way, nor make any enquiries after it; if they caſt behind their back all exhortations to it, and never conſider them in their minds; upon whom can they charge their deſtruction, but upon themſelves?

If a man be in love with his miſery, and will not ſtoop to him that would relieve him; if he prefer his guilt before the expiation, his deplorable condition before a Saviour, his filthineſs before a righteouſneſs, 'tis juſter that he ſhould periſh by the ſin he choſe, than be happy by a Saviour he refus'd. His own act is in the nature of a Confeſſion of the equity of Gods Sentence; ſince God hath linkt the Goſpel and everlaſting Life ſo cloſe together, that the one cannot be receiv'd or refus'd without the other. They judge themſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, by putting away the Goſpel from them, Acts 13. 46. He tacitly declares, that he would rather have God angry with him, than pacifyed, when he refuſeth the only means of a reconciliation. And the Juſtice of his puniſhment is evident by the value of the propitiation which he refuſeth, it being that which was the Salvation of all the ancient Believers, before the oblation of the Sacrifice; valuable enough to be the Salvation of Devils; That which was ſo prevalent with God in our Saviours firſt conſent to it, as to turn the tribunal of Juſtice into a Throne of Grace. That bloud which ſprinkled upon the Soul can turn the edge of the Angels deſtroying Sword, that pure and ſpotleſs Sacrifice which is the Feaſt of God in Heaven, which is daily preſented to him by our Saviour in his Office of Advocacy, 1 Joh. 2. 1, 2. Can there be leſs Juſtice, than to inflict Damnation upon thoſe, who willfully neglect that which hath been the only way for the Salvation of Millions, and might be efficacious for theirs, if they would accept of it upon Gods terms. Nay, they impoſe upon themſelves a neceſſity of Damnation, who caſt away the means of Salvation; How can his Chains be knock'd off that ſlights Redemption? How can he be waſht that ſtops by his infidelity the bloud of Chriſt from flowing out upon him? What Diſeaſe can be heal'd, if the only proper remedy for it be not applyed? Is not he as much guilty of his own Death that rejects a Medicine, tears a Plaiſter off from his Wounds, as he that cuts his own throat with a Knife? They have but the fruits of their own willfulneſs, and muſt at laſt ſubſcribe to the Equity of Gods Judgment, becauſe the deſert of it was their own choice.

3. What kind of miſery this is.

'Tis,

1. Inevitable. The end of the Enemies of the Croſs of Chriſt is Deſtruction, Phil. 3. 19. The righteous hath a ſure reward, Prov. 11. 18. the unrighteous muſt have as ſure a Puniſhment: Periſhing from the way is the abſolute iſſue of the kindling of his wrath, Pſal. 2. 12. Death will certainly enter in at that Door; there is no more poſſibility of eſcape, than for a man mortally wounded in a vital part, to avoid Death entring in at his Wound. Every man muſt render an account before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt; ſhall men render an account of their time, wealth, the abuſe of the faculties of their Souls, and members of their Bodies?

Bodies? and shall they not as certainly render an account of that which is more precious than all these, the Grace of God, and the Blood of Christ offer'd to them, and injur'd by them? Is there any shelter from the all-seeing Eye of God in the Caves of the deep, or under the Mountains of the World? Poor Adam sought it in the thickets of Paradise, but was forc'd to come out at the Call, Adam where art thou? Gen 3. 9, 10. What refuge can be imagin'd? The Covenant of Grace is the City of refuge against the pursuit of the Covenant of Works, that is our Hope under our fetters for the breaches of the Law, Heb. 6. 18. where can we fix an Anchor of Hope, to secure our selves from the storms of this? The Apostle puts the question indeed, How shall we escape, if we neglect so great Salvation? Heb. 2. 3. But the resolution of it was above his invention, he knew not one tittle of encouragement in the whole Book of God, though no man better acquainted with it: What do I speak of the Apostle? The Holy Ghost himself, who indited what the Apostle did write, knew none. The transgressions of the Law subject men to a desert of Condemnation: But this sin exposeth men to a necessity of Damnation, since all the methods of God for procuring remission, have been rendred useless, by the refusal of that merit that purchas'd it, and that mercy that appointed and offer'd it; when justice condemns in the Law, a liberty of appeal is reserv'd to mercy in the Gospel; if mercy in the Gospel condemns for want of the conditions necessary to the enjoyment, what reserve is left? No way of relief but by injustice, which is not to be found in the Divine Nature *. After man had wounded himself, and sunk down at the feet of the Law, a Promise was clapt in as a Plaister; but is there a syllable in the whole Scripture of any other remedy? It never yet thought of any other security; God never reveal'd any other for the repair of his own honour, which suffer'd by sin; and why should the Creature imagine any other for his own recovery? Yes; but we know not but God may have a reserve in his own Counsel. Certainly men that pretend to believe the Gospel, must have some such conceit, they could not else be such desperate Enemies to themselves, as not to labour after a thorough work of Faith. But would any but a prodigiously mad man run the hazzard of such a conceit? What footing can such an imagination have after all Gods declarations to the contrary? If the Laws of a King threaten an unavoidable Punishment for a Crime, would not that man be a Bedlam, that would venture the transgression of it upon Hopes of a reserve, when he finds not a syllable in the Law for such an encouragement, but the whole design to the contrary? Necessity of State sometimes is a bridle to restrain the Punishment of an offender; but the eternal Order of God is so constituted, that there can be no necessity upon him, for the advantage of Heaven or Earth, to remit the Punishment of a final Unbeliever.

Consider,

[1.] 'Tis a God who hath past his Word. God never speaks, but he intends to perform; his Words shall stand before mens imaginations of security; his conditions he will not alter: He cannot save such men, his Oath stands in the way, his repeated Declarations are a barr against it; what greater obligations than an Oath, and the Oath of God, which is a swearing by himself? and as sure as I am God, and as sure as I live, I will do such a thing? Shall God deny his own Deity for a Rebels security, Heb. 3. 18. To whom sware he, that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? They shall not enter into a Gospel state to have the benefits of Christ, who is the rest of God. Since the Scripture is written for our instruction, it concerns every man in a state of Unbelief, and assures them, if it be final, they shall not set a foot within the Gates of Heaven. God never passeth his Oath, but to confirm what he is resolutely bent to perform; he swears to the Promises, that the Believers may have strong consolation; he swears to the threatning, that Unbelievers may have dismal apprehensions. Some humbled Souls think God is not so merciful as he declares; he swears to expel their doubts; presumptuous Persons think God is not so just; he swears to expel their vain conceits. This sin eyes us as it were the hands of an omnipotent mercy from saving such a one. The Apostle intimates, that God is not able to save without Faith, (Rom. 11. 23. If they bide not still in Unbelief, they shall

ſhall be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again) in aſſerting that God is able to graft the Jews in upon their Faith. God is not morally able to do any thing againſt his Word, and Setled Methods of his Grace: And becauſe God hath paſt his Word, and denounc'd thoſe judgments which he executes, he is ſaid to ſlay men by the word of his mouth, and the breath of his lips, Iſai. 11. 4. and the ſharp ſword wherewith he ſmites the Nations, goes out of the mouth of Chriſt, Revel. 19. 15.

(2.) God hath promiſed to take the Puniſhment of final Unbelievers into his own hands. The revenge of injuries done by one man to another, belongs to God, and he will recompence them; the vengeance for injuries done to his Son, doth as much belong to him. He values the Obedience of Chriſt in his Death too high to ſuffer men to ſlight it without the recompence of a certain indignation; and who can avoid the recompence he will inflict? Heb. 10. 30, 31. What ſanctuary can there be againſt the wrath of an all-knowing God, who hath promiſed Chriſt to take the work into his own hands, and be the deſtroyer of all his Enemies? Pſal. 110. 1. Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy Enemies thy foot-ſtool; he will employ all his power againſt them; this power is aſcrib'd here to the Father, not that the Son is unable to conquer his Enemies, but to ſhow his mighty affection to the Office of Prieſthood he had ſetled his Son in, and his reſolution to maintain the rights of it, and revenge any indignity offer'd to it; alſo becauſe acts of Power are aſcrib'd to the Father, as acts of Wiſdom to the Son. God cannot be true to his Son, nor true to himſelf, having paſſed his Word to his Son, and publiſht that Word to us, unleſs he puniſht Unbelievers. This is part of the honour God intends him, wherein he will take pleaſure as well as in ſeeing him ſit gloriouſly at his right Hand: And this he had aſſur'd men of before, that he would require exactly an account of their refuſal to liſten to the Words of the Great Prophet which ſhould ſpeak in his Name*: And leſt any think, that though it be unavoidable, if they fall into the hands of the Living God, yet they may have ſome ſhelter from his fury; no, the right hand of God, his hand of ſtrength and power, ſhall find out the Enemies of Chriſt in their moſt ſecret receſſes, Pſal. 21. 8. Thy hand ſhall find out all thy Enemies, thy right hand ſhall find out them that hate thee; none ſhall eſcape the being hurl'd into a fiery Oven by the power of his hand. The Pſalm was anciently applyed by the Chaldee Paraphraſt to the King Meſſiah; who can reſcue the Soul that is graſpt in the wrathful hand of God? What Champion can keep off the blow, unleſs it be one that can match God in ſtrength and power? Nor will God be diverted by the crys of obſtinate Rebels, when he was not perſwaded by the ſtrong crys and Prayers of Chriſt, to take the Cup of ſuffering out of his Hand.

* Deut. 18. 19. אֲדַרֵשׁ I will diligently require it מֵעִמּוֹ אָנֹכִי I my ſelf.

Beſides, though Chriſt be clad in his Prieſtly Garments, he hath feet like braſs, as if they burnt in a Furnace, heavy and hot to trample upon his Enemies, Revel. 1. 13, 15. He hath Eyes like a flame of fire to find them, and Feet like braſs to cruſh them; ſo that upon all accounts the miſery is unavoidable. The condition of the Heathens renders them inevitably miſerable, for being without Chriſt they are without Hope, Eph. 2. 12. Faith in the Promiſe is the foundation of the Hope of bleſſedneſs; no freedom without it from the ſentence of Death, to which the Law hath adjudged us; no freedom from the Spiritual Death, which ſin hath ingender'd in us. 'Tis as inevitable as the miſery of Devils; they periſh becauſe they have no Mediator, and men periſh becauſe they will not receive a Mediator.

2. Speedy miſery. As Chriſt is a ſwift help, ſo he is declar'd to be a ſwift witneſs againſt the unrighteouſneſs of men, Mal. 3. 5. God is quick in his judgments where the Goſpel is contemn'd; the Black, Red, and Pale Horſe, Plague, War, and Famine followed the Heels of the White Horſe, to cut off them that would not be conquer'd by the Rider on it, Rev. 6. 2, 4, 5, 8. God is more quick and ſevere in his juſtice under the Goſpel than before; the former times before the exhibition of Chriſt were the times of Gods Patience, wherein God winkt at the times of ignorance; but if his command of Repentance and Faith be neglected, nothing is to be expected but a ſevere judgment, Acts 17. 30, 31. As he hath reveal'd his righteouſneſs righteouſneſs from faith to faith: So he hath reveal'd his wrath from heaven, Rom. 1. 17, 18. When he made a promiſe of the effuſion of his ſpirit in the times of the Goſpel, Joel 2. 28, 29. he couples with it a threatning of judgments, as the fruit of the contempt of the Goſpel, v. 30, 31. I will ſhow wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, bloud and fire, and pillars of ſmoke, before the day of the LORD, i. e. from the time of the pouring forth the ſpirit, and the contempt of his Grace there ſhall be a confuſion in all parts of the World where the Goſpel is contemn'd, and that in a conſtant Succeſſion, till the great day of the Lord. We may know to what cauſe to aſcribe the turning of the Sun into Darkneſs, and the Moon into bloud in a Nation. The ſame reaſon of the ſpeedineſs of judgment, holds in the caſe of a particular perſon; whoſoever bears thorns and bryers is nigh unto curſing, Heb. 6. 8. the good Earth is ſaid to be bleſſed by God, but the bad Earth is not ſaid to be curſed, that we may not deſpair; but nigh to Curſing, that we may haſten our fruitfulneſs. It cannot be long before the power of God will vindicate his injur'd Mercy, and deliver men up into the hands of Juſtice, to anſwer for the violations of his Law, and contempt of his Grace. The time of Gods waiting is bounded in narrow limits. The life is a ſhort vapour, which appears awhile and quickly vaniſheth. What are a few Days or Yeats, yea, or Methuſalems Age to keep off the Plague which ſhall laſt for ever? Unconceiveably leſs than a Grain of Sand, compar'd with the whole Maſs of Heaven and Earth, if pounded into Duſt.

3. Sharp miſery. It abides; the firſt Wound is not ſo ſmart as a conſtant gnawing of a Vulture. As the Apoſtle could imagine no way to eſcape it, ſo he could not imagine any way to expreſs it, Heb. 10. 29. Of how much ſorer puniſhment? He leaves it to every mans fancy to ſcrue it to the higheſt. So ſore, that the Malefactor ſhall feel it without being able to declare the torture of it. And thus Peter leaves it to men to imagine, ſince he was unable to expreſs it. 1 Pet. 4. 17, 18. What ſhall the end be of thoſe that obey not the Goſpel? and where ſhall the ungodly and ſinners appear? We can no more conceive the terrour of the wrath due to this, than we can conceive the grandeur of that love which hath been abus'd, and the dignity of the perſon of his Son, which is injur'd by it. The moſt ſcorching receptacles in that fiery Oven ſeem to be reſerv'd for Unbelievers, Luke 12. 46. The Lord will appoint him his portion with the Unbelievers. A vengeance is due to ſuch, Heb. 10. 30. which is not a ſimple puniſhment, but one with rigour. It knows no mitigation, not a drop of a Water will be allowed to temper the devouring Flame. Hell would rather ſolicit for a further addition of wrath to one that deſpis'd the only begotten of the Father; a mans own Conſcience will tell him, 'tis rather below than above his demerit. Though the puniſhment of ſin againſt the Law was a ſeparation from God, yet this ſeparation may admit of degrees; one may be further caſt from God than another, into the depths, and loweſt Dungeon of Hell. The young man was in a nearneſs to the Kingdom of Heaven, yet not in it, but in a ſtate of alienation from God.

(1.) God takes the puniſhment of ſuch into his own hand. God will be a conſuming fire, Heb. 12. ult. Fire is the ſharpeſt of all the Elements, inſinuates into every part of combuſtible matter, and the wrath of God into every part of the Soul. It devours with an invincible force whatſoever it lays hold on. Though God be full of goodneſs and mercy to them that believe, yet he is like a conſuming fire to thoſe that ſcorn the Covenant of his Son, and with no leſs, but much more fury will he conſume the ſlighters of that, than he did the deſpiſers of the old adminiſtration. This ſin puts God upon the diſcharging all his fury. The breath of his mouth, that before invited men, ſhall blow the fire, Iſa. 30. 33. The breath of the Lord as a ſtream of brimſtone doth kindle it. 'Tis not a ſimple puniſhment but wrath abides, the wrath of an infinite God, infinitely underſtanding to invent, and of infinite power to inflict the bittereſt pains; which muſt be more ſharp than any in this life, becauſe all the bars of patience which ſtopt the overflowing ſcourge, and the long ſuffering of God upon the account of the mediation of Chriſt, ſhall abſtain from any further exerciſe. It muſt be as ſharp as juſtice arm'd with infinite power can render it, according to the capacity of the ſubject. What cannot Omnipotence do? As when the Covenant is receiv'd, God is our God in the employment of his infinite perfections for us; ſo when the Covenant is outraged, God is our Judge in the employment of his infinite perfections againſt us. Patience ſhall not ſtir a Finger, Mercy will look contemptibly upon them. When the firſt Covenant was broke, Juſtice puniſhed, and Mercy reliev'd: when the ſecond is finally deſpis'd, Juſtice inflicts the puniſhment, and Mercy contemns the ſufferer. That Mercy which call'd them, will laugh at their Calamity, Prov. 1.24, 26, 27, 28. 'Tis not vindictive Juſtice, but tender Mercy, which calls men to repentance. 'Tis not vindictive juſtice men will ſeek in their diſtreſſes, but pity and compaſſion from their Judge. But that Attribute whereby God ſtretched out his hand in kindneſs; that Attribute which men in their anguiſh will call upon for relief, will not only be ſpeechleſs, but mock when their fear comes. As Juſtice joins hands with Mercy in the pardon of a Believer, upon the ſatisfaction of Chriſt; ſo Mercy will join hands with Juſtice for the puniſhment of an Unbeliever, that either ſpurns at it, or neglects it. Juſtice ſhall hurl them in, and Mercy roul the ſtone upon the mouth of Hell. Mercy will mock them, and mocking is none of the lighteſt ingredients in the puniſhment of a Malefactor. How heavy muſt that Condemnation be, which is pronounc'd by a Mercy turn'd into Fury! Since God inflicts it, the puniſhment for the neglect of his Grace will be ſuted to that Joy he had in the effuſions of it. We may meaſure his anger againſt the Rebels by the delight he had in his Son for undertaking the work of redemption, and the joy he expreſt upon his performing it. No greater honour could he beſtow upon his return to Heaven, than the ſeating him at his right hand, giving him power over all the Angels; more terrible judgments then muſt fall upon them that deſpiſe the Prieſthood of Chriſt, ſo acceptable to God, which ſhall by the Decree of God, like Aarons rod, the type of it, flouriſh for ever.

(2.) It will be ſuted to the greatneſs of what hath been contemn'd. As much as the Covenant excels the other in Grace and Glory, ſo much ſhall the vengeance for the deſpiſing it, exceed the puniſhment due to the tranſgreſſion of the other. A hainous ſin deſerves intolerable Plagues. Sins againſt the light of nature, are of a meaner tincture than thoſe againſt the Goſpel. There was a death without mercy for the tranſgreſſion of the Law of Moſes, Hebr. 10. 28. compos'd only of the ſhadows of this; muſt there not then be an addition of vengeance to thoſe that make light of the ſubſtance? The puniſhment in order of Juſtice muſt be ſuited to the greatneſs of the Crime. As it is a total injuſtice to let a Crime paſs with impunity, ſo it is a partial Injuſtice to let it paſs with a puniſhment leſs than its merits. The dignity of the perſon injur'd, the Son of God, and God in him, greatens the Crime, and conſequently the puniſhment. With what an infelicity muſt ſuch an indignity to God be attended? We are not only to anſwer to Juſtice for the violations of an holy Law, but the expence of a tender Mercy; and if an offence againſt God, as the Author of our being, deſerves at the hands of an infinitely offended Majeſty, a juſt recompence of reward; much more muſt the rejecting the tenders of his Grace, whereby as a Fountain of goodneſs he would ſend forth richer ſtreams of happineſs than at the Creation. We abuſe that which we had not the leaſt right to demand, nor God the leaſt obligation to give. Some things the nature of God obligeth him unto. God might chuſe whether he would create man; but when he reſolves to create a rational Creature, the holineſs of God obligeth him to create him holy: he may chuſe whether he would make a Covenant of Grace; but when he hath made it, his nature will not permit him to ſtart from it. God might chuſe whether he would offer Grace, and therefore the freer the Grace, the blacker the abuſe of it, and the ſorer the puniſhment due to it. As there were liberal ſhowers of Grace, there ſhall be fuller Vials of wrath; as Grace to the utmoſt, ſo wrath to the brim. The Devil who had not the leaſt ſhare of created wiſdom, by his abuſe of it, render'd himſelf moſt accurſed; and men by the abuſe of Grace, render themſelves moſt abhorred by God. As where ſin hath abounded, Grace is ſweeter; ſo where Grace hath abounded, and is not receiv'd, wrath is ſharper, and the heat of wrath is proportion'd to the flame of love. And as it is againſt the greateſt mercy, ſo 'tis againſt a greater evidence of Gods Holineſs and Juſtice in the death of his Son. The end of the death of Chriſt was that God might shew himself just, Rom. 3. 26. that he might be just, i.e. known to be just, now after this publick discovery of his Justice, this sin is a daring his Justice more than any sin under the Law; then there was only a verbal Declaration of the Justice of God; but in the Death of Christ, the highest sensible demonstration of it to the Sons of men.

(3.) It will be suted to the excellent rewards of Faith. As the rewards of Faith are so great, that neither Ear hath heard, nor heart can conceive; so must the Plagues for Unbelief answer the greatness of those. The reward of Adams Obedience appears not to be any other than a continuance in that happy state in Paradise, wherein he was Created; wherein it is like he might after some tryal of his Obedience, have been confirm'd by the Grace of God, as the Angels are in their glorious estate in Heaven. As his reward seems not altogether to be the same which is promised in the Gospel, viz. a being with Christ for ever to behold his Glory: So the punishment threatned upon his transgression of the Command, is not the same with the punishment threatned in the Gospel; and though it was more than a temporal Death, or a separation of Soul and Body, which seems to be too light a punishment for an offence against the infinite majesty of God, and would not have answer'd the enormity of the Crime (could the pain of a few hours satisfy God for a sin, whose guilt and filth would be perpetual without pardon and Sanctification?) Yet it was not so bitter a Death as is threatned upon the breach of the new Covenant; for all punishment follows the measure of the ingratitude and greatness of the obligation, which was not the same in his sin as it is in ours; and therefore it is expresst by the addition of death unto death, 2 Cor. 2. 16. The Savour of death unto death; a Death with more pangs super-added by the Gospel to the Death inflicted upon Adam by the Law. As those that have believ'd in the name of the Son of God, and walked according to that Faith, shall be eternally freed from all the Curses of the moral Law, and the dreadful threatnings sprinkled in the Gospel; so those that shall die in their Unbelief, shall for ever lie under the Curses of the one, and the executed threatnings of the other. We find that as the promises in the old Testament were not so spiritual, and clear, respecting for the most part the Land of Canaan, and temporal goods; so the threatnings are not so sharp, respecting for the most part temporal losses, and outward Judgments. As the Joys of Heaven were under that dispensation, vail'd under temporal Promises; so the terrors of Hell were vail'd under temporal Curses. But in the Gospel there are clearer Promises of an eternal Glory; and answerable to them, there are more dismal threatnings of an eternal loss. There is utter darkness to answer an inheritance in light; a never-dying worm to answer to everlasting joys; Rivers of Brimstone to answer to Rivers of Pleasures; an eternal separation from God, and the everlasting Society of Devils to answer to an eternal Communion with God, and the blessed Angels.

(4.) It will be suted to the knowledge, or means of knowledge men had. The Heathens will have a single Condemnation for not improving the Light of Nature; the Jews a double, for neglecting that Light, and the instructions of the Law; a treble Condemnation remains for them that neglect both these, and the discoveries of Grace more glorious and plain, than Nature or Law with a richer manifestation ever could be. The damnation of the first will be a pleasure to the miseries of the last, who will have more than an ordinary damnation. To have Christ and his Blood Preached to men, engenders more knowledge than the instructions of the Heavens, and the Creatures of the Earth; with a Conscience guided by a dimmer light. Tyre and Sidon shall have a lighter sentence than Chorazin and Bethsaida; they might have reformed upon less means, when those were not converted by greater, Mat. 11. 21, 22, 23, 24. Tyre a place of knowledge, famous for excellent Arts, from whence a greater part of the Grecian learning was deriv'd; a place of notorious Idolatry, whence the Jews had sometime drawn the contagion; a place of great Pride and Luxury, threatned with grievous Plagues by God, Ezek. 26. yet this place, though sinning against much natural knowledg, shall fare better than the Cities of Judea. Sodom the stain of mankind, a place soakt in the dreggs of villany, who sinn'd against an eminent deliverance bestowed upon them for the sake of Lot, and also against many admonitions monitions from that perſon, who could not but teſtify the vexation of his righteous Soul for their wickedneſs, that would have committed wickedneſs with the Angels, and that when they were under the judicial hand of God ſtriking them with blindneſs, guilty of thoſe abominations which likely not a man in Capernaum was guilty of; yet this Hell upon Earth ſhall have a milder Hell at the Day of Judgment, than unbelieving Capernaum, a place that had often given entertainment to Chriſt in the Days of his Fleſh, blaſphem'd not his Doctrine when they heard it, nor aſcrib'd his Miracles to the Devil when they ſaw them, as the Phariſees did, yet thoſe for want of Faith ſhall be more inexcuſable than the other; the one offended againſt the Light of Nature, the other againſt the Light of Grace, publiſht by the mouth of the only Son of God. The means of Grace men have had, will ſharpen the ſting of Conſcience to pierce more deep. The word ſhall judge men at the laſt day, Joh. 12. 48. The Doctrine of Grace, and the inſtructions of the Goſpel, ſtruck in upon their minds, ſhall riſe up in their Conſciences, as ſo many witneſſes againſt them: * And though ſuppreſt here by unrighteouſneſs, ſhall, like fire buried in a heap of aſhes, ſparkle again, and make their Conſciences as a fiery Oven, as the expreſſion is, Pſal. 21. 9. and engender a more enflam'd Hell within them, than all other miſeries can without them. Every Principle of truth, whether approv'd of or no, ſhall be as the ſting of a Scorpion; all which meeting together, ſhall render them more ſelf-tormented Creatures, than the worſt of the Tyrians, or the moſt villanous Rakehell in Sodom, though there were no outward pain or miſery to afflict them.

Well then. 'Tis a ſore puniſhment; then will he ſpeak to men in his wrath; when? when they take counſel againſt the Lord, and his anointed, and caſt away his cords from them, Pſal. 2. 5. he will ſwallow them up in his wrath, Pſal. 21. 9. The Curſes of the Law brake men in pieces, but the rejected Son of God in the Goſpel, like a ſtone from an high aſcent, grinds them to powder, Mat. 21. 44. So that it had been happy for them if grace had never appear'd to them, ſince they have gain'd nothing by it but a more ſtinging Damnation.

4. Irreverſible wrath; It abides, permanent, not tranſient, not a volatile but a fixed wrath. As it is fire for ſeverity, ſo it is unquenchable for duration, Mark 9. 43, 45. There is no more recovery from it, than there is for a man ſhut up in a red hot Oven. If it be reverſible, 'tis only ſo by God; all the Creatures in Heaven and Earth, in a joint Combination, can not blow away the fire that is not blown by man, as the expreſſion is, Job 20. 26. God hath declar'd himſelf to admit of no remiſſion without bloud, Heb. 9. 22. what hopes then, unleſs another Redeemer can be provided to match Chriſt in as valuable a ſatisfaction, by the price of his Bloud? This hath already been accepted as ſufficient by the Father, ſeconded by the Holy Ghoſt in his ſollicitations, as an Advocate to men to accept it. But ſuppoſe it were poſſible to offer an infinite ranſom to God, for the recovery of our Souls; How is God oblig'd to accept that, ſince that which he hath appointed and accepted, hath been refus'd? There was no obligation upon him to appoint and accept the firſt, it was purely an act of Grace; there can be as little, or leſs upon him to accept a ſecond. He might have exacted the Sentence of the Law, that the Soul that ſins ſhall die, and never have granted any to ſtand in the room of the Sinner; and ſo he may ſtill, if we conſent not to what he hath approv'd. The ſufferings of men for tranſgreſſions muſt be as bitter as the ſufferings of Chriſt, the Law requires it, but they muſt be more durable than his, in regard of our impotency for ſatisfaction; this impotency being Eternal, the ſuffering muſt be of the ſame duration; and though Chriſt ſuffer'd for the tranſgreſſions againſt the firſt Covenant, and the temporary tranſgreſſions againſt the new, yet he ſuffer'd not for final Unbelief and impenitency. After death the judgment, Heb. 9. 27. the embracing the Sacrifice of Chriſt is limited only to this life, no offers are made after Death; The axe is laid to the root of the tree, in the time of the Goſpel, Mat. 3. 10. Patience under the Law ſuffer'd the Tree to ſtand, Juſtice under the Goſpel brings the Axe to the Root; and what is not fit for the Building, is reſerv'd for the Fire. A Tree cut off from the ſtock cannot be faſtned on again to grow; and it is not a way-faring, but a dwelling with everlaſting burnings, that every Unbeliever is adjudged unto, Iſa. 33. 14. But ſuppoſe God ſhould give a reſpite, and restore a man to life, and to hear the Preaching of the Gospel, what assurance is there that men would comply with the truths of God, if they had the habits of their old sins as strong in them as before? Is it not too frequent to break solemn Vows, as easily as Sampson snapt in pieces the Cords that bound him, and that while they have been sensible of the gnawings of Conscience? If men believe not Moses and the Prophets, nay, a greater than Moses and the Prophets, they would not believe the report of one licensed to come from the place of torments; and as little believe, or quickly forget, their own feeling.

Use. First of information.

1. May we not see and admire the patience and goodness of God towards us? Doth the wrath of God abide upon every Unbeliever; doth he lie under the Iron Mace of the Law, ready to be crusht every moment, if God speaks the word; hath a Sword edg'd with the bittereſt Curses, hung over our heads by the brittle thread of a frail life? What if God had let the Iron Mace fall upon us, and broken the thread, and made us possess the wrath that we had merited, not only by nature, but by our Infidelity? This Patience would not have waited on us one moment, had not that Christ we despised, interposed himself for our reprieve, and presented the merit of his bloud to stop the floud of divine fury. How have we been beholding to that God, whose Grace we have abus'd, in bearing with us, and to Christ, whose Bowels we have spurn'd, in solliciting for us, while we were kicking at him? none of us but have been mightily beholden to God for his Patience, and some no question for a Pardon. How hath riches of goodness and forbearance, waited upon us without any regret, to lead us to repentance; while we have stood it out in Rebellion, Rom. 2. 4. He did not reckon with us for our Debts, and by his long suffering stopt the vengeance that long'd to seize us. Had not our natural corruption render'd us fit to be clapt up in his Eternal Prison, when we were in our Cradles; and our perverſity expos'd us to a greater punishment, when we have stood out in the maintaining of our Forts against him? His Threatnings continually pointed at us, yet are not put in Execution upon us. 'Tis not that we were not fuel fit enough for his wrath, 'tis not that he was ignorant of our Crimes; for none but he, no not our own Consciences, knows what scores of talents we were indebted, and what demerit there was in every act of sin. Has he not arrested some who were less in his Debt, put others Bonds in suit, and let ours ly by? Had he snatcht away any present Believer in his former state of infidelity, his condition had been eternally deplorable. Blessed be God for unwearied Patience, that hath hitherto repriev'd us, and blessed be God for over-powering Grace, that hath secur'd any of us from that wrath which is due to infidelity.

2. May we not take notice of the extream folly and madness of those that remain in a state of Unbelief? 'Tis folly in the judgment of our Saviour, for he couples fools and slow of heart to believe, in the rebuke he gives his Disciples, who had already some principles of Faith in them, though buried under the clods of some prejudicate opinions, Luke 24. 25. So folly, and disobedience, or Unbelief (as the word is sometimes rendred) are put together, Tit. 3. 3. Foolish and disobedient. To follow any sin, upon which misery is entail'd, is a senceleſs Course; but to ly in this, which stakes us down to that misery, is as great a madness as it is a sin. As the loss of the Soul is the most dreadful loss, so the neglect of the Soul is the most unreasonable neglect. Men that will deliberate and toss things of a Worldly concern in their Heads, will not employ time in the consideration of the things of another World; nay, will not so much as inquire into the corruptions of nature, or provisions of divine Grace; and have their excuses ready fram'd to put back any invitation to the true path of their own happiness, as in Luke 14. 18. As if they had enter'd a League offensive and defensive, with the pleasures, profits, and lusts of the World against God.

(1.) Is this because any question the truth of the Christian Religion, and think the Maxims of it to be meer Fables? which perhaps may be in the secret of many hearts, though the way lies not plain for an outward expression. Are you sure it is not of a divine stamp? Suppose it were not, is it any prejudice to your happiness? You are exhorted by it to live virtuously. This is that which Philoso- phers by the light of reaſon have prized and practiſed. No man diſhonours God by receiving a Doctrine, ſo far as it obligeth to ſuch a Carriage; is there any thing in the whole Scheme which makes to the diſhonour of the Deity? Doth a Trinity ſeem too myſterious? Some Heathens did not think it incredible, ſince ſomething of that nature hath been publiſht by them, deriv'd from thoſe that had, mediately or immediately, converſt with the Scripture. Do we underſtand the nature of Angels, yea the nature of our own Souls; and what the diſtinction of the faculties are? and ſhall we preſume to deny a Doctrine linkt with ſo many others highly agreeable to the reaſons of men, becauſe it is above our reach, as the nature of God is infinitely more than the nature of Angels? Or doth the Death of the Son of God ſeem unreaſonable? Is there any thing in it diſparaging the honour of God? Is not his faithfulneſs to his Law, his love to his Creature, the purity of his nature, and hatred of ſin, mightily manifeſted hereby? Is it repugnant to reaſon, that a divine perſon may voluntarily aſſume a body, be in a low condition for a time, in that nature which he aſſum'd, that he may be happy in that nature for ever after? or is it a thing altogether unknown among men, for one to anſwer for the faults of another, by an exceſs of Friendſhip? But if thoſe things which you will not believe, prove to be true at laſt, that the Son of God hath ſuffer'd by God's appointment for the expiation of ſin, that thoſe that believe in him, and reſign up themſelves to his Government, ſhall receive the benefits of it, and none elſe; what a madneſs will you then think your ſelves guilty of? There is nothing in the whole frame of the Chriſtian Religion, can make againſt your real happineſs (ſuppoſing it were not true.) But if it be true, the opinionative or practical ſlighting of it, expoſeth you to a moſt unexpreſſible miſery. If the things reveal'd prove true, when it is too late to gather the bleſſed fruit of them, will a bottomleſs Lake, a perpetual ſtinging Conſcience be balanced by a few tranſitory pleaſures on Earth? Is it not an unreaſonable folly to deny a Doctrine you cannot demonſtrate to be falſe, and be in danger to feel a miſery, that you cannot demonſtrate but it may come upon you, rather than comply with thoſe Doctrines which cannot do you any prejudice in the great concerns of your Souls, ſuppoſing they were not true? 'Tis a folly utterly to deny them till you can demonſtrate there is no ſuch thing as a Redeemer; that the Scripture is not the word of God; that no ſuch condition as Faith is requir'd of men. But let me ask the queſtion, is there nothing that troubles your Conſciences ſometimes? Have you not ſome fears in your retirements? (if ſuch men have any retir'd inſpection into themſelves) do you believe thoſe fears ſpringing up in your Conſciences to have any ground or no? If you think them groundleſs, why do you trouble your ſelves with them without a Cauſe? Why can you not expel them? If there be any juſt cauſe for them, and that they haunt you whether you will or no, why do you not look after a remedy? Would you not your ſelves account that man mad, who lying under a troubleſome diſtemper, would inquire after no Medicine.

(2.) Or is the reaſon of this neglect, becauſe you expect happineſs from ſomething elſe? No man in his right wits can build his felicity upon any Earthly Foundation; ſcarce any ſort of rationaliſts ever did; in God was felicity placed by them. 'Tis as great a folly to expect happineſs from any thing elſe, as to expect water from dry Aſhes, or a heap of Gold from a burden of Straw. And can any more rational method be framed to bring us to God, than what Chriſtianity affords us? But ſince we acknowledge the truth of the Chriſtian Religion, and the Authority of the Scripture, can we propoſe any good to our ſelves, by neglecting the Grace of God offer'd in it? Do you think Chriſt a Sun of Righteouſneſs? do you acknowledge that he is the purchaſer of Bleſſedneſs, and God the Fountain of it? Why then do any fooliſhly neglect the rejoycing in, and walking by that light, and drinking of thoſe ſtreams? Would you not laugh at that man that would turn his back upon the Sun, to warm himſelf by a Candle, as though there were more heat to be expected from that, than from the other? Would you not ſtand aſtoniſhed at one that ſhould thruſt away a rich Wine from him, to drink of a miry puddle? What we blame in others, we may charge our ſelves with in ſpiritual things. To keep a diſtance from the Fountain of Life, is the way to continue in a perpetual Death. How can we expect to benefit our ſelves by any thing, when we deſpiſe or neglect the only Fountain wherein God hath placed Salvation? What good can be propos'd to our ſelves by reſting upon any thing elſe, but the ſtrengthening our Fetters, gratifying our grand Enemies, and binding over our ſouls to a perpetuity of wrath? Mercy will be diſpleas'd, God more provoked, and reigning ſins ſtrengthened to bring Damnation.

(3.) Is it not a folly to neglect a neceſſary happineſs which you may have? 'Tis not only offer'd, but preſſed; God importunes you, your Conſciences goad you on. It comes near to you, the divine mercy of the Goſpel encompaſſeth you round. Can there be a greater folly than to ſtarve when we may have Bread? to be willing to be Shipwrackt in our own Bottom, rather than to paſs into another Veſſel for a certain ſecurity? What do you think of Adam, do you count him wiſe for preferring an Apple before the delights of Paradiſe? Let us put our ſelves in the ſame rank, if we prefer a Feather before a Pearl, and endleſs miſery before an happy immortality. No folly like that, to affect to be damn'd rather than be ſaved, when Salvation may be procur'd, in ſome reſpect, upon eaſier terms for us, than ever Damnation can. Who can deſerve a better Character than that of a Fool and Madman, whoſe Soul is not awakened to mind Eternity by the Sword of Juſtice that glitters in his Eye; but rather dares the ſharp edge to do its worſt, and this upon vile terms to gratify ſome Swiniſh affections? If our natural enmity to God, as Governour of the World, hinders us from complying with his kindneſs, yet ſelf preſervation ſhould make us fear and endeavour to avoid his wrath; and no folly like that, to prefer our enmity to another before the ſecurity of our ſelves. 'Tis an unreaſonable folly, and inſenſibleneſs, not to come up fully to the terms of that Religion we expect Salvation only by.

3. A Believer muſt be infallibly happy, if an Unbeliever be infallibly miſerable. The ſame word that aſſures the deplorable ſtate of the one, aſſures the bleſſed eſtate of the other: The remiſſion which was conditional in the declaration, is upon Faith made abſolute, becauſe the condition is perform'd; what was profer'd to all upon the condition of believing, If you believe, you ſhall have eternal life, is made abſolute upon believing, you believe, therefore you have eternal life. If the Faith of Believers under the Old Teſtament, were ſaving in that obſcurity, our Faith under a clearer light, and more certain manifeſtation, muſt be much more ſaving: Salvation is as much the iſſue of Faith by Gods order, as Damnation is the iſſue of Unbelief; 'tis called therefore a believing to the ſaving of the Soul, Heb. 10. 39. It takes hold of the Mercy Seat, and hath both the veracity of God, and the pleas of Chriſt to defend it, and keep its hands from being knockt off.

(1.) Is not that man happy who hath an union with Chriſt? Who is tranſplanted from Adam the condemn'd head by Law, into Chriſt the juſtified head both by Law and Grace? Shall a member of Chriſt periſh any more than the head? or can the head be happy without the members? Was his natural Body only concern'd in that Prophecy, that not a Bone of him ſhall be broken; or ſhall his myſtical Body fare worſe than that? Can Hell ever be the dwelling place of that which is the habitation of Chriſt? Eph. 3. 17. Shall wrath ever pierce into the intimate receſſes where Chriſt reſides? Shall the living waters which flow out of the belly, John 7. 38. (which is nothing but the Spirit receiv'd by believing) ſtream any where but to the Ocean of bleſſedneſs? The fatneſs ſuckt from the Olive-Tree, Rom. 11. 17. is not to render any, combuſtible matter for wrath, but a preparation for glory. Oneneſs with Chriſt renders a Believer in a manner as ſafe as Chriſts righteouſneſs doth himſelf; how can a Believer miſs of happineſs, ſince by his Union with Chriſt he is united to God, who is infinite bleſſedneſs in his nature, and the only felicity of his Creature?

(2.) Is not he infallibly happy, who hath every thing remov'd that may render him eternally miſerable? Juſtice is ſtopt from any inundation upon ſuch a perſon, ſince he anſwers the terms wherewith juſtice was ſatisfied. It would not longer retain the name of Righteouſneſs, if it acted ſo high a piece of unrighteouſneſs as to deny its own agreement, and refuſe the Plea of that ſatisfaction it hath already accepted, and demand the Debt Chriſt hath already paid. The Tribunal of Juſtice is to Faith chang'd into a Throne of Grace, where Juſtice and Mercy

ſit both together, juſtifying and embracing a Believer, Rom. 3. 26. for ſuch Chriſt hath fixed a Rainbow about the Throne of God, (as was elſewhere obſerved) an Emblem of Peace, Revel. 4. 3. to ſhow his mindfulneſs of the Covenant when he comes to judge upon his Throne. That whereby any Son of Adam is condemn'd, is ſilent in regard of a Believer. The Law can no more plead its Curſes againſt the bloud of the Redeemer. Honey comes out of the Belly of that Lyon inſtead of its fiery terrors, ſince Chriſt pronounceth a freedom from guilt; for juſtification is at the inſtant of a ſincere believing, Joh. 3. 18. He that believes on him, is not condemn'd: Is not in the preſent tenſe. He is not in a ſtate of Condemnation, therefore in a ſtate of Juſtification. Sin alſo (which is the Corner ſtone, and foundation of Hell) hath receiv'd a deadly wound, and is every day more feebly gaſping; for Believers walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit, and therefore there is no condemnation to them, Rom. 8. 1. The venom of his nature is cur'd, as well as the guilt contracted by ſin; the biting of the old Serpent infected the bloud of Mankind with a Serpentine Venom, ſo that every man may in ſome ſort be ſaid to be the Seed of the Serpent; but by Faith the guilt is not only taken away, whereby we become obnoxious to God, but the venom of our nature which corrupted the maſs of bloud.

(3.) Is not he infallibly happy, whoſe perſon and ſervices are accepted by God? Eph. 1. 6. If Faith in Chriſt makes any an amiable object of Gods love, it muſt certainly make him a prepared ſubject for Gods Glory. How can God make a perſon eternally miſerable, with whom he is well pleaſed? As Juſtice cannot but thunder againſt an obſtinate Rebel; ſo Mercy cannot but embrace a Penitent and believing Supplicant, who brings a righteouſneſs before God, that pleaſeth him infinitely more than the whole World. He that ſtands unblameable before God, by the righteouſneſs of his Son, cannot be eternally miſerable by his own ſin. What tender Father can condemn his own Child? Such a relation doth Faith make between God and the Soul, by a double title both of Regeneration and Adoption, John 1. 12. Sonſhip is upon receiving of Chriſt, He that truſts in the Lord, mercy ſhall compaſs him about, Pſal. 32. 10. Mercy twines about every part of him.

(4.) Is not he infallibly happy, whom Chriſt, who is the judge of the World, neither can nor will condemn? As he is not able in regard of the unalterable method of God to ſave an Unbeliever; ſo he is not able in regard of the ſame method to condemn a believing Perſon. The order of God is ſetled, and this is the rule of his proceeding; when he comes to judge, flaming vengeance is to be render'd to thoſe that know not God, and obey not the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Theſ. 1. 8. neither of which Characters a Believer falls under. He is by Covenant to juſtify men by the knowledge of himſelf, Iſai. 53. 11. or by Faith in himſelf; will Chriſt violate the Covenant of Redemption ſo ſolemnly made? would he proceed ſo far as to confirm it on his part by his Death, to break it by his life? walk according to the Articles of it when he was in the fleſh, and defeat it when he is upon the Throne? He cannot but be as willing to beſtow Mercy upon Faith now he is in Heaven, as he was when he was upon the Earth; and his Language was then, be it unto you according to your Faith, not only let that Diſeaſe be remov'd, or that Mercy granted, but intimating by that general grant the eſtabliſhed order of his Father, that Faith ſhould not be denied the higheſt bleſſings that can be given.

(5.) Is not he infallibly happy whom God cannot condemn, neither in regard of his truth, nor in regard of the honour of Chriſt? Not in regard of his truth, ſince all the Promiſes in the Book of God belong to Believers, becauſe they are yea and Amen in Chriſt their Head. God hath ſpoke it, and will never repent of what hath paſſed from his Lips, Pſal. 2. 12. Bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him, i. e. in his Son; and God wants no more a faithfulneſs to make good his word, than he wanted mercy to paſs his word. His truth, which was before on the ſide of Juſtice, is now ſecond to his Grace, and ſtands as firm to make good the Evangelical Promiſe to him that performs the condition, as it is engag'd to make good the legal and Evangelical threatnings upon them that want it. He puts the intereſt of men in the hands of Chriſt, that the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed, Rom. 4. 16. Nor in regard of the honour of Chriſt; If God cannot ſave an Unbeliever, who croſſes the end of Chriſts Death, without diſparaging the undertaking of his Son, he cannot

according to his eternal Order destroy a Believer, who answers the ends of it, without the same reflection. It would not be a just dealing with him in the rights of his purchace, to refuse the benefit of it to those that answer the conditions of enjoying it, and place the sheep that hear his Voice in the same Calamity with the Dogs that snarl at him. Shall the bloud of his Son be shed for the gathering together the Sons of God, Joh. 11. 52. and not sprinkled on them? God is more in love with the person of his Son, and more pleas'd with the bloud of his Son, than to cast a dishonour upon the one or the other. The honour of God is as much concern'd in saving every Soul that bathes it self in the bloud of the Redeemer, as in condemning every one that tramples upon it.

(6.) Is it possible that he should be miserable, who designs and endeavours to glorifie God according to his own direction? How can we glorifie God but by Faith, since man by his Fall had made himself unfit to glorifie him any other way? This honours God more than Adam could, had he stood in innocency, who could never have return'd God an higher honour of his perfections, than he could have glean'd and collected from the Creature; whereas, this owns him in his glorious manifestation in his Son, and returns him an acknowledgment of the more glorious expence of his Grace, and fuller display of his Excellency: He that trusts in Christ, is to the praise of the glory of God, Eph. 1. 12. Is it possible God should put that Soul to the greatest misery, that endeavours to bring him the greatest Glory? Faith kills the enmity in the Heart towards God; and shall a God of infinite love, who inspir'd the Believer with all the Faith and Love he hath, cherish enmity in his Breast against one that lodgeth him in his dearest affections, and destroy his own production? Who can imagine that a God of infinite goodness should be behind hand with his Creature in affections?

Well then, the salvation of a Believer stands firm; Hell and Wrath shall not touch those that are anointed with the Blood of Christ, and shelter'd in so inviolable a sanctuary. Adam might sooner have been condemn'd in his innocent estate, than a Christian in a believing state, since God hath besides a single word, laid upon himself great obligations by frequent repetitions of his Promise by all the Prophets, Acts 10. 43. and besides, hath confirmed it by the Blood of his Son. Again, as the Punishment of an unbelieving Rebel, is as unavoidable as the Punishment of Christ, after he enter'd himself as an undertaker for us; so the salvation of a penitent Believer, is as certain as the acceptation of Christ, after he perform'd what as a Surety he undertook for. He hath unlockt the Gates of Heaven that were shut till the shedding of his Blood. The Angels Sword that guarded Paradise, turns every way to let a Believer in, as it turn'd every way before to keep a Rebel out from the Tree of Life. The vail of the Temple was rent in twain by the force of the Cross, whereby there was a view of the Holy of Holies. A Believer hath a prospect of Heaven while he lives, and an entrance into it when he dyes; 'tis through his name if we believe in him, that we receive remission of sins, Acts 10. 43. he that hath remission cannot lye under Damnation.

4th Use is of Exhortation. Be sensible of it.

1. Be sensible of the misery. Let every Unbeliever consider, that he hath the character of a condemn'd person upon him; for without Faith Christ speaks no more comfort than the thunders of the Law, but more terror than all the curses of that can speak. The Text speaks it plain, He shall not see life, but the wrath of God abides upon him; Pœna damni in the first, Pœna sensus in the second; there is a God of Life, a Heaven a place of Life; but he shall never see the face of God with comfort, or enjoy the satisfactions of Heaven. The deprivation of the Heavenly Canaan, when a man comes to understand it, must much more affect the Soul, than the deprivation of the Earthly Canaan affected Moses. How sad will it be to be hurl'd from a Pinacle of Prosperity, to a Dunghil of Poverty in a moment; what do you think were the sentiments of Adam, when on the suddain he found himself fallen from a serene state into a Sea of horrors? Such will be the thoughts of men, when they see themselves cast from Heaven for want of Faith, who before seem'd to be in the Suburbs of it by an external Profession. Men are naturally now secure, and have rather a Faith in their

their own hearts, than a Faith in Chriſt, and cry Peace in ſpite of God, who proclaims a Curſe, Deut. 29. 19. Bleſs himſelf in his heart. But with what rage will Conſcience at length laſh and ſpring up a perpetual Hell within them: that will condemn upon a Death-Bed, as Gods Viceroy, and God at laſt condemn as the ſupreme Governour, that will ten thouſand times more gnaw an Unbeliever for his infidelity, than the worſt Heathen for all his other ſins. The nearer a man is to happineſs, the more afflicting is the loſs of it; and the more tormenting, when it is for a vile and an unlovely luſt. How I am expell'd from the preſence of God, who lately had a Door open'd to it, by the bloud of the Redeemer? Juſtice locked not the Door of Heaven upon me, till I turn'd my back upon it, and pull'd it after me. That which might have made me as happy as an Angel, I refus'd willfully, to make my ſelf as miſerable as a Devil. This will be the ſad lamentation of a man obſtinate, under the preaching of the Goſpel. How great will the miſery be, when Juſtice ſhall plead the diſhonour of God, and Mercy charge thee with the abuſes of his Grace? When all the Attributes of God ſhall purſue him, whom a little before they waited to receive; when Chriſt who would have been a ſtone of building, ſhall be a ſtone of bruiſing, and ſhall cruſh by his wrath thoſe that would not be woed by his Mercy; when he ſhall appear in the Majeſty of a Judge, he will cut the hearts of thoſe that deſpis'd him in the quality of a Saviour. Thoſe that have been only under natures light, without the leaſt twinkling of the Goſpel, will be in compariſon of ſuch in a ſtate of innocency, and under a more eaſy Damnation. As Chriſt ſhed not his bloud in vain, was not exalted in vain, pleads not in Heaven in vain; ſo he is not intruſted with a power in vain; all power is given him in heaven and earth, in purſuance of the Goſpel, upon which he founds the Commiſſion of the Apoſtles, and aſſures them of his aſſiſtance in their work, Mat. 28. 18, 19. either for the happineſs of the entertainers, or the miſery of the neglecters; to break in pieces by his Rod, thoſe that will not bow down to his Scepter: for in refuſing our ſelves the happineſs of Salvation, we refuſe Chriſt the glory of his Death, and the honour of his Authority. And conſider, the more Chriſt is reſiſted, the deeper will the condemnation be. When we find Cain ſinking under the Load of the bloud of an innocent perſon, murther'd by him once, and ſee men whoſe hands have been imbrewed in the bloud of wicked Wretches, to be in Hell alive, when their Conſciences are awaken'd to a conſideration of their guilt; what will it be then to be many a time, as by every act of infidelity, guilty of the bloud of Chriſt? Nothing but wo can remain for that man, who hath the bloud of Chriſt ſo highly valued by God, pleading againſt him. 'Tis greater than all the miſery which can happen in this life. If we are ſick, ſickneſs is but a deprivation of health: if poor, the Poverty is but the deprivation of wealth; but if Unbelievers, we deprive our ſelves of God, and of our ſelves: The good we loſe by it, is a greater good than we can loſe by any worldly miſery. We offer the higheſt violence to our ſelves, and reject the true felicity of our nature, by refuſing an adherency to God as the chiefeſt good, and to Chriſt as the only way to the fruition of him. Faith only kept Davids heart from fainting, Pſal. 27. 13. Unbelief then can be no Cordial for any in a dying hour; ſince by refuſing a Saviour he makes himſelf utterly uncapable of Salvation.

2. Be ſenſible of the equity, and juſtice of this miſery. We can never be affected with any pronounc'd woes, unleſs we firſt judge God juſt; and truly the puniſhment is as deeply merited at the hands of God, as his kindneſs in his Son was undeſerved by us. If Juſtice might equitably puniſh men for breaking the Laws of the Creator, it might much more puniſh them for ſlighting the overtures of an appeaſable Creator, and the performances of an appeaſing Redeemer; and what is more reaſonable than to have that inflicted upon men, which was inflicted upon the Saviour they make ſo light of?

(1.) There is no want on Chriſts part. There hath been by him ſatisfaction enough for the payment of our Debts, and merit enough for our reſtoration to our happineſs: He hath done all things neceſſary for the ſalvation of the World; he hath expiated ſin, which plung'd it into miſery; he hath preſented his Death to God as a ſacrifice of infinite value, ſufficient for all the World, and by opening the Throne of Grace, hath given liberty to approach to God, and sollicite him for the application of the benefit he hath purchas'd; he hath also purchased the Spirit, sent him into the World to renew his sollicitations to men, who seriously calls them to the partaking of this Salvation, and declares it to be a thing very agreeable to him, that men should come in to him. He came not intentionally to condemn any man, John 3. 13. For God sent not his Son into the World to condemn the World, but that the World through him might be saved; to proclaim the riches of the Grace of God for the salvation of men: But in regard of the event indeed he is their judge, to which men provoke him by their obstinacy, whence it is said, John 9. 39. that he came to judge the World, i. e. in regard of the event. As the intention of a Physician in prescribing soveraign medicines for the mastering the Disease, is to heal the Patient; but if the Patient neglects those restoratives, and swallows poyson in their stead, this is not the Physicians, but the Patients fault. The title of our Lord Jesus in his first coming, was Saviour, not Judge; he presented men with that which might warrant them from condemnation; but if they will not rejoyce in their happiness, they exclude themselves from the benefit; and by not embracing the ransom God hath provided, they expose themselves to pay that satisfaction in their persons which the Law exacts. The satisfaction of Christ they cannot plead, because the conditions of it are not embrac'd: they must therefore pay what the Law demands, which would else be insignificant, and the honour of Gods justice would suffer in their safety: When therefore every offer of Mercy, shall accompany men to the Tribunal of the Judge, and this charge be heard from his mouth * ; I have redeem'd you by my Blood, and you have trod it under foot; I have invited you to Faith and Repentance, but you would rather wallow in the excrements of sin; I have called you by the motions of my Spirit, and you have prov'd Rebellious; I have encourag'd you by Promises of great reward, but you made no account of them; wherein have I been wanting? With what face can any man now lay the fault upon God? As when a King proclaims Pardon to a Rebellious City, upon the condition that they yield up themselves to his Son; as it is equity that those that surrender themselves, should have the promised benefit; so it is just, that those that wilfully resist so easie and reasonable a condition, should fall under the threatned penalty; they have no reason to charge their ruine upon any want of clemency in the King, since the proffer was made to all, but upon their own obstinacy, because they perish by their own folly.

* Pont. Meditat. part 1. medit. 14. p. 94.

(2.) No want of evidence and declaration of the salvation purchased. If there were not sufficient arguments to work upon mens understandings, nor perswasive motives to induce their wills to embrace it; if there were not a demonstration of an invincible necessity of their Belief, their condemnation for infidelity would not appear to be just: But there is sufficient evidence, light is come into the World, and hath expos'd to the view of men the treasures of Grace and Glory, the most alluring motives to prevail upon their wills; but their affections cary them to error and darkness, upon which the Scripture lays the cause of mens condemnation, John 3. 19. and calls it a self-judgment, Acts 13. 46. You judge your selves unworthy of everlasting life. * Ignorance sometimes excuseth, either when the things we are ignorant of we are not bound to know, as what is the just magnitude of the Sun; or when they are not sufficiently reveal'd, as who Melchisedec was; but when that which concerns our clear duty, and choicest happiness, is with a full evidence of truth set clearly before our Eyes, is it not our own fault if we regard them not? Such an ignorance is affected and voluntary, and leaves a man in judgment without excuse; and is so far from diminishing the fault, that it rather aggravates it: Why are any ignorant when the Doctrines of the Gospel have been represented to them, and it was their undeniable duty to know and receive them? If the Sun shines upon the World, and discovers the treasures of the Creation, if men will shut their Eyes and will not behold them, is that the fault of the Sun, or of the men?

* Daillé sur. Jean 3. Serm. 10. p. 39, &c.

(3.) Tis a voluntary and wilful refusal, and therefore a consent to the punishment. Unbelievers are excluded from Heaven, and locked up in misery by their own consent; not formal and explicite, but virtual and implicite; they voluntarily neglect the performance of thoſe conditions, upon which a right to Heaven is founded; and willingly continue in that ſtate which ſubjects them to eternal miſery. Whoſoever refuſeth the conditions, refuſeth by that act the priviledges which depend upon thoſe conditions; he that will not pay a Pepper-Corn per annum, for an Eſtate of a conſiderable value, when it is all the rent demanded, wilfully deprives himſelf of the right of Tenancy. He that will not ſue out the pardon of his Crimes upon eaſy conditions enjoin'd him, deprives himſelf of the benefit of the Princes Proclamation, and juſtly periſheth, becauſe, as the conditions are the fruits of the greateſt mercy in the Prince, ſo the refuſal is a demonſtration of the greateſt hatred in the Rebel. Thoſe that choſe to gratify Satan in his triumphs over them, rather than pleaſe Chriſt who hath bled for them; periſh by their own willfulneſs. The Scripture chargeth it upon this ſcore; Chriſt would gather men, but they will not, Mat. 23. 37, 38. God doth not deſtroy Iſrael, but Iſrael deſtroys himſelf, Hoſ. 13. 9. The Holy Ghoſt in the cloſe of the Canon of the Scripture lays it there, Revel. 22. 17. Whoſoever will, let him take of the waters of life freely. If any man will, he may have it; if he hath it not, 'tis becauſe he doth not will it; and he that doth not will it, doth conſequently will the waters of Death; and what is more reaſonable, than that thoſe who will not accept of a tender'd Salvation, ſhould not enjoy it? The whole deſign of Scripture is to publiſh Gods willingneſs to impart the fruits of the death of Chriſt; and upon the cloſe the Holy Ghoſt puts the queſtion, whether they will partake of them or no. As much as to ſay, God hath diſcharg'd himſelf: Let men look to it, they will be found at laſt the willful cauſe of their own ruine.

Obj. But we have no ſtrength of our own to will, God only gives Faith.

Anſ. God may urge us to believe, we are bound to be obedient to whatſoever is his declar'd will, as a rule for our Obedience. He gave Adam ſtrength to believe whatſoever he reveal'd; he is no more bound to repair that ſtrength (but where he pleaſes) than he was bound to ſend Chriſt to redeem, after man by his revolt had plung'd himſelf in miſery. He may require of man the honour due to him, and is bound to beſtow no more upon man, than man can challenge as his due. 'Tis true, when God would create a rational Creature, the holineſs of his nature doth oblige him to create him holy; but his holineſs doth not oblige him to repair man, who hath forfeited all to Juſtice, and had his bleſſings ſeiz'd into the hands of his offended Lord. God is not therefore bound to turn every mans, or any mans will. Yet the refuſal of Gods gracious tenders is in every Unbeliever willful, becauſe he makes not uſe of that ſtrength which was left in him, after the fall, by the mediation of Chriſt. There is indeed an utter impotency in man as fallen, you find no footſtep of one good thought, one good inclination in Adam after his fall; he had no mind to approach to God, to implore his Mercy: inſtead of confeſſing his ſin, he palliates it, Gen. 3. 9, 10, 11, 12. Conſcience forceth him to acknowledge it, not to charge himſelf humbly, but to diſcharge himſelf upon God, he mentions not the name of God with any reſpect in all that Diſcourſe. Thus man conſider'd in Adam, purely as fallen, hath not one thought morally good. So that the Apoſtle might well ſay, that we are inſufficient of our ſelves to think a good thought, 2 Cor. 3. 5. But there is ſome reſtor'd power by the interpoſition of Chriſt, as he is the light that enlightens every man that comes into the world, Joh. 1. 9. whereby he may have ſome thoughts and inclinations materially good, if he will follow the conduct of that common light; he hath a faculty to think of what God reveals; he hath ſometimes ſome kind of velleities, but he doth not improve and purſue them. He puts by thoſe things when they are repreſented to him by the ſpirit of God; he cannot endure to have his thoughts dwell upon them, and is unwilling to direct his affections and inclinations to a divine object. The corrupt habits in his will wholly ſway him another way. If a man were willing and God unwilling, if he did ſeriouſly ſeek God and call upon him, (as he might direct his cryes to God, as well as to Creatures) and God had ſaid, he would give him no ſhare in Chriſt, then man had reaſon to complain. But it may be truly ſaid, that no man at the day of Judgment can, with a full witneſs of Conſcience, ſay, Lord I have ſought thee to the utmoſt of that power thou didſt vouchſafe to me after the fall. I would have believ'd in Chriſt. I pray'd for Faith with ſtrong cryes and tears; many a time I went to Ordinances with a deſire and hopes to have it beſtowed upon me; I have waited at thy Gates for the moving of the ſpirit upon the waters of my Soul; I have griev'd that I have not been ſeiz'd by him, and thou wouldſt not beſtow Faith upon me: can we think any man can ſay ſo at the laſt day? Without queſtion, no Unbeliever can have that Plea; his own Conſcience will fall in with the Judge, and charge his Unbelief upon a would not.

with

(4.) This voluntary refuſal is out of affection to ſome unworthy luſt. And this reaſon clears the equity of Gods Juſtice in their puniſhment. If Toryes and Robbers will not accept of a Pardon, becauſe they would live idly by their rapine, and pilfering their Neighbours, rather than content themſelves with ſome honeſt employment, they encreaſe by ſuch a Carriage, the Equity of that Juſtice which ſhall be arm'd againſt them. This is the Caſe Joh. 3.19. men love darkneſs; they will not believe, becauſe they will not be hindred from breaking the divine Law without any regret. No queſtion but many would receive the Goſpel for the benefit of remiſſion which it offers, but not for the mortification of the old man with its luſts, which it enjoins. A true Believer rejoyceth in the benefit of Pardon by the Goſpel, and taſts the ſweetneſs of that Doctrine; but embraceth it as well for the renewing Grace of it, for the unlooſing his Chains, changing his ſpiritual Death into a ſpiritual Life, and an heart imprinted by ſin into an heart engraven with a new Law: for he embraceth Chriſt for the main ends of his Death, which were a reſtoration of the holineſs as well as the happineſs of nature; to purify a peculiar people to himſelf, zealous of good works, as well as to redeem them from all iniquity, Tit. 2. 14. The Unbeliever is quite contrary, and neglects a Saviour becauſe he would retain his ſin; he would be willing to have Chriſt for a Pardon, but without a Yoke. But doth not ſuch a frame put an end to all diſputes againſt the equity of Gods Juſtice? Is it juſt that he that will not have a reſtoration of Gods Image, ſhould have a reſtoration to the felicity of Paradiſe, to live for ever with the Original? Or that he ſhould be exempted from the miſery due to his ſin, who would retain his violent inclinations againſt the honour of God, and practically declare he would rather loſe all the fruits of the bloud of God, than the pleaſures of ſin? And will not the Conſciences of many men charge them with this at the laſt Day, and force them to ſay, Lord, I had ſome apprehenſions of the truth of thy word, and the neceſſity of Chriſt, yet I was loth to forſake a beloved Dalilah for them. I was willing to believe in him for Salvation, but not to conform to him in Obedience; fleſhly and ſpiritual Luſts engroſt my will which ſhould have been inclin'd to thee.

(5.) The dignity and peculiar deſign of the perſon propos'd, clears the juſtice of the puniſhment. The Son of God, and his deſign peculiar for man. If a Prince ſhould take a great Journey to deliver a Gally-ſlave from his Fetters, and he refuſe acceptance, would not all men judge him worthy of the Chains he loves? Or if a King ſhould go a thouſand Miles in much hardſhip to court a naſty Beggar, and receive a refuſal, would not all men count her worthy of perpetual Rags, and fordidneſs? The caſe is the ſame here. The deſign of Chriſt was peculiar for man: Devils are excluded: A reward was promiſed him, pardon and juſtification was promis'd as a reward to him, which he being innocent in his own perſon was not capable of, and therefore was peculiarly intended as a gift to man.

Let every man then in an Unbelieving ſtate be ſenſible of the equity of this miſery he expoſeth himſelf unto. Be ſenſible that Chriſt hath not been wanting: That there is ſufficient revelation of the will and kindneſs of God, that your refuſal of him is voluntary and wilful, and with the greateſt indignity, undervaluing him by low and baſe affections, and ſuch a perſon who is of infinite dignity, and intended his kindneſs peculiar for man; and therefore he that will willfully refuſe ſo rich a Sacrifice of Gods proviſion, for the ſatisfaction of his own juſtice, cannot but acknowledge it reaſonable to be made a Sacrifice himſelf to that juſtice he hath offended. An eternal miſery is merited by him who rejects a God of infinite goodneſs, a Chriſt of infinite value, and an Heaven of infinite duration.

3. Let your ſence of Unbelief riſe up to a deteſtation of it, and a labouring after Faith. Why ſhould God be kept out of the exerciſe of his Soveraignty, and Chriſt hinder'd from the rights of his purchace? Why ſhould not the Redeemer have the things that belong to him, ſince he hath bought us with a price, 1 Cor. 6. 19, 20. Put not off the Seaſons of Grace. Let us not harden our hearts againſt the offers of Mercy, leſt we come ſhort of the promiſe, as they did to whom the Goſpel was preacht in Types, becauſe they mixed not the word with Faith; they looked upon the typical part, and looked not beyond it to the thing ſignified, Hebr. 4. 1, 2. If they entred not into reſt becauſe they believed not a Goſpel in Types, how ſhall we be admitted into reſt, if we believe not a Goſpel in ſubſtance, ſtript of the obſcuring ſhadows? As there was no remiſſion, unleſs Chriſt had ſhed his bloud, ſo there is no participation of that bloud without applying it by Faith. 'Tis to this the ſpirit preſſeth us; 'tis pity to reſiſt ſo comfortable a Sollicitor. Can we behold a Saviour bleeding upon the Croſs for our ſecurity, and not give him the ſmall honour of the Faith he requires? Chriſt as Crucifyed doth not ſave us, but Chriſt as believed on. Though the fire hath a warming property, yet we muſt approach to it if we will partake of its heat. Though a Medicine hath an healing vertue, yet it is not healing as it is in the Glaſs, but as receiv'd in the Stomach. We partake not of Adams Contagion but by natural Generation; we partake not of Chriſts holineſs but by ſpiritual Regeneration, the form whereof is Faith. Without Faith we continue under the power of Satan. There are but two Kingdoms, the Kingdom of darkneſs, and the Kingdom of Chriſt, Coloſſ. 1. 13. Unbelief ſubjects us to the one, and Faith eſtates us in the other. If Faith quencheth the fiery darts of Satan, Eph. 6. 16. Unbelief expoſeth us as a mark to every Arrow. The longer any man continues in Unbelief, the more unfit will he be for Faith: the natural hardneſs will grow into judicial, and the ſtone we bring with us into the World, more Rocky, more inſenſible of the ſtrokes of the Law, or the Balſom of the Goſpel. As walking unworthy of the light of nature provokes God to give men up to a ſenſual brutiſhneſs, Rom. 1. 21. So oppoſing the light of the Goſpel, provokes God to give men up to a ſpiritual Deviliſhneſs. The more ſpiritual the diſcovery of Grace, the more ſpiritual are the Judgments upon neglect. No duties are acceptable without Faith. 'Tis as impoſſible to pleaſe God by the humbleſt Devotions without Faith, as it is to get to Heaven by the moſt ſoaring righteouſneſs without Chriſt. God ſmiles upon nothing unleſs offer'd to him in the name of his Son, Coloſſ. 3. 17. and who can offer any thing in his name, that hath not Faith in his Bloud? Without Chriſt we can do nothing, John 15. 5. without Union to him which is only cauſed by Faith, whole heaps of Sacrifices are Cyphers, and amount to juſt nothing. God did not enjoin Adam Prayer, Confeſſion of ſin and Sacrifices at the firſt meeting after the fall, till he had utter'd the Promiſe of a Mediator as the object of Faith, whence all thoſe other duties were to flow, which were natural to him in a ſtate of innocence, or inſtituted with a particular reſpect to the Mediator, and preſent ſtate of Adam. Faith was to be the ground of his Obedience; for having by his Apoſtaſie render'd himſelf unable to obey any, he muſt firſt believe, that he might have a new ſtrength, and a new principle of Obedience to other Commands. Which evidenceth the vanity of thoſe men that depend upon a ſelf-righteouſneſs, and a formal ſet of Duties, without regarding the Mediator of Gods appointing. No duty acceptable without Faith. Faith render'd Abels Sacrifice more excellent than Cains, and made it accepted, while Unbelief render'd the other fruitleſs. Miſeries attend this ſtate in this Life, which prepare for the miſeries of a future. Let us therefore embrace the Grace of the golden Scepter, leſt we be cruſht by the weight of the Iron Rod, and kiſs the Son, leſt we feel his wrath. He that believes on the Son hath everlaſting life; and he that believes not the Son, ſhall not ſee life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE Shewing who are UNBELIEVERS.

John 6. 64.

But there are ſome of you that believe not: For Jeſus knew from the beginning who they were that believ'd not, and who ſhould betray him.

AFter Chriſt had diſcours'd of the neceſſity and advantages of Faith in him, whereby a right to eternal life is acquir'd, v. 47. He declares himſelf to be the bread of life, more excellent than the Manna their Fathers eat in the Wilderneſs, which was not able to ſecure them from the invaſion of Death. But, this, ſaith he, is the bread which came down from heaven, v. 50. as if he had pointed to his own Body in the ſpeaking thoſe words; and not only the living bread, that have life in my ſelf, but the enlivening Bread which came down from heaven to give life to the Sons of men, v. 51. and this Bread is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world; when this fleſh ſhall ſuffer and become a Sacrifice to God, if it be eaten by Faith, it ſhall be capable to communicate life to as many as do ſo. But the Jews who heard him, had carnal Conceptions of this Diſcourſe of our Saviour, and rais'd matter of ſcandal from that, which ſhould have been a ground of their Faith, v. 52. How can this man give us his fleſh to eat? How can the eating the fleſh of a man be a thing agreeable to God, and an efficacious means to gain eternal life? Chriſt then perceiving their hardneſs, and ignorance, and their miſinterpretations of his Speech, underſtanding that of an oral eating, which they might by his former Diſcourſe have underſtood figuratively of believing in him; he doth more poſitively aſſert what he had ſpoken before, and that by a ſtrong aſſeveration, which ſome think to be in the nature of an Oath among the Jews, v. 53. Verily, verily I ſay unto you, except you eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his bloud, you have no life in you. 'Tis an undoubted truth, that I am only able to give you life; and beſides, if you believe not in me, 'tis impoſſible that ever you ſhould have any life in you; but if you do believe, Eat my fleſh and drink my bloud, by, or in believing, whoſoever he be, of what quality and condition ſoever, he ſhall have eternal life; and to this end, that he may compleatly enjoy it, I will raiſe him up at the laſt day from the dead; for whatſoever your Fathers did before eat or drink, Manna, and the water from the rock, was neither meat nor drink indeed, but types of me, of my fleſh and bloud; which is the true meat, and the true drink to enliven you and preſerve you in life; and, you know, the food you eat, and the drink you drink, are united to your Bodies, ſo as to become a part of your ſelves, yet not ſo perfectly, but there is a decay decay again, ſo that there remains nothing of that nouriſhment you have took before, but other muſt ſucceed in the room to keep up your Bodies in good plight; but the meat and drink which I give, are of another kind; for they are the cauſe of an inſeparable Union, and inviolable Communion, v. 56. He that eats my fleſh, and drinks my blood, dwells in me, and I in him; natural food not remaining always in the Body, doth not preſerve without freſh meals: But this meat continues in its force and vigor, perpetually uniting the Soul to me, and me to it. The ſource of this life is in the Father, who hath communicated a power to me, to enliven thoſe that have Communion with me; ſo that if any one believe in me, he ſhall live by me, becauſe the ſpring of life in the Father, is communicated to me as the Head, and by me conveyed to all thoſe that are members of me by Faith: We are united by Faith to Chriſt, and therefore not united to him as God, or as God Man, but as God Man Crucified, and riſen again for us, v. 56. And though you have a great opinion of the Manna God ſent down to your Fathers, and it was indeed a great Miracle, and Mercy, and a confirmation of the Miniſtry of Moſes, yet you can take no great pleaſure in that, ſince thoſe to whom it was particularly communicated, were not preſerv'd from Death, and did not live for ever, which this Bread I ſpeak to you of, will certainly effect in you, v. 57. Theſe things, ſaith the Evangeliſt, he ſpake in the Synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum, v. 59. publickly, and in the midſt of his Enemies, declaring thereby his Power, that he knew when he pleas'd, how to repreſs the violence of his adverſaries, and reſtrain their fury from breaking out againſt him. v. 60. Now after Chriſt had ſpoken theſe things, the multitude were ſo far from being ſatisfied, that even ſome of his Diſciples, who had before heard him in other diſcourſes with much contentment, are offended at this as a ſtrange diſcourſe. * They could not conceive how the Fleſh of Chriſt could be eaten, and his Blood drank, ſince the Law forbad them to drink the Blood of any Creature; nor how his Body, if ſlic'd into many pieces, could ſatisfie ſo great a multitude, that were deſirous of Eternal Life; nor could they conceive that his Body was better than Manna, whereof the Scripture ſpeaks ſo highly, and which way ſoever their reaſons turn'd, they could not conceive the meaning of Chriſts Words, and therefore ſaid, this is a hard ſaying *; 'tis incredible, no ſober ear can endure ſuch diſcourſes as theſe, or yield any aſſent thereunto. And though out of ſome veneration of Chriſt, they did not ſpeak this publickly, and enter into a diſpute with him about this argument, yet Chriſt who knew the motions of their Hearts, and what thoughts they had of his diſcourſe, obviates this offence, remitting them to his Reſurrection and Glorification, v. 62. What and if you ſhall ſee the Son of Man aſcend up where he was before, and aſſerting his own Deity: * the import of it is this; have you ſuch carnal conceits of my diſcourſe, as to underſtand the eating my Fleſh, and drinking my Blood, of an oral eating? When you ſhall ſee that this Fleſh ſhall aſcend to Heaven, you will ſee your error, and find it impoſſible to chew my Fleſh with your Teeth; and then you will underſtand, that that which you conceive was not my meaning, but that it is to be meant of a ſpiritual eating and drinking, i. e. in believing; and therefore be not troubled at this diſtance of my Body from you at that time; for if you believe, I ſhall ſtill make good my Word, and promiſe of Life to you, for it is the Spirit whom I ſhall ſend after my aſcenſion into Heaven, who ſhall communicate this Life to you, by ſanctifying and purging you, v. 63. 'Tis the ſpirit that quickens, the fleſh profiteth nothing; the words that I ſpeak to you, they are ſpirit, and they are life: ſhould you eat my Fleſh in that manner which you weakly imagine, it would profit you nothing, neither for the comfort of your Souls, nor Reſurrection of your Bodies; you therefore very much abuſe me, and abuſe your ſelves, to put ſuch a conſtruction upon my Words, for the words I ſpeak are ſpirit and life; they are ſpiritual, and ought to be underſtood ſpiritually, and he that receiveth them in a ſpiritual manner, will find them to be the means of life, and aſſurance of life to him, and a continual ſeed and principle of Eternal Life in him. But it is to little purpoſe, that I ſhould thus comment upon and explain what I have ſaid, ſince there are ſome of you that do not believe, and will not believe in whatſoever manner the Doctrine of the Goſpel ſhould be propos'd

to

to you: v. 64. Upon which the Evangeliſt adds a remark and obſervation of his own concerning the Deity of Chriſt, that being his principal ſcope in writing this Goſpel, which appears to be his purpoſe in the beginning of his diſcourſe, chap. 1. and therefore he records thoſe ſpeeches of Chriſt, wherein his Deity is plainly aſſerted or implyed; and upon ſeveral occaſions in the whole Book points us to thoſe things, which may manifeſt the truth of it, whereof this is one.

Obſerve,

1. How blind is man naturally in the things of God? How hard is it for us to underſtand ſpiritual truths, not by reaſon of their obſcurity, but our own corruption, wherewith the Eyes of our minds are blinded, and our underſtandings darkned? Had an Heathen underſtood the diſcourſe of Chriſt in this manner, he had been more excuſable than thoſe Jews that were taught from Heaven, had the Meſſiah been wrapt up in their Types, might have learn'd ſomething of him by the Paſchal Lamb, the Ceremonies whereof might have inform'd them of this Doctrine; the Lamb ſignified Chriſt, the killing it ſignified the Death of Chriſt, the eating of it ſignified Faith in his Blood, and thereby a participation of him, and conjunction with him; but they being bewitcht with an opinion of a worldly grandeur, neither regarded the Type of him in the Lamb, nor the diſcourſes he frequently made to them. How few of the Jews underſtood the meaning of the Types of the Meſſiah? Nay, how little can we give a full account of the Analogy between the Type and the Antitype, ſince they have both met together?

2. How apt are we to have carnal imaginations of ſpiritual things, and look upon the Word of God with falſe Opticks? What reaſon had thoſe People to imagine that our Saviour, whom they ſaw without ſpot, whoſe actions manifeſted his tenderneſs and kindneſs, who was an exact obſerver of the Law, ſhould Preach a neceſſity of their being Cannibals and Man-eaters, and propoſe to them the drinking the Blood of a Man, when the Blood of any Creature was forbidden in the Law to be ſwallowed by them, and which none but the moſt barbarous Nations have ever practiſed? What need of Prayer and importunity for the Spirit, and diligent enquiry to make us have right Notions of the Words of God? The Spirit quickens, the light of the Spirit is only efficacious to give us an underſtanding of the Goſpel.

3. The Deity of Chriſt is here aſſerted; thrice in the ſpace of four Verſes, v. 61. Jeſus knew in himſelf that his Diſciples murmured at it; he never heard their voice, nor was inform'd by the report of others; he knew it by the Divine Nature, communicating that knowledge to his Humanity; he needed not that any ſhould teſtifie of man, for he knew what was in man, John 2. 25. He did not only know that the Jews which were his Enemies, were offended, but that his Diſciples murmured at it; he knew the motions of the Hearts of his open Enemies, and his unbelieving followers; not the Heart of any in the multitude was lock'd up from his notice; he knew it in and by himſelf, not by another. And v 62. The Son of Man aſcends up where he was before: He was in Heaven before his Incarnation, he therefore had an exiſtence before his Incarnation; he aſcended into Heaven in his Humanity, where he was before in his Divinity. * Chriſt God-man is one Perſon; the Son of God and the Son of Man is one Chriſt, in regard of the Unity of the Perſons: he tells us, while he ſpake on Earth, he is in Heaven, John 3. 13. the Son of God on Earth in ſuſceptâ carne, the Son of Man in Heaven in unitate perſonæ; he was in the Earth, yet in Heaven at the ſame time. If he were a Creature, it were not poſſible that he could be in two places at one and the ſame time. Every Creature hath a limited eſſence, and a limited place, he cannot be in it and out of it at the ſame time: * If he be on Earth and in Heaven at the ſame time, 'tis certain that he is God of an infinite Eſſence, and by conſequence eternal; ſince the reaſon of time is the ſame with that of place, an infinite nature can no more be bounded by time, than it can be limited by place. If he were before in Heaven, it could not be in his Fleſh that he took of the Virgin, he could not be exiſtent in Fleſh before he had Fleſh; he had no Fleſh but from the Virgin, for he was made of a woman, Gal. 4. 4. It muſt be then

* Aſtius in loc.

* Daillée ſur. 3. Jean 13.

then in another nature, wherein he was exiſtent in Heaven before he was incarnate on Earth; there is no other nature but the Divine, Angelical and Humane; Angelical nature he had not, that nature he took not, therefore was not of it, Heb. 2. 16. The humane nature he aſſum'd at the time of the ſtanding of the Jewiſh Temple: it muſt be by the divine nature then wherein he was in Heaven before. A third teſtimony there is in the Text, for Jeſus knew from the beginning who they were that believ'd not, and who ſhould betray him. From the beginning, i. e. ab æterno, ſaith Ferus. He did ſo indeed as God; or from the beginning, i. e. ab initio converſationis diſcipulorum, Luke 1. 2. As they deliver'd them to us, which from the beginning were eye-witneſſes, ſo Brugenſis: from the beginning of any ones following him; his divine nature communicated to his humanity their ſentiments and ſecret opinions of him. The knowledge of thoughts is a perfection peculiar to the Deity: man may conjecture, God only knows them. * He knew alſo who ſhould betray him, when Judas had not then the leaſt thought of ſuch an action, or any intention to it; nor doth it appear, that he had that deſign, till the High Prieſts had diſcover'd their reſolution for his Death; yet Chriſt knew before that he ſhould do it, before Judas knew that he would do it; As he knew Peters denial of him before ever Peter thought of ſuch a thing, and predicted it to Peter, when Peter was reſolv'd againſt it: when Chriſt foretold it to him, then it was, I will not deny thee, though I ſhould die with thee, Mat. 26. 35. But afterwards, his Speech, I know not the man, verified the certainty of Chriſts foreknowledge.

* Muſcul. in loc.

There are ſome of you that believe not.] He brings upon the ſtage the true reaſon of that offence they had taken at his words: He charges not their ignorance, but their Unbelief. He doth not ſay, there are ſome of you that underſtand not, but he dives into the cauſe of their dulneſs, they did not believe. The Fountain of the wrong notions men have of the word, is their want of Faith. And this he ſpeaks to his Diſciples; many of them murmur'd at him for this Diſcourſe, v. 60. many of his Diſciples. They might join themſelves to Chriſt upon many motives, either becauſe of the greatneſs of his Miracles, expectation of preferment from him in his temporal Kingdom they looked for, out of the deſire of novelty, a natural curioſity, perhaps from a wearineſs of the legal Diſcipline, or for gain as Judas did. Some kind of Faith or profeſſion they had, for they were Diſciples. * But when the Unbelief is greater than the aſſent, ſuch a Faith is eſteem'd as nothing; 'tis a Faith that will be eaſily laid aſide upon a ſmall occaſion, and another profeſſion taken up in the room of it, as they did, v. 66. many of his Diſciples went back, and walked no more with him; and though they did follow him for a time, yet all that time of their following him, they had the principle of Apoſtaſie in their Unbelief, though it broke not out into act.

* Schlifling. in loc.

The obſervation that I ſhall handle, lyes plain in the words.

Doctrine. Many under the preaching of the word, and that ſeem to be profeſſors, are real Unbelievers. There may be a profeſt aſſent, when there is not a firm one, or at leaſt a full conſent; a painted Faith, without any ſound perſwaſion of the truth of thoſe things in the heart; many ſtand idle in the Market, and gaze upon the Commodities Chriſt ſets to ſale, but open not their hearts to receive the Trea ſures, that are open'd to them. That Prophecy concerning the miſerable reception he hath in the World, is of a ſtanding and laſting truth to this day, that there is no beauty in him that we ſhould deſire him, that the faces of men are hid from him, that he is deſpis'd and not eſteem'd, Iſa. 53. 2, 3. It was verified in our Saviours time, John 12. 37, 38. and is not ended in ours. There is a ſecret Unbelief in the hearts of men, which is not expreſt with their tongues, but writ in their actions, Luke 7. 30. They rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves, Calvin takes εἰς for ἐν; In themſelves; there was not an open Declamation againſt Johns Baptiſm, but a ſecret diſlike of it by an inward Pride ſwelling up in their minds. There are not only many dead ſtakes in the Hedge, but ſome Flowers upon the Hedge, which are not part of the Garden, or tranſplanted into it, as their proper ſoil. Thoſe that have the deepeſt engagements to God, are often the greateſt rejectors of Chriſt. There was not a Nation which own'd in their worſhip the unity of God, but the Jews: No Nation expected pected and long'd for the redemption by the Meſſiah but they. No Nation had the Promiſes of him but they; they had more particular obligations to Chriſt than any, they were his own, Joh. 1. 11. they were conducted by him through the Wilderneſs, were entruſted with his Oracles, heard his Word, all other Nations were in regard of them none of Chriſts. The whole World indeed belonged to him by the right of Creation and Government; but in regard they had not ſuch particular obligations to him as the Jews, they are not here call'd his own. Yet thoſe that long'd for him, wiſht for his Coming, inſtead of receiving him with the greateſt welcome, rejected him with the greateſt ſpite; as though he that came to redeem them, and perfect the kindneſs ſhown to them in the firſt adminiſtration of the Covenant with them, had deſign'd nothing but their ruine. And ſo now, Chriſt is more contemptible among his own than among ſtrangers; he is not ſo much wrong'd and ſlighted among Heathens that have not known him, as among thoſe to whom the Goſpel is preach'd.

I ſhall ſhow,

1. That it is ſo.
2. Who are they that are Unbelievers.
3. The cauſes of this Unbelief.
4. The Uſe.

1. That it is ſo. In this I ſhall conſider Unbelief in general. Not only as it is a non-acceptance of Chriſt, or a refuſal of him, but as it is a denying credit to any Revelation of God; and therefore when it is generally granted, that God doth make Revelations of his will, and it was a notion own'd by men naturally, and that men do not naturally comply fully with ſuch Revelations as from God; 'tis no wonder that men are ſo often found to be guilty of the refuſals of Chriſt, ſince there is nothing in nature that can make any diſcovery of him, or aſſiſt our belief in him, the whole ſtream of nature being againſt it; yet when ever the Scripture ſpeaks of Unbelief, it intends this reſiſtance of Chriſt in his perſon, or ſhadows repreſenting him, or Promiſes concerning him. But that many or multitudes under the word and common profeſſion of Chriſtianity are Unbelievers, is evident, becauſe;

1. The Scripture always accounts the faithful but few. The Scripture mentions but two of Adams race at one time, and one of them Cain an Unbeliever, and the Head of the Unbelieving World after; and in nine Generations from Seth, the World was ſo corrupted, and Gods ſpirit ſo ſtriven againſt by that Generation, that he pronounceth of it, that all fleſh had corrupted their wayes, Gen 6. 3. 12. and only Noah was found with whom he would eſtabliſh his Covenant, viz. that he ſhould enter into the Ark, and rely upon God in a way of Faith and Obedience, which was a type of the eternal ſecurity men have in Chriſt the true Ark. That Covenant made with Adam in the Promiſe of the Seed of the Woman, was rejected by the whole World, and there was none in the Earth that own'd it, and with whom God would eſtabliſh it, but Noah. This was the Covenant of Grace under the ſhadow of the Ark, as the Sun under a Cloud. It was for their Unbelief in the Mediator, that the old World was condemn'd to periſh in the Waters. For the great work of the ſpirit of Chriſt, by which he preach'd to them in thoſe days, 1 Pet. 3. 18, 19. is againſt this ſin. Chriſt hath not only ſuffer'd by the Unbelief of men in theſe laſt times, but from the beginning. So that if his Divinity had been as capable of ſuffering as his humanity, he had ſuffer'd by the violence of men in former Ages, as well as in the latter; for the old World ſpar'd him not, but provokt him by their incredulity of his promiſe. Of ſix hundred thouſand Iſraelites there are but two expreſly mention'd, that believ'd in Chriſt, ſhadow'd under the promiſe of entering into Canaan. It was their Unbelief in Chriſt made them uncapable of entring into reſt, Heb. 3. 19. for the Apoſtle diſcourſeth there againſt Unbelief in Chriſt, and brings the miſery which fell upon their Anceſtors as a motive againſt it. A remnant only in the time of Ahab, in that populous Nation; about ſeven thouſand among a great multitude; for the ten Tribes could not well be fewer than Judah and Benjamin, who were in one Army one hundred and eighty thouſand choſen men, 1 Kings 12. 21. And in the Apoſtles time the caſe was much the ſame, for which he cites this paſſage out of the Kings, Rom. 11. 4, 5. There is a remnant according to the election of grace λεῖμμα, a ſmall piece out of a whole Cloth. Chriſt is a Stone of ſtumbling, a Rock of offence, even to the Houſe of Judah and Iſrael, the only Church God had in the World, Iſai. 8. 14. and Believers ſo rare among them, that they were as Wonders and Prodigies which are not often ſeen, v. 18. In the days of his Fleſh few believed in him: John Baptiſt affirms, that no man receives his teſtimony, John 3. 32. no man comparatively to thoſe that refus'd him; the number of Believers being as a few grains of a Commodity ſcatter'd out of a Scale. A few of the common People believ'd in him, and but one Nicodemus and Joſeph of Arimathea of the higher ſort: But the generality of the Jews, to whom both the Promiſe and Offer of the Meſſiah were made, are charg'd with unwillingneſs to come under his wing, Mat. 23. 37. with fooliſh excuſes to abſent themſelves from his Feaſt, Luke 14. 18. with a reſolute reſiſtance againſt his Call, Mat. 22. 3. and ſome that were very forward, and in general ſeem'd to accept of all his terms, and to be content to do whatſoever he required, when it came to the puſh did ſtrike off and went away grieved, as the young man, Mark 10. 17. 21. Judas profeſt and Preach'd him, and had not a mite of Faith in him; and ſome at the laſt ſhall plead their propheſying in his Name, caſting out Devils, and doing many wondrous Works in his Name, who were never united to him by Faith, nor ſhall ever raign with him in Glory, Mat. 7. 22, 23. And when he comes at laſt, though there may be a fair Harveſt of Profeſſors, there will be a Famine of Faith, Luke 18. 8.

2. Unbelief is natural to man, and therefore 'tis no wonder that many under the Preaching the Goſpel, and that ſeem to be profeſſors, are Unbelievers.

(1.) There is an enmity in nature to the Grace of Faith in Chriſt. Since in a ſtate of Nature men are in conſtant Arms againſt God, they have no natural inclination to give credit to any revelation of God: Men do not uſually believe their Enemies, or truſt them without a caution. Since we firſt left God, 'tis natural to us in all ſtraights to have recourſe to ſenſible Objects; and becauſe we once left him, we are loth to return to him, becauſe our natural Pride refuſeth to charge our ſelves with the folly of our firſt revolt. Man deſpiſeth Chriſt, Iſai. 49. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord to him whom man deſpiſeth, to him whom the Nation abhors. Man in his fallen eſtate would have a bottom of his own to ſtand upon; he is abhor'd by the Nation, i. e. by the Nation of the Jews, called the Nation, as being more peculiarly under Gods Conduct, the Nation to whom he was peculiarly ſent; and therefore when Chriſt came, 'tis ſaid there was no man, none to anſwer his call, Iſai. 50. 2. no man naturally: And this is not ſo much from a dulneſs of underſtanding, as a natural diſaffection. Since man can underſtand things that are abſtruſe, and with a livelineſs ſearch into thoſe things which are pleaſant to his nature, and eaſily believe them; his not believing the myſteries revealed by God, is from the reluctancy of his nature againſt him, and unwillingneſs to aquaint himſelf with thoſe things which may over-rule his ſenſuality, and natural inclinations to pleaſure. A man may ſooner ſuffer for a truth of Chriſt than believe, becauſe there may be many motives in corrupt nature, to perſwade a man to ſuffer for an opinion, as a repute of conſtancy, courage, an affectation of a fame (ſuch a vanity as acted that perſon that burnt Diana's Temple, that he might not be forgot in the World); yea, a man may in diſtruſtfulneſs of Gods Providence be weary of his life, and be deſirous in ſome creditable way to be ſtript of it, but Faith finds no aſſiſtance in Nature; Pride can be no encouragement to it, as to ſuffering, 'tis a Grace which wholly empties a man of himſelf, lays him in the Duſt, ſuffers not any ambition of a Righteouſneſs of his own, ſtrips him of all his own Excellency. Since Pride is a mans darling in Nature, every thing that lays it low, is abhor'd by Nature. There is as great an oppoſition between the Heart of Man and the Myſteries of God, as there is between Fire and Water. Our reſiſtance of the Spirit is natural, the Holy Ghoſt never overcomes without ſtriving, Gen. 6. 3. the principle of the Fleſh oppoſeth that of the Spirit in a good man, much more in an unrenewed Heart; nay, there is an enmity in the Heart againſt the truth of Chriſt, becauſe it is truth, John 8. 45. Becauſe I tell you the truth, you believe me not. * Not that men think that they hate the truth, when they reject Christ; but they are led by an instinct of the Devil, who is their Father, and the Father of Lies, against the truth, as there is something in it that doth not please their natural affections: As those that are prone to contention, cannot indure the counsels of Peace, because they are the counsels of Peace; and those that are given to drunkenness, cannot endure admonitions to sobriety, because they tend to sobriety; so when men love lyes by Nature, and the power of the Devil their Father, they hate any thing that tends to Divine Truth.

* Muſcul. in loc.

(2) The attendants on faith are against the grain of nature, Unbelief therefore and the attendants on it are suitable to nature. No man is naturally willing to part with a dear member, a right eye, mortifie carnal affections, deny his dearest self: nay men are hardly brought to consider the things of faith, examine themselves about the nature of faith, they are drawn to the touch-stone as hardly as a man to some sharp punishment. Who is naturally willing to crucifie that which is incorporated with him, the flesh; to deny what is dearest to him, himself? If the Apostle delighted in the Law of God after the inward man, Rom. 7. 22. An unrenewed man by the rule of contraries delights in the Law of sin after the inward man; (sin hath the chief fort in his soul) and he that doth so, is as unwilling to have it slain, as to lop off one of his principal limbs or fling his whole estate into the Sea. Hence Christ pronounceth it hard for a rich man, or one that trusts in his riches, to enter into heaven, Mat. 19. 23, 24. We are naturally enemies to holiness, which is the fruit of faith, and therefore to the Person of Christ, as holy, which cannot, because of his Holiness, be embraced by one deeply in love with sin. The Laws of Christ are too spiritual to be entertain'd by a carnal mind; his ways too strict to be trod by a loose spirit. The inward as well as the outward man must come under his Scepter; And this is a hard task, the stomach swells against it. The righteousness of Christ is a thing without us; 'tis counted a dishonour to us to be beggars at anothers door for happiness; there must be a righteousness also within us, and against this the whole legion of devilish corruptions riseth up in arms. Not any part of the train belonging to faith, that nature can look friendly upon: we are unlike God, and we naturally hate every thing that would render us conformable to him.

(3) Corrupt reason is an enemy to faith, and a friend to unbelief. The life of sense is the first life we live, after that a life of reason which forestals faith; reason is the supreme principle in a man before faith sets footing; it manageth all the actions, and therefore opposes that which would impair part of its Soveraignty. Therefore the oppositions that are made to the Gospel, are call'd reasonings against the knowledge of Christ, which are strong holds, 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. Pulling down strong holds, casting down imaginations, λογισμὸς reasonings. Reason exalts it self, and will not submit to revelation, unless it finds marks upon it suitable to its own principles. Not that God doth impose upon men: But whenever he hath made a new revelation of his Will, he hath attended it with signs and undeniable evidences that it was of Divine Authority. But after once 'tis manifest that the revelation it self is from God, the principles and doctrines delivered in it are not to be cited and tryed at the bar of our reason Yet as man sets his will against the Law of God, so he lifts up his reason against the wisdom of God. As enmity to God in the will is as natural to man since the Fall as the will; so contradicting reasonings against the knowledge of Christ are as natural as his understanding. As it is impossible a man can be a rational creature without understanding and will, so it is impossible he can be a carnal man without prejudices in his mind and disaffections in his will against God, Rom. 8. 7. The carnal mind is enmity against God, 'tis not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Unbelief therefore is natural to man. Therefore when God subdues the soul to the obedience of faith, it is in a way of conquest, captivating the reasonings and thoughts of the mind to Christ. Besides, reason is the excellency and glory of man: the more rational men are, the more they are in esteem; and it is not easie to part with a dignity in submission to that which the heart naturally counts foolishness. Adam by his affecting to know as God, hath convey'd a Principle to men, whereby they think themselves as wise as God. Thus they in the Text cenſur'd Chriſts diſcourſe by their own miſtaken reaſon, believ'd him not, and at laſt departed from him.

(4.) The common Unbelief of men in things evident to ſenſe, manifeſts the naturalneſs and eaſineſs of it in the higher Myſteries more remote from ſenſe. This is clear'd by that one inſtance of mens flattering themſelves into hopes of a perpetual life on earth. Though they ſeem to aſſent that they ſhall dye, yet how doth the whole courſe of many mens actions ſpeak another language, and give the lye to themſelves; acting in the extremes of their lives, as though they were to linger out an unlimited term of years? If we do not ſeriouſly believe that, whereof we have every day freſh objects, and undeniable teſtimonies beating in upon our ſenſe, how naturally inclinable muſt we be, not to believe that which is at a diſtance from us, and whereof we have not ſuch immediate ſenſible demonſtrations? If we believe not earthly things, how ſhall we believe heavenly? Joh. 3. 12. If we believe not things that are agreeable to the light of Nature, that ariſe from the dictates of our own conſciences, but manifeſt our own unbelief of them by a practice quite oppoſite to them, how ſhall we believe the heavenly things Chriſt acquaints us with? How ſhall we believe thoſe things which are not ſeen by a natural light, that have no foundation in the nature and reaſon of men, but are purely to be diſcern'd by the light of Heaven? What hath ſome foundation in Nature is far eaſier to be believ'd, than what hath only ſupernatural revelation for its bottom. The Goſpel is a remedy which neither men, nor Angels could find out; a way which man in the ſtate of innocence was not acquainted with, nor in a ſtate of corruption without ſpecial diſcovery.

(5.) We have naturally jealouſies of God. Since enmity to God was planted by the Devil in the nature of man, no friendly act can paſs from the creature to God. Without a change of Nature, ſuſpicions of God do as naturally ariſe in the heart, as fire aſcends upward, or a ſtone falls downward. Who in a ſtate of diſtance from, and contradiction to God, can readily believe, that God ſhould love men ſo much as to give his Son for thoſe he had no need of, that were lumps of vanity, and enemies to his Glory? And yet if he would give his Son for them, that it ſhould be to a death ſo painful and ſhameful? * The fear that Adam had, when frighted at the voice of God, he hid himſelf among the trees of the Garden, hath remain'd in part with his poſterity, when they reflect upon their crimes. We meaſure the Nature of God by the qualities of our own; and becauſe we are not forward to remit mens offences againſt us, we are apt to imagine that God hath not clemency enough to pardon the faults committed againſt him. Hence it is that perſons deeply humbled under a ſenſe of the Curſes of the Law, are ready to lick up the duſt under the feet of Chriſt, and beholding an abſolute neceſſity of him, are with much ado brought to believe. Though the deſign of God in ſetting out Chriſt for a propitiation be declar'd to them, the ſufficiency of his Merit, the acceptation of it by God, the fruits others have found of it, that the deſign of Chriſts coming was to eaſe thoſe in that condition, yet they are hardly induc'd to lay aſide thoſe jealouſies they have of God. For this cauſe perhaps God doth not put us off in his promiſe with a ſingle I will betroth thee unto me: But repeats it three times to aſſure us of his reality, Hoſ. 2. 19, 20. How doth Abrahams incredulity break out after a ſpiritual promiſe, Gen. 15. 1. I am thy ſhield, and thy exceeding great reward. And Abraham ſaid, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? As much as to ſay, I would have deeds, and not words; I have had ſuch promiſes before, yet they are not perform'd. After Gods diſcourſe with him, 'tis ſaid v. 6. he believed in the Lord, after this ſecond repetition of the promiſe. But when it was declar'd to him before, we have not that remark upon him that he believ'd. And God complains of this carriage, Hoſ. 7. 13. I have redeemed them, אפרם I will redeem them, 'tis my purpoſe to redeem them by my Son, as ſome underſtand it, yet they have ſpoken lyes againſt me; they think I have no good intentions towards them, but thoughts of evil. We think him falſe when he is true, and cannot lye: we think him an enemy when he is a Friend. We are apt to think God hath deſigns upon us, and wants ſincerity in his Propoſals. So after the deluge, though God had promis'd that he would no more drown the World, the People would not believe it, but would be erecting a

Tower

* Daillé ſur 3 Jean Serm. 9. p. 344.

Tower to preſerve them from ſinking again in thoſe mighty Waters. Though Noahs Sons were at that time living, had known the promiſe of God, and they had often ſeen the Rainbow, the ſign of that Covenant in Heaven; yet Gen. 11. 4. Let us build us a City and a Tower whoſe top may reach unto Heaven, and let us make us a name leſt we be ſcatter'd again upon the face of the whole earth. If this were the reaſon, as ſome think it ſhows, that they were as Unbelieving of the Promiſe of God after the Deluge, as the old World had been of his threatning before it. But it is evident in the Iſraelites, for whom God had done as much as might be to bind them to a Belief of him, he had ſhower'd Plagues upon their Enemies, and miraculous Mercies upon themſelves, fed and water'd them in the Wilderneſs; yet they apprehended God had a deſign upon them to deſtroy them, and were ſcarce ever free from expreſſing their Jealouſies by their murmuring, till at laſt their Unbelief was a Bar to their entering into Canaan, and the utter ruine of that Generation.

(6.) Affecting to ſtand by a righteouſneſs of our own is natural to us, and therefore Unbelief is natural. Adam was to have lived upon his own righteouſneſs, in the ſtate of Innocence; ſince we are fallen this relique of nature is in us, to deſire to riſe by our own ſtrength. We would find matter of acceptance and acquittance in our ſelves. Some throw themſelves upon a heap of external duties, as the Heathens had recourſe to their Sacrifices, thinking to appeaſe God by the bloud of Brutes: and Believers themſelves are ſometimes too apt to cling as faſt to their inherent Graces, as to Chriſt himſelf, (we have forſaken all and followed thee, what ſhall we have therefore, Mat. 19. 27.) And ſet Chriſts Crown upon that Head. What pains had the Apoſtle to work the Romans and Galatians from their own righteouſneſs. A deſire of a legal juſtification is inbred. This might be the caſe of them in the Text, when Chriſt would take them off from their admir'd ſhadows, to feed only upon him the ſubſtance; to eat his fleſh and drink his bloud, to believe only in him for eternal Life. Sure I am, the Jewiſh Nation ſplit themſelves to ſhivers upon this Rock, in a calm Sun-ſhine of the Goſpel, in endeavouring the eſtabliſhment of their own righteouſneſs, and not ſubmitting to the righteouſneſs of God, Rom. 10. 3. This ſeems to begin early. Before the Floud it is uncertain, whether Idolatry was ſet up in the World, or whether after the Floud, before the confuſion of Languages; but reſting upon their ſervices, and neglecting the Promiſe of the Mediator ſeems to be that wherein their Unbelief did conſiſt. * The Patriarchs, Adam, Seth, &c. had the promiſe of a Mediator, and of pardon of ſin in him, and had external Rites and Modes of Sacrificing deliver'd to them by God as ſigns of the Promiſe and props of their Faith; theſe Rites and Sacrifices, they, i. e. the old World kept up and perform'd, without conſidering the doctrine of the promiſe and faith: and it is likely that they entertain'd an opinion, that by thoſe Ceremonies they did merit the favour of God, and pardon of ſin. This is likely to be Cains miſcarriage, he did offer to God, but without that faith which ſeaſon'd Abels Sacrifice, Heb. 11. 4. his eye therefore was not fixed upon the promiſed ſeed, but probably expected Gods acceptance of his offering and favourable return to him upon the account of the offering it ſelf. The object of the Worſhip was the ſame, Cain brought his offering to the Lord, Gen. 3. 3. the difference was in the Sacrifice and in the inward principle of offering. His offering did not repreſent the Mediator, as a bloody Sacrifice would have done; the principle of his offering was not faith in the Mediator; for though he deſir'd to be accepted, yet he deſir'd that acceptation without reſpect to the promiſed ſeed. After the Deluge, the boldneſs of men grew to a greater height, they fram'd other Deities, and ſo departed from the knowledge of the true God, and the promiſe of a Redeemer. And ſo likewiſe after Moſes, when Ceremonies were inſtituted to be memento's of a Mediator, the multitude, though they profeſt their belief in the promiſe of a Meſſiah, and were the only Church God had in the World, yet were forgetful of the intent and deſign of this promiſe, and reſted not upon it for the free pardon of their ſins for the ſake of this Mediator; but fancied that their ſins were forgiven for the ſake of the Rites and Sacrifices under the Law. After the Goſpel ſhone upon the World, yet the Profeſſors of it were very inclinable to expect a juſtification by their own works: works: To oppoſe which was the great deſign of the Apoſtle in his Epiſtles to the Gentile Churches. And afterward men profeſſing the Chriſtian Religion ſwerv'd from the main principle of it, and expected to gain pardon by Monaſtick Vows, Oblations in the Maſs, Interceſſions of dead men, rather than by Chriſt. So that this Principle of a ſelf righteouſneſs and dependance upon external ſervices, with a neglect of the Mediator, being the thing God contended with the Jews for, as well as their Idolatry, before the Incarnation of Chriſt, and with others after his Death and Reſurrection, and this being an evil which runs in ſtream of nature, we may well ſuppoſe it to be the main thing which was the the cauſe of the wickedneſs, and the deſtruction of the old World, ſince it is not clear that they had fram'd any Idols to worſhip. And ſince bare-fac'd Idolatry is exploded among us, this principle of a ſelf righteouſneſs is more ſpiritually lurking in us, whereby we invalidate the redemption by Chriſt.

* Melanct. loc. octav. p. 230. 23. r.

[1.] The eloquence of Chriſt was admirable; Grace was in his Lips: ſince he was both the word of God, and wiſdom of God; his words were enough to divide the Soul, and break the Rock; they were like a Hammer to bruiſe, like a gentle ſhower to mollify; yet how few were either broken by his thunders, or melted by his lightnings? He acquainted them with the truth, yet they did not believe, Joh. 8. 46. His Miracles were ſtupendous, and above the united force of men and devils; they were undeniably the works of his father, Joh. 10. 37, 38. yet they believed not. Nicodemus who had ſome reſpect for him, and inclinations to him, thinking him a prophet come from God, Joh. 3. 2. underſtood no more the Doctrine of Faith in Chriſt, and a new Birth, after Chriſts explanation of it, than he did at the firſt Declaration, v. 9. How can theſe things be? He was a man of eminency, and in Iſrael too, v. 10. It had been no wonder if one of the common people had been ignorant, or a great Heathen Philoſopher bred up in the ſink of Idolatry, ſhould neither have underſtood nor believed. But a Maſter, a Doctor in Iſrael, a Reader of the Prophets, ſo lately taught by John Baptiſt, who was ſent to prepare him for the Doctrine of the Meſſiah, not to believe that which was clear in the Prophets, is a Declaration of the natural ſtupidity of men in the things of Chriſt. It was but a little Faith the Apoſtles had, who were conſtant attendants upon Chriſt, Spectators of his Miracles, Hearers of his inſtructions, and thoſe more plainly deliver'd to them than to the multitude. * How often doth our Saviour upbraid them with the ſlowneſs of their hearts to believe? The Death and Reſurrection of Chriſt are the two neceſſary foundations of our Redemption, the one of his ſatisfaction, the other of his diſcharge; yet his Diſciples were hardly brought to believe either of theſe: and though Chriſt did plainly aſſert both, eſpecially the certainty and neceſſity of his Death, in ſeveral Diſcourſes with them, yet Peter who had the greateſt inſight into the myſtery of Chriſt, preſum'd to rebuke him for ſpeaking of ſo incredible a thing as the Death of him, who by his own confeſſion was the Son of God. And for his Reſurrection, though he had often aſſerted it ſhould be in as plain words as might be, and fixed the time, within three days, yet they had not the leaſt thought of it, and when it was reported to them that he was riſen, they had not Faith to believe it, though confirm'd by Witneſſes of their own Company, whoſe honeſty they knew to be without exception; and it was ſo great, that he gives them a ſharp rebuke for it, Mark 16. 14. He upbraided them with their Unbelief and hardneſs of heart, becauſe they believed not them which had ſeen him after he was riſen. After the Apoſtles were riſen to a great height of Faith, they found it difficult to perſwade men with all the miraculous aſſiſtances of the Holy Ghoſt. That firſt great Miracle of the deſcent of the ſpirit upon them, Act. 2. 6-11. wherein the majeſty and power of God, and the divine authority of Chriſt, were evidently manifeſted, in endowing poor Fiſhermen with the gift of Tongues, who were never out of the Confines of Judæa, were skill'd in no Language but their own, could now ſpeak not one or two Languages, but many, not thoſe of the Neighbours, but thoſe of the greateſt diſtance, with which Nations they could not have had any Commerce; yet what an unreaſonable conſtruction do the Unbelieving Jews put upon it, v. 13. theſe men are full of new wine. No reaſon could ſecond their reproach; ſuch an exceſs had rather hinder'd their ſpeaking plainly in their own Tongue, than furniſht them with an ability to ſpeak ſenſe in Languages they never before underſtood. Unbelief invents fooliſh reaſons againſt that which hath the cleareſt reaſon to ſupport it. Are our Souls leſs over-grown with an enmity to God? Is Unbelief leſs natural to us than it was to them under the power of ſo many Miracles, the Miracles of Chriſt, when they call'd him a Wine-Bibber, and the Miracle of the deſcent of the Spirit, when they aſſert the Heavenly gift to be the effect of Drunkenneſs? If it were not ſetled in nature, what is the reaſon that among multitudes to whom the Goſpel was preach'd, ſo few embrac'd it, though the things propos'd were in themſelves deſirable, and ſuted ſo well in reſpect of the bleſſedneſs promis'd, to the natural appetites of men? It was the complaint, that few believ'd their report. In all Ages many, nay moſt have been ſo far from embracing Chriſt, that they perſecuted the Goſpel and Profeſſors of it. He hath been deſpis'd not only by the blinder ſort of people, but by many of the moſt elevated underſtandings in earthly affairs: By the Jews too, who had the promiſes of the Meſſiah made to them, who expected him about that time, who had ſo many Prophecies decyphering him, which all had their accompliſhment in his perſon; who were amaz'd at the Miracles wrought in his Life, and thoſe which attended him at his Death; and can Unbelief now be leſs natural to us who have thoſe things by report, than it was to them who were Eye-Witneſſes of them? I might add alſo, that the production of Faith by an Almighty Power, is a teſtimony of the naturalneſs of Unbelief. For were it not ſo, there would be no more need of the arm of Omnipotency to be reveal'd in the engendring this grace in our hearts, than in furniſhing us with any humane ſcience, for which we have a natural capacity in our underſtandings. Since Faith cannot be infuſed but by an Almighty ſtrength, Unbelief cannot be diſpoſſeſſed but by the ſame power, and therefore is rooted in our Nature, and friendly embraced by it. 'Tis therefore obvious enough, I hope, that ſince the Scripture hath told us of the paucity of Believers in all ages, and that the exceeding naturalneſs of it to us is ſo great and plain, it muſt be granted, that there may be in this age and among us, as great a number of Unbelievers under the preaching of the Goſpel, and among Profeſſors too, proportionably, as there have been in other ages and places of the world.

2. Who are Unbelievers.

No queſtion but there are many among us inwardly guilty of a notional Unbelief, many more guilty of a practical. We have no open Idolatry among us, I mean thoſe of the Proteſtant Party in oppoſition to the Romaniſts; yet is there not an inward practical and interpretative Idolatry in the converſations of men? There is not an abſolute Atheiſm, or a plain and open denial of a God, yet there is a denial of him in works, Tit. 1. 16. As God, ſo Chriſt, may be denied in works under a profeſſion of him. The teſtimony of works is deeper and clearer than that of words; the frame of mens hearts is rather to be meaſur'd by what they do, than by what they ſay. As ſuch men therefore are more notorious Atheiſts, who believe a God and walk contrary to that belief, than thoſe that deny the Being of a God, and do thoſe things which are more agreeable to the Laws of God than the other; ſo thoſe are more notorious Unbelievers that profeſs an aſſent to the Doctrine of Chriſt and Faith in him, than thoſe that deny his Perſon and Office, and yet walk in ways more correſponding with the ſtrictneſs of his Precepts. All that profeſs faith in Chriſt, without the vital operations of Faith, are Unbelievers. We can no more ſay a man believes, who hath no eſſential act of Faith, than that a man lives, who exerciſeth no function of life. There may be a nominal life with a real death, like thoſe of Sardis, Revel. 3. 2. a faith in appearance without a faith in reality. There may be an abhorring of Chriſt with the Soul even by Judah, Zach. 11. 8. My ſoul loathed them, their ſoul alſo abhorred me. 'Tis as impoſſible there can be faith without fruits, as that a tree can live without bringing forth fruits proper to its kind. There is no queſtion but thoſe are Infidels, that have an opinionative contradiction againſt the Goſpel, who are a gainſaying people, as the Jews are termed, Rom. 10. 21. who at this day call the New Teſtament a heap of lyes בְּלִיּוֹן אָוֶן. * Such that may be of

of that Popes mind, Gregory IX. who is reported to have called Moſes and Chriſt, as well as Mahomet, tres Baintatores, the common Barreters, or Incendiaries of the World. And as little are they to be counted Believers, that eſteem the Chriſtian Religion no better than a certain ſuſpicion of one Jeſus being dead, who is affirmed to be alive, Act. 25. 19. that have ſome floating imaginations of the truth of it, but not a ſetled certainty. Thoſe that reſiſt the grace of God: That value Chriſt no more than a dog doth a heap of ſpices or a bag of delicate perfumes: Thoſe that ſtrike the blood of the Lamb of God upon their threſholds to be mixt with the dirt of their feet, which they ſhould ſprinkle upon the poſts of their doors, the faculties of their ſouls.

1. How many that go under the Name of Chriſtians are ignorant and inconſiderate? He that is not rooted in ſpiritual knowledge, can never be rooted in faith: they that ſee not the beauty of Chriſt, can never account him a fit object of truſt. Faith can never be the daughter of ignorance. Only thoſe that know Chriſt, will put their truſt in him (Pſal. 9. 10. They that know thy Name, will put their truſt in thee; for thou Lord haſt not forſaken them that ſeek thee) and that know him to be one that doth not forſake them that ſeek him. Belief is an intellectual act; how can any believe till they know what they are to believe? The object muſt be known, before any faith can be exerciſed about it. If we would believe a man, we muſt firſt know him to be a perſon of credit. The ground muſt be known to be firm, before any man will truſt the weight of his body upon it. We muſt know God in his ways ſo as to judge him faithful, before we can rely upon his promiſe. Sarah judged him faithful that had promiſed, Heb. 11. 11. If there be no light in the mind, there can be no motion in the will: He that walks in darkneſs, knows not whither he goes, Joh. 12. 35. nor what to lay hold on for his ſupport. How can they be counted Believers, that know not what Chriſt is, what Offices he is inveſted with, that cannot give an account of the Doctrine of Chriſt? That never conſider'd the Nature of a Chriſt, the neceſſity of a Saviour, the corruption of their Nature, the immortality of their Souls, the Judgment to come; who have only ſome looſe thoughts of theſe things, and therefore cannot have but a looſe and ſhadowy faith at the beſt, which is an Unbelief in the account of Chriſt? And are there not many among us, that underſtand not what Chriſt, and a ſpiritual Righteouſneſs is, that know not their own wants, and ſo cannot value Chriſts worth?

2. How many receive not the Goſpel upon a Divine account? There are ſeveral outward Engines which move men to profeſs the Chriſtian Religion; Authority of Magiſtrates and Superiors, Education and Cuſtom, reſpect to ſome perſons valued by them. Some are Chriſtians, becauſe Chriſtianity hath been handed to them from their Anceſtors, and can give no other reaſon why they are ſo, but becauſe they were bred up in it. The Religion of the State is the rule alſo of many mens Religion: what elſe ſhould make thoſe Tribes of Iſrael, who were fond of the Temple-worſhip in Solomons time, turn ſpeedy Votaries to the Calves at Dan and Bethel under Jeroboams reign, and at laſt revolt totally from God? Such a founded Chriſtianity is no more ſufficient to denominate any man a Believer, than a flock of ſheep uſed to the voice of the ſhepherd from their firſt yeaning, and to follow his whiſtle whereſoever he goes, can upon that account be ſaid to be rational creatures.

[1.] The motives of this Faith are meerly humane. The object of Faith is divine, but the motive humane; the Faith therefore produced by it cannot be divine: the effect cannot be of an higher nature than the cauſe. This belief is as vain as Chriſt declares the Worſhip to be which is taught by the precepts of men, Mat. 15. 9.

* Ungind. Tom. 1. p. 323.

* Though they have the material object of Faith, yet they have not the formal object which is the Divine Authority or Truth revealed in it. They take it up from cuſtom and the inſtructions of their childhood; but not from the true motive of faith. As ſome men may perform acts of moral vertue, not from principles and motives of vertue, and ſo may do a righteous act, though not righteouſly; ſo thoſe have the object of faith without a principle of faith, and pretend a belief of of the truth, but not believingly. The material part of Christianity without the formal, is just like a carcass which hath the matter of a man, but not the enlivening and quickening soul. Though they hit upon the profession of the true Religion by some humane inducements, this makes them no more Christians, and Believers, than if a company of wandering cattle gone astray from their owner, should break into some ground belonging to their true master in that place whither they are run, should be understood to do it with an intention to come into their masters possession, it being an act of chance in them, and not of choice. 'Tis not the excellency of Christ, but the happiness of an education, the piety of Parents and Magistrates, the birth and not the judgment makes them Christians: they are Believers by conformity, not by principle. He that embraceth the Christian Religion upon such slight, or wrong grounds, is so far from being a Believer, that he rather sins, because he doth not use his reason God hath endowed him with, aright in the things of God; was the speech of a Philosopher, whose new notions have been thought to minister too great an occasion to the Atheism of our times.

[2.] This kind of Faith hath no stronger a foundation than the belief of any Heathen or Idolater in the World. The same motives that excite the Papists to observe the Superstitions and Idolatries of Rome, a Heathen to adore the Idols of his Country, a Turk to cry up the divine authority of Mahomet, a Jew to hate the Lord of Life, because they have receiv'd those ways of profession from their Ancestors, and have suckt them in with the milk of their Infancy; such and no higher motives have common Christians for their Faith in Christ. The same arguments which make others refuse him, make them profess him, and had they been educated in any of those ways, they would have been as fond Adorers of Idols, as now they are Professors of Christ, and would have been as ready to drink Bloud as Wine, as Sheep will follow their first Leader into a Slough, as well as a fat pasture. This is no better than to be Heathens in Christianity, since they both agree in the same inducements of their Faith, which can be no more called a true Faith, than the Athenians Altar to the unknown God, could be call'd a true worship, Act. 17. 23. they worshipped they knew not whom, and they knew not why. This is an Unbelieving Belief, and a Childish Christianity, if it proceeds no further. True Faith may be usher'd in this way; as the Faith of the Samaritans was by the report of the Woman, testifying that Christ had told her all that ever she did, John 4. 39. But afterwards was transplanted to another ground, and set upon a stock of knowledge, v. 42. Now we believe, not because of thy saying, for we have heard, and know, that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the World; And indeed was a greater Faith than we find at that time in the Apostles; for they believe him not only to be the Messiah, and a Saviour of the Seed of Abraham, as the Apostles did, but of the World, acknowledging thereby the whole World sunk into misery, under a necessity of a Redeemer, and this Jesus to be the person appointed by God for the redemption of it.

[3.] Such a belief is rather a disparaging of God and Christ, than a believing in them. If we embrace divine truths out of affection or interest in persons, or parties, and for the sake of the instruments which convey them, rather than of God who reveals them, we believe not in God but in man, our Faith terminates in the Publisher, whether Parent, or Magistrate, or Neighbour; not in God. If the motive of our Belief is not the authority of God, but the influence of some Creature on us, or because wise, learned, and holy men believe it, we postpone the credit of a wise and holy God to that of a wise and holy Creature, and ascribe a greater veracity to that than to the Creator. So that though the matter of our Faith be divine, yet the manner of our acknowledging discredits the authority and faithfulness of God. As if we believe this, or that divine truth deliver'd in the word, not because it is there deliver'd, and hath the stamp of Gods Authority upon it, but because it is in it self undeniable to principles of reason, we believe our selves rather than God, and thereby reproach and dishonour him, by setting our reason, not as a Subject to him, but a judge of him, and what he dictates. The Creation of the World is a matter of Faith reveal'd in the word, Heb. 11. 3. By Faith we understand, &c. 'Tis also a truth assented to by reason.

But if we acknowledge the Creation of the World only upon the account of reaſon, and not in reſpect of the revelation of God, God accounts it not as an honour to him, for it is not a reſpect to the word of God, but to our own rational principle. To believe therefore a divine truth upon humane grounds, is to regard man as more infallible, true, and honeſt than God himſelf. As we are to obey becauſe God Commands, though men may command the ſame things too; and if we perform a thing meerly becauſe our Superiours enjoin us, though it be a divine command alſo, and part of the Law of God, 'tis not an Obedience to God, but to our Superiours: ſo when we believe a divine truth reveal'd to the World by God, not upon the credit of God, but the credit of the perſons that acquaint us with it; 'tis not a Belief of God but of man: as if a Maſter orders his Servant to go upon ſuch an Errand, and he chearfully and willingly goes, becauſe he hath ſome buſineſs to do that way by the bye; this chearfulneſs ariſeth not from a principle of Obedience to his Maſter, but from the opportunity of ſerving his own turn. As it is thus in Obedience, ſo it is alſo in the belief of men. Alſo when men will aſſent to no more of the Articles of the word than what is made clear to them by natural reaſon, as well as Scripture-arguments, this is not a Faith. Though they believe ſome of the Fundamentals, yet if they believe not all thoſe that are fundamental, they truly believe not any one; becauſe if they did believe one upon account of the Divine Authority revealing it, they would believe all. For as it is a certain Maxim, He that breaks one Law of God, breaks the whole, Jam. 2. 10. becauſe he deſpiſeth the Authority commanding; ſo he that diſcredits one Article of Faith, believes not any, becauſe he undervalues the Authority revealing one as well as the other. Though the materials of Faith be divided into many things, even as many Truths as are reveal'd, yet the foundation and motive of Faith is but one, viz. the Authority of God: As though the Law be divided into ſeveral commands, yet the Authority commanding all, is one and the ſame. He that refuſeth a belief to any one Article, though he doth not deny all, yet he believes none with a Divine Faith; for if he did believe any one with a Divine Faith, he hath the ſame reaſon to believe every one, becauſe the ſame Authority runs through the veins of all, and is as infallible in one as another. If we receiv'd any one Truth as teſtified by the Spirit of God, we ſhould receive all the Truths the Spirit witneſſeth to. Thoſe that are charg'd in the Text with unbelief, might believe many things that Chriſt ſaid; for they are called his Diſciples: but not receiving them from him as a perſon appointed by God, as the Meſſiah, they are ſaid not to believe; all their faith in other things was no faith.

Let us then try our our ſelves by this, what are the motives of our profeſſion of Chriſtianity? If they be meerly humane, we are Unbelievers in our believing, and are the Diſciples of men, not the Diſciples of Chriſt. A profeſſion now cannot lay ſuch claim to ſincerity, as thoſe ſudden converſions to and acknowledgments of Chriſtianity could in the primitive Times; becauſe then the Civil Power did not countenance it, no carnal intereſt could encourage them in it, none but inward and ſpiritual motives could prevail upon them for the owning of it. But ſince it hath been deliver'd to us through a long ſucceſſion of Ages, and 'tis become, in part, our outward intereſt to be external Profeſſors of it, the profeſſion is not ſufficient to entitle a man a Believer, unleſs his motives be as divine as theirs.

3. All thoſe who do not diligently ſeek after that which is propoſed in the Goſpel, come into this rank of Unbelievers. As the Pſalmiſt argues the Atheiſm of men from their not ſeeking God, Pſal. 14. 1, 2. and the Apoſtle the unrighteouſneſs of men from the ſame ground, Rom. 3. 10, 11. So the Unbelief of men may be demonſtrated from their non-inquiry after Chriſt, the benefits offer'd, and the precepts enjoyn'd by him: When we have no valuations of it, when the Goſpel is not eſteem'd as the richeſt Jewel, the ſweeteſt dainties, the moſt raviſhing comforts; when it is not ſought after with ardent affections, 'tis not thought worthy of acceptation by the whole man. Can he be ſuppoſed to believe he hath a Soul, who never minds it? Or can he believe that there is a Saviour, who can go whole months and years without inquiries after him? He that is deſperately rately ſick and wounded and hears of an infallible medicine without imploying all his induſtry to procure it, is either in love with the wound, or doth not believe the medicine ſo ſovereign as is reported? Can we believe that to be neceſſary for us, that we have no heart to think of? Whoſoever is more diligent in things of an inferior concern, ſuppoſeth them in his judgment more capable to adminiſter ſatisfaction to him than the things of Chriſt. Can we be call'd Believers, if we be no more moved than ſtones with the purchace and promiſe of Chriſt? Inſenſibleneſs and Unbelief are inſeparable companions, Act. 19. 9. they were hardned and believed not. If we were inform'd of a place full of all earthly advantages, and rich commodities at an eaſie rate, how ambitious would men be to ſet out Ships to be intereſſed in the Trade, or at leaſt inform themſelves of the truth of the report? If men did believe the Goſpel, and the rewards of another world, could they ſit yawning, with folded arms, without making inquiries after them? Would they not be full of great undertakings for them? How can our underſtandings be fully poſſeſs'd of the goodneſs of that, which our wills do not ardently purſue? If our minds believe it, why do not our wills embrace it? What bar is there between the underſtanding and the will? In other things the laſt judgment of the mind is follow'd, what that pronounceth good, the will is preſently upon the track of; what makes the ſtop here, if the Goſpel were aſſented to? The order of Gods working is according to the order of Nature; the underſtanding firſt enlightned, then the will inclin'd. If then the will be not inclin'd to the things of Chriſt, the underſtanding was never fully prevail'd upon to aſſent to the Truths of Chriſt. Belief among men is a vigorous act that makes them govern themſelves according to their perſwaſions; and why ſhould it be leſs in matters of Religion? If Paul believe the knowledge of Chriſt ſo excellent, he will preſs forwards towards the mark, Phil. 3. 8, 12, 14. He will follow after, he will thruſt through a crowd of temptations to gain Chriſt. Can we then be ſaid to believe that Chriſt hath expiated our ſins, calm'd the wrath of God, ſtands ready to knock off our chains, and hath prepared a bleſſed reſidence in Paradiſe, without ſeeking the enjoyment of ſuch neceſſary benefits? The ſottiſhneſs of the Jewiſh Rulers is a picture of that which will be in ſome men to the end of the world. They ſent a Committee of their Sanhedrin to John Baptiſt to know whether he was the Meſſiah, Joh. 1. 19. they were perſons of Authority and Learning among them, Prieſts and Levites, they were ſent from Jeruſalem, from the great Council, to know what his calling was, Who art thou? John told them he was not the Meſſiah; but that the Meſſiah was come, and among them, whom they knew not, v. 26. Now it is ſtrange that thoſe men who expected the Meſſiah about that time, and came to John for that end to know whether he was the perſon, (for when they ask't him, Who art thou? He anſwered, I am not the Chriſt, v. 20. intimating that the intent of their coming to him was to know whether he was the Chriſt;) ſhould not ask him where the Meſſiah was, who was this perſon that he ſaid was among them, and greater than he? how they ſhould know him that was ſo near to them, and how he himſelf knew him? But they depart without asking one ſyllable of this nature, which John gave them ſo full an opportunity to inquire into, as if they were reſolv'd to reject him before they knew him. They are imitated in the world to this day. If we ſeek him with looſe affections, 'tis a ſign we have only ſome ſuſpicions of the neceſſity of him, not a certainty: a faint ſearch ariſeth from a weak conjecture.

4. Prophane perſons are unqueſtionably Unbelievers. A Diabolical life and a believing heart are contradictions. No man can with any reaſon lay claim to a Faith in Chriſt, who prefers the pleaſures of the world, before the ſweetneſs of a Redeemer; that which is an offence to him, before that which is his delight; the weight of ſin, before the yoke of Chriſt. How can they believe in Chriſt that are carried down with the violent current of their own luſts, and regard not one tittle of his Law? If Faith be full of good works, a ſcarcity of them implies an emptineſs of Faith.

(1.) The proper effect of Faith is to puriſie the heart, Act. 15. 9. where therefore the kennel of the life, and ſink of the heart are not purified, there is no Faith. What wants the eſſential effect, hath nothing of the cauſe. If unfeigned faith be always attended with a pure heart, and good Conſcience, 1 Tim. 1. 5. then that Faith which is attended with an impure heart and a defiled Conſcience, is a counterfeit Faith. If a good man fall into any ſin, there is firſt a flaw in his Faith, the ſoundneſs of that would prevent the Diſeaſe of ſin; hence Chriſt prays, that Peters Faith might not fail, implying, that if that kept firm, he would give no kindly glance to a temptation, to Curſing, Swearing and denying his Maſter. Let no man boaſt therefore of his Faith, if it leaves him in the mire of Vice. 'Tis an Idol of Faith, ſuch an one that the Apoſtle calls but a Carkaſs of Faith, James 2. 26. a dead Faith, nay ranks it with the Faith of Devils, who believe and tremble, who have no benefit by it, but a ſenſe of Damnation before the time. Is it not a Faith worſe than that of Devils? They have a belief with a fear; ſome boaſt of a Faith in Chriſt, but a want of fear. A prophane Faith, an adulterous Faith, a drunken Faith, are contradictions.

(2.) He that commits ſin, is of the devil, Joh. 1. 3. 8. not of Chriſt. He that is under the Devil's Empire never was Chriſts ſubject by believing. The Language of their practice is the ſame with that of the evil ſpirits; What have we to do with thee thou Jeſus of Nazareth? Not to believe the truth, and have pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, in the unrighteouſneſs of nature, in the unrighteouſneſs of practice, are made one and the ſame thing, 2 Theſ. 2. 12. The knowledge of Chriſt makes men at leaſt eſcape the pollutions of the world, 2 Pet. 2. 20. This is the loweſt degree; whence the conſequence is clear, that thoſe that are bemir'd with the pollutions of the World, have not the knowledge of Chriſt. We have no acquaintance with Chriſt, if we cheriſh thoſe works which Chriſt came to diſſolve and melt away by his bloud; and go about to ſettle the Soveraignty of the Devil againſt the authority of the Redeemer. Can you imagine him to be a loyal Subject, who gives himſelf that Character, when you ſee him with arms in his hands againſt his Prince and Country? Nor is he a Chriſtian, whatſoever he may call himſelf, who is a Rebel againſt Chriſt his Soveraign. Such are loth to be thought to doubt of the truth of the Goſpel, but their lives proclaim that they do not in the leaſt doubt of the falſeneſs of it. Is it poſſible that thoſe ſhould believe that God ſent his Son to dy for them, who will not let a Luſt die to ſalve his glory in the World? A deſcent to brutiſhneſs can never be an aſcent to Chriſtianity; a filthy Swine may as well be a Believer, as a ſenſualiſt in that ſtate; as brute beaſts they corrupt themſelves, walking in the ways of their own heart. Whatſoever ſome of the Philippians might profeſs, yet making their belly their God, the Apoſtle affords them no better Character than Enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt, Phil. 3. 18, 19. 'Tis not opinion, but practice diſtinguiſheth a Chriſtian from a Pagan. Vile Luſts are appropriated to the Gentiles as their will; they are not the qualifications of a Believers will, 1 Pet. 4. 3. No man can receive Chriſt, but he muſt receive him as a Refiner, Mal. 3. 3. with the bloud of ſprinkling, which purgeth the inwards of the heart, as well as the Skirts of the Converſation, and ſets an edge upon the Conſcience againſt every thing that is contrary to the plain precept of Chriſt, and brings the thoughts and deſires under his Law and Yoke. Prophane men are the Diſciples of Epicurus, not the Diſciples of Jeſus: 'Tis as impoſſible for a man to be an inviſible Believer, and a viſible Atheiſt, as to be a Man and a Toad at the ſame time.

5. All that live in a conſtant omiſſion of known duties (though they are not guilty of the groſſer open ſins) are Unbelievers. * Every omiſſion of good, or Commiſſion of evil, is not an evidence of poſitive Infidelity (who could then have the noble title of a Believer?) but when the omiſſion is a conſtant courſe. As every actual omiſſion is a fruit of partial Unbelief, ſo all habitual omiſſions are ſigns of habitual Unbelief, when they are not accompanied with a ſelf-condemnation in the caſe, and reſolutions of reforming for the future. How can we be ſaid to believe in Chriſt, if we own not the power of that Religion he hath inſtituted, and the holineſs of it in the duties it requires, as well as the pleaſure of it in the priviledges it beſtows? When our ſloth will not permit us to riſe at Chriſts Call; when our thoughts do but now and then hit upon him, as a Bird upon a Branch; when his ſervice is a vile thing in our Eyes; when we can with as good a heart overlook duties as perform them; when we make other things our buſineſs, and and the Precepts of Chriſt our burden, is this a Believing on him? Faith fights againſt all iniquity, and obeys not God by parcels and retail. He that cannot endure the injunctions of the Goſpel in the fulneſs and extent of their holineſs, is an Unbeliever, 2 Pet. 2. 21. they turn from the holy commandment, becauſe of the purity of its commands, and the univerſal obedience it requires; there is an enmity to it in the hearts of men. The Goſpel is a doctrine according to Godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 3, 4, 5. If we do not conſent to the Godlineſs of it, but dote about queſtions and curioſities; if we receive the light of it into our heads, and not the Religion of it into our hearts, we are deſtitute of the truth, know nothing, believe nothing. If we make light of what God commands, we are no more Chriſtians than the moſt ignorant Indian and Heathen in America: we are not ſo good as a Jew, who believes the Old Teſtament, practiſeth thoſe Duties it enjoins, and the legal Rites which he ſuppoſeth ſtill in force; worſe we are, if our hearts be not moulded according to the form of the Goſpel: for Chriſtianity is not a ſpeculation, or a dead notion, but an active principle, maſtering every faculty of the ſoul; as active in the will, as it is clear in the underſtanding. He is more an Infidel that aſſents to the truth of a Propoſition, and the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and yet denies obedience to it, than he that denies the Divine Authority of it, yet walks morally, and performs the duties incumbent upon him to man; becauſe he in ſome meaſure doth that which he denies, the other denies that which he doth profeſs: the one's denial is verbal, the other's real; one hath a moral Conſcience, the other a vain Religion, Jam. 1. 26. Habitual ſins are evidences that we are not implanted in Chriſt by faith, but ſtill under a Covenant of works, Rom. 6. 14. Sin ſhall not have dominion over you, for you are not under the law, but under grace. The reign of any one ſin in the heart, whether of omiſſion or commiſſion (though it be not of the groſſer ſort markt by the world) is inconſiſtent with that Faith which intereſts us in the Covenant of Grace; for true Faith expels ſin from the heart, as a candle doth darkneſs from the Lanthorn wherein it is placed. All the Doctrines and Propoſitions in Chriſtianity do in their own nature lead to an holy practice: the Articles of the Conception, Incarnation, and Life of the Son of God are incentives to be like our great Head and Maſter. The Goſpel frees us not from the natural obligation upon us as creatures to obey God; nay Chriſt by his death could not free us from it, becauſe the Law of Nature is immutable and perpetual. As by his death he did not free us from being creatures, ſo neither could he free us from the obligation which lies upon us as creatures, but the ſatisfaction Chriſt made to God increaſeth the obligation; for whereas before we were to obey God as creatures, we are now bound to obey God as redeemed creatures; therefore he that is as diſobedient to the precepts of Chriſt, as if Chriſt had never died, hath not a Faith in his Bloud, nor any ſenſe of the obligation of it. * How is it poſſible a man ſhould believe Chriſt to be the true Prophet of God, without embracing his Doctrine? How can we believe him to be an High Prieſt dying to expiate our ſin, without loving him, reflecting often upon our ſin with ſorrow, and ſhowing our gratitude in a courſe of habitual obedience? How can we believe him to be a mighty and gracious King, without reverencing and fearing him? How can we believe the Goſpel to be a Divine Truth, without devoting our ſelves to that holineſs which it enjoins under the penalty of never ſeeing God without it? We cannot be perſwaded of his Divinity without giving credit to his Doctrine, nor believe his Doctrine without conforming to his Law. If therefore the will of Chriſt be contemned in any one thing, we may be aſſur'd we believe not the Goſpel of Chriſt. If we would put ſuch baſe conditions upon him, as to have a reſerve of any one luſt in our hearts, we diſlike his Terms, diſown his Royal Dignity; and though we would acknowledge him our Saviour, we make him an inſignificant Lord. If we have no love to him and his commands, we have no Faith in him.

* Daillé ſur 3 Jean, p. 792.

Therefore they do not believe

(1.) Who wholly neglect the means of Grace. He that rejects his Word rejects his Perſon, becauſe he rejects all the means of the diſcovery of himſelf, which he after his Aſcenſion left upon the Earth. What his Meſſengers declare according cording to his Order and the Rule of his Word, is as if he himſelf declared it; whence the Apoſtle tells the Epheſians, 1 Eph. 1. 17. that Chriſt preached peace to them; not by himſelf, for he was never in Perſon there; but by his Apoſtle: thoſe that contemn all the means God hath appointed, may be rationally thought not to believe any one Article of Chriſtianity, though they uſurp the name of Chriſtians. By the ſame reaſon that Faith purifies the Heart, it puts a man upon all thoſe means which may promote that purification, and encreaſe the vigor of a Divine Life. They that will not know the joyful ſound, have no mind to walk in the light of Gods countenance, Pſal. 89. 15.

(2.) Who never look into the Scripture. Have they a Faith in Chriſt, who have no mind to know his Will? What a contempt of a Prince would it be, to neglect the reading a kind Letter from him, or a commanding Order? The Goſpel brings men to Obedience by its promiſes and threatnings, as by moral inſtruments, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Having thoſe promiſes, let us cleanſe our ſelves. If we never look into them, 'tis a ſign we have no mind to believe them, or be under the influence of them: When the credit of them is weakned, the efficacy of them is loſt; for no moral inſtrument can work without an aſſent to it. Who can be ſaid to believe in Chriſt, that hath no mind to underſtand his Doctrine, and read the Records of his Will? What little credit hath God with us, when we do not conſtantly take hold of that Cord, which God lets down from Heaven to fetch our Souls up to him? The Belief of an Eternal Life is little or none, if the Scriptures are not ſearched, which point out the way to it, John 5. 39. He that will not dig into it, doth not imagine any treaſure laid up in it, and believes not any thing of a Legacy of Grace in the Will and Teſtament of Chriſt, that flings it at his Heels, or only reads it as a ſtory and a thing of courſe.

(3.) Who never pray to God, or content themſelves with formal and cuſtomary addreſſes to him. This Sin of Unbelief, being in its own nature a departure from God, Heb. 3. 12. a total neglect of any approach to him, or an unwillingneſs to have any Commerce with him, teſtifies this Sin to be predominant in the Heart. He ſcarce believes there is a God, that will not offer him a ſpiritual Sacrifice, and give him in this duty the glory of all his Attributes. Prayer is the firſt act of Faith, the vital act of the new Creature; a ſpirit of grace and ſupplication are inſeparable, Zach. 12. 10. God gives not one without the other. A ſtill-born Child is a dead Child; a prayerleſs Chriſtian is a dead Chriſtian, that hath nothing of the Life of Faith; crying is natural to a Child, 'tis not learn'd by art. Where there is a full aſſent to the truths of the Goſpel (which is the firſt act of Faith) it engenders a vehement appetite for the benefits of it. Prayer is nothing but a reducing this appetite into act, and propoſing it to God; the total omiſſion of it, or conſtant ſlight performance, is a ſign of a diſſent from the Goſpel. We cannot but be zealous for thoſe things we believe to be true and neceſſary; but when we think the benefit will not recompence the pain and labour, we ſhall be cold and dull. Where there is a performance of this duty out of natural Conſcience, but a faintneſs and languiſhment in it, 'tis a ſign of too great a predominancy of it, Luke 18. 7, 8. Chriſt ſpeaking of Prayer, and crying day and night, adds, that he ſhould ſcarce find Faith on the Earth at his ſecond coming: they ſhould be grown dull in Prayer, out of a Belief that God would not avenge them.

(4) Who never exerciſe any ſerious ſorrow for ſin. Where there is a Faith in Chriſt, there will be a delight in his Law; and a delight in his Law cannot be without a reſentment of the violations of it. 'Tis impoſſible he can ſeriouſly believe that Chriſt came to expiate the Sin of the World, the Sin of Nature, and the ſtreams of it, that is not affected with the evil of that Sin which put Chriſt to ſuch ſorrow. As the Spirit of Grace and Supplication are inſeparable, ſo a look upon Chriſt, and a mourning for ſin, are undivided Companions, Zach. 12. 10. the ſence of the ſweetneſs of Chriſt, is not without a bitterneſs of Soul. Every Believer imitates Chriſt; if Chriſt groan'd under it, he will groan for it; he will look with a wet Eye upon all corrupt propenſions to that which is contrary to him. If a true Believer would not have a Luſt live, he cannot but mourn, that notwithſtanding all his pains he cannot make it utterly dye. No man can believe that Chriſt dyed upon the occaſion of Sin, and condemn'd Sin by his Death, that doth not grieve that ever he cheriſhed ſuch an Enemy to Chriſt, and lament alſo that it is not throughly Executed as well as Condemn'd. If we believe he is riſen, ſhould we not bewail our Clogs, which hinder us from following him in a Reſurrection to a newneſs of Life? Faith and Love are inſeparable, both in habit and act. Peters Faith flagg'd before he denied his Maſter; his Love did not revive, till his Faith was out of its ſwoon, and both joining together preſently engendred a mourning for his ſin: and we ſcarce find Paul in his higheſt exerciſes of Faith, without humbling reflections upon his former ſin.

6. All that are wholly ſunk into worldly affections, are Unbelievers. He that hath an high opinion of the Worlds fulneſs, hath an opinion of Chriſts emptineſs. Where mens longings are moſt for the goods of the World, they are little or nothing for the benefits of the Goſpel; they cannot amount to that hungring and thirſting, that vehemency of deſire for the benefits of redemption by Chriſt. Would not he neglect the leſſer things, that believ'd greater? Can any man be very earneſt to be temporally bleſſed, who believes Chriſt came to purchaſe an eternal happineſs? Would any man ſpend his time in the making of Puppets, that believ'd that with as much earneſtneſs he might gain a Crown? Who would ever rake Dunghills, that believ'd a ſubſtantial treaſure might be poſſeſs'd at an eaſier rate? Who would ever ſell his Birthright for a Meſs of Pottage, that believ'd it to be an excellent priviledge? Who would drink of a Puddle, that did believe a Fountain acceſſible to him? He cannot be a Believer, that values every thing above that Chriſt he pretends to believe in; That thinks vain riches, or pleaſure worthy of induſtry, and over-looks the bloud and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; I appeal to any, whether ſuch can be accounted Believers. A filthy Swine may as well claim the Title. The Apoſtle joins the Swiniſh Belly-Gods and the Covetous Earth-Worms together, among the profeſſing Philippians, as Enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt, Phil. 3. 18, 19. Can Enemies to the Croſs of Chriſt be Believers in a Crucified Saviour, who is the formal object of Faith? Earth is the furtheſt diſtant from Heaven, and Earthy affections at the greateſt diſtance from Chriſt. Job approves the ſincerity of his truſt in God, by not having confidence in the things of the earth, as well as in avoiding the common Idolatry of the Age, Job 31. 24, 26. All our revolts from God ariſe from two Cauſes, Unbelief of the bleſſings of the Goſpel-Promiſe, and deceitfulneſs of ſin, in regard of the goods of this World, Heb. 3. 12, 13. * To turn from God infers that there is not a Belief that he is an infinite Good, ſufficient for our happineſs, and to be valued above all other things; and to turn to the Creature, as if that were the ſource of our bleſſedneſs, implies a deceitfulneſs of ſin in the underſtanding, i. e. wrong opinions of God and Chriſt, and the things of this World. He that doth not make God his chiefeſt good, but placeth his confidence in any thing elſe, is an Unbeliever; and he doth not make God his chiefeſt good, that thinks any thing can make him happy without God, or that thinks God alone cannot make him happy without Earth. If Earthly things be preferred before ſupernatural objects, 'tis eaſy to conclude ſuch an one underſtands not the excellency of that which he ſo ſlights. No man but will judge him ignorant of the virtue, and worth of a Diamond, that believes a braſs Ring to be of greater value, or chuſeth a Briſtol Stone before it. 'Tis as impoſſible to believe in Chriſt, and rely upon the World, as to love God and the World in an equal Supremacy; the love of this is inconſiſtent with the love of God, 1 John 2. 15. If Moſes had preferr'd the pleaſure of the Ægyptian Court and Kingdom, before the reproach of Chriſt, it had been ſufficient evidence of no Faith in the Meſſiah, Heb. 11. 24, 26. Well, do we believe that the leaſt Particle of glory is better than the Empire of the whole World, and yet will not deny our ſelves the leaſt pleaſure for Heaven? Do we labour without ceaſing, and with a World of trouble, for a little Worldly pelf? this could not be, if we did believe the excellency of Chriſt, that he came to over-come the World, and hath writ contempt upon it both in his Life and Death.

* Muſtretat in loc.

7. Diſtruſters of the providence and promiſe of Chriſt, and murmurers at his proceedings. There is a conſtant murmuring and diſtruſt which ſhows the reign of Unbelief, as a partial murmuring ſhows a relique of it Pſal. 106. 24, 25. They believed believed not his word, but murmured in their tents: As if it were more deſirable to be under the Egyptian ſcourge than Gods protection in the Wilderneſs. This was partial in Abraham, his Faith falter'd in the Courts of Pharaoh and Abimelech, when he would ſave himſelf by a lye, owning Sarah to be his Siſter who was his Wife. But it is from a total Unbelief, when there is a deſpondency without ſeeking to God, when the heart faints, and the hands are not lifted up, when men can weep and howl under their afflictions, as totally undone, and be ſhut up in a perpetual ſilence towards Heaven like a ſenſleſs ſtake; when they venture upon ſome forbidden path for their remedy, and move Hell rather than Heaven for their relief. This was the poſture of the heart of Jobs wife in that blaſphemous advice to him, Job 2. 9. Curſe God and dye; or a bloudy mockery of him, if the words be tranſlated, as ſome do, * Bleſs God and dye, you have ſerved God indeed for a fine reward, you had beſt go on bleſſing him ſtill, and meet with death for your pains. But are you ſo brutiſh as not to diſcern Gods diſaffection to you, who elſe would never have reduc'd you to thoſe extremities? And by the like temptation Satan hoped he ſhould be our Saviours conqueror, Mat. 4. 3, 6. Command theſe ſtones to be made bread. The Voice from Heaven which told you, you were the Son of God, was a meer illuſion: can the Son of God be expos'd to ſuch a condition, as to live in a Deſart without refreſhment for his hunger, and repoſe for his body? Would a good father refuſe bread to his famiſht child? If you are therefore the Son of God, for whom the Heavens were opened, and upon whom the Holy Ghoſt viſibly deſcended, turn thoſe ſtones into bread to appeaſe your hunger: thus he tempted him to impatience with his heavenly Father. Promiſes are not believ'd where there are diſputes againſt Providence, and an unwillingneſs to wait upon God for his wiſe conduct of affairs, and ſucceſsful event. Faith crucifies diſcontents, and Unbelief arms them againſt God and others. When the Soul is out-witted by the ſmalleſt croſſes, and queſtions the Providence of God upon every occaſion, as though he had left the government of the World to Chance and the Power of men, he hath little evidence to ſhow for his Faith. How can we think Chriſt ſtor'd with a fulneſs to redreſs our neceſſities, if upon every light diſappointment we murmur againſt him, and complain of his want of truth and love? How can any truſt him with their immortal Souls, when they will not truſt him with their periſhing concerns? Can we believe he has ſhed his bloud for the expiation of our ſins (the greateſt affair his Divine Perſon could undertake) if we cannot ſubmit to him for our earthly comforts? If we reſign not our ſelves to his Wiſdom for the management of theſe, we ſhall hardly believe his Merit ſufficient for the purchace of other. This being the fruit of too much anxiety, which is but the ſtream of this poyſonous fountain, evidenceth a man as little a Believer, as a Heathen who knows nothing of the proviſion made by Chriſt. By this Chriſt diſtinguiſheth the Gentiles from his Diſciples, Mat. 6. 31, 32. Take no thought, ſaying, What ſhall we eat, and what ſhall we drink, and wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed; for after all thoſe things do the Gentiles ſeek. If there be then a predominant impatience (which is a fruit of this ſollicitouſneſs, a quality proper to a Gentile) it will render the Profeſſor of no higher elevation in Faith, than the Pagans who were darkened in their mind, and in the rubbiſh of carnality. We cannot think him a ſufficient ſecurity for that part of us, which muſt run along with Eternity, when we will not truſt him with the little clay we poſſeſs in the world. Little credit can be given to the promiſes of the Goſpel, where there is a prevailing diffidence of his providential care.

8. Doubters of the Grace of God in Chriſt. Not every doubt of ſomething contain'd in the Word, before it be clearly known to be in the Word; the Bereæans had then merited a diſpraiſe rather than a commendation. If we do not examine things before we embrace them, we may receive we know not what, and we know not why: Nor are doubts for reſolution and clearing things reveal'd tokens of infidelity. Mary's queſtion upon the Angels Meſſage to her of conceiving Jeſus, who ſhould be called the Son of the higheſt, Luke 1. 34. How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a man? was not a queſtion of Unbelief, but of a deſire of clearer information in the manner how this ſhould come to paſs: Nor are

ſtrong motions of queſtioning the Being of a God, the truth of Redemption, and faithfulneſs and fulneſs of the Promiſe, teſtimonies of infidelity; provided they be abhorr'd and repel'd with an holy indignation; Chriſt had then been an Atheiſt himſelf, and a diſtruſter of the Promiſes made by the Father to him, who was as ſtrongly moved to it by Satan, as alſo to fall down and worſhip that head of Rebellion, as ever any man was, Mat. 4. Nor are thoſe doubts which ariſe at the firſt converſion, and beginnings of Faith, when the ſtate of the Soul is like to that of the twilight, a mixture of light and darkneſs: Nor thoſe which ſometime aſſault ſtrong Believers, as when Aſaph doubted whether there were any mercy left in God, when he imagin'd God had barr'd up any motion of his bowels towards him: this was a ſtart of Paſſion, a pang of Unbelief, not an evil heart of Unbelief, his infirmity, Pſal. 77. 10. This is my infirmity. A Divine Spark may live in a ſmoke of doubt, before it ſprings into a flame; this is a partial Unbelief, becauſe there is imperfectio actûs. * But when there is a prevailing doubting of the goodneſs and truth of the Goſpel, which is the property of an abſolute Unbelief; or though this be not queſtion'd, yet there is a doubt of the relation and extent of the Promiſe as to our particular, till the Soul cloſeth with the promiſe of God in the Goſpel, 'tis an Unbelief: 'tis not like Peter, who ſtagger'd when he began to ſink, yet caſts a look and ſends forth a cry to Chriſt, acknowledging his ſufficiency, Mat. 14. 30. Lord, ſave me: But the Soul is like a Ship toſt with the waves of the Sea, without an Anchor, daſhing againſt every Rock and upon every Shelf; it ſtays not on Chriſt in the midſt of thoſe doubtings, but like Cain cryes out, My ſin is greater than I can bear, Gen. 4. 13. This is an utter rejection of the abundance of Grace, and a ſcanty contracting the infiniteneſs of Gods mercy and Chriſts merit, as though our iniquity were more efficacious than Divine goodneſs. Though this is not ſo openly frequent among us, there being more preſumers than deſpairers, yet this is included in a recourſe to any thing but Chriſt; when we are ſenſible of the fiery tempeſt of God's indignation for ſin, as though there were not ſhadow and ſhelter enough under the wing of the Lord Jeſus, there is not a belief that he is able and willing to ſave all thoſe that come to him, but jealouſies of God and of the Authority and Divinity of the Scripture entertained and cheriſhed, as when we are jealous of a friend, we ſhall be ſo far from believing him, that we ſhall miſconſtrue the plaineſt and cleareſt declarations he makes: As the Iſraelites under the promiſe of mercy and experience of a deliverance, imagin'd God intended nothing but their deſtruction, that the mercy of Manna, Quails and Water in the Wilderneſs were the preſages of Gods anger with them. Such habitual doubts and habitual miſconſtructions are evidences of habitual Unbelief. All unhumbled perſons are not only to doubt, but deſpair of the grace of God, while they remain in that condition, and wallow in the mire of the old Adam. God doth not require that we ſhould immediately rely on Chriſt without falling out with ſin, nor can there be a relying act of Faith without a reſigning act; but when a Soul is deeply ſenſible of its undone condition, accounts it ſelf guilty before God, and will not reach out a hand to lay hold upon the promiſe of the Goſpel, nor bring a veſſel to receive its Treaſures; though ſuch may be in the way to Faith, yet they are at preſent in a ſtate of Unbelief, confuſion and darkneſs, and at beſt like Meteors hanging in the Air, and fix'd no where. They underſtand not the Perfections of God ſhining forth in Chriſt as an object of truſt and confidence. As ſome doubtings are a ſign of little Faith, Why doubt ye, O ye of little faith? So habitual doubtings are a ſign of a want of Faith. When we queſtion the whole tenor of the Goſpel and reaſon againſt the deſign and intention of it, we cannot in that act be accounted Believers.

* Sedgwick doubting Believer, changed.

We might further inſtance

In Hypocrites: No man could be ſo prodigiouſly mad to put on a maſk and perſonate the outward garb of a Convert without endeavouring after the inward frame, if he did believe the declarations of the Goſpel in its Commands, Promiſes and Threatnings.

In Apoſtates; that begin in the Spirit and end in the fleſh; who have an Hoſanna for Chriſt one day, and upon a turn of the wind, crucifie him the next;

that ſeem to value his Bloud in their hearts, and ſhortly trample it under their feet; that take their leave of him when the Sun ſhines hot, or the ſtorms blow hard, and prefer ſin before the reproach of Chriſt, imagining that to embark in the ſame bottom with him is to be caſt away for ever. Such a generation is adulterous, Mark 8. 38. they abſolutely violate the Covenant, and declare they have no mind to keep it. When our profeſſions riſe and fall according to a worldly intereſt, 'tis a Faith like the motion of a Weather-glaſs. All indeed who have not the operations of Faith, are Unbelievers. Faith is an active thing, and can no more lye idle than fire in an heap of Tow.

The Third Enquiry is, What are the Cauſes of Unbelief?

1. Original Corruption. * From the womb we go aſtray from God, Pſal. 58. 3. Departure from God is rooted in our nature, it grows with us in the womb, ſprings with us into the world: an evil heart of infidelity is as old as our life. We are as much diſputers againſt the promiſes of God by nature, as we are rebels againſt the Law of God, and have as little relyance upon his Truth, as we have conformity to his Holineſs; as little will to be beholden to his Mercy, as we have to acknowledge his Soveraignty. Our whole man is enmity to him, and the object of our enmity is not one, but all the Perfections of God. The ſtate of our hearts is ſuch by nature, that we are more prone to believe any thing, though an irrational and idle Fable, than the Truth of God; Adam did ſo, and our miſery is that we are his children, and exceeding like him. He would ſtand by the ſtrength of his own underſtanding, and aim'd at a ſelf-ſufficiency more than life. He might have eaten of the Tree of Life, which, ſay ſome, was a Type of Chriſt, from whom he was to expect his confirmation, and to whom he was wholly to ſubject his underſtanding: It was by Chriſt as his Head, though not as the ſeed of the Woman, that Adam was to be confirm'd in an innocent ſtate, as well as the Angels are by him confirm'd in a perpetual grace and bleſſedneſs. If it be ſo (which I do not aſſert, though it would deſerve conſideration) our Unbelief of Chriſt and the benefits offer'd by him, runs more directly in a bloud, and is more rooted in our nature than any other ſin. 'Tis certain, that the firſt ſin was pride, and unbelief of Gods threatning. But upon this notion, his ſin was a refuſal of Chriſt as the root of his ſtanding to ſettle himſelf upon his own bottom, and not wait for his ſettlement from the Wiſdom of God, by whom he was created. And, as we have declar'd before, the probability of this being the firſt ſin of the Devil, ſo it is not unlikely but that this was the firſt ſin of Adam, by the temptation of the Devil endeavouring to engage man in his party againſt the Son of God. But that the tree of life was a type of Chriſt, the Scripture ſeems to deny, Gen. 3. 22. the reaſon rendred of his expulſion from Paradiſe was, leſt he ſhould eat of the Tree of Life. And God would not have hindred him from acts of Faith on the Seed of the Woman, which he had ſo lately promis'd and propos'd to him as an object of Faith.

* Sedgwick's Shepherd of Iſrael, p. 307. changed.

But howſoever this be, there are two effects of the depravation of nature that are the cauſes of Unbelief.

(1.) Darkneſs of the underſtanding, Eph. 4. 18. whereby it is unable to ſee and judge of the ſpiritual objects preſented to it, as the Eye poſſeſſed by a beam is to exerciſe a viſive faculty. Though a natural object hath ſuch excellent qualities, that if it be underſtood, it will attract the will and affections to it, and open the arms of the other faculties for the embracing it, yet if the mind be ill-diſpos'd and doth not judge of that object according to its merit, it will refuſe it: as offer a man gold and Diamonds, who underſtands not their worth, he will not be allur'd by them: a vitiated mind can as little behold the beauty of ſpiritual things, whereby to embrace them with ſatisfaction. There muſt be a Concurrence of both the plainneſs of the object, and the clearneſs of the mind for uniting them together. Though the Sun ſhines in its glory in the Firmament, yet if the Eye be blind, there is no perception of it, or rejoycing in it. * As the Apoſtle ſaith of the Jews, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory, had they known him, 1 Cor. 2. 8. So men would never reject the Goſpel, were they ſenſible of the excellency of it. What hinders them from ſeeing and acknowledging it, but ſin, which hath blinded their minds? as nothing hinders a man from admiring the brightneſs and luſter ſter of the Sun, but the want of his Eyes. Vain things are the objects the mind made vain by ſin doth only underſtand, and ſuch things it hunts after for ſatisfaction. Since it is alienated from the life of God, it perceives not the light of God. And this natural darkneſs is too thick and powerful for the light or beams of the Goſpel which ſhine into it, without a ſpiritual illumination, and an opening the inward Eye by the ſame Almighty Power, which can only reſtore the Eye of the Body, when the light of it is wholly extinct, Joh. 1.5. The light ſhin'd in darkneſs, i. e. upon the dark minds of men, but the darkneſs comprehended it not. From this darkneſs of mind ſprings that alienation from the life of God, or that life which we ſhould live by the Faith of the Son of God, Galat. 2. 20. So that they do not deſire the ſpirit of revelation, which can only open the Eye, renew them in their minds, and make them capable of diſcerning the excellency of ſpiritual objects. When Adam was in innocence, he did not judge rightly of what he ought; there was a flaw in his underſtanding, whereby he did diſſent from the truths of Gods Command: So the corruption of our nature, is firſt and primarily in our underſtanding, and flows from thence into the lower faculties, as many Diſeaſes do from the Head by Catarrhs into the members of the body.

(2.) Perverſity of will; Whereby it withſtands the impreſſions of truth, and beats them back as the hardneſs of a Wall doth the Ball flung againſt it, * and runs as much counter to the will of Gods Mercy, whereby he would gratify us, as to the will of his authority, whereby he would have us ſerviceable to him. This is expreſt by the Apoſtle in the ſame place, Eph. 4. 18. Through the blindneſs of their hearts, πώρωσιν. The word tranſlated blindneſs, ſignifies properly a calliouſneſs or hardneſs, and it is ſo tranſlated, Mark 6. 52. They conſider'd not the miracle of the loaves, for their heart was hardned, and John 12. 40. where the hardneſs of the heart, which is expreſt by this word, is diſtinguiſht from the blindneſs of their Eyes; there is a calliouſneſs and brawnyneſs in the heart, whereby it is rendred inſenſible of ſpiritual myſteries. The enmity to God is ſeated in the will; 'tis ſeated by the Apoſtle in the mind, Rom. 8. 7. 'tis indeed radically there as liberty is, but formally in the Will. We cannot be ſaid to be Enemies to any with our underſtanding, but in regard of prejudices, principles, wrong notions, which give birth and breeding to that averſion we have in the will to any thing; and the Scripture lays our not coming to Chriſt upon the obſtinacy and inflexibleneſs of our wills altogether; which is evident in that when God hath expreſt himſelf in the moſt indulgent manner, offering thoſe bleſſings which man in his lapſed condition is in abſolute need of, which his own reaſon in ſome meaſure informs him he wants, and when his own heart tells him in his retirements he can have no true acquieſcence in any thing below; yet there is a backwardneſs to entertain the Goſpel with choice affections, a refuſal of that with contempt which ſhould be entertain'd with Joy; not only an indiſpoſition in the will to receive it, but a contrary diſpoſition and ſtout heartedneſs againſt it, which makes them far from righteouſneſs, Iſa. 46. 12. a love of darkneſs, and reſiſtance of light; that though the word be in part underſtood, the heart is not preſently converted. The Chains of ſin are affected by the Soul, it reſiſts Chriſt when he comes to file them off, loves the bondage of the one better than the ſervice of the other. 'Tis deſperately wicked, Jer. 17. 9. it hates Chriſt for ſpeaking the truth, for preſſing a return to God; it deſires not the knowledge of Gods ways, and likes not to retain God in its knowledge. From this depravation of the will, it is, that the Goſpel meets with the greateſt oppoſition, when it firſt ſets footing in a place, or is preſented to a perſon; as there is the greateſt cold in a Morning (ſay ſome) about the time of the riſing Sun, becauſe the vapours exhal'd are reſiſted by the Sun Beams, which being not powerful enough to conquer and diſpel them, do accidentally unite and ſtrengthen them. So all the ſin in mans heart rouſeth, and arms it ſelf againſt that Goſpel which would deſtroy it.

* Sidgwick.

2. Inſenſibleneſs of our ſtate is another cauſe of Unbelief. A congeal'd Soul can no more receive the Goſpel, than frozen Fleſh can take in Salt, whereby it may be preſerv'd. The Phariſees would not believe but that they could clearly ſee, though they were abſolutely blind, John 9. 40. Are we blind alſo?

(1.) Inſenſibleneſs of our lapſed condition, and the miſeries attending it. We have a notion of the Fall of Man, the propagation of his corruption to us by Generation; but the notion in our Minds, and a ſutable impreſſion upon our Hearts, do not meet together: our Heads and Hearts are at a greater diſtance, in regard of the influence of the one upon the other in this caſe, than the Heavens from the Earth. If we underſtood the deplorableneſs of it, it were impoſſible but we ſhould ſeek for a remedy; and when we can find no other to ſatisfie our curioſity, we ſhould acquieſce in the way of the Goſpel as the fulleſt, ſafeſt, and moſt gratifying Medicine. The Phyſician is not valued, when ſickneſs is not felt; when we underſtand not our ſelves poor and miſerable, and blind and naked, 'tis no wonder that we account the Goſpel fooliſhneſs; and no man can do any other, till he feelingly underſtand what he loſt, and what he contracted by Adam. This was the great obſtacle in the Jews; they ſo prided themſelves in their noble Extraction from Abraham, that they never remembred they were the Off-ſpring of Adam, John 8. 33. We are Abrahams ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man; how ſaiſt thou, ye ſhall be made free? Do we ſenſibly underſtand how much we have incurr'd the diſpleaſure of the Lord, defeated the end of our Creation, enſlav'd our ſelves to vile Luſts, ſubjected our ſelves to the Devil, the moſt deſperate Rebel againſt God, and the Incendiary of the World? Are we ſenſible how by Adam's tranſgreſſion of the Precept, we as well as himſelf are expos'd to all the curſes of the Law, become guilty before God, as full of a ſtout enmity againſt that God we have offended, as we are full of a thick ignorance how to work out our reconciliation with him? Are we ſenſible that we lye in our Blood, are eſtrang'd from the life of God, and holineſs of God, poſſeſt by a carnal mind, and a perverſe will, overgrown with poyſonous Weeds in our Nature, and jolly with that ſin which is the cauſe of our miſery? Theſe are the things the Apoſtle preacheth, Rom. 3. before he inſiſts on the Doctrine of Faith; intimating that the only way to Faith was a due impreſſion of that wretched condition by nature; and the great cauſe of Unbelief is an inſenſibleneſs or inconſideration of it; and Chriſt intimates in that ſweet Exhortation, Mat. 11. 28. Come unto me all you that labour, and are heavy laden, that men muſt feel the weight, and load of the Curſes of the Law, before they will have recourſe to the refreſhments of the Goſpel.

(2.) Inſenſibleneſs of the ſeverity of Gods juſtice. We fancy a God made up only of Mercy, without reminding our ſelves of his wrath, and think, that becauſe he hath put Bowels into Creatures, he hath nothing but Bowels in himſelf to the worſt of Rebels. Are we ſenſible of the ſteadineſs of his truth to the word of his threatning, the dearneſs of his honour to him, and the dreadfulneſs of his wrath? Will God make a nullity of his own threatning, bear the affronts of his Creatures, ſuffer the honour of his Law to ly without regard in the duſt, let the Creature triumph in his Rebellion, and add to his former ingratitude new darings of Heaven? How can we forget to mind the puniſhment due to our ſin? How can we think the great God, the pattern of all Excellency in his Creatures, can be guilty of that weakneſs and falſeneſs to his own honour, as to break his word; and that his juſtice ſo heinouſly provok'd, preſently after his goodneſs had put his Creature into a condition of ſerving him, as well as arming againſt him, ſhould tamely put up the injury? Yet this is the true cauſe of Unbelief, we conſider not the power of his wrath (Pſal. 90. 11. Who knows the power of his anger?) believe him not to be a conſuming Fire, and underſtand not the greatneſs of his anger in ſuch a meaſure as it is to be feared.

(3.) Inſenſibleneſs of our own inſufficiency to free us from this miſerable condition, and the neceſſity of ſome other remedy, than what our own nature, or all other humane aſſiſtances can furniſh us with. Are we not naturally inſenſible that we have contracted a weakneſs of our ſatisfying one tittle of the Law? that we can increaſe our debts and pay none, under an impoſſibility of remedying our ſelves, or propoſing a remedy to our offended Creator? Alas! We neither feel our wants, nor know how to find ſupplies. We cannot ſatisfy that juſtice we have provok'd, nor content that holineſs we have diſpleas'd. We know not how to reduce our ſelves to that God from whom we have wander'd, nor regain that Heaven we have forfeited. 'Tis as impoſſible for us to find a place of reſt, to which we might invite our Souls to return, as it was for the Dove ſent out of the Ark to find a place where to ſet her foot, while the Waters were upon the Earth. This kind of inconſiderateneſs was the cauſe of the Jews Unbelief, they reſted in the ſhell of their Sacrifices, their outward Waſhings, and Purifications, and lifeleſs Ceremonies, which had as little ability to bring them to God, as by nature they had a will to come to him, Joh. 5. 45. Moſes in whom you truſt. They truſted not in the perſon of Moſes, but in the Doctrine deliver'd, and Ordinances enjoyn'd by Moſes. What ſinful or innocent creature hath ſo much power or favour as to interpoſe for us? Can any man be able to anſwer the juſt demands of the Law, or ſtop the crys of it by bearing the puniſhment it requires? Can we remove the loads of our guilt, and ſtifle the cries of our innumerable ſins againſt us? If we conſider the nature and circumſtances of ſin, the nature of the Majeſty offended, ſhould we not be ſenſible, that no created ſtrength was able to pay our debts, or bear our puniſhment, and ſecure our ſtanding? But we are inſenſible of this; we naturally think a few outward devotions, a pack of legal ſervices, glavering prayers and heartleſs reformations can make God a compenſation for all the affronts he hath ſuſtain'd from us, retrieve our loſs and uncloud the face of God: and we apprehend not how ſin hath maſter'd our faculties, and rendred them impotent to any perfect obedience, and unable to effect the everlaſting Redemption we abſolutely need.

'Tis this then is another cauſe of Unbelief. We believe not that we ſprang from Adam, or elſe we believe not that Adam was ſo putrified a root as the Scripture repreſents him to us. And how can the ſecond Adam appear beautiful to any who is not ſenſible of the deformity of the firſt, and his own filthineſs by him? Who would look for an Eye-ſalve that believ'd himſelf perfect in the organs of ſight, or ſearch for a treaſure who thinks he hath wealth enough already by him? The want of conviction by the Law, is the cauſe of the want of converſion to the Goſpel. We know not the diſeaſe, and therefore we regard not the remedy. Had we due apprehenſions of this, we ſhould be reſtleſs till we had an account of ſome ſalvation from it, to eſcape the wrath of God which is due to ſuch a ſtate. Let each man of us therefore in our private retirements fancy our ſelves in the ſtead of Adam, each woman of us in the ſtate of Eve, and conſider what we ſhould have thought after Gods conferring a being upon us with ſo much honour, our committing an offence with ſo much hainouſneſs, and the terrors of conſcience, and fears of puniſhment felt in our ſelves: If we had a full ſenſe as they had, of the bleſſedneſs they had loſt, the miſery they had contracted with what affectionate devotion, and greedineſs, ſhould we encloſe in the arms of our Souls the offended Redeemer with all his conditions? as no queſtion they did the promiſe of the redeeming ſeed, which could only pacifie their lately offended Creator, and calm their ſtormy conſciences.

3. Pride of corrupted Reaſon. Hence ariſeth the oppoſition to, and ſlight of the Goſpel in great Wits, and the Princes of the wiſdom of this World. They cannot believe any thing which hath not ſome affinity with the falſe Principles rooted in their minds, nor with the intereſt of their wills and paſſions. They contemn the Revelations of God, becauſe they are not ſuited to the opinions and notions of decrepit Nature. The diſproportion of the Truths of the Goſpel to the Principles of the receiv'd Philoſophy made the Greeks count it fooliſhneſs, in regard of the deſign of the Sufferings of Chriſt which had not enter'd into the heads of any of the Maſters of their Sects, 1 Cor. 1. 23.

(1.) This was the cauſe of the Jews oppoſition to Chriſt. As the Greeks expected a Doctrine ſavouring of the wiſdom of their Philoſophy; ſo the Jews expected a Meſſiah with a magnificent Retinue, and therefore the preaching of a crucified Chriſt was a ſcandal to them, becauſe of the ignominy of the Croſs, contrary to the reaſon or fancy whereby they conducted themſelves in the expectation of him. And the greateſt Wits among them, the Phariſees, daſht upon this rock, Joh. 9. 40. Are we blind alſo? We know the common people are ignorant, but will you charge us with ignorance of the mind and will of God, who are ſo far above their rank? But v. 40. Chriſt tells them, becauſe they boaſted of their wiſdom, their ſin, i. e. their Unbelief remained. The pride of their knowledge was the mother and nurſe of their incredulity. The opinion of the excellency of the Law given by Moſes, above any Revelation whatſoever, fixed them in this ſin. They always fenc'd againſt the edge of Chriſts and the Apoſtles diſcourſes with their arrogant brags of Moſes, Joh. 9. 28. We are Moſes his diſciples, we know that God ſpake unto Moſes. The great Doctors of that Nation deride the Son of God, while the people adore him; [the inſolent Diſciples of Moſes condemn him as a Seducer, and a Partner with Beelzebub, while the ſimple hearted receive him as the great Prophet and Son of David, and ſubmit their reaſons to the declarations of God; the wiſe men of the Jews crucifie him, while the Wiſe-men of the Eaſt, the Shepherds of Bethlehem, with the wiſeſt creatures in Heaven the Angels rejoyce and worſhip him *.] Men ſwell'd up with an opinion of their Science, are unfit for Faith. This is one of the ſtrong holds exalting it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God. The babes, and not the wiſe and prudent men, conceited of their natural wit, have by the grace of God the fulleſt ſtore of the Myſteries of the Goſpel, while he lets others fall by the ſubtleties of a proud knowledge into the ſnares of the Devil. They will not believe, leſt they ſhould incur a cenſure of folly, imprudence and credulity, though they have a rational ground of believing.

* Daillé vingt Serm. ſur 21. Mat. 8, 9. p. 501.

(2.) No queſtion but this is a ſecret lett in many among us. Though they cannot in reaſon deny the being of ſuch a perſon as Jeſus, cannot but owne his Miracles, Life, Death, and the Wonders wrought by the Apoſtles, becauſe the teſtimonies of them are undeniable: Such as believe not this muſt believe nothing, not that there is ſuch a Country as Spain, Eaſt-Indies, America, which they never ſaw; nor believe that there were ſuch perſons as Alexander and Cæſar, which were Conquerors of Nations, which they have only by report; ſince there are more evidences that there was ſuch a perſon as Chriſt, ſuch Doctrines taught, ſuch Miracles wrought, confeſt by the enemies of the Chriſtian Religion among the Heathen, and to this day by the Jews. But their reaſons are non-pluſt in the Doctrine, how Chriſt ſhould be the eternal Son of God, of one ſubſtance with the Father, that the Divine and Humane Nature ſhould be ſo miraculouſly united without confuſion of properties, how an innocent perſon ſhould dye for offenders, that God would not pardon by a free act of Grace without a ſatisfaction, that he ſhould exact it of his Son, and by ſo bitter a death as that of the Croſs. Theſe things have no footing in the common receiv'd Principles of Rationaliſts, and men are loth to captivate their reaſons to the obedience of Faith.

But how unreaſonable is this pride of Reaſon, upon which the Unbelief of many is founded? Becauſe we can underſtand ſome things, are our reaſons capable of every thing? Are they as infinite and unlimited in their capacities as God himſelf? Do we not owe that reſpect to our Creator, as to believe he might keep ſome things to be reveal'd at what time he pleaſed, and that the diſcovery of his infinite Wiſdom might exceed our ſcanty comprehenſions? Would not ſuch rational men skill'd in Aſtronomy laugh at thoſe that ſhould meaſure the greatneſs of the Sun and Moon and Stars by their eye? If ſenſe be too weak to comprehend the things that belong to reaſon, may not reaſon be as much too weak to comprehend the things that belong to Revelation? If there be ſome things above our ſenſe; why may there not be as many things or more above our reaſon? A mans eye cannot behold that which an Eagle's can. As reaſon cannot comprehend the unbounded Eſſence of God, no more than a man, if he were near the Sun, could graſp it in his arms; ſo neither can it comprehend all the Revelations of God, no more than a man can encloſe all the beams and emiſſions of the Sun in his eye. The infinite Wiſdom of God being infinitely more above our reaſon than the Sun can be above our ſenſe. We have natural proofs that there is a God; but have we capacities to comprehend the infinite Perfections of his Nature? Can we underſtand the depths of his Wiſdom, the luſtre of his Holineſs, the ſteadineſs of his Truth, his boundleſs Immenſity, and the abyſs of his Counſels? We know he is and hath all this; but we know not how, nor the manner of his acting. So we have rational proof that the Scripture is the Word of God, that the Chriſtian Religion is the Revelation of God; but ſhall we therefore think to ſpan and meaſure all the diſcoveries of God in Chriſt? As the Nature of God cannot, ſo neither can the Actions or Truths of God be graſpt in our reaſon, no more than the Waters of the Ocean can be included in a Nutſhell. If mens reaſon will not own revelation, till they underſtand the manner of all the truths reveal'd, they muſt be Unbelievers for ever. If they were admitted into Heaven in that ſtate with as great a perfection of reaſon as Adam had, they could no more have a full view of thoſe things than the Angels have of God, who (we know) cover their faces before him, Iſa. 6. 2. His ways are above ours, his thoughts above ours, and his wiſdom infinitely above our reaſon, Iſa. 55. 8, 9. Beſides, the natural light of the underſtanding is impair'd by the fall (not to ſpeak of the loſs of that ſupernatural light man had) and men muſt not think to be as apprehenſive, and comprehenſive of the reaſons of things, as if they were in innocence: as if any man could ſee things as clearly with a beam in his Eye, as he could if he had a clearneſs of ſight and a fullneſs of Spirits. Let us not think we can comprehend the revelations of God, till we can comprehend the nature of Creatures: if men could fully underſtand the latter, yet thoſe are but natural things, and will not infer that men can comprehend Heavenly myſteries by Earthly reaſon. Unbelief ſprings not from the incredibleneſs of the object, but the weakneſs of the Eye, and a fooliſh opinion that it is clearer and ſharper than it is. As in the text, the things were true which Chriſt ſpake, concerning the neceſſity of eating his fleſh and drinking his bloud, i. e. believing in him: But their underſtandings were weak, and could not conceive of them as Chriſt meant them, and were more fond of that they eſteem'd reaſon, than ready to wait ſubmiſſively upon him for further information, though they counted him a Prophet ſent from God, by reaſon of his Miracles, which might have over-rul'd their fooliſh imagination of his Diſcourſe.

(3.) This pride of reaſon is manifeſt in humbled perſons at the beginning of a gracious work upon them. How ordinary is it for them to reaſon themſelves from taking hold of the Promiſe of Life in Chriſt, find out witty inventions againſt the Mercy of God, ſupport their Unbelief with pretences of unworthineſs, wreſt the promiſe to a contrary ſenſe to what God intended it, as Manoah argued from the appearance of God, that they ſhould dy, Judg. 13 22. and indulge any ungrounded imagination againſt the Promiſe of God? A corrupt nature and a weak underſtanding meeting with a Doctrine ſo ſublime, render us lyable to miſtake, as the weakneſs of our Eye when the height of an object tranſcends it, is the reaſon of miſconceptions. The tranſcendent excellency of the thing promis'd being in it ſelf ſo glorious, and the Soul finding it ſelf ſo vile, the proffer is as a dream to it, as the greatneſs of the deliverance was to Sion, Pſal. 126. 1. When men are ſoundly convinc'd of the nature, and evil of ſin, they become vile in their own Eyes, their ſin galls them, the Law terrifies them, the notions of Gods Juſtice are awakened in them, and ly cloſe to them; they are ſenſible of the degenerateneſs and Rebellion of their nature; they think God cannot but hate them, and they expect from him only the ſeverity of a Judge; and when Evangelical mercy is declar'd, it ſeems incredible to them, becauſe it exceeds their nature and diſpoſitions; the greatneſs of the mercy proffer'd makes them ſtagger, they believe not God to be ſo merciful, becauſe they cannot be ſo, (for in all conditions of men, 'tis natural to limit God according to their own petty dimenſions, and not elevate their thoughts to his, but judge of his thoughts by theirs) and although his mercy is above the mercy of a Creature, we are apt to think his nature as uncapable of a largeneſs as our own. Since man is become vain in his imaginations, he is apt to meaſure divine things, according to thoſe principles which are in his own fancy; hence God calls to men to forſake their thoughts, their diſparaging conceptions of him, ſince his thoughts were different from theirs, as much as the Heavens from the earth, Iſa. 55. 7, 8, 9. He had higher thoughts of good to them, than either they had for themſelves, or could think God had for them. Thus the greatneſs of the proviſion God promiſed the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, made Moſes his Faith dizzy, he could not imagine how God ſhould ſend food for ſuch a vaſt number as ſix hundred thouſand men, beſides women and children, for the ſpace of a Month, Numb. 11. 21, 22. Shall all the fiſh of the ſea be gather'd together to ſuffice them? The greatneſs of the thing dazled his thoughts, which were not proportion'd to the mighty power of God, and meaſur'd the infinite majeſty

by a created line. Such humbled perſons are like the Diſciples, who believ'd not the Reſurrection of Chriſt for joy when he appear'd among them, Luke 24. 41. there was a twilight of Faith, but obſcured by the darkneſs of reaſon, the ſtrugglings of this obſtructed the victorious breaking out of the other. They had known their Maſter dead, his heart pierced, his body buried, they thought they ſaw him now preſent among them, their joy ſprang up at the ſight, but they could not tell how to believe it was he, againſt ſo many natural ſentiments which might ſtart up in them. Thus poor Souls ſcorcht by the apprehenſions of the Curſe due to their ſins, hearing the greatneſs of mercy, wiſh it were ſo great as it is reported, come after upon a nearer approach to the object to hope it is ſo. But as too great an object diſſolves the ſpirits, the ſtrength of the ſenſe, as the luſtre of the Sun dims the eye, the greatneſs of the ſound deafens the ear; ſo the tranſcendent excellency of the ſpiritual object over-powers the underſtanding. 'Tis this therefore puts God to his Oath, That as he lives he hath no pleaſure in the death of the wicked, Ezek. 33. 11. It was after an objection made by them, v. 10. that if their tranſgreſſions were upon them, and they pine away in them, how ſhould they then live? 'Tis by an Oath too that he ſettles our High Prieſt, that we might have a ſtrong conſolation, which our ſcanty and ſuſpicious natures, when once awakened, would ſcarce admit of. All this doth ariſe from a fondneſs of our own reaſon, or rather rooted imaginations exalting themſelves againſt the Wiſdom of God, and a natural corruption whereby man is deſirous to darken the Glory of God. To produce therefore and excite Faith, to quell and conquer Unbelief, let us look only to the Word, as God ſends them to the Word who meaſur'd the thoughts of God by their own, Iſa. 55. 11. So ſhall my word be that goes forth of my mouth; conſult not fleſh and bloud, follow not the Ignis fatuus of our own corrupted reaſon, a thing compacted only of earthly vapours. He that ſeduced the reaſon of Adam when it was innocent, will much more be able to miſlead ours when deprav'd, and fill'd with a thouſand follies. Let all our why's and wherefore's be ſubjected to the Word.

4 A ſelf-fulneſs and conceit of ability, high opinions of other things, and reſting upon them. This was a bane of the Jews; an outward obſervance, a bodily compliance with the commands of God, they thought enough to bear them out before his exact Tribunal. This was the righteouſneſs of the Phariſees which Chriſt would have ours exceed, Mat. 5. 20. this was the righteouſneſs the Jews purſued, whereby they miſſed of the other, Rom. 9. 31, 32. Their ſeeking after righteouſneſs by the works of the Law, hinder'd their purſuit of it in a way of Faith.

Two things are to be conſider'd in this.

[1.] Relyance upon outward Priviledges. The Jews bolſter'd up their hopes by their pompous Worſhip, their Circumciſion, the Law and Ceremonies preſcrib'd immediately by God to Moſes, priviledges granted by God to no nation under Heaven beſides, Pſal. 147. 19, 20. and upon the account of thoſe, never left, till they had brought the Meſſiah to the Croſs and Grave; as they had before reſiſted the Prophets who called them to the obſervation of the Moral Law above the Ceremonial, and commanded them to offer their hearts more than their Sacrifices to God; they dreamt of a juſtification by them, and forgot the kernel. There were four Names poſſeſſed the minds of the Jews: * People; they thought God was ſo bound to the Seed of Abraham, and that his Seed was ſo holy by the holineſs of their Anceſtors, that it was impoſſible for God to reject them, and chuſe another people. The Law; they that thought was ſo pleaſing to God, that whoſoever obſerv'd it, was by that acceptable to God, and righteous before him: hence it is, that they ſo often boaſt of, and oppoſe their Circumciſion, and being the Seed of Abraham againſt the Prophets, Chriſt, and the Apoſtles. The Temple; they imagin'd that God had fixed his perpetual habitation in the material Temple, and was ſo delighted with the ſtatelineſs, and richneſs of that edifice, that he could not be perſwaded upon any account to deſert it, and chuſe a place of Worſhip any where elſe, Jer. 7. 4. Truſt not in lying words, ſaying, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord are theſe. They truſted in the Temple as the preſervative of the City, and ſecurity of the Nation from Judgments, and therefore they conſtantly cryed up the Temple of the Lord, againſt the threatnings by the

the Prophets; Land of Canaan; they imagin'd this Land ſo delightful to God, that he could not endure to be worſhipped in any other Territory, and fanſied that God was ſo tied to that Order of Prieſthood among them, that he would never ſuffer them to err; and therefore boaſted that the Law ſhould not periſh from the Prieſt, nor the Word of the Lord from the Prophet. This is the veil which is upon their hearts to this day, and darkens their eyes from beholding the excellency of the Goſpel, and the true interpretation of the deſign and meaning of their Ceremonies: they thought it enough to ſacrifice their Oxen, kindle their Incenſe, obſerve their Feaſts, and hold up their hands to Heaven, though fill'd with bloud. Is not man as apt now to pin his hopes upon modes of Worſhip, the baptiſmal Laver, lukewarm Devotions, as if thoſe indeed did propitiate God, wipe off their guilt, and ſecure their ſouls, thus making thoſe things which are means, to be ends, centers, foundations of Bleſſedneſs? Do not the Papiſts at this day depend upon their Sacrifice of the Maſs, the Treaſures, Interceſſions, yea the Carcaſes, Bones, Rags of the deceaſed Saints, Pilgrimages to Shrines and Sepulchres; as if thoſe were expiations of Sin, and ſatisfactions of Juſtice; the rod of their ſtrength; which is an impediment to their ſetling their faith and confidence only in Chriſt?

(2.) Upon Moral Vertues. How many imagine, that becauſe of the good things found in them, God cannot but receive them, though they ſet not their faces toward, nor fix their eyes on Chriſt? They think they have no need of the benefits of a Redeemer. Who will look after the righteouſneſs of another, when he thinks he hath enough in his own cheſt to carry him out, he hath enough in his own bag to ſupply his wants? Thoſe that think they have no need of Chriſt, will caſt him at their heels. There are two ſorts, wherein this natural confidence in a ſelf-fitneſs appears. Such who exalt their own righteouſneſs, and think themſelves too good to have any need of Chriſt; and ſuch who after ſome conviction think themſelves not good enough to come to Chriſt; one is ſo proud he will not be beholden to him, becauſe he hath a portion of his own; the other is ſo proud, that he will not be beholden to him, till he can bring ſomething of a valuable conſideration for that he expects to receive from him, ſome box of ointment to pour upon him: both which proceed from a natural ſtout-heartedneſs againſt God. We would be Chriſts Partners, not his Almſmen, as if we envied him the ſole glory of our Juſtification. Paul laid the whole weight of his Soul upon the ſlender beam of his own righteouſneſs, while he was a Jew in Religion; but when he became a Chriſtian, it was then, Not I, but the grace of God in me. His Circumciſion, his being of the ſtock of Iſrael, of the Sect of the Phariſees and his righteouſneſs in the Law (all which he terms fleſh) were his gain before, but accounted his loſs afterwards, Phil. 3. 4, 5, 6, 7. And the reaſon of this is the ignorance of the perfection of that righteouſneſs which God requires, that his Holineſs cannot endure a ſpot, that thouſands of ſervices and moral excellencies cannot make a recompence for one ſin. They underſtand not the exactneſs of Gods Juſtice, the extent of the Law in its Precepts, nor the dreadfulneſs of it in its Curſes; they underſtand not the nature of ſin to be ſo great, as to need an atonement by the bloud of God, or their righteouſneſs to be ſo foul, as to need a covering before the Holineſs of God. If they have not a notorious ſtench in their lives, they regard not the noiſomneſs of the fumes in their hearts. A truſting in any fleſhly excellency is a cauſe of departing from God, Jer. 17. 5. a robbing God of the credit we ought to give to him. While we would make our own peace, hew a prop out of our own rock, we ſhall never value, or place our truſt in the Redeemer.

5. Affectation of worldly things. When Iſrael was grown fat and plump, he lightly eſteem'd, or diſgrac'd, the rock of his ſalvation, Deut. 32. 15. יְשׁוּעָתוֹ his rock Jeſus. The Spirit of Truth which engenders Faith in the heart, the world cannot receive, Joh. 14. 17. men of worldly principles and worldly affections. The whole world followed Antichriſt, Revel. 13. 3. not only the world in regard of multitude, but in regard of the cauſe, men whoſe hearts were linkt to the world, and thirſted after a worldly grandeur. As the Devil is the God of this world, he blinds the eyes of men, that believe not, leſt the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt ſhould ſhine into them, 2 Cor. 4. 4. Not underſtanding that natural blindneſs which all men derive from Adam, but ſome additional blindneſs contracted by his means, as he was the God of this World; not Phyſically, by quenching the light of their minds, but morally, by preſenting to them ſome falſe image of the World in its allurements or affrightments, whereby they were hinder'd from acknowledging the truth of the Goſpel, though clear in it ſelf, and reſplendent as the light. He is called the God of this World, not by right of poſſeſſion, but as making uſe of the things of this World to propagate and maintain his Empire in the hearts of men; by thoſe he bemiſts their underſtandings not to know the Redeemer.

Two things of the World are the roots of this ſin.

[1.] The riches of the world, the objects of Covetouſneſs. The Phariſees which were covetous derided him, after he had preach'd a ſearching Sermon againſt it, Luke 16. 14. What made the young man turn his back upon our Saviour, after ſome fair ſhow of a willingneſs to be his Diſciple, but the love of his poſſeſſions? Why did the Gadarens pray him to depart out of their Coaſts, but that they lov'd better to remain with the Devil, than to live without their Swine? What reſtrain'd the invited Gueſts from accepting the dainties provided for them, but the immoderate affection to the Husbanding a Farm, and proving of Oxen, Mat. 22. 5. Why did the third ground ſo eaſily part with the word? Becauſe they valued the profits and pleaſures of the World above the happineſs it propos'd. And why did the Jews proſecute Chriſt to Death, but becauſe they fear'd the Romans ſhould come and take away their Kingdom? And what was the reaſon then, is no leſs a reaſon now; when the heart is ſtuft up with the dregs of Earth, there is no room for the impreſſions of Heaven. Whoever is under the Government of this Luſt, can no more believe, than a man lying under a heap of rubbiſh, or at the bottom of the Sea, can ſee the glory of the Heavens. The intentneſs of the Eye upon one object hinders it from the view of another, that may be more excellent. When men hunt after the wealth of this World, they will hardly gaſp for the riches of another. They would make Chriſt a happineſs by the bye when other things fail.

[2.] The honours of the World, the objects of Ambition. This was and is ſtill the root of the Jews oppoſition to Chriſt. They dreſt up a Meſſiah in their fancies, with the accoutrements of a gallant General in the Head of his Troops, by his Conquering Sword to make them Lords of the World, and all other Nations their Slaves; and being full of thoſe vain glorious hopes, upon his coming, they were ſo enrag'd againſt the perſon of Chriſt, becauſe the meanneſs of his appearance did not gratify their carnal expectations of grandeur. And though he wrought many great Miracles, as teſtimonies of his Commiſſion, whereby their judgments might have been ſway'd to a belief of him, yet he not having that good they conceited, they rejected that good he propos'd. The meanneſs of his perſon was the occaſion of their contempt, he appear'd as a deſpicable ſhrub, Iſa. 53. 2. As a root out of a dry ground, giving no marks of riſing to a full grown tree, to ſhadow that Nation from the fury of their Conquerours: he hath no form nor comelineſs; there is no comelineſs like that of the Meſſiah we expect, nor that ſplendor, wherein he ſeems to be promis'd: there is neither the grandeur of the World in his perſon, nor the eloquence of the World in his Preaching: His Diſcourſe and practice was to caſt contempt, and ſcorn upon it: He allur'd them not with the ſenſual delights of the World. The corner ſtone is therefore rejected, becauſe it ſquar'd not with that Fabrick of Worldly greatneſs and wealth they had erected. Had he promis'd them the pleaſures of this life, aſſur'd them they ſhould ſet their feet upon the necks of their Enemies, the whole Nation haſt liſted themſelves in his Troops. They crackt none of the promiſes to taſt their ſpiritual ſweetneſs; fed only upon the Huſk, and never regarded ſin, or any deliverance from it. This ſtakes them down in their Unbelief to this day: their Eyes cannot pierce to the ſpiritual things, vail'd under temporal promiſes; they are ſo fond of the ſhell, that they neglect the Kernel: and though they have ſeen their deſires and hopes fruſtrated beyond the time fixt by any of the Prophets, yet this dazling expectation flatters them out of any thought of a Redeemer, but what is fram'd fram'd according to their own model. What was that which made the Diſciples Flag in their Faith after the Death of Chriſt? The thoughts that Chriſt was to redeem them, not from the tyranny of ſin, but the uſurpation of the Romans. When they ſaw him dead, their hopes were Crucified and buried with him, Luke 24. 21. we truſted that it had been he that ſhould have redeem'd Iſrael: Now they had no truſt left. What made ſome of the Rulers (when they could not in their judgments reſiſt the force of his Miracles) ſilence their confeſſion of him, but the loving the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God? Joh. 12. 42, 43. and our Saviour tells them, John 5. 44. That one paſſionately affected to vain glory doth not only not believe, but cannot believe; 'tis not poſſible while he is ſo diſpos'd, that he ſhould pay to Chriſt any thing but a diſdain. Ambition and Faith cannot join hands together: for Faith humbles, and ambition puffs up; Faith glorifies God, and Pride magnifies it ſelf. None that make their reputation their God, can endure any thing which they ſuppoſe will blemiſh it, and expoſe them to the ſcorn of the brave ſpirits of their Age.

We ſee then another cauſe of Unbelief. Not many wiſe, not many mighty, not many noble, 1 Cor. 1. 26. Not many wiſe, becauſe they will not ſubmit their reaſons; not many mighty, δυνατοὶ or rich, becauſe they will not be wean'd from their worldlineſs; not many noble, becauſe they will not ſacrifice their honour. Pride and covetouſneſs have taken poſſeſſion of the nobleſt parts of them; pride of the underſtanding, and covetouſneſs of the will. If we are byaſs'd by both, or either of thoſe, we are as much deriders of Chriſt in heart, as the Phariſees were in their lyes and geſtures, Luke 16. 14. ἐξεμυκτήριζον· and we can no more believe in him now, if rul'd by thoſe principles, than they did then who beheld the glory of his Miracles; they are both bars againſt any Goſpel-faith, howſoever clear the truth ſhines in the midſt of men.

6. Senſuality and corrupt Habits ſetled in the Soul. The fleſhly intereſt hath produc'd evil habits, and ſtrengthned them in the ſouls of men: they become natural to them, and men are loth to be divorc'd from them. Men love darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds are evil, Joh. 3. 19. they are loth to ſee the vileneſs and uglineſs of their ſins, as ſome are loth to behold the diſfigurement of their faces. Let light, the moſt excellent thing in the world, glare upon one that hath ſore eyes, he will ſhut his eyes againſt it, or turn away from it; though he underſtands the worth of it, yet it is a quality offenſive to him in thoſe circumſtances. As the Goſpel is too clear for a darkned mind, ſo it is too pure for deprav'd affections. As men are wedded to this or that particular vice, they are eſtrang'd from the doctrine and purity of the Goſpel. Thoſe paſſions are dearer to them than truth and goodneſs, they blear the eyes of their mind that they cannot behold them, weaken the intention of the mind that it cannot purſue the apprehenſion of them, and arm the powers of the ſoul in oppoſition to them. Appetite impoſeth upon the judgment. * As there is a conjunction or oppoſition between mens carnal affections and points to be believ'd, ſo is there an aſſent or diſſent from them. If there be any thing in any part of the Goſpel which they can wreſt to favour their darling luſt, they will receive it with pleaſure, and eſteem it as a ſweet and delightful voice. * But when Chriſt offers to make them happy, only he will take away their vice, this they cannot endure; they will take their leave of Chriſt, and love rather to live without him, than without the ſwine which they idolize, Mat. 8. 34. They would depend on his Sacrifice, but chear themſelves with their pleaſures; they would be ſaved by his Croſs, but rul'd by their luſts: they would part the Offices of Chriſt which God hath joyn'd together not to be ſeparated for the pleaſure of the rebellious creature: they would lay hold on his Promiſes, but not obſerve his Precepts, and have a Faith of relyance without a Faith of reſignation. To follow the conduct of our affections hinders a conduct by the underſtanding, and conſequently believing, ſince Faith is an intellectual act. The Harp and the Viol in the Feaſts hinder any regard to the operations of Gods hands, Iſa. 5. 12. any ſerious reflections on the deſigns of his Providence in the World; much more any ſentiments of Chriſt the ſumm and center of all his Providences. Corrupt affections cloud the underſtanding, as vapors from the ſtomach dim the eye. They are like colour'd glaſſes, changing the ſpecies of the object which is ſeen through them: ill judgments of good things are engendred by them, becauſe contrary to thoſe vicious habits which are rooted in them.

7. The Devil. As the Devil oppoſes the Kingdom of Chriſt, ſo he oppoſeth that which is the great prop of that Kingdom. As he would make Chriſt doubt whether he were the Son of God, ſo he would make us doubt whether he were ſent of God. The Devil's ſin ſeems to be a rejecting of Chriſt as Head, and therefore he endeavours to conform men to his own image by Unbelief, as God conforms his own to the image of his Son by faith: and this contempt is ſo properly the Devil's image, that he is ſaid to work more particularly in oppoſition to Chriſt in the firſt times of the Goſpel, Eph. 2. 2. Now works in the children of diſobedience. Now that a crucified Saviour is preach'd as Head of the World, now that the Spirit works in men to draw the lineaments of a Divine Faith, and reſtore them by it to the happineſs they have loſt. So Satan works to hinder Faith, that he might perpetuate men in that ſtate to which he at firſt reduc'd them; for he knows there is no way of recovery but by Faith; there is no way to happineſs but by a perfect obedience commenſurate to every tittle of the Law, or a ſatisfaction for the breach of it; the firſt we cannot perform, becauſe we have offended; the ſecond we cannot do by our ſelves, becauſe we are Creatures. God propos'd not the way of working to Adam for his repair after his fall, but that of believing in the Seed of the Woman: If the Devil then can keep us from Faith, he keeps us under his own Empire, becauſe there is no other means, but Faith, of ſetling us under another head. Beſides, by keeping us from this, he keeps us from paying any Obedience to God; without this grace we can do nothing but ſin, Heb. 11. 6. and with it we may pay him ſome poor kind of obedience in our own perſons, and glorify him in owning the obedience of another, which he hath expos'd to ſuffering in our ſtead. Faith is all the Weapons a man can have to reſiſt him, 1 Pet. 5. 9. He therefore will endeavour to hinder us from it, or diſarm us of it. If he cannot prevent it, he lays Siege to batter it; he will ſecond the perverſe reaſonings we make againſt the grace of God, and ſtake down the imagination to him. When we are in the dregs of nature he makes us believe our ſtate is good, when we are looking out of the Pit, and begin to conſider the proffers of Chriſt, and the glory of another World; he ſtirs up an awaken'd Conſcience, preſents God as an Armed Enemy, and caſts vails upon the merciful bowels of God. As he ſow'd jealouſies of God in the heart of Adam, and endeavour'd to plant ſuſpicions of God in the heart of our Saviour, Matth. 4. So he kindles and blows up ill apprehenſions of God in the hearts of men. All have a tendency to nuzzle them in good conceits of themſelves, and either to allure, or bar them from Faith in the Redeemer.

Uſe.

1. How lamentable is this frequency of Unbelief? Is it not an aſtoniſhment that the Devil ſhould find ſuch ſtrong inclinations in us to his Kingdom, and our own miſery; and Chriſt ſo little diſpoſitions to his glory, and our own happineſs? that we would rather chuſe to dy Slaves in the Chains of the Devil, than to live glorioufly in the Boſom of a Saviour? That the Redeemer ſhould be ſo willing to ſhed his Bloud, and mens nature ſo averſe from accepting it, upon conditions as much advantagious for their own happineſs, as the Redeemers glory? Are not all the good things we enjoy, from his mediation? Whatſoever natural light we have in our minds, whatſoever good motions ſtart up in our wills? Is it not a thing to be bewail'd to be ignorant of him who is the Procurer of ſuch benefits? Like the Inhabitants of Ægypt, who enjoy the ſtreams of Nilus, and the fruitfulneſs of their Land thereby, and know not from what Spring the River doth firſt ariſe. If Faith were a rich Manor, a wedg of Gold, or a Babyloniſh Garment, Exhortations to it would be needleſs, the deſires of men would outſtrip one another in the gain of it. Doth not every thing beſides man obey Chriſts Voice? Did not the Winds, Seas, Diſeaſes hear his Voice, and march or ſtand ſtill, at his pleaſure? And ſhall we only who have reaſon to obey him, uſe our reaſons to rebel againſt him; we who are capable of believing in him, refuſe a real and practical credit to his word? Is it not ſad that many that profeſs a kindneſs to him

ſhould hate him worſe than their ſins, worſe than their ſpiritual Tyrant? Chriſt himſelf wonders, that when he told them the truth, they did not believe, John 8. 46. when he made not only a ſimple Declaration but demonſtrated it by many Signs, a truth of the greateſt moment which reſpected a bleſſed Eternity? Thus it was when his Divinity ſhining through his miraculous actions might have perſwaded men to receive his doctrine with veneration; but not only the obſtinate ſort rejected him, but ſome of his followers in the Text; and they are offended at his Diſcourſe, when they ſhould rather have charg'd their own ignorance. His Miracles might well have perſwaded them, there muſt be a divine meaning in what he propos'd of eating his Fleſh and drinking his Blood, though their underſtandings were at preſent too ſhort to comprehend it. Is the World at a better paſs now? Are the inclinations of men more natural towards Chriſt than in that Age wherein he liv'd? Do they not rather ſeem to vy with Chriſts voluntarineſs in undertaking redemption, by their wilful diſdain of the conditions of it? Why ſhould not that Goſpel which hath been ſucceſsful in many Ages, in ſome of all conditions, be receiv'd in all the terms of it? Why ſhould not his truth move us more, who have been bred and nouriſhed among Chriſtians? Why ſhould they affect us no more than Fables? 'Tis lamentable that Chriſt after ſo many proofs, Miracles, and Grace, cannot be believ'd but by a few; that moſt ſhould proſtitute themſelves to vile temptations, let a Saviour ſtand without, while they are playing the wantons with the royſting Mates in their hearts; as if the mercies he offers were his Crimes, rather than his kindneſſes, and he wronged us by ſhedding his bloud for us.

2. See the madneſs and folly of men under the Goſpel. What an indifferency there is in many men whether they ſhould believe or no. What folly would it be for any to be indifferent whether he ſhould accept of life when he might have it upon honourable terms; to be indifferent whether they ſhould be ſav'd or no? Is it not a folly in us, and a high crime againſt God to be ſo hardly brought to honour him in that way wherein he hath honour'd himſelf, and would advantage us? Yet this is the folly of many men, yea of moſt men. Is not that man worſe than brutiſh that believes ſin damnable, and yet is fond of it? that believes God righteous, and yet offends him? that believes God good, and yet abuſeth him? that believes Chriſt a Saviour, and yet honours him neither in heart nor life? Pretences are vain if practice be not accommodated to them. Such believe none of thoſe things, they believe not God good or righteous, ſin damnable, or Chriſt a neceſſary Saviour; they drive on to Hell, and turn their backs upon the only Redeemer, as if they envyed themſelves a happineſs, and Chriſt the honour of their Salvation.

3. Let us examine our ſelves whether we be true Believers or no. Prove whether you are in the Faith, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Much Faith is counterfeit; the colour and flame of fire may be ſo repreſented by the art of man, that at a diſtance it may deceive our Eye; but upon an approach to it, and touching of it, we ſhall find nothing of the quality of fire. Faith muſt be examin'd by the effects and fruits; what diſpleaſure with ſin, what affection to Chriſt, what flames in the heart, what regulation of the Life? Let no man take his outward honeſty and morality to be Faith; there may be much of that where there is nothing of this. No reaſon to account all Infidels that have been Rebels to Chriſt, and Fools to themſelves, to be falſe to men. We may well ſuppoſe thoſe in the Text to be no debaucht perſons, they had then forſaken Chriſt before, when he diſſected in ſeveral diſcourſes, the groſs Luſts of the World. Many civil perſons may be without a knowledge of the true intent, ends and conditions of the coming of Chriſt; they may own the perſon of Chriſt and oppoſe the ſpirit of Chriſt, as well as the Jews own'd the ſhadow of Chriſt, and oppos'd the ſubſtance, acknowledge the Types, and refuſed the Antitype. Try your Faith, by your love to Chriſt and his Truth. * 'Tis the common ſentiment of men, that whatſoever thing a man counts his Soveraign good, he doth neceſſarily love, and it is impoſſible he ſhould do otherwiſe. Men differ in their choice, one choſeth Pleaſure, another Honour, another Wealth, ſome an image of moral virtue; but, let it be what it will, the affections follow it. If any man be convinc'd that God is the chiefeſt good, that Chriſt is the only Redeemer, in whoſe Death is our Life, in whoſe Reſurrection is our Juſtification, and and that this Redeemer can only bring us to the enjoyment of God our chiefeſt good; then the ſetting our chiefeſt love upon God the Center, upon Chriſt as the means, is unavoidable. If we believe thoſe things really, 'tis as certain that we ſhall love God ſupreamly; and our love to Chriſt as the way would be equal to the deſires of the enjoyment of God as the end. If there were many means to bring us to it, there might be a debate which to pitch upon. But if we believe there is but one, and that Chriſt is this true and living way, that neceſſity which determines our love to the Soveraign good, will carry us to affect and follow and purſue the only means to bring us to the fruition of it. If a man were deſperately ſick, and knew of but one medicine to cure him, and believ'd the cure certain upon the application, the love that he hath to his health would make him affect and value the only means to procure it. Do our hearts come under the influence and authority of the Goſpel, are the counſels of God eſteem'd and treated by us as the greateſt wiſdom, are the conditions of it entertain'd with readineſs, do we rejoyce in the light and flames of it, do we ſtifle thoſe fleſhly ſuggeſtions that would choak the appearance of it in our hearts, or ſtop us from obeying the precepts of it in our lives? Is the perſon, death, reſurrection, yoke of Chriſt precious to us? 1 Pet. 2. 7. have we the works of Faith as well as the profeſſions of it, would we be obedient to his commands as well as intereſſed in the happineſs of his promiſes? Joh. 14. 21. he that hath my commandments and keeps them, he it is that loves me. Can we deny our ſelves for him, our right hand or right eye, whatſoever is deareſt to us, offer up the moſt affected corruption we have, to be crucified by the power of his Croſs? Theſe are the operations of Faith. But is it ſo, That we have a confidence in the fleſh, that we are fond of a righteouſneſs of our own, or indulgent to ſome ſecret luſt, and would rather break with Chriſt than break with either, are we unwilling to come up to the terms of Chriſt, we would accept ſome but refuſe others, is there any thing more ſavoury to us than Chriſt, have we higher valuations of the things of the world than of him, are we content he ſhould bear the Divine wrath for us, but we would not imitate his Divine righteouſneſs, or leave ſome endeared luſt for him, would we have his Salvation, but put off the ſervice of him to the dregs of our lives, when we cannot ſerve our ſelves, would we only ſerve our turn of him, but pay no ſervice to him, do we like his Sacrifice and diſlike his ſervice, love the ſweetneſs of his Croſs, but not the weight of his yoke, would we have the benefit of Redemption with a liberty of ſinning, make the Goſpel the ground of our confidence, but not the rule of our walk? While our wills are thus unconquer'd, we are Unbelievers. No man believes, that hath not a bended will to Chriſt, even to his very feet: our neglects of him render us guilty of this ſin, as well as our oppoſitions to him. The Gueſts invited to the Feaſt did not abſolutely refuſe to come, but made their excuſes, Matth. 22. 5. they made light of it, ἀμελήσαντες were careleſs of it. What ſociety hath Faith with prophaneneſs or a reſolution of diſobedience? What agreement hath Chriſt with Belial? There are but two Standards to come under, Chriſt's or Satan's; Chriſt is only the publick Head appointed by God. Who do we fight for? He that is not with him is againſt him, he that is not with him by a gracious will, holy deſires, affectionate valuations, holy meditations, reſolutions to cleave to him, is againſt him and no believer in him. No man can be in league with Chriſt and the Devil at the ſame time. As Chriſt ſaid to the Jews, If you were Abrahams children, you would do the works of Abraham, Joh. 8. 39. ſo if we are Chriſts followers, we ſhall do the works of Chriſt, works of obedience to him, and imitation of him.

4. Uſe is of Exhortation.

1. Let us endeavour to be ſtript of our Unbelief. The leaſt thing we can be obliged unto upon any declaration of God, is the belief of it, an aſſent to the truth, and conſent to the goodneſs. The Law of Nature teacheth us, that every Revelation of God is to be believ'd as true, and embrac'd as good. We are as much bound to believe God, becauſe of his Truth, as to love him becauſe of his Goodneſs. What can be more reaſonable than to turn to God, truſt in him, accept of a righteouſneſs from him, that we may be freed from guilt, and glorifie his Name? The owning the Chriſtian Religion (ſuppoſing there were reaſon to doubt doubt of the truth of it) and a Faith in Christ cannot render a man worse than he was before. All confess the necessity of an holy life, the approbations of it they have in their consciences. But what Infidel can say his life is agreeable in every particular to the dictates of his Conscience, and to the Law of Nature in him? What Infidel can imagine he may appear before God with confidence upon the account of his own works, who knows he hath not paid a Tribute to him according to his Law, according to his own sentiments of God? Though he accounts God kind, because he sees the tokens of his goodness in the world, yet he must account him just, who sometimes sees the arrows of his vengeance darted in the world. If he hopes to be happy by the mercy of God, is he ever the further from it by believing in Christ as the way of communicating that mercy? The satisfaction he thinks to make to God by a righteousness of his own, his own conscience, if he will silently hear it, will tell him is not perfect; is he ever the further from perfection by accepting of the Satisfaction Christ offers him in his Word, which hath so many marks of a Divine stamp upon it, as may easily stagger him? Is the righteousness he builds upon impair'd by it, or not rather advanc'd to higher strains of love to God, desires to glorifie him, referring all to the Creator, whereby his own righteousness (though not thereby satisfactory to God or to be rested on, yet) is rendred more agreeable to his own conscience, and more contenting to himself? Faith in Christ impairs nothing that a mans conscience upon just ground can call good and comely. But as for those who believe the doctrine of the Gospel, there is much more reason they should really have that Faith they pretend to. We confess God hath appointed no other to be the Redeemer, why should we not believe it with our hearts and affections, as well as confess it with our lips? Shall he who, we believe, is advanc'd by the Father above the highest Heavens, be set lowest in our hearts? As there is but one God we must owne, so there is but one Priest, one Sacrifice we must rely upon, one King whom we must obey. Pray therefore against your Unbelief. As we need a Christ to free us from the Curse, so we need the Spirit to open our eyes that we may see our misery, the attainableness of happiness and the way to it, and that we may acknowledge all those admirable qualities and suitableness in the Son of God to all our necessities. We have as great an impotency to Faith without grace, as we have an emptiness of it by nature: there is such an estrangedness from God, such an aversion to him, that not a man in the world would ever turn to God without an over-powering grace: no man is an Unbeliever but because he will be so, and every man is not an Unbeliever because the grace of God conquers some, changeth their wills, and bends them to Christ. Every mans heart is by nature of the same metal and temper; no man is more plyant than another, but by the fire of Grace melting him. Pray for it, God never denied it to any Wrestler with him; he knows how to give good things to them that ask him, and are importunate for them. Pray for it as for your daily bread, wait upon the means where Grace pours forth it self. Lye at the foot of the Throne of Grace for this necessary grace, and study much the guilt of sin, the deformity of your souls by it, the extent of the Law, the Justice of God, and the Satisfaction of Christ in the Gospel.

2. Let Believers be asham'd both of their old Unbelief and the remainders of it in their hearts. Let us reflect upon our selves, and remember how Christ called us in his Word, and how long it was e're we listned to it; how he made some impressions on our hearts, and the next temptation blotted them out; he offer'd his Bloud, and we would have our sins; he promised Heaven, if we would believe, and we would have a Hell; with what earnestness did he call, and with what earnestness did we refuse? How gracious was he in his invitations, and how perverse were we in our slightings? A great Redeemer soliciting, and a vile wretch would not be intreated! How often have we misunderstood his Word, oppos'd his will, loath'd his ways, nor would admit of the levelling a mole-hill lust, much less a mountain? Were we not like most in the Eastern parts, that upon the appearance of the Star at the Birth of Christ, did not stir to present him with their services? Many might see the Star, but only three Wise-men followed the motions of it. How often hath a Star risen upon us to conduct us to Christ, darting out its motions to invite us to ſeek our Saviour, and we have lain in our old Country, our old ſins, and would neither bring our ſelves nor ſend our Preſents to Chriſt? And have we been loyal to Chriſt ſince he freed us from the Chains of the Devil, and ſnatcht us from the Lyons Paw? Have we exercis'd that Faith he deſir'd, and paid him that affection he deſerv'd? Shall not this be matter of ſhame to us? How little Faith is there in the World, and how much Unbelief? How litle Faith is there in the hearts of Believers themſelves, and how much Unbelief? What complaints of this ſin have we often heard of in holy men, and that even the nearer they came to God!

3. Watch againſt the ſtirrings and appearances of it. All Gods works from the beginning of the World have been to draw out our hope and truſt in him: he created man a noble Creature, and made the World for his Service, that he might depend upon the goodneſs, wiſdom, and power of his Creator: He ſuffer'd man to fall into miſery, that he might give in redemption a ſtronger ground of confidence in him, and encouragements of recourſe to him. He chaſed man out of Paradiſe after his ſin, that by experimenting the miſeries of the World, he might pitch his Faith more upon the promiſed Seed. He deliver'd Iſrael from Ægypt with a mighty hand, an Eſſay, and Type of what he would do in the deliverance of their Souls from a ſpiritual Tyranny. At laſt he ſends his Son to die upon the Croſs to ſatisfy for our ſins, that no occaſion might remain to doubt of his goodneſs. 'Tis a ſin natural to us, therefore ſhould be watch'd againſt. The only people in the World acquainted with the Promiſes of God, and receiving the moſt eminent deliverances from God, yet how did this ſin creep in upon them againſt all arguments to the contrary, and poſſeſs their Souls! When they heard of the ſtrength of the Anakims, they conſult about returning to Ægypt, and would rather ſubmit to the mercy of a provoked Enemy, than depend upon the Promiſe of a tender and faithful God. They loſe the benefit of the former experience of Gods kindneſs: they had ſeen the Ægyptians ſinking to Death in the Waters, and they think the ſame power cannot match the Anakims upon Land. He had ſpread a Table for them in the Wilderneſs, and they think he cannot as well whet a Sword to defend them againſt their Enemies, as though his power were ſpent upon the Ægyptian Carcaſes. How ſoon doth a ſottiſh fear ſtarve their Faith? The Promiſe of their deliverance from Ægypt well perform'd, did not make them expect the donative of the Land of Canaan promis'd to them by the ſame word of truth from God, who had as much power to perform the latter, as to accompliſh the former. Watch againſt this ſin therefore: a ſin, as well as an Enemy that is ſlighted, is moſt dangerous, and often victorious. Grow in the knowledge of God and Chriſt; the more we know him, the more we ſhall truſt him. Our confidence in a man encreaſeth, as our acquaintance with his honeſty and ability advanceth. The grounds of Faith are the perfections of God, and the actions and ſufferings of Chriſt; the more ignorant we are of them, the leſs we ſhall confide in him. Check Unbelieving ſuggeſtions at the firſt appearance; ſuch Weeds if ſuffer'd to be ſet, will quickly grow. Oppoſe the truth of God to the ſuggeſtions of Satan: Satan is a falſe Spirit, but he is not more falſe than God is faithful. Take heed of predominant ſuſpicions of Gods fidelity, and Chriſts ſufficiency: conſider which is moſt worthy of credit, the true God or a falſe Heart, a God we never found falſe, or a Heart we ſcarce ever found faithful. His Charter of Mercy is of the ſame force as ever: he hath not cancell'd a Bond he ſtands engag'd in. The Goſpel ſhall not be drain'd of its milk, till God be emptyed of his fidelity; nor the Promiſes ceaſe to be Yea and Amen, till the Seal of the bloud of Chriſt wants an efficacy to confirm them. When you are aſſaulted by Unbelief, you know what Power to addreſs to; that Omnipotent Arm that firſt planted Faith, can only protect it againſt the powers of Hell that would pull it up by the Roots. Lord, encreaſe our Faith, ſhould be as much in our Mouths, as Lord pardon our Sins. Let us grieve for it. Our Saviour griev'd for the incredulity he perceiv'd in the hearts of the Jews, let us grieve for that we find in our ſelves. The Mourning under what we feel is a good preſervative againſt any further encroachments. Let us never lay down our arms againſt it; As God will not ceaſe till he hath put all the Enemies of Chriſt under his feet; So let us not ceaſe till we have put our Unbelief, his greateſt Enemy, under his and our own.

4. Let

4. Let those that have Faith, strengthen their Faith the more, by how much the less there is in the World. * Let us more straightly embrace the Redeemer, renounce all other hopes, either in Heaven or Earth, expect happiness and comfort from nothing but the sufferings of the Cross; advance continually in that Faith whereby we are united to the Saviour of the World; and let temptations be so far from snatching it from us, that they may be occasions of strengthening it in us, as the blustering of the Wind makes men wrap their Garments closer about them. The more Christ is slighted by others, the more let him be prized by us, that we may by adhering to him, endeavour as much as in us lies, to repair the glory he loses by others rejecting him. Let that bloud be the more cherished in our hearts, when we see others more desperately treading it under their feet. While we believe he pleads for us in Heaven, let us not suffer any thing to plead against him in our own Bosoms. Joseph of Arimathea own'd Christ boldly, when he was Crucified, who never did, that we read of, own him before, or ever spake with him, though he was a Disciple in secret, Mark 15. 43. This use the Disciples that remain'd with Christ made of the Apostasie of those in the Text: those that were here offended at his word, did v. 66. turn their backs upon his person. Did the other Disciples stagger by the fall of their Neighbours? No, They are knit the faster to him; whither shall we go? thou only hast the words of eternal life. And their revolt drew out that glorious Confession from Peter in the name of the rest, We believe and are sure, that thou art that Christ the Son of the living God, Joh. 6. 68, 69. Strengthen it the more by how much Unbelief grows in the World, since we are told by our Saviour, that just before his appearance, for the recovery of the Church from the hands of Men and Devils, and bestowing that glory upon it which he hath promised, there shall scarcely be found faith upon the earth, Luke 18. 8. As at the time of Christs Resurrection, which was a token of the Resurrection of the Church, the Disciples did not believe they should ever see his face again. Since therefore Christ hath told us how predominant Unbelief should be, let us the more strengthen our Faith. And why should we not do it, as well as the Disciples did upon this occasion in the Text? Is it not the same Gospel upon which our Faith is founded, on which theirs was? Doth not the Cross and Resurrection of Christ furnish us with greater encouragements than they had at the time of this profession? Have we not the same Jesus to look to, who is the Author and finisher of our Faith as well as of theirs? Why should any of us suffer our selves to go along with the corruption of the Age, instead of resisting it? Why should we be born down by the temptations of the World, instead of combating with them? Let us be fuller of thoughts of the Cross of the Redeemer, than of the delights of the World; and the stronger our Faith, the sweeter will be our Comfort in the worst of times.

A DISCOURSE Of the End of the LORDS SUPPER.

1 Cor. 11. 26.

For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do ſhew the Lords death till he come.

THE Corinthians were a Church planted by Paul, water'd by a long preaching among them: But notwithſtanding all his pains, he receives news of ſome corruptions crept in and overſpreading that Church. Some that minded the welfare of the Corinthian Church had ſtir'd it up to write to Paul for the deciſion of ſeveral caſes, which were controverted among them. In this Chapter the fifth caſe comes to be handled, about the ordering their publick Aſſemblies.

(1.) Concerning the carriage of men and women in the Church. (2.) The celebration of the Lords Supper. (3.) The uſe and exerciſe of ſpiritual gifts, Chap. 12. In v. 17. the Apoſtle makes a tranſition from the firſt to the ſecond, and taxeth them with their diviſions which were the ground of their other miſcarriages.

Obſerve, Diviſions in a Church are uſually attended with ſad conſequences. They deſpoil the Church of its beauty and ornaments, and many times are an occaſion of ſullying the beauty of Divine inſtitutions; they here hinder'd a communion one with another. All Communion is founded upon Union: diviſions ſhook that and brought in groſs miſcarriages about the Lords Supper, a diſorderly meeting, one taking before another, and making the Lords Supper a ſcrambling Feaſt, diſcovering more paſſion one againſt another, than a mindfulneſs of the Sufferings of Chriſt; and their unworthy receivings provoked God to ſend among them deadly diſeaſes, v. 30. For the reformation of thoſe abuſes, the Apoſtle reduceth them to the conſideration of the firſt Inſtitution.

Obſerve, In all reformations we are not ſo much to mind what this or that cuſtom of the Church is, when there is a clear word to walk by. Chriſt overthrows Polygamy by reducing the number of perſons married to the firſt inſtitution, Mat. 19. 4, 9. God created male and female. This miſcarriage was chiefly in their ἀγάπαι, or banquets which they had before the Supper, which were ſet up in imitation of Chriſt, who kept his laſt Supper with his Diſciples, at the end whereof he inſtituted this Sacrament. Now in the eating of this, the rich brought their dainties, and eat to gluttony and exceſs, before the poor were met together, and left the ſcraps for the meaner ſort, and thereby did ſhame them, v. 22. i. e. did upbraid them with their poverty. Whence obſerve,

1. The community of goods or a voluntary levelling was not a ſtanding inſtitution in Paul's time; among the Corinthians you find it not in uſe, there were rich and there were poor; diſtinctions among men, men were proprietors of their own goods.

2. How

2. How ſoon will corruptions creep into the beſt Church? This mighty corruption, an Epicurean carriage, crept into this knowing and well gifted Church betimes; while the great Apoſtle was living, who had the conduct of them, and of all the Churches of the Gentiles. The Devil will ſow his tares where God ſows his wheat. As he oppos'd Chriſt at the very entrance into his Office, to make his Mediation inſignificant, ſo he will endeavour to corrupt a Church at the firſt entrance of the Goſpel, to make it altogether fruitleſs.

3. Humane Ceremonies are not to be urged, eſpecially when they by abuſe degenerate into Superſtition, Carnality and Prophaneneſs. The Apoſtle, when he explains what he had received from the Lord, and deliver'd to the Corinthians, makes no mention of a Divine inſtitution of thoſe ἀγάπαι Love-feaſts, which they uſed in thoſe days in imitation of the Supper, which preceded the firſt inſtitution of this Ordinance. He ſpeaks nothing in the defence of this cuſtom, nor urgeth it upon them, but only preſſeth the inſtitution. Divine inſtitutions, becauſe of Gods Sanction, are not to be laid aſide, though abuſes creep in. What is mans muſt be diſcarded, what is Gods muſt be preſerved. Tares ought to be ſeparated from the wheat. This humane Ceremony might claim precedency of all others that wanted the ſtamp of Divine Authority, and that by reaſon of its ſeniority, more ancient than all thoſe of a later date in the Church: yet it being but humane in its original, is laid aſide and not practis'd (that I know of) in any Church in the World. Paul proves here the Divine inſtitution, not any ſuperaddition, by the prudence of man. Slicting. in loc.

The Apoſtle

1. Shows the end of the inſtitution of this Ordinance. In the repetition of the words of inſtitution, v. 23, 24, 25. This do in remembrance of me.

2. He ſhows the duty of Communicants, in the Text: Ye ſhew the Lords death till he come. This is rendred as a reaſon why Chriſt commanded them to eat and drink in remembrance of him, becauſe in that action he would have them ſhow his death, and celebrate his praiſe for his Sufferings in our ſtead. Slicht. in loc.

Ὁσάκις, As often.] The Lords Supper ought to be often adminiſtred. The frequency is implied, though how often is not declar'd. Chriſts death is to be every day fixed in our thoughts, and to help our weakneſs, there ſhould be a frequent repreſentation of it to our ſenſe, i. e. in ſuch a way as Chriſt hath inſtituted, not as man may preſcribe.

Ye.] 'Tis the duty of every particular perſon who communicates in this Ordinance, to ſhow Chriſts death.

As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup.] Eat, not ſee. This Ordinance is not celebrated for the eye only, or for the ear; there muſt be union, there muſt be communicating.

Bread, cup.] There is no tranſmutation, no Tranſubſtantiation, Bread ſtill, Cup ſtill; the ſubject for the adjunct, Cup for the wine contain'd in it. 'Tis the ſame Bread and Cup after the Conſecration in regard of their nature, not of their uſe, dignity and efficacy. Bread, Cup. The one eaten, the other drunk: both muſt be communicated, Bread and Cup are not to be ſeparated; Chriſtians have a right to both. Papiſts have depriv'd the people of the Cup, by the juggle of a concomitancy, becauſe by partaking of the Bread, which is the body of Chriſt, they partake of the bloud too which is in it. Chriſt plainly obviates this errour at the time of the inſtitution, when he adds in giving the Cup, emphatically, Mat. 26. 27. Drink ye all of it; and Mark c. 14. 23. expreſly adds, They all drank of it: which is in neither place expreſt of the Bread. As if our Saviour, foreſeeing this errour introduc'd into the world, as he did, would by a particular note [All] leave the Authors of it without excuſe. The moſt lively repreſentation of his death, the comfort and end of it would be loſt, which is ſignified by his bloud.

Καταγγέλλετε, ſhow.] Some take it in the Indicative Mood, as our Tranſlators, Ye ſhow. It notes to us, That by this Ceremony the death of Chriſt is repreſented. Some take it in the Imperative Mood, and then the words are to be read thus, Show you the death of Chriſt; intimating, That it is an indiſpenſable duty, that as often as we eat this bread and drink of this cup, we ſhould have our thoughts and hearts full of the ſufferings of Chriſt, Meditations of him, and thankſgivings for him. 'Tis not only a bare Declaration of Chriſts Death, but of the benefits of it.

Till he come.] 'Tis a perpetual Ordinance in the Church. Till he come. Till he ſhow himſelf in his perfect Majeſty, that we may enjoy perfect glory with him. Till he come to Judgment, when he ſhall come in that manner as he was taken up into Heaven, Act. 1. 11. When remembrance of his Death ſhall be ſwallow'd up in the Viſion of his perſon, and fruition of the higheſt fruits of his ſufferings, when remembrance ſhall be remov'd by ſenſe. In the mean time it is a ſtanding Monument and Memorial of the ſufferings of our Saviour,

And by the way, We may obſerve, That the Church ſhall continue to the end of the World, becauſe theſe myſteries are to be kept up till Chriſt put a Period to this Form of the Creation. And the Church only is the ſeat and ſubject of theſe inſtitutions; they were appointed for the Church, not for the World, i. e. the Unbelieving World.

In the Verſe Obſerve,

1. The Action, Eating, Drinking.
2. The Object, Bread, this Bread, this Cup.
3. The end of the action, expreſt by a Command, ſhowing the Lords Death.
4. The frequency of it implyed.
5. The durableneſs of it, till he come.

Doctrine.

1. The Lords Supper is chiefly inſtituted for the remembring and ſhowing forth the death of Chriſt.
2. The Lords Supper ought frequently to be celebrated.
3. The Lords Supper is a laſting and continuing inſtitution, not to be put down at the pleaſure of any men.

For the firſt

Doctrine. The Lords Supper is chiefly inſtituted for the remembring and ſhowing forth the death of Chriſt.

'Tis not a bare Hiſtorical remembrance of the death of Chriſt. For then

1. Every prophane man who aſſents to the Hiſtory of Chriſts Death, and believes the acting of this Tragedy on the Croſs, and hath a notional belief of the ends of it, might be partaker of this ordinance. But the Apoſtle puts a Bar to that, v. 28. Let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread: So, not otherwiſe: there would be no need of ſelf-examination, if it were only an hiſtorical remembrance.

2. A man could not then receive more unworthily, or incur a greater damnation in this than in other acts. But here the Apoſtle fixeth a particular guilt of the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, when receiv'd unworthily, v. 27. 29.

As Chriſts Death was not a bare dying, but a Death with high and glorious ends; ſo our remembrance of it is not to be a bare hiſtorical, but a practical remembrance, and Declaration. As Chriſts remembrance of the Promiſes of his Father was not only an aſſent to the truth of them, but a recumbency on him for the performance, ſo our remembrance of the Death of Chriſt ought to be. 'Tis not a ſpeculative remembrance only, as when a man ſees a Picture of a Prince, but ſuch a remembrance as a man hath, when he ſees the Picture of a dear Friend, abſent from him at that time; he remembers not only his perſon, but the mutual love between them, the actions his Friend hath done for him, which ſtirs up a ſenſe of gratitude at that time. In the handling this Doctrine I ſhall ſhew,

1. This is the end of the inſtitution.
2. What it is in the death of Chriſt that is here remembred and ſhown forth.
3. How we ſhould ſhow forth this death.

1. The remembrance and declaration of the death of Chriſt is chiefly intended hereby. The Scripture declares this in the time of inſtitution, the night wherein he was betray'd. The words of inſtitution, this is my body which is broken for you, v. 24. This cup is the new Teſtament in my bloud which is ſhed for you, Luke 22. 20. * And the Command, do this in remembrance of me, evidenceth that all the preceding preceding actions of Breaking, Taking, Eating, are commemorative signs of Christ, to excite and confirm our Faith in the apprehension of him and his merits.

* Illyric. in 1 Cor. 11. 22.

For the Explication consider,

1. God was always careful of appointing and preserving memorials of his favour. The pot of Manna, and Aarons budding Rod were to be preserv'd in the Ark, as standing Monuments of Gods kindness. Stones were appointed to be set up for a Memorial of the division of the waters of Jordan, to give the Israelites passage to the conquest of Canaan, Josh. 4. 5. * The Passeover was instituted as a Memorial of the Israelites affliction, and Gods gracious protection of them from the Plagues of Egypt, their security from the destroying Angel, who was commission'd to take away the lives of the Egyptians first-born, and indeed of all the wonders perform'd by God in their behalf in that memorable deliverance, as appears by the command for the celebration of it, Exod. 13. 8, 9. At this Passeover 'tis suppos'd by some, that they sang the song of Moses, Exod. 15. for the deliverance at the Red Sea, and after Davids time the 78. Psalm compos'd by Asaph, treating of the whole deliverance from Egypt and conduct to Canaan, and their own unworthy carriage towards God. And is there not much more reason for a standing Memorial of that mercy of which all those were but the Types? It hath been the custom of all Nations to have an anniversary Commemoration of those Heroes, who have been the instruments of some publick happiness to them, and of all Societies to commemorate their Benefactors. And is there any reason to deny that to the great Benefactor of Mankind, the Redeemer of the World, Emmanuel God with us? Shall poor temporary deliverances among the Heathen be remembred, (deliverance of the Capitol by Geese, as it was among the Romans) and shall not the great work of Redemption, the contrivance of God, the business of Heaven, the admiration of Angels, the conquest of Devils, and the delight of God, have special commemorations?

* Kellets three-fold Supper, p. 136.

2. These memorials are necessary:

(1.) Because of the nature of our affections, which rather follow the orders of our sense than the commands of our Souls, and are more excited by sensible than invisible objects. Therefore the Jews had Christ in the swadling-bands of Types as well as in the womb of a Promise, something manifested to the eye as well as sounded in the ear. Most things we cannot understand but under sensible representations; we understand not Gods power, goodness, justice, but by the objects we see those Attributes conversant about. Hence are those frequent metaphorical resemblances of spiritual things in the Scripture, and our Saviour sets himself forth to us under the notions of Bread, Wine, Bridegroom. When there is also such a distance between our heads and our hearts, that we can rowl the most saving Truths in the one, without transmitting any part of them to the other; there is need of something to quicken our affections; seasonable memorials renew seasonable thoughts and affections.

(2.) In regard of the inconstancy of our affections. We admire any thing at the first notice and arrival, we adore it at the first sight, which by continuance grows more familiar. What our affections rouse themselves up to receive at the first approach, they afterwards being glutted with the presence of, begin to flag, like the strings of an Instrument that sound well at the first tuning, but quickly slack and need a watchful ear and careful hand to wind them up. We want therefore those memorials to keep up our hearts in a warm and glowing temper. In things that concern God's glory and our own salvation, we are like Table-books, quickly worn out, every intruding thought, like a Sponge, dasheth out what was written. When we see things acted before our eyes, then we remember what was acted upon the Cross. When Christ was risen from the dead, then the Disciples remembred the word Christ had spoken to them, Joh. 2. 22. We are naturally forgetful, naturally dull, and want actual excitements to awaken our sleepiness, and balance our unstedfastness

(3.) In regard of the natural ingratitude and enmity we have to a crucified Christ, and the weakness of Faith. What the world did, that doth every mans heart naturally, account the Cross foolishness. 'Tis a matter of difficulty to raze out our jealousies of God, and bring God and the heart together. The trembling Believer is apt to look upon God as an Enemy rather than a Father, and thinks Chriſt too glorious to entertain ſuch a wretch. We need theſe memorials of the bounty of God and kindneſs of a Redeemer, to ſtifle our ſuſpicions of him. Who can cheriſh unworthy reflections on God, when he hath repreſented to his Eyes the ſtrokes God inflicted on the Redeemer? Who can reſolve not to love Chriſt, who ſees him bleeding, breaking, dying for them? Gal. 3. 1. The Diſciples were afraid to periſh, Mat. 8. 25, 26. when they had Chriſt in the ſame Veſſel with them; they bewray'd a weakneſs of Faith, when they had Chriſt preſent with them, and had frequently beheld his Miracles. How is our Faith weak, when Chriſt is abſent from us? He hath therefore inſtituted a Symbol of his ſpiritual preſence, about which our minds might exerciſe themſelves, as well as the Eyes of men did behold his Body; That we might urge our hearts to believe his kindneſs, and ſettle it upon our affections, and chide our ſelves for our Unbelief at the ſight of bleeding love.

2. What it is in the death of Chriſt that is here ſet forth.

1. The painfulneſs of his death. 'Tis the Picture of him as he hung upon the Croſs; a man of ſorrows, broken and bruis'd by his Father in the day of his great wrath and great love, when his Body was torn, his Soul in a dreadful agony, his ſide pierc'd, his bloud ſhed: the ſubſtance of theſe, by the breaking the Bread, and pouring out the Wine, are repreſented; the burden of Gods wrath lying upon him, and his groanings under it, are here ſhadow'd. A Picture repreſents the lineaments, looks, and ſorrows expreſt in the face, which help the fancy and guide it into more lively apprehenſions. The mind of man can conceive more than the Eye of man can ſee: this doth not of it ſelf expreſs the ſorrows, cryes, groans, agonies, ſtrugglings of Chriſt; but nothing can be more auxiliary to our Souls in the underſtanding, remembring, fanſying of them, whereby the affections may be blown up, and impreſſions of a Crucified Chriſt made upon our Souls. Chriſt left behind him no other Picture of himſelf but this. Here a wounded, broken, bleeding Chriſt is preſented. Here we may ſee the ſufferings of his Body, his pains upon the Croſs; and here fancy may work about the unconceiveable troubles of his Soul, his heavyneſs to Death; how his ſoul was made an offering for ſin, Iſa. 53. 10. the wrath of God, the Cup of bitterneſs, which if Men or Angels had but taſted, they would have ſtagger'd and fell headlong into Hell. Here fancy may repreſent the piercing his Temples by the Thorns, and the dints made in his body, which the Pſalmiſt compares to furrows, Pſal. 129. 3.

This was the intent of

(1.) The ancient Paſsover. The Lamb was to be kill'd, the fleſh roaſted with fire, not boil'd, the head, legs, purtenance, Exod. 12. 6, 7, 8, 9. which was to ſet forth the unexpreſſible Sufferings of Chriſt in every part. Iſaac on the Wood, the Sacrifices on the Altar, the Serpent on the Pole, the ſtriking the Rock, were Types prefiguring this, but differ from this Sacrament: they were to prefigure what was promiſed, this to commemorate what hath been perform'd. They were not properly Memorials of this. They might in ſome ſenſe be Memorials to remember God of the promiſe, but this is a Memorial to mind us of the performance.

(2.) Of the Elements in this Sacrament. Bread ſignifies this ſuffering, as paſſing through various kinds of alterations, (a ſort of ſufferings,) to be made fit for food; reapt when ripe, threſht when hous'd, ground to powder and bak'd to be made fit for bread. The actions teſtifie the painfulneſs; bread broken diſcovers a broken Chriſt; wine pour'd out diſcovers a bleeding Chriſt. The bread teſtifies the ſufferings of his body. * The bloud the agonies of his Soul, becauſe the Spirits whereby the Soul acts, are in the bloud.

* Goodwin's Peace-maker, p. 56, 57.

2. The intention of this Death for us. 'Tis in this Ordinance repreſented as a Sacrifice-death. He is our Paſsover ſacrificed for us, 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8. In his inſtitution it was, my body broken for you, my bloud ſhed for you, as an expiatory Sacrifice for the ſatisfaction of Juſtice, appeaſing of wrath, and thereupon the remiſſion of ſin, and collation of everlaſting righteouſneſs. On the Croſs it was given for us; In the Sacrament it is given to us, to mind us what he did for us. 'Tis to ſhow forth not only his death, but the intention of his death for us; not for himſelf or any

any ſin of his own, for he was harmleſs, undefiled, Heb. 7. 26. and a Lamb without ſpot, 1 Pet. 1. 19. There was no more need of his dying for himſelf, than there is a neceſſity of our being glorious to make God happy. His ſole intention was to be an Offering to God for the removal of our guilt, the anſwering the charge of the Law, the ſilencing the terrors of Juſtice, which we were obnoxious to, had not Chriſt interpos'd himſelf as a Sacriſice for us, that both Juſtice and Mercy might be our friends.

3. The ſufficiency of this Death for us. It would never elſe be remembred. We remember no more than what was done, we remember a whole Chriſt broken. God by Covenant with Chriſt could challenge no more, and Juſtice after the ſtriking of that match, could demand no more. Chriſt paid all that he had to pay, his whole Body was broken, his whole Soul bruiſed, his Bloud ſhed, he gave up all the Treaſures he had: and this is repreſented in the Supper. The Cup Chriſt drank was full, and by his death he brought a greater glory to God than ever he had before. Whence ariſeth a redundancy of merit, an overflowing merit for ten thouſand worlds, were they in being and in a ſinful ſtate.

4. The acceptableneſs of this Death to God. All that Chriſt did, he did by order as his Father commanded him. Had not his death been acceptable to his Father, he would not have order'd us to remember it. The great actions God hath done for his people, and by which he hath got moſt glory, and which have been moſt delightful to him, he would have commemorated; the Paſſeover once a year; but this, as being the memorial of a thing more pleaſing to him, often. It was a ſacrifice to God for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, Eph. 5. 2. He would have it remembred in Heaven in the perſon of Chriſt, and remembred on Earth in the Symbols of his own appointment. His Reſurrection God would have remembred by the change of the Sabbath, but his Death by a new and peculiar inſtitution. Spices ſmell ſweeteſt when pounded: His death is the greateſt pleaſure to God; he would have Heaven and Earth fill'd with the ſavour of it. The Reſurrection of Chriſt was conſequent upon his Death, but the foundation of our acceptation was laid in the Croſs. In the Supper we remember this death to plead the acceptableneſs of it to God.

5. The preſent efficacy of this Death. 'Tis now of efficacy, and will be to the ſecond coming of Chriſt. Why elſe ſhould it be remembred? To what purpoſe ſhould we commemorate it, if it did not retain an everlaſting efficacy? if his Bloud, like Wine, had loſt its ſpirits, and his Body, like Bread, were putrified and conſumed ſince the departure of Chriſt out of the world? * Some affirm, that that bloud of Chriſt which was ſhed, was not drank up by the ground, or dryed up by the Sun, or ſteam'd into vapors, but was gathered up again by the Power of God, and put into his veins. His body ſaw no corruption, Act. 2. 31. Therefore no part of his body, not his bloud which was Sacred, the bloud of God, therefore not to be loſt. As the Soul and Body of Chriſt, though ſeparated, were united ſtill to the perſon of the Son of God, his body being the body of the Son of God, his Soul being the Soul of the Son of God; ſo alſo his bloud, though ſeparated from the body when ſhed, and had not its natural motion to perform its natural end for the ſupply of the body, as the Soul of Chriſt did not perform its natural end for the informing of the body when ſeparated from it, yet not a drop of his bloud was divided from his perſon. But howſoever this be, not a drop of that bloud is loſt as to the virtue and efficacy of it; and therefore when either pardon of ſin is ſeal'd, or purifying grace conferr'd in this Ordinance, 'tis not by the ſole remembrance of his death, but by the power of it efficaciouſly operating for and in the Soul. Therefore this bloud is oppos'd to corruptible things, 1 Pet. 1. 18. intimating that the bloud of Chriſt, in regard of its power and efficacy, doth not corrupt. As the Sun ſheds his light every day about the World, yet remains a freſh Spring of new light in the Air every morning; ſo this Bloud ſhed upon the Croſs, loſeth not its virtue, but is as operative, as if we had ſtood under the Croſs, and had it dropping upon our ſouls at the inſtant of his Sufferings. He did once offer himſelf a propitiation for ſin, but he remains a propitiation for ever: the Sacrifice was but once perform'd, Heb. 9. 28. & 10. 14. that ſhows the reality of it; but it is often commemorated, to ſhow the perpetual virtue of it. This efficacy is therefore ſhown forth in this Ordinance.

3. How we ſhould ſhew forth and remember this Death.

1. Reverentially.

(1.) With a reverence of the Holineſs of God. Gods hatred of ſin is as high as his love to Chriſt, he hates ſin as much as he loves his Son. He would never elſe have dealt ſo hardly with his Son for ſin, whom he loved ſo dearly. He lamented over the loſs of Jeruſalem, Jer. 12. 7, 8, 9. But to manifeſt his deteſtation of ſin, he ſpared not his Son, had no relentings when he ſuffer'd for us.

(2.) With a reverence of the Juſtice of God. It was more that the Son of God ſhould thus pour out his Soul, than if the whole world had been hurl'd into Hell. God ſtruck him till Juſtice had a full revenge, and ſtruck him with that wrath, which would have tumbled us into unquenchable flames. Not the Pleas of an infinite Mercy, a Mercy God delights in, could ſtop the Pleas of an inexorable Juſtice. What earthly Father but would count the ſufferings of his Son, as the rending of his own bowels, a deſtroying a model of himſelf? But to ſee an infinite gracious God rending the Soul of a beloved Son, letting his enemies looſe againſt him, ſtanding by without any manifeſt relentings, and adding to that torture his own frowns, even that God who cannot ſee his people afflicted without yearning bowels and a troubled heart, yet to ſeem unconcern'd at the death of his only Son; can we remember this without reverential adorations of the dreadful Juſtice of God?

2. Holily. We muſt undertake ſuch religious ſervices with ſuitable diſpoſitions of heart. Let none with irreverent hands touch thoſe tremenda myſteria, which may make the hearts of ſinners be broken with terrour.

(1.) With mourning hearts for ſin. A broken Chriſt muſt not be remembred without a broken heart; a bleeding Chriſt and a hardned ſpirit, a ſighing Chriſt and a ſenſleſs heart are unſuitable. Our Paſſover muſt be eaten with bitter herbs, with ſorrow for paſt tranſgreſſions; we ſhould endeavour to be as much affected, as if we had heard every piercing groan in the Garden, and numbered every drop of that bloudy ſweat which trickled down upon him, and been preſent when the Souldiers did ſo cruelly handle him and pierce him. The ſprings of our ſorrow ſhould be open'd and guſh out; for it was our ſin he bore, and our debt he paid. The fixing our thoughts intently on the death of Chriſt, would melt the ice in our ſouls. We ſhould look upon him, till our hearts be ſet a mourning, as for a firſt-born, Zach. 12. 10.

(2.) With deep conſiderations of the curſed nature and demerit of ſin. It muſt needs be bitter, killing, condemning, curſed ſin which brought Chriſt to ſuch a bitter death. What a dreadful breach hath it made between God and us, that nothing but the bloud of God can cement and ſoulder? How are we able to anſwer for one ſin, when Chriſt endured ſo much for the expiation of the leaſt, as well as the greateſt? For death was due to the leaſt; had our ſins had leſs guilt, yet ſince the leaſt had been an offence againſt an infinite God, Chriſt could not have had a leſs ſuffering than eſſentially infinite to make an atonement for it. How can we poor potſherds ſtand under the ſtroak of an Almighty arm, when the humane Nature of Chriſt, though united to the Deity, furniſht with an eternal Spirit, attended with a gracious aſſiſtance, and aſſurance of a glorious ſucceſs, ſtartled at it, and hung down his head? Our iniquities met upon him, Iſa. 53. 6. like a mighty torrent that bears down all before it, and who but infiniteneſs could have ſtood againſt ſuch a force? See how ſin preſſed him down, who upheld the whole fabrick of the creation by the word of his power, Heb. 1. 3. and could without any pains have bore the weight of millions of worlds. Had not ſin deſerv'd ſo great a puniſhment, Chriſt ſhould not have ſuffer'd it; a God of infinite compaſſion (and were there magis and minus in that which is infinite, more ſtirred up towards Chriſt than towards all creatures) would not have laid ſo great a load of ſufferings upon him, had not ſin deſerv'd it.

(3.) With ſtrong reſolutions againſt ſin. 'Tis a ſad thing to be Chriſtians at a Supper, Heathens in our Shops, and Devils in our Cloſets. To come with a heart reſolv'd to go on in impenitency, is to be worſe than Judas, who was ſtruck with remorſe at the beginning of Chriſts Sufferings, when he ſaw him condemn'd.

Shall

Shall he have relentings for his treachery, when he saw him ready to suffer, and we cherish intentions to sin at the representations of his Sufferings already fully executed? We should then be not the receivers, but the murderers of Christ, tread him under foot, and make the Table of the Lord a Shambles, and bring the guilt of that bloud upon our heads, which if sprinkled upon our consciences, would purifie them from the guilt of all other sins. The Jews took the Passeover standing, to show their intentions to leave Egypt: so must we resolve to leave all correspondence with those enemies which have murder'd the Redeemer. The Passeover must be eaten with unleavened bread, no leaven of sin must be mixed with our services, no leaven of hypocrisie with our lives, 1 Cor. 5. 7, 8. We must eat his flesh and drink his bloud, that we may live to the praise of his Grace; show it forth in the Supper, that we may show it forth in our lives. The thoughts of Christs death should be an Antidote against the poison of sin.

3. Believingly. We should in this act look upon it by Faith, as the meritorious cause of our good. If we cannot believe when we see the price laid down for us and the ransom paid, when shall we believe?

(1.) We should profess our adherence to him. The showing forth his death is solemnly to cleave to him alone for the pardon of our sins, the justification of our persons, and sanctification of our natures. There was to be in the Passeover a solemn publishing the nature of that deliverance, the great kindness of God in it, and the ends for which he deliver'd them. The Israelites that descended from Jacob were partakers of the Altar, by eating of the Sacrifice, 1 Cor. 10. 18. i. e. they profest themselves to be of the Jewish Religion and Worship by eating with them. As they that eat of things sacrificed to Idols in the Idols Temple, did by that action profess themselves the Worshippers of that Idol, and had fellowship with Devils in it.

(2.) Look up to Christ in his death as a Conquerour. It is the Lords death, he was a Lord in his death, he was a King upon the Cross as well as a Priest, as he is a Priest in Heaven as well as a King. He hath both his Priestly garment and Royal Crown. The Cross was his victorious Chariot as well as the instrument of his Execution. He then nail'd our sins to the Cross, he then triumpht over the powers of darkness, sin, Satan and Hell, Col. 2. 14, 15. He was a Conquerour in his Death, spoiling the Devil of his prey, and snatching the Captives out of his hands. His Death was his Victory, his Ascension his Triumph. Regard it, show it forth, not simply as a death, but a conquering death.

(3.) Plead this death with God. This is believingly to show it forth. This Ordinance upon the Earth is a Counterpart of what Christ is now pleading and urging to his Father. Our pleas on Earth should keep company with Christs pleas in Heaven. 'Tis the best argument to prevail with God, who though he may deny our prayers, will not deny his Sons bloud. 'Tis the best argument to quicken our prayers. Present God with his Covenant seal'd, God will not deny his own Hand and Seal. Present him with this performance of Christs Priestly Office, which is the only Office he hath confirm'd by an oath, Psal. 110. 5. He is a holy God, and will not deny his own Oath. Plead this death, for such pleas honour his wisdom, glorifie his love, owne his truth; plead it, and all Gods Attributes will plead it with you. God himself will joyn issue with you; for Gods Attributes are the same with himself. This time is the fittest time to prevail with God; when is a child most prevalent in his intercession, but when he is most exact in his obedience? This was the highest testimony of Christs obedience, Phil. 2. 8. and engageth God as a Father to show the choicest tokens of his love. As Christ was most obedient when he suffer'd it, we are most obedient when we believe it, approve of it, and plead it. When Christ dyed, he deposited all his Merits in the hands of his Father; go therefore to God for the Legacies Christ left at his death.

(4.) Plead this death against Sin and Satan. Show it against every charge. We are like to meet with many rubs, sharp and weighty accusations, too true for us to repel without the vigorous force of this death. Whatsoever accusation Satan can present against you, is answer'd here. Have we sinn'd? Christ hath suffer'd for sin: have we sinn'd many sins? Christ hath shed much bloud, not only a drop. Have we ſinn'd great ſins? the death of Chriſt for ſin was the death of the Son of God. Can the ſins of men be ſtronger to condemn, than the bloud of God is to ſave? We have deſerv'd Hell, but Chriſt hath ſuffer'd it; the wrath of God, which is the Spirit and Quinteſſence of Hell, lighted upon him. Chriſts death will anſwer all the ſubtle charges of the Devil, appeaſe the terrors of a raging conſcience, ſilence the curſes of the Law, and quench the flames of Hell.

4. Humbly.

(1.) Conſider in this repreſentation what we ſhould have ſuffer'd. Thoſe ſtrokes laid upon Chriſt were due to us, on us ſhould thoſe viols of wrath have been pour'd; we ſhould have been the mark of all the arrows of Gods vengeance: The Tragedy acted on Chriſt ſhould have been acted on us. Had that Juſtice which was due to us, ſeiz'd us, we ſhould have been held priſoners for ever; what power could have reſcued us from Almightineſs? Thoſe terrors were marching againſt us, Chriſt then chang'd ſtates with us, took our ſins to anſwer for them, and gave us his Righteouſneſs to meet the Juſtice of God withal; he ſuffer'd the pains of Hell, the wrath of God, and purchas'd Heaven for us, which he might have kept without emptying himſelf, and ſent us down to Hell. The ſufferings were endur'd by him, but the right to them was ours; it was for our tranſgreſſions he was wounded, for our iniquities he was bruiſed, for our peace that he was chaſtiſed, Iſai. 53. 5.

(2.) Conſider the deplorable miſery wherein we were. How deeply were we ſunk into the mire, that nothing could pluck us out but the Son of God? How ſtrongly was the ſtain of ſin impreſs'd in our ſouls, that nothing could waſh it off but the bloud of God? How enthral'd to the Devil, that nothing could give us liberty but the death of Chriſt? How obnoxious to the wrath of God, that not the intreaties of Chriſt, but the voice of his bloud only could procure our Redemption from the anger of that God, who had infinite compaſſions, as well as infinite Juſtice?

5. Thankfully. Such mercies as the death of Chriſt, require high and raiſed thankſgivings. 'Tis the greateſt diſingenuity not to pay thankfulneſs for a free mercy; The Supper is a feaſt upon a Sacrifice; as Feaſts followed the Jewiſh Sacrifices. Chriſt was offer'd to God as a Sacrifice, and return'd to us as a Banquet. He was ground by the wrath of God to be bread fit for us to feed on.

(1.) Bleſſing God for his love in offering up his Son to death. In this death God ſet open the floud-gates of Mercy, and ſhowr'd down the choiceſt bleſſings on the heads of Believers. What is creating to redeeming love? In Creation God gave us a Being, in Redemption he gives us his Son, not only to live with us, but dye for us, and afterwards to live for ever for our happineſs.

(2.) Bleſſing Chriſt for his love in dying. Had not he drunk this bitter Cup, we had not taſted a drop of mercy: we had never triumpht, if Chriſt had not died. What thankfulneſs is due to him, becauſe he dyed for us? How much greater thankfulneſs is due, ſince he bare our ſins, which is more than death? Who can expreſs that dreadful conflict, when he did ſweat clots of bloud? He bare the torments of Hell in pondere, if not in ſpecie; the tantundem, if not the idem. The remembrance of it being commanded by him, witneſſeth the ſolemn pleaſure he took in ſuffering death for us; unwelcome and forc'd things would not be delightfully remembred by him, or order'd to be remembred by us as a mark of favour.

(3.) The coſtlineſs of this Redemption by the death of Chriſt ſhould excite us to ſhow it forth with thankfulneſs. Our Redemption this way coſt God more than thouſands of millions of Worlds would have coſt him. There was no need of ſhedding any bloud to make them; but the beſt that ever was or can be, was ſhed to reſtore us: a word would create them, bloud muſt redeem us. It hath coſt God more than all the Angels in Heaven ever coſt him: and ſhould it not be remembred with thankfulneſs?

(4.) The gain we have by it ſhould excite us to it. Death was bitter to him, but comfortable to us. His puniſhment was our diſcharge; and he dyed for us, that we might live with him. What gain we have by his Reſurrection and Aſcenſion, is originally from his death: 'tis by the bloud of the Lamb that the Devil is overcome, come, Revel. 12. 11. By his bloud are the Promiſes ſeal'd, by his bloud all the treaſures of Grace, Mercy, Peace, Happineſs, Riches of Glory are gather'd together for us.

Uſe.

1. If the Supper be a ſhowing the Death of Chriſt, 'tis then no ſacrifice, but the commemoration of a Sacrifice. Sacrifices imply ſome kind of expiation and atonement; this is a natural notion. The Heathens thought by them to appeaſe the anger of their Gods. But the Supper is not intended as an expiation of ſin, or a ſatisfaction to God, but a repreſenting that oblation which Chriſt made of himſelf by Death which was propitiatory, and therefore is rather a Feaſt upon a Sacrifice, than a Sacrifice. In a Sacrifice ſomething is offer'd to God, in a Sacrament ſomething is exhibited to us.

2. How ſhould the death of Chriſt run much in our thoughts, and our affections be rais'd! Such affections we ſhould endeavour to have, as we believe thoſe good Diſciples that ſtood by him, and ſaw him hanging and bleeding on the Croſs, had; and our affections ſhould be of another nature; for it is a queſtion, whether they underſtood the ends of his Death, becauſe none of them expected his Reſurrection. If we can ſee Chriſt pierc'd and not mourn, we may well queſtion whether we have a ſpirit of grace in us, for ſuch a frame is a proper fruit of this ſpirit, Zach. 12. 10. We ſhould travel to the Mount of Olives, where Chriſt pray'd and wept; enter into the Garden, the place of his agony. See how humbly he went bearing the Croſs, take notice of the pains he endur'd, the mocks and ſcoffs flung at him, conceive, if we can, the dolorous cries of Chriſt, when he had loſt the ſence and ſweetneſs of his Fathers love; and from thence let our affections get warmth. How ſhould we ſet Chriſt before our Eyes, and have the freſheſt remembrance of his dying love!

Doct. 2. THE Lords Supper is to be frequently celebrated and participated of. As often, Implying, it ought often to be done.

For Explication.

1. How often is not determin'd. There is no fixt time for the adminiſtration of this preſcribed by any Precept, no day commanded for it, but the celebration of it on the Lords day was the primitive practice. No day fitter in regard of its ſeparation to God, in regard of publick meeting, in regard of remembrance, both of the Death of Chriſt and his Reſurrection, the Battle and the Victory, his Death in the Supper, his Reſurrection in the Day. Nor how often on that Day, is it determin'd by any Precept, whether Weekly or Monthly. The performance is commanded by Chriſt, Do this in remembrance of me, is urged by the Apoſtle in this Chapter; but how often is not preſcrib'd. God was more punctual in the Jewiſh Sacraments, Circumciſion was fixed the eight day. The Paſſeover annually in March.

2. Nor can there be a conſtant time fixt for every particular perſon. Becauſe there are varieties in the caſes of good men, who may by ſome emergency find themſelves hinder'd one time, and not another. Sometimes mens various callings adminiſter to one, more diſtractions than the calling of another, that they cannot rightly diſpoſe themſelves, nor ſpend ſo much time as is neceſſary to a due preparation; and there is more fruit by one Sacrament, when men come with a ſutable frame, than by an hundred ſlightly approached to. Though the Paſſeover was annually fixed, and under a ſevere penalty to be celebrated; yet there was a diſpenſation allowed to thoſe that were under ceremonial uncleanneſs, or engag'd in buſineſs on a journey, Numb. 9. 13. but thoſe were diverſions brought upon them by the providence of God, not contriv'd by themſelves, which rendred them excuſable. If any man had left his Journey to that time, which he might have perform'd at another, and had delay'd it on purpoſe that he might avoid the attendance on that Ordinance, I queſtion whether he had been within the compaſs of Gods Indulgence: yet in thoſe caſes, though they were diſpens'd with at the firſt Celebration of it on the fourteenth day of the firſt Month, they were order'd to keep it the fourteenth day of the next Month, and not to ſtay till the next annual revolution, Numb. 9. 10, 11. Yet we find the Paſſeover omitted, all the time they were in the Wilderneſs, as well as Circumciſion, and ſome obſerve that there was but one Paſſeover kept all the time of Joſhua. And ſo great were the corruptions in the Jewiſh Church, that when Joſiah came to the Crown in the eighth year of his Age, and began in the eighth year of his Reign to ſet his heart towards God, 2 Chron. 34. 3. yet it was ten years before he could prepare them to keep the Paſſeover, which was kept in the eighteenth year of his Reign, 2 Chron. 35. 19. It was commendable in him to reſtore it, ſinful in the people to neglect it, ſince it was ſetled by a plain and ſtanding command.

3. It was anciently often participated of. * Some think every day from that of Act. 2. 46. They continued daily with one accord in the Temple, and breaking bread from houſe to houſe, in Analogy to the daily Sacrifice in the Temple. Others underſtand it of their frugal and charitable entertainments of one another. That it was every Lords day, is out of queſtion by the ancient Writings declaring the cuſtom of the Church. And Act. 2. 42. the breaking bread, which is underſtood by moſt of the Sacramental bread, is joyn'd with doctrine. They would lay in a viaticum and proviſion in thoſe hard and ſtormy times, when they expected to be ſnatcht away by the fury of Perſecutors before the next day of publick meeting. And this was their cuſtom to joyn this to other acts of Worſhip on the Lords day, Act. 20. 7. And upon the firſt day of the week, when the Diſciples came together to break bread. And this was afterwards kept up in the Church in the time of Juſtin Martyr, and by ſome in the time of Auſtin long after the other; which practice perhaps was grounded on Ezek. 43. 27. And it ſhall be upon the eighth day, and ſo forward, the Prieſt ſhall make your burnt-offerings upon the Altar, and your peace-offerings, and I will accept you, ſaith the Lord; a Prophecy of Goſpel-times, and the ceſſation of the Ceremonial Law of daily Sacrifices; by Burnt-offerings being meant the Lords Supper, the remembrance of the great Burnt-offering whereby our peace was made; and by Peace-offering, prayer and thankſgiving, which are called Sacrifices in Scripture, Heb. 13. 15. and on the Lords day, being the eighth day following upon the ſeventh, the Jewiſh Sabbath. 'Tis likely 'tis not abſolutely neceſſary that it ſhould be adminiſtred every Lords day, when the Word is preach'd; the Paſſeover, the Jewiſh Sacrament, was but annual, though Moſes, the Law of Moſes, was read every Sabbath in the Synagogue. The celebration came to be more ſeldom, becauſe the frequency of it begat a coldneſs in the affections of the people, and the commonneſs occaſioned too much contempt of it. The eſteem and reverence of this Ordinance was daſht upon this Rock. The duty is extraordinary. They are tremenda myſteria; great preparations are neceſſary to great duties; affections muſt be much exercis'd, which are wound up to a higher pitch by the novelty and rarity, and flag by the commonneſs of an excellent thing. The commonneſs of Faſts in our days, and even at this time, hath driven true humiliation almoſt out of doors.

(4.) Yet to be frequent in it is agreeable to the nature of the Ordinance, and neceſſary for the wants of a Chriſtian. By too much faſting we often loſe our ſtomachs. The Paſſeover indeed was annual, God fixed it to that time; but they had their daily Sacrifices in the Temple, which were Types of Chriſt, and remembrancers to them of what was in time to be exhibited. We have none but this ſetled by Chriſt as an Ordinance of commemoration of what hath been exhibited; therefore we ought not for the time to conform our ſelves only to an annual cuſtom. Tis not to be neglected out of a wilful contempt, or a pretence of humility. Diſobedience is not a part of humility, but the fruit of pride againſt God; and though a ſenſe of unworthineſs may be ſo great, as to hinder a free and chearful approach, and deter for a time, yet there ought to be endeavours to get rid of thoſe clouds. We muſt not reſt in lazy and idle complaints. That is no true ſenſe of our own unworthineſs, which hinders us from a neceſſary duty.

Frequent it ſhould be. The too much deferring doth more hurt than the frequent communicating. The oftner we carefully and believingly communicate, the more diſpoſed we ſhall be for it. * Abſtinence from it can never be good, but

ex accidenti, either for defect of a due diſpoſedneſs, or to excite a greater reverence; but to communicate believingly is good per ſe, in it ſelf. Now that which is good in it ſelf, is to be prefer'd before that which is good accidentally. If we abſtain from it for reverence, we may the rather come for reverence; for if it be worthily receiv'd, it encreaſeth our reverence of God, and affection to him. That is the beſt reverence of God, which owns his authority.

It ought not to be neglected upon theſe Reaſons.

1. Becauſe of the Author. 'Tis a Feaſt of Gods providing, to which he invites us: to neglect it is a contempt of Gods rich proviſion and gracious condeſcenſions. The great God appointed not any trifling Ordinance, his Wiſdom appoints none but what his Power can make worthy inſtruments, his Goodneſs will appoint none but what his love will make highly beneficial; the contempt of it is a ſlighting both of his Wiſdom and Grace. 'Tis a command immediately from Chriſt, and therefore the command of God, who hath approv'd of him and every thing he did, and ſet his Seal to this commandment of our Saviour's and all the reſt. Had it not been agreeable to his Fathers will, he had not been advanc'd to his Royal Dignity to ſit upon his Throne. 'Tis Chriſts command, whom we are bound to obey by virtue of our Allegiance to him, by virtue of the Salvation we hope for by him, by virtue of the affectionate obligations we have receiv'd from him. 'Tis his command whom we muſt owne as our Lord, if we expect him as our Saviour, Luk. 22. 19. This do in remembrance of me. It is not left at liberty, do if you will, but this do. He our Lord and he is our Saviour: Not only our Saviour, but our dying Saviour. If his death be to be valued as the ground of our happineſs, his Legacies are to be eſteem'd as a part of our priviledge. He that was going to lay down his life for us, would not appoint what was unneceſſary for our preſent ſtate. Yea were it of no uſe to us, 'tis enough that it hath his Sanction, whoſe ſole Authority deſerves to be remembred by us. It was the breaking a poſitive command in the eating the forbidden Fruit, loſt Adam Paradiſe. If God pitcheth upon any means, though never ſo weak in themſelves, they ſhall be effectual, and means ſeeming more powerful in themſelves, ſhall effect nothing. If the blaſt of rams horns be ordain'd for the overthrow of the walls of Jericho, Joſh. 6. 5. they ſhall do that which he hath appointed. If they be thought contemptible after Gods order, all the battering Engines in the World ſhall prove ineffectual to gain the Victory. If Jordan be appointed for the healing Naamans leproſie, 2 Kings 5. 10. the waters of Abanah and Pharphar, rivers of Damaſcus, ſhall never be medicinal. When God appointed lamps for the defeat of the Midianites, Judg. 7. 20. had Gideon ſlighted them as took weak; and aſſaulted them with his numerous Hoſt, he had receiv'd a rout inſtead of a victory. When God orders any inſtrument of conveyance, all other means will be ſucceſsleſs, and not only ſo, but God will be offended, becauſe his inſtitution is contemn'd; and what can then reaſonably be expected from a ſlighted God?

2. The time when Chriſt inſtituted it, ſhows it not worthy of our neglect. It was a little before his death, 1 Cor. 11. 23. The ſame night in which he was betrayed, he took bread. Good men (much leſs would a good and bountiful Saviour) do not uſe to employ themſelves in trivial concerns, when they are near expiring. That which was inſtituted, when wrath began viſibly to march againſt him, Judas upon the point of betraying him, and is to continue till his ſecond coming, is not without a deſirable fruit. Had it been a needleſs Ceremony, he would not have breath'd out a word for its inſtitution; had it been an inſtitution of a light concern, ſome other time would have been choſen by him for the ſettlement of it. We may gather the neceſſity, as well as the value of it, from the time of its inſtitution, which ſhows that there is ſomething worthy in it of our eſteem, and undeſerving our neglect. The laſt words, actions, legacies of dying friends are never thought matters wholly to be neglected. Joſephs brethren queſtion'd not their pardon from Joſeph for the injury they had done him, when they uſed ſo powerful an argument as the command of their dying Father, Gen. 50. 16, 17. Thy father did command before he dyed. And ſhall we undervalue, by a wilful neglect, the commands of a dying Saviour, ſetled by him juſt before he went to remove the wrath of God from us upon himſelf?

3. The

3. The ends of it declare the unworthineſs of neglecting it.

(1.) The remembrance of Chriſt. This was the end and twice repeated, 1 Cor. 11. 24, 25. In the giving the bread, v. 24. In the cup. v. 25. We are naturally unmindful of God, ungrateful to Chriſt, we need ſomething to renew our remembrance of him. He hath left us this dark glaſs, wherein we may ſee his face till he return with a full glory; and is it an affection to him, never to look upon his picture, the Medal of himſelf, wherein he hath engraven the tracks of his dying love, all that he did, all that he purchas'd, all his fulneſs, all his treaſures, wherein we may behold him as a Redeemer, pouring out his Bloud for us, as a Sanctifier pouring his bloud into us, as a Benefactor opening his enriching treaſures to us, as a Supplier providing for all our wants? How can we ſay we love him, if we do not mind him? What value have we for him, if he be not in our thoughts? Well, but we may remember Chriſt otherways without this Ceremony. We may, but do we? Do you frequently ponder upon him? Are your thoughts of him edg'd with choice and raviſhing affections to him? Doth not the body of Death hinder you from thinking of the Lord of Life? But ſuppoſe you are not one minute forgetful of his love, doth it conſiſt with your profeſt affection to him, to chuſe your own ways of remembring him, and neglect his? Suppoſe we had a Friend who had redeem'd us from the Gallies, reſtor'd us from ſervitude, redeem'd our lives, inſtated us in a large inheritance, and was to take a long Journey, promiſing to return again, leaving with us his Picture, which he would have us look upon at ſome ſpecial Seaſons, and expreſs in that method a particular mindfulneſs of him. Though we could not without an inexcuſable ingratitude forget him, had we not that Picture, yet it were but an unworthy return to deny the obſervance of ſo ſmall an order to a Friend to whom we owe our ſelves. This is all the Picture Chriſt hath left of himſelf, he never appointed any Images or Crucifixes, never imprinted the Features of his Face upon Veronica's Napkin. Is it not ingratitude to neglect the remembrance of him in his own method, when he might have put hard conditions upon us; and when it is not a meer ſight of him, but a ſpiritual Feaſt with him; wherein we may ſuck his very Bloud into the Veins of our Souls, as well as the Wine into thoſe of our Bodies? The primitive Chriſtians uſed Commemorations of the Martyrs whoſe Bloud they counted the Seed of the Church; and ſhall the ſtated commemorations of that bloud be neglected, which is the foundation, the price, and the purifying Fountain of the Church?

(2.) 'Tis a ſeal of the Covenant. * This is the common nature of a Sacrament, to be a ſeal of the righteouſneſs or juſtification with God by Faith in Chriſt, Rom. 4. 11. As a Seal affixed to writing, conveys to a man the Lands and goods named in the Writing. 'Tis not only a Sign which repreſents, but a Seal, which confirms the benefit; not a bare Picture, but a Seal whereby pardon and the whole deſign of ſalvation is paſſed over to us, Luk. 22. 20. This Cup is the new Teſtament in my bloud which is ſhed for you. Tis a confirmation of the rich Charter of God. There is a conveyance, Take Eat, Take Drink, Take Chriſt with all his Treaſures, with all his Graces. This is a pledge of the Promiſe, a pawn given you for the glory to be beſtowed upon you. He Seals it to the Eye by the Elements, and to a believing heart by the Spirit. It ſeals not the truth of the Death of Chriſt, or the truth of your Faith. It ſuppoſeth Faith in the Communicant, and ſuppoſeth the Death of Chriſt in the Inſtitution; but it ſeals the right of Faith and the intereſt of Faith. 'Tis a Seal of the righteouſneſs of Faith, of the intereſt of Faith in that righteouſneſs it lays hold on; as the Seal of a Deed ſeals the right and intereſt of the perſon in that Land convey'd to him by the Deed. What there is in Chriſt, is ſeal'd to us in the Sacrament for our Comfort; the Priviledges he hath purchas'd, and the Graces he is endow'd with; and when you have this Seal, you have arguments for Prayer, and Power to enforce them; Lord, here is thy Bow in the Cloud, a ſign that thou wilt not drown the World; here is thy Seal in the Sacrament, a ſign that thou wilt not charge my ſin upon me, which hath been charg'd upon my Saviour. It was told me, that it was a Body broken for me, Bloud ſhed for me; I have taken it upon this account, I have taken this Seal, I have Covenanted to obey thee, I am willing and deſirous, and I will be induſtrious to do it; be a God keeping Covenant with me and truth for ever. The honour of God lyes at pawn in his Seal, whereby ſtrong conſolation cannot be denied to thoſe that lay hold upon Chriſt in it. As the Paſſeover was a pledge as well as a memorial, a pledge of a ſpiritual as well as memorial of a temporal deliverance; ſo is the Supper a pledge of what is to come, as well as a memorial of what is paſt; a pledge of all the fruits of the death of Chriſt yet behind. Should this then that is ſo deſirable and confirming a Seal, be neglected, which we may believingly plead as Gods act and deed, when it is not a bare ſtamp of a Seal which ſignifies nothing, but the image upon the Seal, a Seal to a Deed which gives the aſſurance of the advantages in the Deed, and an intereſt in the contents of the Deed, and what is convey'd by it.

(3.) 'Tis a renewing our Covenant with him. 'Tis a Federal Rite, wherein God exhibits on his part Chriſt and his benefits to us, and we profeſs our ſubjection and obedience to him, laying more ſolemn vows upon our ſelves. Whence they were called Sacraments, the word ſignifying a Military Oath, whereby Souldiers oblige themſelves to be true to their General and the Cauſe they fought for. And Pliny ſaith, he learned it of ſome Chriſtians, that at their meeting they did Sacramento ſe obſtringere, ne furta, ne latrocinia, ne adulteria committerent, &c. Covenants are always mutual, ſomething to be done by us as well as for us. God ſeals the benefits of the Covenant on his part, and we ſeal to the duties of the Covenant on ours. It ſtrengthens us in the aſſurance of the benefits promiſed, and engageth us to a performance of the duties required. The exhibiting the ſigns is the Seal on Gods part, our receiving the ſigns is the Seal on our part. By taking them we acknowledge that we ſtand to the Conditions, and reſtipulate with God again that we will be his, and upon this ſtriking hands with God, we claim a right and lay hold upon his Seals, and plead them. You avouch God to be your God, Deut. 26. 16, 17, 18. obliging your ſelves to a greater diſtance from ſin, and deteſtation of it, divorce from it, to a more quickened obedience, vigorous faith, holy life, and exacter ſervice, fetching ſtrength from the death of Chriſt in the Supper to this end. Is not this deſirable, to be in Covenant with God, to have God in Covenant with us, to have it more aſſured on both parts, which is the felicity and ſecurity of a creature?

Plin. lib. 10. epiſt. 97.

(4.) 'Tis a Communion with God. As the partaking of things ſacrificed to Idols was a fellowſhip with Devils, 1 Cor. 10. 20. ſo the partaking of that which was ſacrificed to God, is a fellowſhip with God. There is in this action more communion with God (though not the ſole act of communion, as ſome ſay) than in any other religious act. Prayer is an act of Homage, praiſe an act of Gratitude. We have not ſo near a communion with a perſon, either by petitioning for ſomething we want, or returning him thanks for a favour received, as we have by ſitting with him at his table, partaking of the ſame bread and the ſame cup. In all Nations the neareſt fellowſhip conſiſts in acts of this nature. The eating of the Supper, as the eating of Sacrifices, is a Federal Rite between God and the Believer, ſignifying that there is a Covenant of friendſhip between him and them. 'Tis the Lords Table, and what feaſted and cheared the heart of God in Heaven, viz. the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, God gives us to feaſt our Souls on Earth; ſo that we do in a manner eat and drink with him in this Love-banquet. Take, Eat, manifeſts a communion, Chriſt is really preſented to us, and Faith really takes him, cloſeth with him, lodgeth him in the Soul, makes him an in-dweller, and the Soul hath a ſpiritual communion with him in his life and death, as if he did really eat his fleſh and drink his bloud preſented to us in the Elements. Eating ſignifies taking in Chriſt as our own, his Righteouſneſs, and whatſoever is his in communion with him. Is this a priviledge to be neglected? to ſit at Gods Table, partake of his dainties, that which he doth moſt highly value, and deſerves the value of the creature infinitely above the ſitting at the Table of the greateſt Monarch on Earth; that which was the ſweet ſavour to God upon the Croſs, is offered to us as a Feaſt upon the Table, and we eat that Body and drink that Bloud which aton'd God, and thereby have a communion with him in his pleaſure and delight.

4. The benefits of this Ordinance require frequency. As every thing hath its uſe

in

(1.) Weakening of ſin. Not phyſically, but morally. The lively repreſentation and conſideration of the death of Chriſt with all its circumſtances, is a ſtrong incentive and aſſiſtant to the mortifying ſin in us, and there is no branch of the body of death, but ſome conſideration or other fetch'd from the death of Chriſt, hath a virtue to deſtroy. How can any be proud, when he ſees Chriſt lay down his life in the form of a mean man? How can he be covetous, when he ſees Chriſt turning his back upon the profits of the world? Chriſt upon the Croſs view'd by a ſparkling eye of Faith, would work the ſame effect in our Souls, which the looking upon the Serpent in the Wilderneſs, wrought in the Iſraelites poiſon'd bodies, expelling the venom from the vitals and out-works of the members, and abating the fury of a corrupt Paroxyſm. * Now as feather'd arrows will fly further and pierce deeper, than when they are carried by their own weight only; ſo ſuch conſiderations, when helpt by ſenſible repreſentations, do more excite the faculty to a vigorous operation by a more ſenſible affecting the mind. The Word declares the evil of ſin, and the Sacrament ſhows it in the perſon of our Saviour, ſin is known by the Word to be deadly, and it is ſeen to be ſo in the Supper. Then is the Soul moſt affected againſt ſin, when Gods indignation againſt it is manifeſted, when it beholds Chriſt made a Curſe, and bearing all that the Law denounceth againſt ſin, and ſees the deſert of ſin and the terrors of wrath. Never doth ſin look ſo ghaſtly, and repentance ſo ſorrowfully, as when Chriſt and the Soul meet together in this Ordinance. The looking upon Chriſt opens the ſpring of ſorrow, Zach. 12. 10. In this we take a crucified Chriſt, that we may have crucified ſins. The very approach to this Ordinance kindles reſolutions againſt corruption, and ſmothers the flames of ſin in the Soul. Who that underſtands the nature of ſin, and the evil conſequents of it, would be without ſuch a benefit? Are there no invading temptations to be routed, no indwelling ſin to be expelled, no diſtractions to be ſetled, is there not ſtill a root of bitterneſs always ſprouting, an inward ſerpent always brooding, an Egyptian furnace in our hearts ſending out its ſparks? Muſt not the root be more wither'd, the poiſon caſt out, the indwelling ſin tam'd, the furnace quencht? Do we not then need all the aſſiſtances to Faith in the mortifying death of Chriſt? As Chriſt upon the Croſs expiated ſin, ſo Chriſt in the Supper mortifies ſin by his Spirit, and purgeth thoſe iniquities which are as a veil between the face of God and the joy of our Souls. Faith acts more lively againſt its enemy, when it conſiders that the bloud was ſhed for the ſoul, as to juſtifie, ſo to ſanctifie. As there muſt be a removal of thoſe humors which lurk in the body, whereby the vital Principle is ſtifled, and growth rebated; ſo there muſt be a removal of thoſe ſpiritual diſeaſes which hinder the raiſing our heads higher towards Heaven.

* Amyrald Theſ. Salmur.

(2.) Nouriſhment of the Soul. In regard of the inſenſible decay of the ſpirits of the body, there is need of a continual ſupply to recruit them, and keep them up in their due vigour: our ſouls ſtand in no leſs need of being ſuccour'd by a feaſt of fat things full of marrow. The fleſh hath its proviſions, and grace muſt have hers. In the nouriſhment of the body, the meat by the vital heat in the ſtomach, is turn'd into the ſubſtance of the body; ſo by a believing participation of Chriſt in the Sacrament, we are turn'd into the image of Chriſt, and nouriſhed up by it to eternal life. His fleſh is meat indeed, and his bloud is drink indeed, Joh. 6. 55. he is given to us as nouriſhment, Take, Eat, This is my body, as nouriſhment to be incorporated with us, the bread is the ſign of his Body, and his Body is the bread of the Soul; the Element conveys vigour to the body, and the thing ſignified ſtrength to the ſoul, and recruits it with new ſpirits. What Bread and Wine do phyſically convey to the body, which is ſtrength, comfort, nouriſhment, that doth the body and bloud of Chriſt by faith convey to the ſoul, quickning, comforting, ſtrengthening, cheriſhing grace. As the new creature is brought into being only by the power of Chriſt, ſo it is maintain'd by the bloud of Chriſt only, and Chriſt hath provided this to be both our meat and our medicine, our food and our antidote, to revive our ſouls, and cure and prevent our diſeaſes, to repair the decays, which the remainders of ſin and evil humours cauſe in our Souls. 'Tis not a naked remembrance; that would be in breaking the Bread, and pouring out the Wine, by which actions are ſignified the death of Chriſt; but nutrition is intended, therefore the Bread is eaten, the Wine drunk; our Bodies need daily Bread, the maintaining the life cannot conſiſt with a total abſtinence from food. Who but a Mad-man would be ſo cruel to himſelf as to deny his faint body its ordinary relief, and its ſtated meals? Are any of our Souls ſo fat and flouriſhing as to need no more ſpiritual food? Are we grown up to the degree and ſtate of Angels, who never eat nor drink? If we would not contemn the food of our Bodies which common providence prepares for us, have we any more reaſon to contemn the food of our Souls, which rich grace provides for us? As we cannot expect healthful nouriſhment from Corn, but as dreſt according to various methods; ſo we cannot expect nouriſhment from Chriſt but in the way of his own appointments.

(3.) Increaſe and exerciſe of grace. Chriſt is the Storehouſe and Fountain of all the treaſures of Life and Peace, but his Ordinances are the Chanel. Though Chriſt hath treaſures to enrich us, yet he will chuſe the way of conveyance himſelf. By virtue of that principle whereby Bodies live, they grow up to that ſtature which is convenient for them; and their growth is promoted by thoſe means which maintain life in them. 'Tis eaten, it is drunk to promote our growth as well as maintain our lives. Grace is increas'd by Chriſt, he is the finiſher as well as the author, Heb. 12. 2. and therefore the encreaſer of it, laying by degrees one ſtone upon another, till he compleats it by the top ſtone; dreſſing the Plant to a greater flouriſhing. This Ordinance therefore is of frequent uſe for the building up and bringing forth more lively and juicy Fruits. The Elements Bread and Wine, are not only nouriſhing but ſtrengthening, and ſo is the thing ſignified by them. Some ſpeak of a Garden of Balſom Trees in Ægypt, which bring forth no Fruits unleſs they be watered with a Neighbouring Fountain, wherein the Bleſſed Virgin was reported often to have waſht our Saviour. 'Tis true of Grace, the Balſom-Tree in the Soul, which will not thrive unleſs water'd by the bloud of Chriſt. Faith is encreas'd hereby: as the oftner the word is heard, ſo the oftner Sacraments are uſed, the more doth Faith thrive. The ſame arguments which firſt perſwaded us to aſſent to the truth of a thing, the more they are impreſt upon us, the more ſenſible they are made to us, the more they do continue and encreaſe that perſwaſion; and according to the thriving of Faith is the vigour of all other Graces. Where ſhould we find this vigour for our Graces, but in the Body and Bloud of him who is the Fountain of all Grace to us? This was inſtituted indeed while our Saviour was mortal, but it conveys a ſpiritual immortality to our Souls, becauſe it receives its ſtrength and efficacy from his Reſurrection. 'Tis here the ſmoking Flax may riſe into a Flame, and the bruſed Reed find its ſupport and repair; and the ſpirit may be renewed even in the infirmities of the fleſh. If we come with weak grace and ſtrong breathings, we may return with ſtrong grace and full ſatisfaction. Do not little ſparks need frequent and gentle blaſts to blow them up? Proficiency is our duty, we muſt preſs forward towards the mark, we muſt run our race, 'tis our duty then to take our viaticum, or proviſion to enable us thereto. Why do we come to the word, but to have Grace either wrought or encreas'd? Why ſhould any Believer then neglect the other means of Gods appointment? Sacraments are the Marts wherein we Trade for an encreaſe of our ſtock, as well as the word. Since therefore we are ſubject to decays, and lyable to changes and wants in our ſpiritual condition, we ſtand in need of a rooting and eſtabliſhing Ordinance. If we would maintain the Fire, it muſt not be by removing the Fuel. If our Stomachs be loſt, 'tis a ſign our growth is ſtopt: Is our Faith ſo ſtrong that it needs no further confirmation? Our Grace mounted to that height, that it needs no further ſteps? Our deſires ſo ſharp, as that they cannot receive any keener edge? 'Tis an Ordinance wherein Grace is much exercis'd, and more unitedly about its object Chriſt, and were there no other advantage than this, to have an opportunity to ſtrike up all our Graces together, our claſping Faith, and our melting Repentance, our flaming love, and our nimble deſires; it were enough to make the Ordinance it ſelf deſireable to a Chriſtian, ſince there is an unſpeakable comfort in the very ſound of him. But ſo excellent an Ordinance cannot be without a more excellent benefit.

(4.) Senſe and aſſurance of love often comes in by it. Wine is comforting. In no Ordinance is Chriſt ſo particularly applied, Take, Eat, this is my body. It concerns Chriſt to make them welcome to his Table, that come with hearts thirſting for him: Chriſt was known by the breaking of bread, when the Diſciples knew him not before in his opening the Scripture, Luk. 24. 30, 31. Gladneſs attended the keeping of the Paſſeover, 2 Chron. 30. 21, 26. Great joy then in Jeruſalem, not in the neglect of it. The primitive Chriſtians continued in their gladneſs of heart by breaking bread from houſe to houſe, Acts 2. 46. Much more ſurely by breaking bread with Chriſt in the Supper. 'Tis the moſt probable time of the Spirits performing the great office, which is to bring things to remembrance, when we are engag'd in an Ordinance whoſe chief deſign is to bring Chriſt in his expiatory Death to remembrance; when the office of the Spirit and the end of the Inſtitution meet together, 'tis the moſt likely time for the Spirit to exerciſe his office and joyn in with the end of the Sacrament, to ſhow the high and heavenly things of our Saviour. There is a ſweetneſs in a promiſe, but more in a promiſe drawn into covenant with all its ratifications. Gods Seal, as well as his Oath, is for confirmation; his Word is ſufficient; but leſt that ſhould be ſtagger'd at he hath added his Oath: If that ſhould leave any doubts, he hath fixed his Seal, all which are the high way to a comfortable aſſurance. The ſin within us and the Devil without us, are always raiſing vapors, which gather into clouds, filling us with doubts, and hindering the ſenſe of Gods comfortable face, ſtaggering our hopes, and making us queſtion that love which is grounded upon ſo many promiſes. God hath in this given us a pledge of his love and a ground of aſſurance, when we have Chriſt printed clearer in his ſufferings and his love, viſibly repreſented as made a curſe in our ſtead, a Sacrifice bearing our ſins in his body, and expiating them by his bloud, and this Chriſt taken into our Souls, and pleaded to God as our ſecurity. Thus hath Chriſt given his body for us, and left his body with us as a pawn, a pledge for all we want, for all the good we can hope for. Senſe of his love muſt be great, when the ſoul conſiders that his bloud ſatisfied God, and may well ſatisfie it. When we eat and drink believingly, our ſouls delight themſelves in fatneſs. And as the heart of God was ſatisfied with him upon the Croſs, ſo the heart of a Chriſtian is often repleniſht by him at a Sacrament. What the Goſpel preſents in words, the Sacrament doth in ſigns; what the Word preſents to the ear, the Supper doth to the eye, to the taſte, that we may have comfort come in at all our ſenſes. How often have drooping ſpirits met with comfort in the very action? And met with hidden Manna in Sacramental Bread, like a glorious Chriſt in a humane Body, and have had a full ſenſe of a Saviours love accompanying the viſible repreſentation of it? How often have his people heard him in it ſpeak Peace, Peace, ſpeak peace to them, and breathe peace in them, and kiſs them with the kiſſes of his mouth? How often have their conſciences been pacified, and their creeping joy found an elevation? There have been mutual glances, Chriſt hath ſtruck a beam upon the Soul, imprinted a clearer ſtamp of love, and the Soul hath claſpt its arms about a Saviour. And is ſuch an Ordinance fit to be neglected?

(5.) Union with Chriſt is promoted. As the Bread and Wine, being turn'd into our nature, become one with us; ſo the body and bloud of Chriſt being by Faith turn'd into our ſubſtance, make us one with Chriſt. As the Bread and Wine are phyſically united to us, ſo we are ſpiritually united to Chriſt, Chriſt incorporating himſelf with us in a Sacrament. He was our ſurety upon the Croſs, he is our Advocate in Heaven, and incorporated with us in the Supper, in a ſpiritual, not a tranſubſtantiate manner, I in them, Joh. 17. 23, 26. Can we too often claſp about him? Can the union be too often renewed, and become too cloſe and ſtrait?

Uſe.

1. How much is the neglect, if not contempt, of this inſtitution to be bewail'd? How ſad a thing is it, that many for many years have turn'd their backs upon breaſts full of milk? How hath it been regarded, as if it were an abrogated Law,

a Seal out of date, torn off from the Covenant, as though the inſtitutions of Chriſt were miſerable Comforters, and it were a deſpicable priviledge to receive entertainment at Gods Table?

(1.) It concerns ſuch to inquire, whether the reaſons of their neglect be valid againſt a poſitive Command. Since it is a Command, Do this; Not only to remember Chriſt, but to remember Chriſt in this method, Do this in remembrance of me: It is worthy their conſideration, whether the ground of their neglect be ſuch as will bear a divine ſcrutiny, and ſuſtain the force of Gods Inquiſition. They muſt be evaſions paſt underſtanding, that can hold water againſt a divine Order: Though it may not always be frequented, yet it is not always to be omitted. No excuſe was valid againſt the Paſſeover, but uncleanneſs or a journey, and that not for an annual but a Months omiſſion, Numb. 9.13. But what light excuſes have we to keep us off from a Feaſt with God for many Years, which we would not admit of to hinder us from a Feaſt with Man?

(2.) Was it appointed to be neglected? Did Chriſt take ſuch care to inſtitute it, and we take care to avoid it? Did he give ſuch a poſitive order for no other end but that we ſhould never regard it? Can we ſay we value his word, when we ſlight his Seal? Is your Faith ſo ſtrong in his word, that it needs no ſtrength from the Seal? Was not the Faith of the Apoſtles as ſtrong at that time of inſtitution as any man's, or at leaſt in ſome few days after? Yet it was not left ad libitum, you may do this, but do it. Chriſt is a better Judge of the weakneſs of our hearts, our proneſs to forgetfulneſs, the difficulty to preſerve Faith as well as obtain it. And he inſtituted it, as an act of kindneſs, as well as authority, that it might be obſerv'd, not neglected by us. Were there no end of it, but only an act of his will, acceptance is a civility we owe our Saviour. If he had ſaid, I pray you do this, could you have refus'd it to him, that died for you? Could you refuſe it to him that endur'd the wrath of God for you? What had become of you if he had not died; all the Angels could not have remov'd that load of wrath that lay upon you. If it be a Command to do it, to neglect it is a ſin; for what is ſin but a breach of Gods Command. 'Tis a direct Command, not drawn by conſequence, as plain a Command as any in the Decalogue, Do it in remembrance of me, not, may do it, do it if you will, or, do it when you will.

(3.) How can ſuch free themſelves from unworthy reflections upon Chriſt? It is either an act of wiſdom or folly in him; If of Wiſdom, why are we ſo fooliſh as not to obſerve it? If of Folly, why do we at all believe in him, whom we count a fooliſh Saviour? It was either an act of love in him or diſdain; If of Love, why are we ſo ungrateful as not to regard it? If of diſdain, why ſhould we depend upon a perſon, whom we virtually charge with leaving a mocking Ordinance to us juſt before his going out of the World? We muſt either quite diſcard our Faith, or diſcard our neglect. There is no doubt but it was both an act of Wiſdom and love in Chriſt; the Wiſdom that conducted the courſe of his Life, was not abſent from him when he was ſo near his Death, nor had his love which animated him to Death the next day, forſaken him the night before; had he left his Love, he might have prevented his Death. To neglect it then is to vilify Chriſts Inſtitution, to diſparage his skill and care of his Church, as though there were no need of any repreſentations of him, or as if ſomething might have been order'd better; 'Tis to charge Chriſt with a trifling Inſtitution, 'tis to charge him with the greateſt folly, that when he was to encounter with wrath and Death, he could not find ſomething elſe to buſy himſelf about; that he could not pitch upon a better thing to recommend to you, as a token of his care, and a ſupport for your Souls; If we will thus undertake to preſcribe Chriſt what he ſhould do; This is to be not his Servants to be guided by him, but his Lords to rule him and give him his inſtructions, as though he were our, not his Fathers Embaſſadour. How can we hope for the benefits he hath purchas'd, while we caſt ſuch reflections upon him, as if he were buſy about juſt nothing?

(4.) Is it neglected becauſe the Elements are ſo mean, and the thing ſo eaſie in it ſelf? Had any Iſraelite neglected to turn his eye upon the brazen Serpent, the poyſon in his bloud had digg'd his grave. What might they not have objected againſt it? What good can a look upon a brazen Figure do my wounds? I want a plaiſter for my ſore more than a caſt of my eye. Bruſs will naturally inflame my diſtemper, not aſſwage it. Can the picture of a Serpent cure the biting of a real one, and at ſuch a diſtance? This and more might have been objected againſt that, than againſt this; but ſuch Logick would have deſtroyed the Diſpute: Or is it eaſie, and therefore fit to be neglected? It was our Saviours mercy to make it ſo eaſie, who might have impos'd harder conditions on us; and ſhall we ſlight his tenderneſs, who was loth to burden us, and careful to relieve us? What would have been ſaid, had it been as painful as the circumciſing the fleſh, or as diſtaſtful as the bitter herbs of the Paſſeover? 'Tis true it is common Bread, it is common Wine in it ſelf; but it is conſecrated Bread and conſecrated Wine in its uſe: It hath the ſtamp of Chriſt upon it; as the Wax taken out of the Shop hath the Seal of the Conveyer, which the Purchaſer would not part with for all the Wax left behind in the hands of the Seller.

(5.) Or do we think Chriſt is come again, that we neglect it? The command was dated from the night before his death, and is to be in force till he return again. Was it his Reſurrection that is meant by his coming? Would Chriſt at ſuch a time appoint an Ordinance, that was to laſt but three days, and never like to be put in practice after his inſtitution? Or was it till he came in Spirit? He was come in Spirit at Pentecoſt, before the Apoſtle in the Text urged the inſtitution; therefore come again cannot be meant of that. The Ordinance then had ceaſed before Paul writ to the Corinthians, and he would never have reſtor'd an abrogated Inſtitution, who was ſo vehement an oppoſer of an abrogated ceremonial Law. Or till he come in Spirit into the Soul? Was Chriſt in Spirit in none of the Corinthians, who were a Church of great graces and great gifts, as well as great corruptions? Paul rectifies their corrupt mixtures, but exempts not any from a due obſervance.

(6.) Why doth any one neglecter of it who hath Faith, obſerve any other command or inſtitution? Thoſe that make not conſcience of all known duties, make conſcience of none. He that offends in one point, breaks the whole Law; he that contemns one point of the Goſpel, violates the authority of the whole. I do not ſee how any part of the Chriſtian Religion would be dear to any, who have ſo ſlight a regard to that which may claim an equality with any Ordinance, and a precedency in our eſteem in ſome reſpects, in regard of the poſitive command of our Saviour, the time when he appointed it, and the length of its duration, Till I come. I doubt the Apoſtaſies of many, and the unfruitfulneſs in the lives of Profeſſors, may be charged upon either the neglect of this, or an unworthy carriage in it. He hath little deſire to gain Chriſt, or preſerve Chriſt, that will have him in his own way, and not in Chriſts way. What we deſire, we ſhould take a courſe to enjoy in the method of that perſon who only can fulfil our deſires.
